COMPTON NOSES OUT LOCALS AT FUNSTON

Compton Junior College invaded San Francisco during Easter vacation and stayed long enough to take the measure of the Ram baseballers, by the score of 1 to 0. Only six innings were played before the heavens burst and unleashed a torrent of rain which made it impossible to continue.

The southerners bunched two hits and an error to score the lone tally in the fourth inning.

San Francisco made its big threat in the fifth canto. Holmes flied out, but Wilgus was hit by a pitched ball and advanced to second on Scafani's line single to left. Arvedi forced Scafani at second. Berutich walked to fill the bases, but Ardanaz lined out to center to end the rally.

CONLAN HOPES FOR COLLEGE GOLF TEAM

Hoping to form a San Francisco Junior College golf team for the coming Northern California Junior College Championship, Coach Louis "Dutch" Conlan announced that if enough men golfers of the college show interest in trying out for the team, there will be a tournament held the latter part of this month at either Ingleside or Harding course, to determine who might represent the college.

"There will be a sign up sheet on the Extension Building bulletin board and if 16 men sign up, we shall have the tournament. No entry fee will be charged, and although we have not yet decided on awards, we shall probably present medals to the winners," said Conlan.

Last year a similar tourney was held, and the six best players were named as the team. All the scores were not good, however, so only two men were sent to the Northern California Junior College Tournament.

Both men won their first matches. Bob Dumensil, one of the representatives, breezed through three rounds of competition, only to drop a close match in the semi-finals.

At the present time there is also a putting tournament being held at Funston, among the members of Russ Sweet's golf classes.

U. S. F.—RAM BOATS IN FIRST LEAGUE RACE

With their first conference race scheduled for next Saturday against the University of San Francisco, the college crew has finished its long two month training grind and seams to be in top condition for its initial league appearance, according to Coach Jack Gaddy. The boatmen have performed in impressive fashion in their practice races, winning three out of four contests, and are considered to be strong championship contenders although they are as yet untested against stiff competition.

The Gaddymen worked out daily during the recent vacation and showed a definite improvement in stroking form and smoothness, the mentor disclosed. In an attempt to uncover the best combination, Gaddy has shifted his lineup considerably, replacing veterans with ambitious newcomers, and making a change at the important stroke position. An official "first boat" has not been picked as yet but Gaddy said that he will have his most powerful crew take the water next Saturday morning for the meeting with the Dons.

Tennis Team Prepares To Meet Armstrong Squad Next Saturday

Having successfully cleared its first conference hurdle, the tennis team is now pointing for its match next Saturday with the powerful squad from Armstrong Junior College, which is to be played at the courts of the Palace of Fine Arts.

The netsters meet Commerce High School today in a warm-up.

Coach Wilson's squad preserved its clear slate by trouncing its first Conference opponent, Menlo, by the score of five matches to one. Both doubles squads were victorious, Ennes and Altfield winning a close match, 6-3, 4-6, 6-4, and Lyman and Lazzeri subduing their opponents more easily. In the singles, Ennes, Lyman, and Mitchell accounted for wins, the only casualty being Lazzeri, who lost to the Menlo star, Learer.

The team was hard hit by the loss of Rod Rogaway, who was found ineligible because of a deficiency in the number of units carried last semester. Despite this blow, however, Coach Wilson believes that his squad must be conceded more than a good chance for the title. The strength of the team lies in the fact that, while no one player is particularly outstanding, each plays a high brand of tennis.

There is a possibility that a match will be scheduled with the barnstorming squad from Oregon, which will soon be in the Bay District.

After the Armstrong contest, four matches will remain to be played, including those against the two major threats, San Jose and Modesto. The championship is decided upon a percentage basis, since at the end of the season each team will have played 36 matches. Having won five matches out of a possible six so far, the San Francisco squad holds an early lead.

Men's Club Announces Fights for April 16; Barn Dance in Plans

Completion of plans for affairs to be sponsored by the Men's Club has been announced by Don Mix, president of the organization. The present tentative arrangements include the Fights to be held at the Verdi Club on Friday, April 16, an intercollegiate boxing contest with State College on April 23, and a Barn Dance scheduled for May 14.

Mix, working under the supervision of Faculty Adviser Joe Amori, has attempted to extend the budget allotted to the Men's Association to cover as many events as possible, and if present plans are found satisfactory, this group will sponsor the traditional Whiskerino from May 3 to 14.

Plans for the Barn Dance are still in the formative stage, but contacts have been made to secure a real barn for the affair, and to obtain trucks for a hay ride to the dance. The orchestra of Irv Amstrup, which spent a successful season at Palm Springs, will play for this affair, and will present a series of Hill-Billy novelties.

An innovation in the form of a banquet for student officers is also planned, and will be held if present plans do not exhaust the allottment, Mix said.

RAMS TRAVEL TO SANTA ROSA FOR GAME WITH CUBS

By Louie Bertolucci

Still trying to break in to the win column, in the N. C. J. C. conference, the Ram baseball team tackles the Santa Rosa nine Saturday at the latter's diamond in a double-header.

The Cubs will be fighting to keep out of the cellar themselves, having lost two games to the league-leading Modestans. In the first game, the Red and Blue were submerged in a flurry of runs, losing out by a 14-4 score. They made somewhat of a comeback, however, in the seven inning fray, but were nosed out by one run, 3-2.

This will be the first meeting of the two colleges in baseball. Last year the Santa Rosans played independent ball, meeting all comers, while the Rams played in the conference. The Cubs played several of the conference teams and finished in front in most of the games.

BATMEN, PITCHERS ASSETS

Their two losses to the Pirates earlier this season can be overlooked, as the team had been kept off the field because of rainy weather. A strong array of batters, plus two good pitchers, is Santa Rosa's greatest asset.

Dick Fryklund, Al Ruonavaara, George Maroni, and "Nook" Freeman are the heavy willow wielders. All of these fellows take a lusty cut, and are the nemesis of many opposing pitchers. If they were able to hit the Modesto chuckers—which they did—they will surely give Eisan's moundsmen a bad day.

HURLERS IMPORTANT

The lad who has been pitching the first game for the Red and Blue so far is Sam Sinclair. Sam is also a good hitter, often playing in left-field when not pitching. There is no let-down in the chucking department when Jim Rodgers ascends the mound in the second tilt. It was Jim who pitched the second game against the Modestans, and he was only barely nosed out of a victory.

Whatever chance the Rams have of turning back the Cubs lies in the pitchers. If Larry Wilgus has a good day, the opposing batsmen will never touch him. Last year Larry rated as one of the leading twirlers, and had a high strike-out record.

STAND-BY FIRST

The old stand-by will throw the first game, and will give way to either Les Larson or Joaquin Martinez in the seven frame affair.

The contest will see a revamped infield. Paul Hjort, the former left-fielder, will cover the third sack, while there is a chance that Gene Kiley may play first base. Kiley was formerly a short-stop, but has been tried out at the initial sack to get more power at the plate. Scafani at second, and probably Johnson at short, will complete the infield.

BABE OUT OF SLUMP

Babe Lucchesi may be the one to lead the Ram offense. A good hitter, Babe has been in a pre-season slump, but seems to have shaken off the jinx. In practice he has been hitting the ball hard, and his impetus will certainly make a difference. Joe Ardanaz will be in centerfield, and Jack Berutich in right.

Catching the offerings of both pitchers will be Ed Arvedi, the slugging backstop, with Johnny Fitzgerald ready for relief service.

GOLDEN GATES GO OVERBOARD IN CELEBRATION

huge cavalcades moving northward and southward, terminating at the bridge-head, and where it would be joined by a large cavalcade from the Rockies.

There will be Royal Northwest Mounted Police, and His Majesty's Seaforth Highlanders of Canada; sourdoughs and dog teams from Alaska; Indians, cowpunchers, and Siwashes, the celebrated horsemen from Pendleton, Oregon; Cavemen and Cavewomen of Grant's Pass, Oregon. This group will end its march in Marin County, at the north end of the Bridge.

BALLYHOO FROM HOLLYWOOD

From the South will come the world famous Motorcycle Patrol of Mexico City, singers and dancers in costumes of Old Mexico, joined by the sons and daughters of the Dons at San Diego. The train, moving northward, will take on board—the picturesque, mounted deputies of Los Angeles County and Victor McLaglen's Mounted Patrol, along with all the beauty of Hollywood.

Once again the old West will be revived as covered wagons, pony express riders, Utah Indians, dude cowboys of Wyoming, miners of Goldfield, Tonopah and Comstock, will travel to San Francisco, as did the early pioneers who settled the Golden West.

PICK POCKETS PARADISE

These three immense Cavalcades will increase the population of San Francisco to such an extent that it will be necessary to construct temporary camps to house all of the new-comers.

The people of the Bay Area will have a chance, on Thursday, May 27, to cross the bridge afoot. This day will be called Pedestrians' Day, marking the opening of the Fiesta. Automobiles will not be allowed to cross the bridge until May 28. On the eve of the opening day, a pageant will be given at the amphi-theatre being built at Crissy Field. The seating capacity will be 25,000, and the play to be given will boast more than 3,000 performers and a symphony orchestra of 100. The pageant, to be staged on three consecutive nights, Thursday to Saturday, will portray the romantic history of California, dating back to early Spanish settlement.

CALL MR. ROOSEVELT!

On Friday, May 28, at Waldo, main approach to the bridge on the Marin side, the Redwood Empire Association will set a huge redwood log across the highway, and the various counties will enter log-sawing teams in a contest to be first to break the barrier. The logs will then be claimed by the Redwood Association to be used as pillars for its building at the 1939 Exposition.

THROWING GOLD AWAY!

Two huge, golden gates will be erected across the 90-foot span, and at a signal a golden key will be inserted, the gates will swing ajar and fall into the sea. The key itself will then be cast into the sea, signifying the thought that the bridge will remain forever open for the commerce of the world.

At this moment, guns will sound from Fort Baker in the Marin hills, and will be answered by the cannons of the Presidio. This will be followed by a gigantic sea parade of 150 warships of the U. S. Fleet, and hundreds of foreign warships. The cavalcades will pass in review of the many thousands of spectators at Crissy Field. The air, will be filled with aircraft, and passed bands will salute Canada, Mexico, Guatemala, San Salvador, and the United States.

EVEN G. B.'S LION

Featuring George Bernard Shaw's Androcles and the Lion, the Tamalpais Mountain Players will present their annual play on Sunday, May 30. The play this year is being held to coincide with the opening of the Golden Gate Bridge.

An electric parade, greater than any other held on the Pacific Coast, will be held Saturday night, May 29, starting at the foot of Van Ness Avenue, and progressing through the Marina to Crissy Field. Floats will be entered by almost every county in California, with some out of state ones as well. At Crissy Field, then, the last in a series of pageants will be presented. Portions of the International Cavalcade as well as the Rocky Mountain Cavalcade will march in the parade.

RELIGIOUS CEREMONY

In memory of the men who have died so that man could conquer nature, there will be a beautiful ceremony, religious in tone, and the children of San Francisco will participate in the services Sunday afternoon. The children will carry flowers in a solemn procession to the center of the bridge, and cast the blossoms into the waters of the Golden Gate. A pylogue, bearing the names of lost workmen will be offered to the memory of the dead.

A Spring Festival will be held on Tuesday, June 1, in Crissy Field, with Maypole dances, games, and all the wonders of a meadow transformed into elfland. The children will have a chance to romp and play as well as to be part of the largest group of children ever assembled in San Francisco.

Late Time Slips Returned By NYA Director Turner

NYA director, Helen Turner, requests Robert Anderson, Tim Aral, Leo Beneza, Merle Blair, John Burroughs, Charles Cox, Jerome McIver, Robert McKee, and George Jessee to call for their time slips. These students did not turn their time slips in by the deadline at 5 P. M. on March 29, or turned their slips in without signatures.

"If the time slips are not handed in by the deadline they cannot be included on the pay roll and in the future will all NYA students please turn their time slips in on time, so that they will not lose their pay," Miss Turner said.

With 35 women students attending, the Household Arts Association semi-annual picnic was held at Sigmund Stern Grove March 18. A treasure hunt was staged, after which prizes were awarded to the following students: Jean Fontecella, a chocolate Easter egg; Olive Reed, a hand-knit sweater; and Evelyn Dybdal, former junior college co-ed, a bottle of perfume.

Proceeds from the outing will be used to purchase reference books for the Household Arts department, Jo Jordan, HAA president said.

GAMMAS HEAR LECTURE

Members of Pi Mu Gamma, their friends and several former junior college students, had the opportunity of hearing Professor L. D. Beauchamp from the California College of Pharmacy lecture on the subject of endocrinology. His topic dealt with the endocrine glands and their effect upon the growth and sexual behavior of human beings. He also spoke of the possibilities for vocations in the field of pharmacy and medicine.

The Ram flash the swims under the colors of the Olympic Club has made the fastest time for 100 yards on the coast this season, 53 seconds. The best that Olympic champion Johnny Weissmuller ever did for this distance is 55 seconds. That two second difference shows just how good Herb really is.

Former Ram golfers seem to have done all right by themselves in the various Bay Area tournaments. Jack Welch, as we said before, took the Rhoker's championship, Howard Capps was runner-up in the San Francisco Emporium Open, and Stafford "three-putt" Egan won the championship of his flight by taking down four opponents in the same tournament. He received a gold trophy nearly as tall as himself.

The tennis team lost a valuable man when Rod Rogaway was forced off the squad because of unit difficulties, but one of the team's top ranking netmen, was doing all right and had a steady place on Coach Tom Wilson's racket squad. The tennis team engages Armstrong Junior College this Saturday afternoon at Armstrong. The Rams have yet to taste defeat.

If the classes are a bit empty this week, the profs can attribute it to the opening week of Pacific Coast League baseball. Some of the fellas have been saving their "cuts" up for just this purpose. We like Left O'Doul's Seals to stay on the top of the ladder . . . for the first two weeks at least.

SPANISH CLUB

Students of the combined Spanish classes of the college will hold their third meeting of the semester at the La Fiesta Cafe this evening at 7:30 o'clock, according to Zelma Romaine, group representative. Dancing and entertainment has been arranged, and some 50 students are expected to attend. Dora Garibaldi, Catherine Musante, and Thomas Gabbert are the faculty sponsors of the organization who will supervise tonight's affair.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By PAT MADDEN

Some one, it seems, took April 1 seriously, and played a joke on the women in the gym. When the coeds arrived for their gym classes last Wednesday afternoon, they found that all the clothes in the lockers had been switched. The dressing room occupants were in an uproar, with gym classes suspended until the situation was untangled. There is a reward offered for any information leading to the apprehension of the culprit.

The mixed doubles tennis tournament is starting this week with a large turnout. To those who would like to enter the tournament but who have no partner, the tennis club wishes to announce that partners are available. Bertha Keller, tennis instructor, and sponsor of the club, will be glad to help any one who is interested.

Following the Marin playday, the basketball club plans to invite State for a game on April 24, and San Mateo on May 8. The games will be played at the St. Francis Yacht Club and will be of seven innings.

There is an opening for any woman interested in playing the piano for the dancing classes. Please see Laurine Kuhn, dancing instructor.

Badminton mixed doubles matches have become quite a fad in the junior college if the number turning out on Friday afternoons is any indication. A mixed doubles tournament is starting this week, and any one would like to participate may sign up now in the gym.

Much to the horror of the coeds involved, the swimming classes have spent the last week breaking in a new diving board. Many are the sore legs, and stiff backs suffered by those who have been trying out the board. Diving has been the main work of the swimming classes this semester, probably because of the interest shown in it by the women.

Notice: The baseball game scheduled with the WAA council was called off on account of rain; but the baseball club wishes to challenge the council to a game to be played on April 8. Jean Foskett will be the official score keeper for this game.

Marin Junior College has been invited to a tennis-baseball playday on April 10. Baseball, which will be played at the St. Francis Yacht Club near the Palace of Fine Arts, will begin at 10 o'clock in the morning preceded by the tennis matches which will be played from 8 o'clock to 1 o'clock. Three singles and three doubles matches will be played off, the partners to be chosen either by rating or by drawing the names. The teams from San Francisco Junior College probably will be picked by ability, but this method is not definitely the one which will be used. Leading in the WAA elimination tournament are: Jean Foskett, Helen Davis, Jacqualine Kramer, Betty MacKenzie, Faith Thomas, Sue Muther, Gloria Stockhausen, Eleanor Bradford, and Dorothy Canavan. It is from this group that the team will be chosen.

"We have a wealth of reserve material," Gaddy said, "and this keeps every man on his toes in order to retain his position. No positions are cinched and every capable man will get a chance in conference competition before a definite 'first boat' is picked. A tentative lineup that I may pick for the first race would include Bob Carotto at the port stroke, El Hubacker number 5, Chris Buckley number 4, Merv Weiner number 3, "Tip" Hamilton number 2 and Bill Schoenfeld bow. On the starboard side I may use Ernie Segal at stroke, Carl Brogger at number 5, Ty McHugh at number 3, Joe Arnold at number 3, Art Nelson at number 2 and Harry Wagstaff bow. However, I may change this boat by the addition of such men as Mix, Kissel, Smith or several others who have shown up well in practice."

Ignatians Defeated

In two practice races held during the vacation the Ram navy scored a convincing win over St. Ignatius, high-rated prep crew, finishing some eight boat lengths ahead of the Wildcats in an engagement held over the 2000 meter Yacht Harbor course. Later in the same week the Gaddy blade dippers managed to nose out the Balboa boatmen in a blanket finish over the same distance.

The starting time for Saturday's race with U. S. F. has been announced at 10:00 A. M. at Yacht Harbor.

Two Quartets Organized From Music Club Group

Preparing to entertain at various school and public functions, the women and men quartets, under the direction of Flossita Badger, music instructor, have organized for what they hope will be a successful semester.

The members of the women's quartet are Jane Knight, second soprano; Rosella Ratellick, first soprano; Annabelle Tyler, first alto, and Jane Ferguson, second alto. The foug in the men's quartet are Bud Gardner, first tenor; Wilbus Huson, second tenor; Bob Lowe, baritone, and Ray Mero, base.

The quartets have been practicing during Easter vacation, and plan to continue every Tuesday and Thursday in the evenings at different members' homes.

New Two Hour Course On Hotel Statistics Given

Arthur C. Kellet, statistician for Dean Witter and Company, is now conducting one of the Hotel and Restaurant Management courses on Monday afternoons. It is a two hour course on the graphical presentation of hotel management statistics, and is of interest to students majoring in business. Further information may be had by calling at the junior college office.

GERMANS TO GATHER

The first meeting of the San Francisco Junior College German Club will be held Friday, April 9, at 2 p.m. in room 101 at the Extension building.

All those interested in becoming members of this group are invited to attend.

Diary of a Co-ed Journalist

March 29—Ah, dear diary, yesterday was Easter Sunday, when all is calm, lovely, and peaceful, and to celebrate this wonderful day dear Mother, Father, Sister Guinevere and Sister Emma came up from Hickville to visit me. Mother wore her Easter outfit, which consisted of a simply too, too charming dress of inauguration blue (Father says this inaugurates the first kind-word that Mother gave him in twenty years), a green and red hat with the cutest little yellow daisies you ever saw on the brim, and white shoes with no toes.

Guinevere, a typical Blotz beauty, had sent all the way to Sears, Robucks's for her outfit, which was called "Peace Conference" by the style department of that lovely institution. You see, it consisted of a Dalmatian dress, a Spanish hat, Scotch American shoes, French gloves, and a Czechoslovakian handbag. Of course she insisted on American stockings.

Emma, who will soon be seven years old (ah, childhood!), was dressed in a white sailor dress. Papa had a new handkerchief.

Well, we started out for a drive in the afternoon. Daddy wanted to visit a lodge brother of his who lived in the Eastern part of the bay region. Well, off we started, I in my brand new Easter bonnet with green cherries on it. I sat in the front next to father, and Mother, Guinevere, and Emma sat in back.

As it was a lovely warm day, I opened the little wigdow in front that the salesman told Papa was a "no-draft" window. This meant, explained Father, that whenever you didn't want a draft, and who did, you could open this window. But evidently the window didn't work very well, because Guinevere said she felt a draft, although it was stuffy up where I was sitting.

"I feel a draft!" screamed Guinevere. "Tell that inconsiderate daughter of yours to close the window!"

"I am not inconsiderate," I replied with dignity. "I merely wish to have enough air in the front part of the car so that Father and I can breathe."

"Yeah," said Father.

"You know, sort of this," screamed Mother banging Father over the head with her umbrella.

"Hey, ma," said Emma, "can I have a ice-cream cone, huh ma?"

"Mother," said Guinevere, "I insist that you make Elvira be quiet!"

"Shut up, back there!" yelled Father.

"Quiet, worm!" said Mother.

Later Father's lodge brother said that we were the happiest looking family he had ever seen. He was a bachelor.

So the afternoon wore on. On and on we rode and on and—oh, well, you would never know it was Easter Sunday.

WAA Plans Marin Play Day Apr. 10 At Marina Fields

Tennis and baseball clubs of the Women's Athletic Association will be hostesses to Marin Junior College at a playday to be held April 10 at the Palace of Fine Arts and the St. Francis Yacht Club. Tennis matches will be played from 8 A. M. until 10 A. M. Two seven inning games of baseball will be played after these matches.

Partners for the three singles and three doubles will be chosen either by drawing names, or by taking the top rankers on the tournament ladder, Bertha Keller, tennis and baseball coach, announced. Jean Foskett, Gloria Stockhausen, Jacqualine Kramer, Betty MacKenzie, Sue Muther, Helen Davis, Dorothy Canavan, Eleanor Bradford, and Faith Thomas are the leaders on the ladder. If the ladder method is used, the team will probably be chosen from this group, according to Miss Keller.

State Guts NYA Time; Students Advised To Adjust Hours To Fit

According to a bulletin just received from state N. Y. A. headquarters April 2, the last working day for N. Y. A. students this semester will be May 26.

"This is contrary to expectations that we would have the money to pay for working hours in June," stated Miss Helene Turner, N. Y. A. head.

All students are advised to regulate their hours accordingly so that they will have earned $45 during March, April, and May.

Hotel Course Fits Two For Summer Hotel Jobs

Two San Francisco Junior College students, Cynthia Richardson and Louis Aber Jr., who are enrolled in Hotel and Restaurant Management courses, have secured positions outside of college.

Miss Richardson has taken out a leave of absence in order to secure practical experience by working at a desk clerk at the Highland Inn at Carmel.

Aber is employed at the Brookdale Lodge near Santa Cruz. He works during week-ends in the front office, and will continue to work there during summer vacation.

THESIS SHOWS PROBABLE GAIN IN ENROLLMENT

The records of the college prove that more students are majoring in business, engineering, and English than in any other field of study, and that, consequently, these are the fields to which most attention must be given.

Tabulations in the thesis prove that should nothing unforeseen take place, the enrollment of San Francisco Junior College should reach the two thousand mark by next August. The present enrollment is about 1,720.

RECOMMENDS VARIED CURRICULA

Dean Browne recommends that the plant scheduled for construction should accommodate more than 3,500 students. He also recommends that courses be offered to satisfy the following needs:

1. Terminal courses for those planning to continue only two years beyond high school.

2. Lower Division College Courses comparable to the first two years in standard universities.

3. General cultural or social exploratory courses for those undecided as to what interest or field to follow.

4. Semi-professional courses to answer the vocational interests and needs.

5. Vocational courses in keeping with the demands of San Francisco, with special emphasis on the commercial field.

6. Adult education courses to take over the present field of adult education in the public schools as the demands justify.

Solemly to protest war, students of the college will join in a peace assembly April 22, from 10 to 12 o'clock in the Lecture Hall.

The assembly is sponsored by the Forum Club and sanctioned by the administration of the college. Classes may be dismissed so that students can attend, or those instructors who do not dismiss their classes will excuse any student who wishes to attend the rally.

EDUCATIONAL JOB OUTLINED

"The college administration appreciates the initiative of the Forum in arranging the Peace Assembly, April 22," Paul M. Pitman, assistant to the President declared. "Our chief job is to train students to solve the problems of democracy in modern society. We regard this expression of idealism in youth as a wholesome thing." Pitman added, that the administration has asked the faculty for its co-operation by dismissing classes.

Speakers scheduled thus far are John Wertnik, San Francisco State College varsity debater and Charles O'Gara of the junior college. Invitations have been sent to Stanford and California to send student speakers. The student bodies at the latter institutions are sponsoring the anti-war protests and all classes have been called off for April 22 at 11 o'clock.

ADMINISTRATIVE CO-OPERATION

"The most important feature of the 1937 student protest against war," student speaker O'Gara said, "is that it is receiving again the whole-hearted co-operation between students and administration in a relentless and smashing campaign against war. The movement conducted by the college students of America in 1934 involved only 25,000 students," he stated. "However, in 1936, when the first signs of united effort on the part of administration and students appeared, that number jumped to over 500,000.

"This year, although student control of the anti-war demonstrations will be the keynote on April 22," O'Gara emphasized, "co-operative planning of the war protests will assure a turn out of over a million students. San Francisco Junior College will have a program scheduled to afford the entire student body an opportunity to participate."

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

The student protest, originating in America, has begun to spread and promises to become an international protest. Signs of this were evident last year, when students organized in China, Cuba, and other countries.

The student demonstration against war is being sponsored nationally by nearly every important national student organization comprising the United Student Peace Committee which includes: The American Student Union, Emergency Peace Campaign—Youth Section, National Intercollegiate Christian Council (includes the Student YM and YWCA), and the National Student Federation of America (Student Body Councils).

AWARDS TO BE GIVEN

Awards for the college rifle teams, to show appreciation for their efforts this season, have been decided and will be presented to team members sometime this week. There will be thirteen competitors awards and two managers awards.

U. S. F. SCHOLARSHIP OFFER LOOMS AS TRADITION

Interested, since the beginning of San Francisco, in civic progress, the University of San Francisco intends to establish the scholarships offered to men students of the junior college, as a traditional affair, Rev. Harold E. Ring, S. J., University President revealed in an interview last week.

As announced in last week's Guardsman, there will be two scholarships offered, one for two years and one for one year, to the College of Liberal Arts of the university. Any man student, who is completing his third of fourth semester and who has maintained an average of B or better in university grade studies, is eligible to try for these scholarships.

Expressing approval of the offer, President Archibald J. Cloud, of the junior college said that these scholarships ought to lead to the advantage of both institutions.

"I feel pleased," he said, "that we should have deserved this recognition in the eyes of the University of San Francisco. We are glad to work in complete harmony and cooperation with this institution, which, as everyone knows, has attained a very high standard of scholarship. Students should take the fullest advantage of this opportunity."

In reply to the question of which he thinks more important, a general or specialized education, Father Ring said that he thought a general education stood the test of the depression, while a specialized one did not.

"One should have a Liberal Arts background before specializing," he said. "Education should be for the interior satisfaction rather than a specific vocation. Every man is suited for a liberal education because it develops the whole man. Often one trained for a specific vocation finds that he is not fitted for a changing world."

In regard to activities, Father Ring stated that activities are important and desirable because they develop students and aid them in self-education.

"There are certain courses and objectives we have that other places do not. The ideal of a college is good students. Through our expanding curriculum, we are attempting to improve the medium of student effort, to develop better scholarship," he declared.

San Francisco Junior College is the first institution to receive scholarships from the university and Father Ring said that the purpose of these scholarships was to promote understanding between the university and the junior college.

That every student of the college may participate in choosing the first pictures of the permanent college art collection, a third exhibit of work done by the Federal Art Project will be held at John Howell's Book Shop, 434 Post Street, on April 15 and for two weeks thereafter. The entire exhibit will be divided into four groups, with students voting for three pictures from each group. Those twelve pieces receiving the largest number of votes will be presented to the college by the Art Project as the nucleus for a permanent collection to be housed in the proposed new building in Balboa Park.

Dr. Eugenie A. Leonard, vice-president and dean of women, said she believed that San Francisco Junior College is one of the first institutions in the country to allow its students to select an art collection. "The most wonderful thing about it," continued Dean Leonard, "is that the students will feel more interested in a group of art work if they have chosen it themselves. I cordially invite every student of this college to avail himself of this opportunity, first, to view a really marvelous exhibit, and second, to select those pictures that he prefers."

"The exhibit includes about 45 lithographs and prints," said Jerome Vloebergh, chairman of the student committee that chose from among the work displayed at the Project headquarters at 901 Portero Avenue. "We have tried to pick out those pictures that we believed will appeal most to the students," commented Vloebergh, "and we hope that all of the student body will vote so that a group representative of the general student body may be selected."

Seven of the members are representatives of the general student body and five are art majors chosen by Richard Allman, art instructor and faculty adviser to the committee.

For the remainder of the semester, several exhibits are scheduled, to be changed at two-week intervals. These include the display of lithographs and prints to be shown from April 16 to 30, water colors and oils from May 1 to 15, and originals by Charles H. Suydam, famous illustrator, from May 16 to 31.

Chinese Theater Visited By Household Art Group

Accompanied by Claire Cuneo, faculty adviser, several members of the Household Arts Association attended a performance at the Chinese Theater, Thursday evening, April 1. Those included in the party were Jo Jordan, HAA president, Edith Alpers, Anita DeMartini, Louise Corica, and Lenore Anderson.

Lucille Jung made arrangements so that members of the HAA had an opportunity of visiting the House of the Four Families Tuesday, April 13.

The next meeting of the HAA will be held in Room 316, Galileo High, Friday afternoon, April 16 at 2:10.

COLLEGE ANNUAL BECOMES BEST SELLER

It didn't even require high-pressure salesmanship on the part of Ty McHugh, left, to sell Helen Frisbie a copy of the year-book scheduled for publication near the end of the semester. Don Mills looks on, as though he were trying to make up his mind whether or not it will be worth 50 cents. He may rest assured that it will be.

COLLEGE AWS SENDS THREE DELEGATES TO SAN MATEO CONFABS

Three Associated Women Students' officers will represent San Francisco Junior College at a convention of AWS leaders to be held Friday and Saturday at San Mateo. The delegates will be Elaine Domingues, president; Barbara Latz, Norma Parent, and Ruth Johnson, Women's Athletic Association president, accompanied by Helene Turner, college NYA administrator.

The convention, bringing together representatives of Northern California Junior Colleges, will have as its primary objective consideration of mutual AWS problems, and will be carried on either through discussion. Organization of a separate WAA unit will also be begun, Miss Dominguez added.

Beginning the week-end of activity on Friday afternoon, a registration tea is to be given at the San Mateo Congregational Church, where the delegates will meet their hostesses for the week-end. Following dinner, they will be guests at the San Mateo Junior College semester play, And So To Bed. On Saturday morning a general meeting, followed by discussion groups, will be held in the junior college building. That evening hostesses and guests will attend a formal banquet at the Oak Tree Gardens in San Mateo, and as a gala climax to the week-end, a formal dance will be held after in the Francisican Room of the Sir Francis Drake Hotel in San Francisco.

Miss Dominguez, in commenting on the convention, stated; "The cooperative discussion will, I am sure, strengthen the bonds of friendship among the various junior colleges and will aid the AWS officers to gain new ideas and thus to increase the efficiency of their administrations. Since this junior college is so very new, we hope to profit by the experiences of older institutions."

Cooperation of the entire student body was asked by Tyler McHugh, High Soph president, in the drive to have 750 journals sold by the end of this month. It was revealed that unless an appreciable number have been sold by that date it will be necessary to cancel publication plans. The tickets signifying the purchase of an annual cost 50c, which is the complete price of the book.

"We felt that there was an urgent demand for a year book this semester, McHugh said, "and we had hoped that the students would insure the financial success of our plans by buying their tickets as soon as possible. Most of those that we have approached with tickets signify that they intend to purchase a book eventually but apparently do not realize that unless at least half the limited edition of 750 copies is sold by the end of April, we will have no year book. We issue an urgent request for all students to buy their tickets as soon as possible."

Those assisting McHugh in the sale of the books are Isabél Sherret, Don Mills and Bob Sisco. Tickets may also be obtained at the comptroller's office at Galileo.

The journal will be prepared by the Guardsman staff and will replace the semi-annual rotogravure section. Present plans are that the book will contain about 32 pages and will include a short history of the junior college, group pictures of various prominent campus organizations, candid camera shots, and an athletic review that will include all of the college teams. The feature section of the journal will contain individual pictures of all members of the high sophomore class.

High sophomores are especially urged to consult with Mac immediately, since it is through the efforts of their class that the annual will become a reality.

SOPHS MEET TODAY

Important meeting of the High Sophomores will be held today in Room 205 at Galileo at 2:10 P.M., according to Ty McHugh, class president. It is imperative that all members of the class be present because plans for the Soph Formal and graduation will be discussed.

FACULTY ENTERTAINS WITH EDUCATION FESTIVAL

Faculty members of the San Francisco Junior College will be host to approximately 300 junior college instructors who will attend the Northern California Junior College Conference which will meet in San Francisco Saturday, April 17.

President J. Evan Armstrong will preside at the morning program which begins at 9:30 o'clock. Samuel N. C. Hume, Regional Director of the California Crusaders will be a guest speaker. The luncheon program will be toastmastered by Vice-President Harry E. Tyler, Sacramento Junior College, and the afternoon program will be under the direction of J. Paul Mohr, San Francisco Junior College Registrar. Also included in the day's routine will be music by Flossita Badger, music instructor of the junior college.

Speakers of the afternoon will be A. R. Nichols, city director for vocational education of the San Jose Public Schools, A. A. Sotzin, director of the division of industrial education of the San Jose State College, Maude I. Murphy, chief of the Bureau of home-making education, of the state department of education, and Joseph P. Nourse, Superintendent of the San Francisco Public Schools.

Luncheon will be served the guests by the students of the Hotel and Restaurant

AMS PUGILISTS BATTLE FRIDAY AT VERDI CLUB

Promising to be the most successful smoker yet staged by the Men's Club, the semi-annual college boxing and wrestling championships will be held on next Friday night, April 16, at the Verdi Club, Potrero and Mariposa Streets, according to an announcement by Don Mix, president of the AMS. Gold medals will be awarded the bout winners and lively battles are anticipated in all classes to entertain the capacity crowd which is expected to attend. Admission is free with student body cards and plans include refreshments to cool the fight fans.

The entry list contains the names of three defending champions, Ray Greenwood, lightheavy weight; Wilson Camp, middleweight, and Dick Moon, featherweight. The only wrestler returning to defend his crown is the bombastic Deming Smith, head of the Cap and Mog and twice a winner at the college fights. Because of a heavy cold Smith is not certain that he will be able to appear.

An event new to the college smoker will be presented when the two survivors of the fencing tournament now in progress meet to determine the junior college foils championship.

HAMILTON HEAVY HOPE

The heavyweight boxing division presents three bulky behemoths who will struggle to garner the title left vacant by the withdrawal of the former champ, Dave Smith. Sims "Tip" Hamilton, the 210 pound powerhouse from Oakland, Irv Amstrup, the fighting musician who scales 208 pounds, and Charley Keiser, a mere stripling of 190 pounds, will attempt to outscramble each other in the chase for the super dreadnaught crown.

Ray Greenwood, lightheavy king and college knockout artist, will rule as a heavy favorite to retain his title against the onslaughts of three strong foes. He will be opposed by Frank Poole, lanky boxing dancer from Henry Anderson's baby slugger, and by that rugged veteran of three previous tournaments, Merv Weiner. Greenwood won from Weiner via the technical knockout route last year and if these two boys come together in the final again, a real grudge battle is anticipated.

Wilson Camp will pit his unorthodox, two fisted attack against the potent punching of Joe Manning in the middleweight title set-to. Camp, victor over Duke Worsham in last year's bloodiest battle, will be a slight favorite to keep his title because of his unusual stamina and ability to absorb punishment.

IRON MAN ACT

Manning is attempting to pull the old "iron man act" and will compete in the championship in two different divisions. He is also signed up to fight in the 155 pound class against the fast and clever Eddie Canapa, former Polytechnic.

In the race for the welterweight medal are a Y. M. C. A. veteran, Jack Tobiason, a junior college champion, Tom Barfield, and a definite dark horse in the person of Melville Connell. Barfield is a rough and ready crowd pleaser and his previous experience gives him the favored position over his two opponents.

RECREATION BOARD YIELDS TEN ACRES TO COLLEGE

Municipal machinery moved swiftly last week in the interests of the college when ten acres of Balboa Park land were transferred from the Recreation Commission to the Board of Education to allow ground conformation to the building plans.

The plans themselves, which were presented formally to Mayor Angelo Rossi and the Board of Education last week, called for an "L" shaped site, all but six of which acreage was already included in the original grant.

Meeting with the Recreation Commission, Timothy L. Pflueger, noted California architect, and personal designer of the college buildings, showed, with Board President, C. Harold Caulfield, the need for ten additional acres to provide a building scheme that would meet wind conditions in that area.

Pflueger, who has been working concentratedly and steadily on college building plans, successfully visualized the situation to the satisfaction of the Recreation Commission. Mrs. Sigmund Stern, president of the Recreation Commission, graciously agreed to the necessary transfer, called a special meeting of the commission and effected the transfer immediately, through unanimous vote of that body.

Although ground breaking, always indicative of actual construction and progress, has neither been announced nor started, action similar in swiftness to that of the past week is expected to continue, so that the fourth college semester will not close without tangible milestones to mark its development.

As The Guardsman goes to press, a "construction begins" date looms closely on the horizon. For the first time since the organization of the college, building problems appear to be near solution, with the plans completed in both blueprint and model form, and the stated opinion of the Board of Education, as published in last week's Guardsman, indicating that building one unit of the college has taken precedence over any other proposed construction considered by the school department.

ACTION

The mayor has been presented with the blueprints, the local papers have carried pictures of the ground plans, and the municipal machinery continues to move, slowly but surely toward a new building for the San Francisco Junior College.

Board of Education President, Honorable C. Harold Caulfield, cites architect Timothy Pflueger's plans as prescribing "one of the most economical, complete, and striking school plants yet designed."

Last week's action is heartily welcomed by faculty and students alike. The Guardsman assumes the position of thanking the Recreation Commission and the Board of Education for the swift action which makes possible construction of a building. Appreciation is also extended to Mrs. Sigmund Stern, head of the Recreation Commission, whose cooperation made possible the securing of the additional ground needed for completing present plans.

To quote The Guardsman for last Wednesday—

"Actual ground breaking depends upon the speed with which municipal machinery will move to transfer about six additional acres from the Recreation Commission to the Board of Education. This is necessary in order to square out the present "L" shaped site to promise a building scheme that will meet wind conditions in that area."

For some time it will be necessary to plead for a little more patience. Remember, friends, constructional machinery, like the mills of the Gods, grinds exceedingly slow!

"THE PROOF OF THE PUDDING . . ."

Under the strain of terrific handicaps an attempt is being made to meet student demand for a college annual. In almost any college, work on an annual starts at the beginning of the academic year. Here, that was impossible. Nevertheless certain students went to considerable trouble to lay the ground work for the beginning of what might well become one of the most important parts of college life.

When first announcements of the decision to have such a publication appeared, it was stressed that the book would be published only if a certain number of tickets were sold by April 30. So far less than a third of this number have been sold, and it is not the fault of the people who have charge of the sales.

The entire cause of this situation is the lack of interest and support shown by the very students who clamored for the publication. It was very easy to say "Certainly, I'd like to have an annual and I'll be only too glad to buy a ticket if we have one." But when it comes to putting the fifty cents on the line, well, that's different.

The High Sophomores, in particular, should be more than willing to cooperate. It is to be, in a certain sense, their book. It will be a record of the first two years of the junior college—their first two years. When, in some future day, the San Francisco Junior College has a permanent campus and is putting out a voluminous year book each semester, they are the ones who will be able to point with pride to the fact that their class was the first even to make an attempt to have a permanent record of their college days.

April 30 is not far off! Buy your tickets as soon as possible from Ty McHugh, Don Mills or the Comptroller's office. Remember, the students said they wanted an annual and it is now up to them to prove that they really want one.

NOW AND FOREVER

Peace is something towards which almost everyone is striving. It may be true that there are certain people who actually desire war, but these individuals are nothing, more or less, than psychopathic cases, and should, for the most part, be treated as such.

On April 22, students of the junior college will again participate in the annual protest against war. This protest will be in the form of a peace assembly sponsored, this year, by the college Forum Club and sanctioned by the administration.

The Guardsman wholeheartedly endorses any program which brings to public mind the desire for peace. It is nonetheless apparent that the assembly can be no more than a symbol. In addition to the thus expressed symbol, which has become a part of nearly every American university and college, The Guardsman feels that the desire for peace should be kept foremost in mind at all times as well as once a year. Concentrate on it annually in fitting manner, yes, but let it not be forgotten on the other 364 days!

MENTAL MUTTERINGS

By FEM

To become serious for a minute or two, (we degenerate as we go along) here is a hearty thank you to Dorothy Larsen, Sybil Hurning, Jimmy Preovolos, and all the others who were kind enough to respond to The Guardsman's plea for copies of certain back issues of our most honorable rag. It is now barely possible that the college will be able to secure a complete file of papers, from the very first issue, and, in that way, have a complete record of college activities. However, there are still certain issues missing, so please scout around the closets and bottom drawers and bring in all the extra copies you may have lying around.

Right here we would like to insert a little poem about Spring and stuff, but seeing as how we got all the Spring out of our system in February, youse guys wot is just getting hit will have to make up your own poetry.

No, people, The Guardsman has not entirely forsaken the rudiments of correct grammar, but we were just trying to get you in mood for the following, found, by the way, in the San Jose State Spartan Daily:

The Martyr

I got a purpose which is high.
I shun the flowing bowl.
I hits my books while youse guys dance.
I'm pure, I got a soul.
I got a noble duty here,
I got a urge to know.
I got ambition, and besides,
Cheeze guy, I got no dough.

It is not at all necessary to secure all our funny sayings from the papers of other colleges however, for one of the best cracks we've heard in a decade was found right here at dear old San Francisco. In the last fortnight you've heard a lot about the men who managed to keep out of jail, now listen to the tragedy of a boy who didn't: He was young, healthy, and perhaps a little headstrong. He punched harder and faster than a local schoolboy traffic "cop" after an argument, and so, using the "traffic cop" as a "model" youth, the judge made a "horrible example" of defendant. "Two months in the county jail," demanded "justice." Now we take no issue with the court, perhaps the penalty, as originally intended, was justified—"Civic pride," "Boost for old Zenith City"—blah blah, but what is the condition of our jail when youth, health, and a strong will must collapse? What is the secret behind the death of this boy? It's bad enough to murder murderers, but why exact the death penalty on a minor law breaker. Whose negligence is responsible?

SPOTLIGHT

By Don Mix

A recent survey by one of the members of our faculty has brought to light, among other interesting facts, that the men students at this college have a consistently higher scholastic average than the co-eds. His report shows that although the women generally enter this institution with a better high school record than the men, they score lower in the achievement test and tend to do poorer work in their college courses.

Such facts are certainly a soothing balm to the injured male pride which has suffered so much in the last few decades. The conclusions that we can draw from these findings would seem to show that while the supposedly keen female intellect may have matured a little earlier, the masculine mind is capable of greater achievements in the final and most important steps of our education. Some profound students of classroom psychology have intimated that perhaps the reason the girls managed to do so well in high school was due to an inherent feminine characteristic which enables them, in some mysterious fashion, to "handle" their instructors. Before we find ourselves warding off threats of physical violence from a group of protesting females, we beg to remind you that that last statement was just something we heard. We couldn't vouch for it.

It has also been suggested to us that the old "them that don't work don't eat" idea may be the motivating force behind the unexplainable improvement in the scholastic labors of the men. By the time we reach college most of us realize that we will have to go out in the cold, cruel world and knock out some sort of a living and thus the urge to make the most of present opportunities forces us to get a little more serious about this business of "cracking the books".

The very efficient young ladies of the present age will say that such an argument is fallacious because they also must slip their names onto somebody's payroll. Since we always feel somewhat futile when confronted by argumentative females, we will once again take refuge in irrefutable statistics which show that 85 per cent of the women of today find themselves one of those meal tickets that they promise to "love, honor and obey" and thereby end all necessity of struggling for a pay envelope. The ladies also have the added privilege of turning in their old model "lord and master" for a new one whenever they so desire by merely trekking to Reno and complaining about "mental cruelty." So it is easy to see, despite Miss America's statements to the contrary, that Betty Co-ed doesn't have the serious worries about problems of the future that act as a stimulus to her masculine classmates.

All of this seems to prove that, in spite of the fact that we live in an era of Amelia Earharts, Babe Deidricksons and numerous other "career women," the much maligned theory of male superiority is still in evidence at least at this college, although we must admit that the only perceivable reason for the feminine laxity in college work is simply because their future is not solely dependent upon their earning capacity. Anyhow we can still comfort ourselves by saying that we live in a man's world and then adding a grateful "Thank God".

By Ardell White

"Her voice was soft," someone or other once said, and ever since this quiet compliment has been used to designate all that is desirable in the feminine voice. Similarly, shrill tones have been ridiculed and set up as horrible examples. Then, too, with the influence of stage, screen, and radio around us, we ought to be thoroughly voice-conscious.

That we aren't is another proof of mankind's amazing ability to be impenetrable against new ideas. But in spite of the still-prevailing attitude of indifference, there is a growing feeling among thinking women that one's voice is fully as important as one's coiffure and make-up.

The foregoing, however, is merely a preparation for a pleasant surprise. Listen sometime to a group of co-eds from this college. Their voices will probably be quite pleasant, far superior to the average feminine screech. The contraltos will have a soft, rich quality quite unlike hoarseness, and the sopranos will be light and clear, but not shrill—we hope.

Now for some practical help. In a recent lecture on public speaking, Brother Leo said that the two most common voice faults were the gargling of men and the cackling of women. By cackling he meant the tendency of women, especially when engaged in an interesting "he said—she said" conversation, to raise their voices to a pitch where they bear a striking resemblance to that of a hen celebrating a blessed event. Not only should you guard against this rasping tone in every-day conversation, but also and especially when speaking over the telephone.

When carrying on an animated gossip session, do you ever find yourself speaking indistinctly, almost as if your mouth were full of oatmeal, and your tongue colliding unpleasantly with your teeth? When this happens, stop talking for a minute or two, and when you begin again, take it easy. Speak slowly and carefully, making each word sound clear and distinct.

Going back to telephone conversations, try to keep any annoyance out of your voice. "The voice with the smile wins" may be a trite motto, but it's a good one to remember. She who wants the person to whom she is speaking to call her again should strive to sound as if she is genuinely glad to hear from him. When saying "hello", try to inject some note of pleasure into the mouthpiece. You don't have to sing it, just say it softly and with a tone of surprised but happy sincerity. If this is too difficult, pretend that the person on the other end is your favorite matinee idol, and that, kiddies, will do it.

AFTER DARK

BY John Ward

Collection of phonograph records is quickly engrossing a nation that finds the radio a limited means of entertainment. Ten years ago the phonograph was the sole medium by which music could be brought mechanically into the home. The advent of the radio spelled a temporary doom for the enormous record consumption that had been built up, and for several years the recording companies lolled along in a low financial way, biding their time with experimentation.

Today the record is almost as popular as before. The radio has proved its limitations and the record has made up for them. It has meant to the intellect a means of cultural education. It has gone in for rare editons much as one finds in the line of books. A whole library of world's finest music is to be had on Columbia, Victor and Brunswick discs.

All of which prefaces the fact that a number of hitherto inaccessible European records have been issued in this country during the last month by Brunswick Polydor, to form a number of very fine and very interesting discs.

The two major works presented are the Stravinsky violin concerto and the Alban Berg lyric suite. Of the two, the latter is the best recorded. Some acoustical trick gives the Stravinsky a slight suggestion of playing in a box. The music does not seem to spread. Of the work itself, it is in the subtle, intellectual mode of his third period. An interesting commentary on the style and the freedom with which Stravinsky treats the concerto form is found in the title of the four movements: tocatta, two arias, and a capriccioso.

Alban Berg is of the Schonberg school, an atonalist—that is, he writes in no specific scale, but in all scales. His lyric Suite, contrary to expectations, is a lovely work, highly poetic and colorful. The Galimer String Quartet plays it to perfection. The whole production seems to radiate a magnificent warmth.

With the above mentioned albums comes another of excellent proportions, a concert of German art-songs, sung by one of the world's greatest leider singers, Heinrich Schlusnus. There are three songs by Graener, a composer of whom too little is known, whose name seems to have been forgotten by more than one historian. And songs of Schumann, Schubert and Strauss. Most of them are not often done on records. Especially welcome is the "Morgen" of Strauss done with a true accompaniment of the piano. While the result is not perfection it is interesting.

Among the single discs there are two delightful Richard Strauss opera excerpts: two from "Der Rosenkavalier," one from "Ariadne auf Naxos." Both are in the spirit of the eighteenth century. The first is delightful with waltzes, the latter with its touches of Bellini and Mozart.

YOUR PRES. SAYS

Echoes reverberate — the Hi-Frosh dance—the most successful dance so far held this year. We want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Hi-Frosh Committee and our school Social Committee on the management of this affair.

This Friday night, April 16, will be the Big Men's Club Classic at the Verdi Club. The fights will begin at 8 o'clock. Plenty of action is promised. From "feather" to "heavy" the boys will be in there giving their best. We have also heard that there will be refreshments for all.

Saturday morning at 12 o'clock the Crew will do a little competitive rowing at Yacht Harbor. Let's turn out and give the boys a hand. They've been working steady and hard to give the college a crew.

Gym credit will now be given for Men's Riding. This riding class will particpate in riding competition and in various horse shows. Will those interested please see Dean Browne or Bud Gardner.

A school committee last Friday picked out a group of pictures from the WPA Art Exhibit which are to be the permanent property of the school. Let's go around and look them over.

In the near future the college will give a half-hour program over the KYA Bay Region College Amateur Hour. A snappy play is wanted by the committee in charge. If some of you playwrights have any on hand please see Bud Gardner or me. We are also on the lookout for any singing or dancing talent to bring in between acts.

Hi-Soph meeting Room 205, Galileo at 2:10 o'clock P.M. Don't forget.

Sweet's Tracksters Battle San Mateo

LAMB'S RAMBLING

By LAMBERT MEYER

It seems too bad that the Northern California Junior College Conference baseball league cannot afford to have two umpires on the field at each and every league encounter. A single umpire, such as they now have, runs into plenty of trouble trying to watch all of the goings on at the same time. We appreciate that the ump is trying his very best but one man cannot do the work that is cut out for two individuals. When a batter makes first base the single ball and strike caller has to take up his position behind the pitcher in order to keep his eye on the baserunner and call the tosses at the same time. Balls and strikes cannot be called in the best manner when the umpire is located so far away from the home plate. If more than one man is on the bases the referee in charge has altogether too much work to do and it is because of this that so many arguments with the lone official have occurred so frequently this season. Against Modesto the Rams had trouble. A Pirate on second base ran as soon as his teammate smacked the ball and as the umpire was watching the procedure on first the man rounded third and slid home safely. Lee Eisan's men stated that the Modestan had failed to touch the third sack. But what could be done? The official said he saw the runner touch the bag and that was that. He, of course, may have been right but it is this column's contention that one man is not sufficient to run a baseball game. Two umpires are needed for every baseball contest in order to stop frequent arguments between coaches, players and spectators.

Standing on the mezzanine on Powell Street the other day scanning the various notices we were asked by a sweet young thing (a blonde) if we could tell her who this fellow "Bye" was on all of the tennis notices, especially the faculty tennis tournament. She wanted to know why Mr. Bye played so many games in one day while the other entrants met every few weeks. We humored her by saying that Bye was the new assistant junior college tennis coach . . . and she really took it all in. Speaking of Mr. Bye many persons like this blonde wondered why Mr. Default won so many matches in the recent city golf tourney and yet failed to receive honorable mention. All we have seen in the papers these last few weeks is "won by default."

Last week's Ram-Sacramento Junior College track meet was called off by Coach Sweet because the local cindermen were not in condition to compete against the Solons. The meet will probably be held in the very near future at the Sacramento oval. Bill Rocktoff, Ram quarter-miler has returned to college after dropping out two weeks ago. His return means renewed strength to the track squad.

Herb Brotman, San Francisco swimming ace has done it again. Herb was sent to Salt Lake City last week by the Olympic Club to compete for them in the senior men's 100 yard free style championship. Assembled in Utah were aquatic stars from all over the country. Herb roiled the tank in 55.5 to take a first in this event. It's getting to be a habit with this handsome San Francisco Junior College lad.

Johnny Fitzgerald, Ram catcher was the happiest man on the field at the recent San Francisco-Modesto baseball series at Funston Field. When the winning run crossed the plate in the 12th inning Johnny raced around the diamond like a madman. Here is one fellow with more fight than we have ever seen on a field. His catching was good too, as he took no credit away from Ed Arvedi, the starting catcher.

Incidentally that was one game that was really worth viewing. The score changed its position so many times it looked like a basketball game. The Red and White lost the game five times and won it back six times. That double victory sort of eases the basketball defeats and the 6 to 6 football tie.

* * * * *

Gene Kiley, playing left field for Lee Eisan's men last Tuesday afternoon against State College hit two of the hardest blows ever seen at the new Roberts Field. Gene connected with two doubles that traveled the length of the field and he was the only Ram player to garner two extra base bingles. The last time a ball of this type was hit in the field was when the old Recreation Park was being used for Pacific Coast League baseball games.

Coach Tom Wilson's netmen have yet to taste defeat. Leading the conference tennis league the men meet the strong San Mateo Junior College tennis outfit this Saturday afternoon. The Bulldogs are a tough squad and should cause plenty of trouble for the Rams. We predict they will not only come out on top but will win the Northern California Junior College Conference championship.

Rumor has it that crew coach Gaddy arises quite early every morning and drives a mess of balls at a certain hole to see just how close he can come to scoring a hole in one. Making a hole in one is one accomplishment of which not many college coaches can boast.

Now that the season is well under way, the Ram nine will start playing some of those crucial games.

This week-end at Kentfield the Red and White will tangle with the league-leading Marin squad in a series that will be important both from the team's point of view and the spectator's. Either nine can jump into the top rung in the loop by twin victories.

Interesting to watch will be the pitchers duel between two veteran chuckers, Larry Wilgus of San Francisco and Bob Creighton of Marin. The score now stands at one-all, Larry having beaten Bob in the first series last year and having the tables turned on him in the second.

Although Creighton won All-Conference honors last season, he is being given trouble by a new pitcher for the starting assignments. From all reports, Jasper, the newcomer, is quite a hurler and will make things tough for the Red Raiders.

The only two games the teams have in common are the Modesto contests. The Rams nosed out the Pirates by 10-9 and 5-4 scores, the former tilt going 12 innings with the latter lasting seven frames.

Marin didn't fare as well. The Yellow and Black split the honors, dropping the first game 4-2 and coming back to win the night-cap 5-0. Jasper pitched the second affair and limited the Pirates to one-hit while Creighton was beaten in the opening tilt.

San Francisco will get their first chance to see Johnny Allen and Adams in action and they hope they aren't very active on Saturday. Both lads are rated the tops in the circuit, the former covering the short-patch and the latter playing one of the outfield positions.

With Wilgus on the mound in the nine inning contest, the Rambling Reds will depend on either Joaquin Martinez or Les Larson or both to out-throw the Mariners in the shorter game.

Ram supporters are urged not to take the State defeat too hard. We don't intend to alibi for our loss but any the players are willing to put hard cash on the line the next time out against the Stumbling Staters. A tentative date has been set for the second game, April 27, and it will be played at FUNSTON.

The Valencia Street Cow Pasture, which is commonly called Roberts Stadium, was the scene of the debacle. A description of the field will convince you of the odds against any team playing there for the first time.

A trench several feet deep runs across the right field with light poles standing up here and there. Mounds of dirt clutter the ground above the trench and bushes take up the remaining space. On one occasion, a ball was hit to center field with Joe Ardanaz set to make the putout. But one of the poles interfered with the catch and the runner was credited with a double.

Again in the second inning the ball was hit to right-center but jumping over dirt-hills and down trenches slowed the fielders up so as they didn't reach the ball in time. And to add to it the ball went into a bush. Before the ball was retrieved the runner was on third base.

The infield is all grass and is the first time San Francisco has played on such a diamond. All the balls were hard hit but the thick grass slowed them down so that the Buchanan Bluffers looked good. At least half the blows would have gone for hits on a dirt infield.

So, look for the date of the next game and be on hand at Funston park to see the Red Raiders send the Alley-Gators back to the swamps.

Santa Rosans Trip Eisanmen Twice as Locals Make Errors

Double Bill Dropped by Rams In Games Marked by Errors; First Game 8-3, Second 4-3

From champs to chumps in one week. That's the story of the Ram baseball team. Last week they knocked over the high-stepping Modesto nine, to climb into second place in the loop. This week they drop two contests to the last place Santa Rosans to fall back to the cellar position.

The scores of the games were 8-3 and 4-3. Both contests were close and both could have gone to the Red and White if they had been playing the heads-up ball of the previous week. Errors and bad plays at the wrong time were the predominant factor that swung the contests to the Cubs.

San Francisco lost no time in scoring in the opening tilt. The team put across two runs in the opening frame and came back with one more in the second. It looked like a walk-away for the Powell Streeters, but the Red and Blue came back in their half of the second and tallied three times to tie the count at 3-3.

All three of the runs were unearned. The Rams had a chance for a cinch double play to retire the side but the ball was booted with only one man put out. The next three batters hit singles to drive in the runs.

From the second inning on, the San Franciscans failed to score again and were only able to garner three hits in the remaining seven frames. The home team scored three in the sixth and two more unearned runs in the seventh to finish the scoring and the Rams. The latter two tallies were made on three successive errors.

Larry Wilgus pitched the first tilt and wasn't responsible for his team's defeat. The nine failed to give Gus any support on the field or at the plate. They must have used up all their basehits last week, for they could only garner six in the nine innings. Little Tony Scafani hit 2 for 3 while Jack Berutich came through with a couple to lead the squad.

In the seven-inning game the Red Raiders clung to a one run lead scored in the third but didn't protect their advantage sufficiently in the fifth and allowed the Bear Cubs to run three men over the home plate. With two men out, a slow ground ball was hit to second base but an error on Scafani't part let two runs in and a single by the next batter tallied one more. The miscue was Tony's first in many games and was precipitated by a base-runner who stopped long enough to take Tony's eye off the ball.

Trailing 3-1 in the last inning, the Rams put on a spurt that tied up the game and just missed a chance of going out in front. It was two outs and runners on first and second when Joe Ardanaz came to bat. Joe hadn't connected for a hit all day. But he came through with a long triple to right-center to send two men across the plate and just missed scoring himself. He was thrown out at home on a relayed ball from the outfield.

Joaquin Martinez was relieved of the mound-work in the seventh and Les Larson did the throwing. Les put himself in the hole when he walked the first man and the next two hit. He struck out the next two batters but Maroni, on third base, stole home on an attempted squeeze play that failed.

San Francisco only managed to collect six hits with Scafani coming up with two for a series average of .571.

Tennis Team Victorious Over Armstrong Netmen

Continuing on its victorious way, the tennis team took the Armstrong netsters in stride last Saturday, winning all of the six matches played. Mitchell and Cardinal and Lyman and Lazzeri won the doubles, while Altfield, Ennes, Lyman and Lazzeri bested their respective opponents in the single. The matches were played at the Palace of Fine Arts courts.

Following on the heels of the victory over Menlo, the win last Saturday gave the San Francisco squad a total of eleven matches won out of a possible twelve, and placed it among the leaders in the conference. The worst is yet to come, however, as the two strongest teams in the conference, San Mateo and San Jose, remain to be played.

PREVIEW OF NEXT FRIDAY'S FIGHTS— LET'S HOPE THEY LOOK BETTER THEN!

The speed merchant, Dick Moon, will attempt to finish ahead of four ambitious contenders for his feather weight honors. His finalist opponent of last year, Frank Silvestri, is expected to furnish him the most competition although Don Bryant, George Urabe and Jim Har are all capable of upsetting the pre-fight dope bucket.

PEE WEE BATTLERS

In the pee wee division Bob Fujimoto, wiry crew coxswain will meet an unnamed opponent. It is rumored that a prominent campus politician will compete at this weight but he has requested that his name be kept secret. It is said that he will conceal his identity with a mask and fight under the title of the "Masked Marvel".

> AMS FIGHTS
> Neil Decker, former Golden Gloves Champion, will box an exhibition at the Verdi Club Friday night against some local amateur, according to an announcement by AMS officials.

A dearth of talent is evident in the wrestling classes but it is expected that a suitable opponent will be found to meet Andy Oddstead, the lone heavyweight wrestler who has been signed up. Fred Baker will tangle with Frank Knowlton for middleweight grappling honors in a match that should prove entertaining to the "grunt and groan" fans.

FENCING CHAMPIONSHIP

The two finalists in the fencing championship will be chosen from among Venedict Osetinsky, Leon Tichinin, Bedayan Torcou, Rhys Jones and Bob Kroft, according to foils coach Jack Gaddy. The fencing match will be a five minute time limit affair.

Joe Amori, faculty adviser to the Associated Men Students, will act as referee of the bouts and Lambie Meyers, Guardsman Sports Editor, will be timekeeper. Pete Jambruno will handle the announcing job.

The fights are slated to start promptly at 8:00 o'clock, according to Mix. The Verdi Club is located at 2424 Mariposa Avenue and can be reached by taking an "H" car and getting off at Mariposa and walking half a block, or by a "25" or "27" car and walking one block and a half.

Following is a complete list of entries:

Busy Ram Trackmen To Compete Against Cal Freshmen Team

By Lambert Meyer

San Francisco Junior College's track and field stalwarts will be out to do a bit of upsetting this Saturday afternoon when they encounter the California freshmen in a dual meet at Edwards Field in Berkeley.

On paper the statistics are all in favor of the Golden Bear babes as the Californians have plenty of fast times to their credit, to which the Ram cindermen have not come close. Their hearts are high and their distances are far. In fact, the freshmen are superior to any junior college on the coast. Still the men in Red and White have high hopes of scoring an upset and fail to remember the Bears 87½-34½ victory over a group of East Bay all-star trackmen last week.

SPRINTS CLOSE

The sprints should be very close as both the Rams and the Bears have ten flat century men. Joe Garcia, junior college speed-burner and Carl Brombacher of Berkeley should lead all others to the tape in both the 100 and 220 yard dashes. Both men have run the 100 in ten seconds and the 220 in .22 flat. Cal Clemens, another Bear sprinter has a good chance to upset the two favorites.

Al Modisette, Cal quartermiler and Bill Rocktoff, Ram speedster should offer fans the "thriller" of the afternoon when they meet in the 440 yard dash. Modisette has run the quarter in 49.6 this season and has yet to be defeated. Rocktoff's best time is 50.5. Don Bryant or "Ace" Mitchell should fight off Ed Widell of Berkeley to take a second in the race. In the last few years California has always excelled in this distance.

DISTANCES FAVOR CAL

The 880 yard run is close as neither squad has outstanding half milers. If Mitchell enters the event he should take it from either Bohme or Reynolds, Bear 880 men.

It's all Berkeley in the mile with Stanley Sadaj, Hawaiian phenom leading all other entrants to the finish line. Sadaj clicked off a 4:25 mile last Saturday and was followed very closely by California's Vollmer and Cooper. Coach Sweet has yet to find a miler to come up to expectations.

HURDLES EXCITING

The hurdle events are the chances for the San Francisco Junior College to upset the old dope bucket. The local's hopes lie in a bunch of stout-hearted lads namely, Ty Barre, Joe Sanderson, Jim McGruer, Bill Gerhughty and Jimmy Fahn. All of these men have been practicing diligently on the barriers and will make the Bear timber toppers hustle. Outstanding for the Blue and Gold in the hurdles is John Stock, former Lowell High School champion. Stock runs both the low and high races and has a habit of scoring double victories. Al Williamson is another Bear hurdler that is extremely fast. With ideal track conditions Coach Sweet is looking for a timber victory in favor of the Junior college.

FIELD EVENTS HAZY

All of the field events with the exception of the pole vault should be a toss-up. McCarthy, Cal pole vaulter has been clearing the bar at 12 feet 6 inches consistently and no Ram sailer has yet to reach the 12 foot mark. Jim Fahn and Charlie Schardin should take the second and third positions. Sweet has been trying his hardest to develop a broadjumper for coming meets and he is in hopes of defeating California's Ed Smith.

The Bears are weak in the discus but strong in the shot and Ram weightmen Loving, Brain and Worsham are likely to make the spectators stand up and take notice.

In order to win the javelin Sweet must develop an 185 foot spear tosser and that is not as easy as it sounds. "Muscles"

Crewmen Paddle to Easy Victory Over U.S.F. Frosh Boat

Splashing their way to an impressive win in the opening conference race, the college crew finished some five boat lengths ahead of the University of San Francisco freshmen in an engagement held over the Yacht Harbor course last Saturday morning. The Gaddy men took the lead at the start and were never headed during the entire race.

A powerful start sent the Ram crew a half boat length ahead and this lead was increased all the way down the course as the lighter Don Oarsmen were unable to match the long stroking junior collegians.

The lineup of the victorious college boat was as follows: Port: Bob Caratto, stroke; El Hubacker No. 5; Christ Buckley No. 4; Don Mix No. 3; "Tip" Hamilton No. 2; and Bill Schoenfeld, bow. Starboard: Joe Arnold, stroke; Carl Brogger, No. 5; Ty McHugh No. 5; Joe Kissel, No. 3; Art Nelson, No. 2; and Harry Wagstaff, bow.

Next Saturday morning the college crew will meet the strong San Mateo Junior College boat over the same course in another conference race. The peninsula Bulldogs hold a win over Oakland Poly in their only league test to date and they are rated as "the boat to beat" if the Rams want to further their championship aspirations.

BULLDOG SQUAD RATED BEST IN TRACK LEAGUES

Peninsula Outfit Boasts Several Record Holders In Sprints, Shot, Mile

Russ's Rambling Rams will receive their first test of track and field competition this afternoon when they tackle the powerful San Mateo Junior College cindermen in a dual meet at the San Mateo oval. The original meet was called off because of rain and as this is the first meet in which Coach Rus Sweet's men have come up to top form, the clash with the Bulldogs from the peninsula should be quite an exciting battle.

Coach Tex Byrd's country outfit has taken the measure of the California and Stanford freshmen teams while the Rams dropped their first meet to the Indians.

Looking at comparative performances the Mateans look too strong for the locals as their times, distances and heights are much better than those of the San Francisco squad.

DASHES TOSSUP

In the 100 yard dash Joe Garcia, Ram ten flat man and Ted Ellison, Bulldog 9.9 speedster will battle it out for first place honors. The two will also meet in the 220 yard dash, Ellison having a nice 21.6 already this year.

Arnold Wirz, 51 flat 440 man from the peninsula and Bill Rocktoff of San Francisco will offer an exciting race in the quarter mile as will "Ace" Mitchell of the Rams and Darold Young of the Bulldogs in the 880.

The mile should go to the Mateans with Cecil Cole winning as he pleases. Cole ran the mile in 4.23 against the Stanford freshmen.

The country opponents are strong in the hurdles with Will Dod, Bill Smith and Al Johnson. Dod ran 15.6 against the Cal frosh while Johnson took the highs in 25.1. San Francisco's hopes lie in Ty Barre, Jim Fahn, Jim McGruer, Joe Sanderson and Bill Gerhughty.

BULLDOG WEIGHTMEN STRONG

The field events should net the Mateans plenty of points, especially the weights. They have in the shot put Bill Whole, holder of the National Collegiate shot put record and in the discus there is Bill Talcott, capable of tossing the platter 135 feet. No Ram weightman have come up to these distances as yet. Sweet is in hopes of either Walt Loving or "Rosy" Rosenweig breaking through for a win.

Close competition is expected in the high jump with the Powell Street team having a slight edge. As yet no San Mateo jumper has topped 5 feet 8½ inches. Ernie Loustalot, consistent 6 foot jumper

AWS SPONSORS TEAS TO HONOR SENIOR CLASSES

Three teas in series will be given for women representating the senior classes of all San Francisco high schools by the Associated Women Students was announced recently by Elaine Dominguez, president of the organization. Three different high schools will be entertained at each tea, and hostesses for the occasion will be appointed by Miss Dominguez. Those chosen for each tea will be alumnae of the high schools being honored, and will be selected from a group of women students volunteering to serve. Miss Dominguez urged women interested in serving as hostesses to representatives of the high schools from which they have graduated to see her or Helene Turner, NYA director, as soon as possible.

Guests at the teas will include officers or representatives of graduating classes, vice-principals, and faculty members. They will be entertained in the gallery at John Howell's Book Shop, 434 Post Street, where they may see the college sponsored Federal art exhibit. Tentative dates for the teas are May 4, 6 and 12.

"There are two advantages to the series of social affairs semi-annually given by the AWS," commented Dean Eugenie A. Leonard. "First, it serves to acquaint high school seniors with the junior college and with outstanding leaders in the college, and second, it assists senior counselors, since through discussion with college faculty members they add to their knowledge of courses offered by the college. I would like to urge women students to volunteer as hostesses for the affairs so that they may be on hand to greet representatives of their alma mater."

The results of the hitting in the first four conference games shows Mickey Berman out in front for the Guardsman batting trophy with surprising .583 percentage. Mickey has been to bat 12 times and has lambasted 7 hits.

Following Berman is Paul Hjort who has slammed out the same number of safe blows, 7, but has been to bat 15 times for a .466 average. Joe Ardanaz is third with 7 for 18 for a .388 mark. Babe Lucchesi is hitting .333 and Tony Scafani .30B.

All these averages include only the Sacramento and Modesto games.

* * * * *

Ralph Polidoro of Modesto is our nominee for All-Conference. Ralph plays center field and plays it well. In Saturday's game he made several pretty catches, running far to the right, left and forward to make them. At the plate Ralph slammed out eight hits in ten times at bat, one being a home-run and another a triple. He also displayed a strong throwing arm, almost nipping several players at home with heaves from deep center.

The Reds turned in one of the best plays of the day in the second game. This same Polidoro slammed one out to center that was good for a home-run. Ardanaz finally reached the ball, tossed to Johnson who relayed the ball to Berman just off the pitcher's box. Polidoro was half way home when Mickey threw the ball to Arvedi to nip Ralph as he slid into the plate.

Maybe Gene Kiley has returned to the hitting form he flashed in early season. Anyhow, Gene slammed out two basehits in the State game. They were two of the hardest hit balls this season. Both balls went sailing way over the left-fielder's head, landing on the upper mound where it settled. Gene was only credited with a double and a triple but both should have been circuit blows.

"Barber" Berutich challenged Coach Eisan to a race last week with Lee readily accepting the challenge. The race was run off last Wednesday with each man winning one and running a dead heat in the third. Lee would take the lead at the start but would falter at the finish with Jack coming up fast to nip him at the finish on one occasion and in the last race breaking even. Can it be that old age is creeping up on Lee? When he can't beat a man like 12 flat Berutich that seems to be the case.

STUDENTS URGED TO SEE FIGHTS FRIDAY

wrestling bouts at the Verdi Club; Watching Bill Phelan and Treacy Slattery decide whether or not to go to class (the class usually loses); Listening to Joe Kissell tell how the crew will win its next race by umpty nine boat lengths; And watching Ernie Loustalot, Ram high jumper and Duke Worsham, college strong man battle it out for 50 yards at the Commerce oval.

* * * *

Make it a point to spend this Friday evening at the Verdi Club. Don Mix and Joe Amori have arranged a variety of boxing and wrestling bouts that are sure to be entertaining and exciting. All weights from the lightest to the heaviest will enter the squared circle to endeavor to win one of the gold medals awarded the winners by the Associated Men Students. It's a big evening with plenty of battles lined up and all attending are assured of plenty of laughs. Be there early to get a good seat.

Ram's Horn Asked to Balance Odds in Blue Book Ex

Dear Reader:

Do you remember reading, several Guardsmans back, about the middle-aged gentleman — a sun-sitter — who never apologized to anyone in his life until this scribe came along? Well, I thought you'd like to know. He passed from us some time ago. I am sure that those who knew him, will not forget his kindly philosophy and gentle nature. If it were possible, I would wish him well.

DCG

Dear Editor:

May I take this opportunity to ask certain individuals to consider others and to stop filling their blue books with notes prior to examinations unless everyone may be granted the same privilege?

If this practice is kept up it might be well to eliminate the statement of ethics on the cover so that Suzie Sneak and Willie Peekalittle may continue their actions legitimately.

I suggest that a certain number of blue books be required per course. These books may be distributed by the instructor at the time of the examination, or to have the blue books exchanged in class at the time of examinations, thus making the odds a little more than even for the less cunning.

I. CARE

Letter to the Ram's Horn:

At the beginning of the semester a group of students infused with "school spirit" formed a society, the purpose of the group to be organized effort to inspire greater student activity. The society, which took the name of "Cap and Meg," then offered to help "put over" any activity of the students. In return for their services they hoped for support of their cause.

And what happened? The group of students in the club, who are supposed to be outstanding in the college, do not support anything or anybody. It is this group that must be watched at all student affairs. Instead of helping to control activities, it is this group that makes all the trouble. The members take their duties as a joke, and campaign against all affairs that, for some reason or other, do not meet with their approval. They are active agitators among the rest of the student body. They strive to keep every one from going to the affairs that they do not happen to like.

Just why was this group formed if they do not intend to cooperate and carry out the ideas of their society? Why must the student body put up with such a group? Should such a type of person be allowed to represent the "outstanding students of our college"?

So far this society has been nothing but a big joke, and lately, nothing but a menace to student peace. It would be better, I am sure, if the group was disbanded, and the whole idea forgotten until the students of the college show enough interest to sponsor a dependable rally committee.

Lack of Speeches Marks Army, Navy Club Dinner

Featuring excellent food and a noticeable absence of after dinner speeches, the Junior College Army and Navy Club held a colorful initiation banquet at the Florence Restaurant, Montgomery Street, on Monday, April 5.

Climaxing a day's festivities and initiation of seven new members into the society, the organization gathered to feast and plan nformally coming events. Discussed around table tops was the trip to Sunnyvale, April 11, and the social sojourn of picnicking in the Santa Cruz Mountains; the probable April 29 trip to Hamilton Field and Stinson's Beach, and the tentative date for the Mare Island Navy Yard visit, to be piloted some Monday by Commander Marsh of the faculty.

Approached in regard to the Club's stand on the peace assembly, Thursday, April 22, from 10 to 12 o'clock, in the lecture hall, T. Gordon Sollman, president, speaking for the group stated:

"You may be sure that my club endorses any movement anywhere, and we'll be in the front row in the Forum Conclave Thursday, the 22nd. Many people have the lop-sided idea that members of the Army-Navy Club advocate a nation armed to the teeth, ready to fight at the least provocation. On the contrary, we, as prospective fighters of any slaughter love to live and realize that war is needless killing. Yes, we will do our best, co-operate with any organization seeking to prevent War."

The next meeting of the group is to take place Thursday, April 15, at 7:30 o'clock at the home of James S. Hughes, sponsor, at 711 17th Avenue.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By PAT MADDEN

Progress, if you have ever had reason to become interested in the state, is variously defined.

In general it is described as, movement forward as in time or space, onward course; progression, the rapid progress of events, the daily progress of the sun; the progress of a disease. It is further defined as:

1. An official journey or circuit, as of a judge or bishop making a visitation; specify: a royal journey or tour marked by splendor, pomps, and pageants.

2. An advance to an objective; a going or getting ahead; as, to make a little progress in a fog, an aid to one's progress in the study of French, the committee reported progress.

3. The action or process of advancing or improving by marked stages or degrees, gradual betterment; as, assured of his progress; the history of educational progress specified: progressive development of evolution of mankind as a process or fact; as, is progress an illusion?

"Hastening on the wings of enlightenment and progress to an imminent millenium . . . ." A. J. Balfour.

4. The theory that change from old to new is essential to progress.

5. To make progress, or journey especially a royal journey; to travel.

6. To make progress, or improvement; to develop to a higher, better or more advanced stage.

"If man progresses, Art must progress too" . . . . Caird.

7. Scots Feudal law . . . Succession in right to a feudal estate.

8. Progress denotes advance or forward movement; especially toward an objective; act of advancing or moving continuously by successive steps or degrees; as, "The whole siezure, progress, and termination of a disease." (Poe.)

". . . . delightful neverending progress to perfection . . . ." (Hazlitt.)

"That slow progression of things which naturally makes for elegance and refinement, the last effect of opulence and power." (Sir J. Reynolds.)

"Every generation . . . . adds . . . . its own discoveries in a progression to which there seems no limit." (T. L. Peacock.)

9. Music; to proceed, as a voice or part, from one note or tone to the next.

10. To pass over or through.

11. To cause to progress; to push forward or advance, as legislation.

12. To move forward; to proceed or advance from place to place, point to point, or step to step; as, the bridge or the narrative is progressing; he has progressed further than you.

13. A journeying forward, a march, expendition, or journey; as to a place or through a region; a tour . . . .

From WAA headquarters this week comes the direct information that "tennis, basketball, baseball, hockey, archery, fencing, and recreational games tournaments are progressing."

Bears Favored to Defeat Cindermen

On cold dope it looks like plenty of firsts for the California freshmen team with the San Francisco Rams covering up the holes with lots of seconds and thirds. Last year the Bears trounced the San Francisco team something like 75 to 50 although Coach Sweet's trackmen took seven first places out of 14 events on the program. Those second and third positions count an awful lot in the final point analysis.

The rivalry is sure to be keen Saturday afternoon at the California oval when these two groups of cindermen clash in another heated dual track and field meet.

Men's Riding Classes To Start If Sufficient Males Show Inclination

Because of the popularity of women's riding classes a men's horseback group under the direction of Coach Laurine Kuhn will be started as soon as enough men students sign up for the new sport. The men's classes will be joined with the women's on Friday afternoons and the one hour ride will count as a regular one-half unit gymnasium class. Men enrolled in gym may be excused to join the horseback riding group.

There will be two groups, one for beginners and the other for advanced riders.

A San Francisco Junior College Horse Show will be held in the near future at the Stanyan Street stables and everyone enrolled in this activity will have a chance to enter. The winners in this competition will represent the junior college in the city Horse Show held late in May.

All men students interested in joining the co-eds on a Friday gallop should contact Dean Browne or Bud Gardner as soon as possible.

The same prices will prevail for both men and women.

The pole vault is a tossup with Jim Fahn and Charlie Schardin of the Red and White jumping against Bill Cooley of the Bulldogs. All three have reached the 11.6 height.

Broad jumpers for both teams are only fair and the javelin should be all San Mateo with Norman Raffe winning in a walk. Raffe, a 165 foot tosser is also backed up by John Hicks, another consistent thrower. Duke Worsham, Ram spearman, is the dark horse of the event.

April 8—Ah, dear diary, there is so very, very much to tell you that I will have to do so in two installments. Yesterday Father, who is still in town negotiating a real-estate transaction to buy a place called the Ferry Building, brought some wonderful news to the breakfast table. It seems that he had arranged for me to work for one day on a real, honest-to-goodness, genuine, not an imitation, DAILY NEWSPAPER! Can you imagine? Neither can I.

Well, I didn't go to school that day at all, I was so excited. Templeton called up after lunch and asked why I hadn't, and I told him, and he said that was fine and could he come along and I said why certainly, dear Templeton, and he said should he bring Cuthbert's bicycle and I said of course, we must have some means of transportation going to and from big newspaper assignments.

So the next day, which was yesterday, Templeton arrived at our house at eight o'clock in the morning, which we newspaper people call a.m., meaning actual morning. We hopped on Templeton's brother Cuthbert's bicycle, and off we started. The building that held the newspaper was not hard to find, as we asked a nice policeman how to get there.

"Newspaper?" he asked. "Who wants to know?"

"I do," I said. "My name is Elvira Blotz."

"Well," he replied, "just so it ain't Atherton."

Then he directed us to the place, and before you could say boo, well, almost before, we drove up in front of it. We dismounted, and entered. The man that I was supposed to see was called the "city editor," so we walked around until we found a cute little office with that name on the door, and walked in. A big man was sitting at a desk, wearing a tennis eyeshade that was green. However, he paid no attention to Templeton and me, so we walked up to him.

"Pardon me, sir," I began, "but I am Elvira Blotz."

"I'm just as sorry as you are," he replied.

"But, sir—" I said again, however, he interrupted.

"Aren't you Stinky Blotz's daughter?" he asked.

"My father's name, sir, is Horace," I replied with dignity.

"Okay," he replied. Then, turning to dear Templeton, he asked, "Who is this punk?"

"This is Mr. McQuiddle," I answered. "He will accompany me during the day."

"Oh, chaperones, eh?" he asked. "Well, here's your first assignment—COVER THE van WHIFFLEBAUM WEDDING!"

Who are the Van Whifflebaums? What will happen to Elvira and Templeton now, what, oh, what?

AmerTrust Speaker Addresses Mathmen

Students enrolled in Miss Helen Reveal's Business Math. class had the opportunity of hearing L. M. Graybiel, of the American Trust Company, talk about negotiable instruments in the business world, Thursday, April 8. Most of Graybiel's lecture concerned the methods of foreign exchange which business men employ in their dealings with other countries.

Tuberculin Tests Scheduled Mon. Tues., AM, PM

Tuberculin tests will be given to students of the college Monday and Tuesday, April 19 and 20, as announced last week by Doctor R. Duffrey Friedlander, college physician. The tests will be given in the Staff Room, first floor, at Powell Street from 9 to 10 o'clock, and in room 201, Galileo, from 3 to 5 o'clock.

The tests will be read Wednesday and Thursday, April 21 and 22 at the same places and hours. Dr. Friedlander stressed the fact that the test is of no value unless followed by a reading within 48 hours, and that students taking the tests must return for the examination in order for the result to be determined.

The purpose of the test is to ascertain whether tuberculosis germs are in the body. Robert Koch, the discoverer of the germ of tuberculosis, originated this test, which has been used for forty years. It is approved by state and city health departments, tuberculosis sanatoria and scientific medical organizations.

Bulletin Published To Promote Hotel Classes

Realizing the importance of the work being accomplished by the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, the California Northern Hotel Association and the San Francisco Restaurant Association have financed the publication of a Bulletin of Information announcing the various hotel and restaurant management courses offered by the San Francisco Junior College.

Mr. John Gifford, coordinator of this division, compiled the second issue of the bulletin which has just been published. It contains valuable information concerning the courses, instructors, hours, and program for those interested in hotel and restaurant work.

The issuance of this bulletin makes it possible for those outside of San Francisco to become acquainted with the work of the junior college. Of the twenty-seven students enrolled in this division, ten come from around the bay area.

SUPREME COURT ISSUE DEBATES FEATURE MONTH

Featuring a double debate with Sacramento Junior College on April 23, the San Francisco Junior College Debaters have a busy month before them. The question in both debates will be "Should the Supreme Court be changed to meet with President Roosevelt's demands?"

On the morning of the 23rd Gene Blumenthal and Isabel Sharrett of San Francisco Junior College will uphold the affirmative side of the question at Sacramento, while in the evening the college will be represented by James Shorb and Jacques De La Montaigna, against two speakers from Sacramento; the debate to be held at the Lafayette School, which is located at 36th Ave. and Cabrillo Street.

Yesterday afternoon Parnel Brown, and Vivian Fisher debated with Herm Hexstrum and Jim Neal, who were defending the negative side of the same Supreme Court question. The affair took place at Galileo in room 303.

Sometime in May, Miss Brown and Miss Sharrett will compete against the University of California Women Debating team. The issue to be debated will probably be the same one used for the other debates.

NEWMAN CLUB DANCE PLANNED ON MAY 21

Completion of plans for a dance to be held on May 21 at the St. Francis Hotel was announced by Pete Jambruno, president of the Newman Club. The affair will be semi-formal, and the price of bids is $1.25, according to present arrangements.

Jambruno has appointed a committee consisting of Claire Daly, Marcella Hunt, Bob Fex and Jack Reynolds to select an orchestra and to direct the sale of tickets. Bids may be purchased from any member of this committee or from himself, Jambruno said.

The women of the Newman Club recently attended a tea given by the San Francisco Women's College and were also the guests at a garden party given by the Dominican Convent at San Rafael. Catherine Musante acted as faculty representative at both of these affairs.

JOURNAL TAKES IN HISTORY OF FIRST CLASSES

Chance for Complete Sell Out Seen by McHugh, As Options Go Rapidly

Covering briefly but comprehensively in both word and picture the history of the college since its inception, and all activities that have since come into being, the first college journal will offer students and faculty members probably the most unique book of its kind ever published by a junior college, according to the staff now busily engaged in collecting material.

Because of the limited money available, the book cannot be of great size. What is lacking in voluminousness, however, will be more than offset by uniqueness and conciseness, the staff said.

"If by chance the full complement of 700 copies is not sold by the end of this month," the staff declared, "there will be no worry as to the sale of the remainder. When students see the actual book late in May, or in the first week of June, those who have not previously purchased options will swamp the Comptroller's office for copies.

"They are apt to be disappointed, however, insomuch as 700 copies certainly cannot be distributed to each of 1700 students."

SALES GOOD ALREADY

With the sale of options already proceeding briskly, Tyler McHugh, head of the sales committee, has announced that he is optimistic concerning the chances of selling a satisfactory proportion of the total number before the end of April.

"A complete sell-out would not be at all surprising," McHugh said. "The apathy of the general student body toward this publication has been entirely dissuaded during the last week by the publicity given in The Guardsman, and by the extensive campaign launched by the selling committee to reach every student in the college.

WE MEANT BUSINESS

"Earlier in the semester, when the idea was going through the metamorphisis from conception to actuality, several hundred students signed a petition to the effect that they would gladly pay 50 cents for an annual publication. We are now busy proving to those hundreds that we weren't fooling. We hope that they weren't."

One of the most active workers on the staff at the present time is Sam Galstaun, photographer, who, in addition to keeping The Guardsman supplied with pictures, is also busy snapping graduates and activities and collecting many unusual, unposed candid shots at all places where junior collegians convene in the course of the day—and sometimes in the course of the night.

GRADUATES CO-OPERATING

Galstaun announced that by Friday of last week he had taken pictures of 96 prospective graduates. He said that he hopes members of clubs will be as punctual and co-operative as the fourth termers when he gets around to photographing the groups.

Prospective graduates will have their last chance to be photographed tomorrow afternoon, from 2 to 4:30 p. m., and will find Galstaun in The Guardsman office between those hours.

Appointments for retakes, if any, will be announced in next week's Guardsman.

Peace Assembly Tomorrow Morn Endorsed by All

Administration to Excuse 10, 11 O'clock Classes For Annual Protest

Student Council endorsement of the Peace Assembly to be held tomorrow morning at 10 and 11 o'clock in the Extension building lecture hall makes the college's demonstration for peace an all college affair. The administration has already endorsed the rally, and the Forum Club has arranged the program.

Because of the limited capacity of the lecture hall, there will be two assemblies. This will afford every student an opportunity to attend either one of the hour programs scheduled.

Professor David Trueblood of Stanford University will appear as guest speaker at the 10 o'clock session, with John Ross, Junior College instructor, as chairman. Fred Vast will be the student speaker.

STUDENTS TO SPEAK

The 11 o'clock assembly will offer an entire student program, coinciding with student action against war being taken at the same hour in colleges throughout America. John H. Werchick will be guest student speaker from San Francisco State College, and Charles O'Gara will be the junior college speaker. Presiding will be Malcolm Longaker, Forum chairman.

Attention of the students is directed to the class adjournment schedule drawn by the administration. At 10 o'clock the following instructors will adjourn their classes to the lecture hall: Allman, Badger, Colligan, Cooper, Jensen, Larsen, Marsh, Mercer, Musante, Parker, Spencer and Waller.

CO-OPERATION URGED

The following will adjourn 11 o'clock classes: Amori, Badger, Delfs, Horowitz, Mercer, Parker and Smith.

Students who are not in any of the above classes, and want to attend either hour of the Peace Assembly will be excused from their classes.

Referring to final plans for the Assembly Forum Peace Committee Chairman Malcolm Longaker said: "The extensive effort of the Peace Committee guarantees a dynamic and effective program tomorrow. The co-operation of the entire student body is urged. United effort in our peace demonstration will assure us of a moving and impelling assembly."

Society Asks Donations For Rummage Sale Soon

Inviting every member of the Associated Student Body to donate any white elephants they may happen to have around the house, the Women's Service Society of the college has announced its intentions of holding a Rummage Sale on or about May 18.

The sale will be held outside of the college, and the proceeds will be used to swell the WSS scholarship fund. All plans are under the supervision of a committee chairmanned by Madeline Brodie, and composed of Gail Hanna, Barbara Randall, Barbara Latz and Florence Murphy.

"Announcements as to where donations will be received, will be posted on the Extension building bulletin board," Miss Brodie said. "We are particularly anxious that everyone gather up old shoes, discarded Christmas neckties, and other such articles, as we would like to make this sale a successful one."

CENTRAL AMERICAN BOA VISITING HERE

Would you like to see a Boa? No, Gwendolyn, a Boa is not a musical instrument, despite the fact that it was presented to the college Zoology department by the musically-minded Bud Gardner.

For the benefit of the uninformed, a Boa is a species of a Central American snake family, and has the quaint, but somewhat annoying, habit of doing away with its victims by a process known, in the better reptilian families, as strangulation.

Hoiman (which is what we shall call Brother Boa for want of a better name) was discovered by L. A. Wallace, head of Triway Brokage, when he (Hoiman) came in from Central America on a load of bananas.

Wallace turned the creature over to Bud, who in turn presented him to Glenn Noble, Zoology instructor. Noble plans to use him (Hoiman, not Bud) as the nucleus of a collection of such rare specimens to be housed in the science department of the new San Francisco Junior College building.

APPLICATIONS BEING TAKEN FOR STUDENTS GOING TO CMTC CAMP

Open to young men between the ages of 17 and 29, the Citizens' Military Training Camp again offers exceptional vacation opportunity to students who are interested in army life.

Three California camps are located at Fort Scott, Presidio of Monterey, and Fort MacArthur, and the period of training lasts from July 1 to July 30. The Monterey Presidio will offer courses in Infantry, Cavalry, and Field Artillery, while the other two camps give training in Coast Artillery. The Basic Red, White, and Blue courses will be given at all three posts.

ENROLL WITH HUGHES

According to information received by Hughes last week, the enrollment quota at the Monterey Camp has been increased to 130. This is the second time in the last two years that the quota has been increased, which shows the growing interest in these camps among the young men of California.

The primary objects of the Citizens' Military Training Camps are to bring together young men of high caliber from all parts of the state, teach them self discipline and obedience, and develop them physically by out-of-door camp life with athletics of all types. The camps serve to interest young men in the Army without obligating them for future service.

MANY COLLEGIANS GOING

Hughes is satisfied that the enrollment from college this year will exceed the number of last year. He advises students who are interested to communicate with him as early as possible, because the enrollment period closes soon. The following club members have already indicated their intention of attending: John Benton, Chris Harnett, Bradley Schwarz, Ed Solomon, John Stewart, and Nick Suntzeff. Several other students have either sent in their applications or have taken steps to enroll.

VICE DISCUSSED FRIDAY

Discussing the legalization of vice, the Forum Club will meet this Friday night at the home of Robert Z. Selig, 190 Twenty-eighth Ave., accessible by the "C" car.

Madelon Brodie will speak for the legalization, and Dick Date will oppose it. General discussion will follow.

Committee Ready to Advise About USF Scholarship

Members of the University of San Francisco Scholarship Committee will be glad to advise any eligible student on any question covering the examination for the two scholarships, the committee announced today.

Members of the committee are: John Selig, chairman; Mary Jane Learnard, Francis Colligan, Lloyd Luckmann, and John Gaddy. With the exception of Miss Learnard, who can always be found in the Registrar's office, the committee members will talk to interested students between classes, either at the Extension building or at Galileo. Students may consult the class schedule to find these men.

The variety of subjects offered gives all students an equal chance to score high in the examination.

"In answer to the numerous inquiries with regard to the content of the University of San Francisco Scholarship examination," Selig said, "the members of the committee wish to state that, in a comprehensive examination, planned for a large number of students, each contestant will probably lack preparation in one or more fields. Students may compensate for specific lack of preparation by showing exceptional ability in other parts of the test.

"Grading," he continued, "will be made on all the questions printed in the examination. The students who make the highest and the second highest scores in the examinations will win the two and one year scholarships, respectively."

Beta Phi Dance Bids On Sale Now; Few Remaining

Bids for the Beta Phi Dance on April 30 at the Century Club can still be obtained from some of the members, according to David York, fraternity president. Although most of the limited number of bids have been sold already, a few still remain, and it is advisable to obtain one immediately, York said.

The fraternity dance will be a semi-formal affair, and some 150 couples are expected to attend, according to the indications of present ticket sales.

President York also announced that Everett Abar and Carl Brogger were formally installed as members at the meeting on Monday, April 19.

EXECUTIVE COUNCIL STAGGERS WAY THRU BI MONTHLY ROUTINE

With just the necessary quorum present, the Executive Council of the college held its semi-monthly meeting last Thursday, April 15. The long awaited report of the committee appointed to study the revision of the constitution was postponed until the next meeting, because the findings were as yet incomplete. Deming Smith, committee head, gave a brief sketch of the reforms that will be recommended, and said that he hoped it would be possible to have a general student body assembly to consider the changes.

Tyler McHugh, High Soph president, announces that his class has decided to hold its formal dance on May 28 at the St. Francis Yacht Club, and that the price of bids will be either $1.25 or $1.50.

A representative of the Forum Club, Chas. O'Gara, asked the Council's support of the Peace Rally, and requested some money to be used for the purchase of posters.

President James Neal's proposal to have the student body choose a beauty queen was considered at some length, but it was finally decided to withhold a definite decision until more complete information could be obtained.

With initiation of new members as the main business of the evening, a meeting of the Omicron Phi Pi, college economic honor society, was held last Friday evening, according to John Buoncristiani, club president.

New members installed were Patricia Matz, Malcolm Longaker, and Charles Vaughn, and immediately following the installation ceremonies, they were presented with the key charms of the organization by Michael Zarchin, faculty adviser of the society.

SITDOWNERS TOPIC OF FORUM

Presenting a two-way discussion on the current "sit-down" strike, the college Economic Society conducted a semi-Forum on Monday, April 19.

Endeavoring to keep abreast of social and economic changes, student speakers Chason Tucker, pro, and Charles Vaughn, con, talking on the latest weapon of union organization.

College Holds Stage Show at Local Theater

Venturing into a new field of entertainment, the college will hold a jamboree stage show at the Golden Gate Theater April 27, under the auspices of President James Neal and Assistant Yell leader Bud Gardner.

The stage performance will begin at 9 o'clock after the production, "The Woman I Loved," featuring Paul Muni. "Come and find out who she is," directors suggest.

TEMPO COLLEGIATE RAH, RAH!

A collegiate tempo will run throughout the stage show, with the college banner and emblems decorating the stage. President Neal will give a short introductory speech, and yells will be led by Deming Smith and Bud Gardner, so everyone will be right at home.

Two stellar performers will be Dan Hochter and his partner in a swing tap number with plenty on the hoof. Dan is now a professional dancer. Corrine Lynwood, whom many students remember, will sing the latest hit tunes with that southern touch.

Added attractions are: Bill Landis and his guitar, the girl's quartet composed of June Knight, Rosella Retallick, Jane Ferguson, and Annabelle Tyler, and the A Capella Choir.

"GRANDMA WAS A LADY"

Much time has been spent by Neal and Gardner to insure students of a grand evening's entertainment. "Get behind them and help to make this affair the occasion it deserves to be," Neal urges.

"There will be a special section with plush seats and electric fans portioned off for the junior college," Gardner said. "So come early in order to keep the block men out of the front seats. Gentlemen are invited and should be sure to each bring a lady. Grandma will do. (Not insinuating that Grandma isn't a lady.)"

Deadline Close For Forum Club Booklet

With today marking the deadline for contributions that can be submitted to FORUM, the editorial staff announces that it has received, for consideration, 113 pieces of student literature. This number includes 83 poems, and 30 pieces consisting of short stories, plays, articles, descriptions, and satires. Of this material, the FORUM staff will select suitable literature with which it will fill its mimeographed book to be published in May.

At the time of this writing, there are only a few pieces which have been definitely accepted for use in the publication, according to Donald Flash, editor, and these consist of the following: a play by John Ward, two short stories by Betty Deming, an article on the Navajo Indians by Jack Dyson, and an article by Charles O'Gara. Much more material than this will be used, however, since there will be space enough in the book for from 10 to 12 pieces in addition to poetry.

At the last meeting of the staff, which was held Saturday evening at the home of Betty Deming, literary contributions were discussed and plans were made for an advance sale of the FORUM, which will be limited to 250 copies, according to Flash.

GROUND BROKEN SUNDAY

Day of Ceremonies April 25 Shows First Definite Balboa Location Work

Ground at the Balboa Park site of the permanent college building, will be officially and ceremoniously broken next Sunday afternoon, April 25, at 1:30 o'clock.

With the college busily preparing a gala day, civic and educational circles will join to celebrate the second milestone in the college history, which will remain second only to the first August day of organization in significance.

Fittingly coinciding with Public Schools Week observance, the ceremonial part of the ground breaking program, thoughtfully limited to one-half hour's duration, is being sponsored by James Halley and his Citizens' Committee which has planned Public School Week activity, the Board of Education, and a special committee.

CLEAR SKIES

Weather forecasts for Ground Breaking Day Sunday afternoon, provide clear skies, Joseph E. Williams, social science department instructor, and accurate weather bureau predictor, judged for The Guardsman, "In 25 years, there has been no rain on April 25," Williams said.

TENTATIVE PROGRAM

College styled a picnic day, guests will be welcome to the ground breaking scene as early as ten o'clock, with faculty, students, both present and graduated or transferred, their families, and civic leaders expected.

Actual turning of the first shovelful of earth will be accomplished by Mayor Angelo J. Rossi. Speakers of the day will probably be President A. J. Cloud, Board of Education President C. Harold Caulfield, Superintendent of Schools Joseph P. Nourse and Architect Timothy Pflueger. Grandstand guests will include James Halley, Board members Philip Lee Bush, Richard E. Doyle, Mrs. Edwin R. Sheldon, William F. Benedict, Charles A. Derry, and Mrs. Lloyd W. Dinkelspiel, and Recreation Commission head, Mrs. Sigmund Stern. Music will be offered by the A Capella choir.

STUDENT PARTICIPATION

Highlight and feature of the day's events will be the presentation by Associated Student officers of the college of a testimonial to President Cloud. Students attending the ceremony will sign the testimonial, thus recording their names permanently as charter members of the Associated Student organization. Placed in a leather folder similar to the college diploma covers, the record of witnesses listed at the site itself next Sunday, will appropriately mark the end of the fourth college semester, and the graduation of the pioneering "Argonaut" group. At a future date when the college building is complete, the testimonial and signatures will be placed among the growing collection of collegiana that preserves the steps in the making of a college as they are taken.

With Phil Patterson, swimming coach and former Olympic champion, announcing events, the college Cap and Meg Society will sponsor a swimming party at the Fairmont plunge on Friday evening, April 23, according to Deming Smith, head yell leader and Cap and Meg promoter.

The party will start at 8 o'clock, Smith said, and admission will be 35 cents with Associated Students cards.

The highlight of the evening, according to Smith, will be a special race for men, in which swimming ability will not count.

A prize has been secured and at the present time Smith is attempting to arrange for a prize for women so that they may participate in a similar race.

"I have every reason to believe that this swimming party will be as much fun as those held by the college in the past. We are going to have several amusing and entertaining stunts, including some comic diving and an exhibition by the college swimming team."

Smith urges every student who can do so to attend the party, and expressed his deep appreciation to Beard's Ltd. for their splendid cooperation in furnishing the men's prize.

THIRD SHOWING BEGINS AT COLLEGE'S ART GALLERIES

Marking the third of a series of college-sponsored Federal Art exhibits, a group of lithographs and prints began a two-weeks showing at John Howell's Book Shop, 434 Post Street, last Thursday. From this collection students will be allowed to select three of the pictures which will be presented to the college by the Federal Art Project as the nucleus for a permanent art collection in the new college building. Students attending the exhibit will be provided with ballots on which they will mark the three pictures they prefer. This process will be repeated at each of the future exhibits.

Dr. Eugenie A. Leonard, vice-president and dean of women, recommended that every student in the college participate in the selection.

"Here is your chance," she said, "to choose the art collection for your own college. This institution is one of the first in the country, I believe, to adopt such a policy of co-operative selection. Our collection, I hope, will reflect the choice of the majority of our students, and to achieve this objective we must have a large turnout of voting students."

The exhibit, which includes about 45 lithographs and prints, was chosen by a student committee of five art majors se-

ANOTHER HISTORICAL PAGE

One of the most important steps toward the completion of the new San Francisco Junior College will be taken on Sunday, April 25, when the official ground breaking ceremonies are held at the Ingleside Park site. The dipping of the silvery shovel into the rich brown earth will symbolize the realization of a dream long in the hearts of the people San Francisco.

Since the very beginning of San Francisco Junior College, it has been the cherished hope of administrators and students alike that the college would some day have a building of its own. For a while it seemed that these hopes were founded on flimsy foundations but with the announcement two weeks ago regarding the completion of plans and models, the spirit of hopefulness was once more aroused.

Although most of the plans for the actual program of the day of the ceremonies are only tentative, students of the college will definitely participate in a ceremony all their own, honoring their president, Archibald J. Cloud. As part of this ceremony, every student attending the ground breaking, will be allowed to sign his name to a scroll; signifying that he is a charter member of the Associated Students of the San Francisco Junior College. These signatures will be enclosed in a leather diploma case and presented to President Cloud for preservation among the educational archives of the college.

Every organization in the college will want to have something to do with this great and auspicious occasion. Clubs and societies should make plans at once for mass attendance and willingly submit their services to the administration should such services be needed.

On behalf of the Administration and the San Francisco Board of Education, the Editor wishes to urge that every student take an active part in the making of college history by attending these ground breaking ceremonies.

TO MAKE THE WORLD BETTER

This semester, as in the past, students of the college were given the opportunity of participating in examinations which were to determine whether or not there were tuberculosis germs in the body. Through the efforts of R. Duffrey Friedlander, college physician, and the health department of the San Francisco Board of Education, it was possible to give these examinations to any student who was interested.

For many years people have been afraid of the very word tuberculosis. If it were hinted that a person had even a slight touch of the dreaded disease, he immediately drew a mental picture of himself, weak and wan, coughing his way to death in a lonely sanitorium.

Recent medical discoveries reveal that tuberculosis, if checked in its earliest stages, may easily be arrested. In giving a tuberculin test, the doctor injects a liquid called tuberculin into the skin. Later, by the appearance of the skin around the injection, he can tell whether or not the germs of tuberculosis have previously entered the body.

In the United States great progress has been made in fighting tuberculosis, but there are still five hundred thousand persons sick with this disease. Efforts in fighting this stubborn enemy should be increased until it disappears like many of the other life-destroying plagues which have been conquered by modern science.

. . . WHOSE DAY IT IS

Inherent in the soul of nearly every civilized man is a belief in a Supreme Being, an Almighty Father whom the Christians call God.

The most momentous occasion relative to San Francisco Junior College since its inception will take place next Sunday, as ground breaking ceremonies are held "officially and ceremoniously." Gaiety, interest, and auspiciousness are on the scheduled program.

For all this, thanks must somewhere be owing. Mere mortals—architects, Board of Education members, educators—have been thanked before and now in written and spoken word.

For all things of benefit to mankind, however, thanks to the Being that made possible a man with high intelligence should be given.

While in the festive mood proper to next Sunday afternoon's significance, then, all assembled will do well to offer, either in thought or in word, gratification and thanks to the Creator whose Holy day it is, to that Creator whose love of His people makes possible and easier the educational progress of the world.

AFTER DARK

BY John Ward

Noel Coward has long been a much admired play-boy of the western world. A fellow of infinite wit, talent and personality, he is also one to get himself talked about a lot, and has a certain genius for making people think the worst of him. He is a play-wright, a musician, and innumerable other artistic blends, an Englishman, and a millionaire.

At times one feels that Mr. Coward, in his writings, is the essence of sophistication, a man with his "design for living" arranged in blue-prints. One knows instinctively that he chums around with the smartest people, is forever making wise remarks in a nasty way, and loves to fascinate. But at other times one is bound to feel that all his versatility and his terrible cleverness are just too good, too much of an effort. He never seems to write anything with consistent greatness—if any. He must always be witty or amusing or smartly bitter.

Such a work as Post-Mortem was motivated by the feelings that ran rampant in Europe and America after the world war. Some magnificent works resulted, but not Mr. Coward's. It would have been great but it didn't seem to find the right eloquence or an idea large enough. His Bitter Sweet was a delightful bit of whimsy but nothing to shout to the ages about. Even Cavalcade missed fire somewhere. It might seem that Mr. Coward is so much a child of the times that he is unable to grasp a serious face without blushing or a positive emotion without squirming.

His latest book is the long awaited autobiography entitled Present Indicative. His latest plays are Tonight at 8:30, a collection of nine one-act plays, or a series of amusing sketches, some serious, some smart, some very funny. Mr. Coward recently played in them with Miss Gertrude Lawrence on New York's Broadway.

Three of the nine plays are gems of the Coward diadem. The first one to hit the spot was Hands Across the Sea. If one were looking for a plot he would not find it. There is an idea and some really grand conversation. Reading it gives the same impression as the over-crowded cabin in A Night at the Opera. The second to delight was Family Album, a bit of old lace and lavender with a slight shot of cocaine. It was something about a dead father who wasn't what he should have been and the difficulty the children get into when they try to put on black, and it was beautifully handled with just the right spirit. Nothing ponderous, just nice.

The third, and it was a comedy as well, was Ways and Means, something to do with people in debt with no prospects and a lovely burglar who puts everything in order. As you will notice, all three plays mentioned are comedies, for therein Coward shines. But when he gets involved in the suicide of a psycho-analyst or marital cares and temptations, Coward loses his charm and becomes another playwright struggling with the woes of mankind none too well. It must appear that Mr. Coward can't become serious without losing his personality.

They are, however, well worth an hour's reading. The situations are interesting, the lines very good at times, ordinary at other times. But a good deal of it is in the spirit of Design For Living and Private Loves.

Men's Club fights last Friday—some fun—and a good time was had by all. Let's have some more of these interesting affairs in the future.

Next Friday night the Cap and Meg, official name for the school's distinguished rally committee will hold the first swimming meet of the year. The meet will be held at the Fairmont Plunge around 4 bells, or 8 o'clock to the uninitiated. The committee promises plenty of fun and program. A student rate of 35 cents will be the only charge.

Tomorrow morning classes will be dismissed between 10 and 11 o'clock to participate in a peace assembly sponsored by the college Forum Club and the Executive Council. However, students must report to classes to be counted present. The conference will be held in the Lecture Hall and noted speakers from the University of California and Stanford University will be present.

Who's playing games in our Supreme Court? Yes, we had heard that a few of the members are in their "second childhood", but the game of Dr. Jekyl and Mr. Hyde is such a mature undertaking. Someone is probably laughing up his dignified robe sleeves at this very moment.

Now it is possible, of course, that more than one judicial mind is relaxing in the enjoyment of this entertaining sport, e. g., Justice So-and-so might sulk and complain "It's my turn to vote 'yes' today, I had to say 'no' in the last eight cases" or "Shall we vote to see who says 'aye' and otherwise in today's problem?" but we prefer to surmise that a single cerebrum is responsible. That established, let's examine two of the recent decrees handed down by the "constant (?) nine". The Guffy Act was declared unconstitutional by a five to four vote, while the Wagner Act, in principle the same, was sanctioned by a similar majority. Five is one more than four in either case, so the problem of the American Public is that of seeking out this inconsistent jurist and murmuring in his stately ear the pertinent question "Why?"

It is hoped the good instructor is correct in his statement, for in our high schools and junior colleges today many thousands of students are hampered by useless, conventional rules for matriculation which are standard the country over in their asininity. Why should a mathematically inclined student be forced to writhe under the choice sayings of Cicero? What is so foolish as making a person, interested in Shakespeare's works, bow down to the precise will of Pythagoras?

By Ardell White

In last week's Guardsman there appeared, in the column called Spotlight, an article about the faculty survey that showed the men students of the college do better in their studies than the co-eds. The survey's findings are, of course, both authoritative and accurate, but Don Mix, the author of Spotlight, made several statements about—quote—Betty Co-ed—unquote—that we feel ought to be refuted. And now, with your consent, we shall attempt to do that very thing.

First of all, the survey proves without doubt that in this institution the men students hold to a higher scholastic standard than do the women. The hundreds of valid reasons for this fact, however, would fill two columns of enumerated, so, as Mr. Mix admits, that it is not caused by any lack of gray matter in the feminine brain, we'll skip them. Suffice it to say that in the many studies of the subject held by eminent sociologists, such as the one undertaken by Mrs. Helen Thompson Woolley at the University of Chicago, it has been proved that neither sex is superior mentally to the other. Therefore we'll pass on to the statements in question.

1. "Handling" instructors. The article states that this is merely something the author heard. We hasten to assure him that it is certainly true that at least half of the students in high school and college indulge in the well-known apple polishing technique. Please note, however, that this is a practice followed by both feminine and masculine students, and we have known some male experts at the art who went to all sorts of trouble to find out just what their instructors' favorite conversational topics were, then talking to them for hours, and receiving excellent grades for their pains. It's not exclusively a feminine failing.

2. 85 per cent of the women of today find . . . one of those meal tickets that they promise to "love, honor, and obey" and thereby end all necessity of struggling for a pay envelope. Most of that 85 per cent earned her own living before being married, competing against men on the same basis, probably working just as many hours as men did, but receiving much less pay. And goodly numbers of that per cent continue to work after they "find a meal ticket," so that they hold down a job, and, as a sideline, keep house and bring up the children. This is practically a year-round vacation. Try is sometime. On the other hand, if you resent the status of a "meal ticket," consider that men have put themselves in that position by insisting that their wives stay at home and occupy themselves with such ladylike and fascinating tasks as washing dishes and scrubbing floors. So you see the lady of your choice will probably earn the meals (prepared by herself!) that you give her.

3. . . . turning in their old "lord and master" by merely trekking to Reno and complaining about "mental cruelty." Did you know that divorces, especially Reno divorces, are very expensive? And therefore a bit of investigation will, I am sure, convince you that most of the ladies who obtain them belong to the eccentric idle rich who have a lot of queer ideas anyway. Most ordinary people obtain divorces for perfectly justifiable reasons, not because they want a new and different husband or wife. Of course there are some ladies who would like a this year's model "meal ticket," but—and this is important—there are just as many so-called tired business men who want to trade in the poor old Mrs. for that blonde stenographer who is so understanding.

4. . . . a man's world . . . "Thank God." Why should you be in favor of a man's world, a woman's world, or any other kind of world that's run for the benefit of one element of the population? Sports surely have taught you the value of fair play. Certainly you can see, then, that a world that insures a chance to everyone without discrimination, will, in the long run, give the greatest amount of happiness to the greatest number of people.

This is not intended to be a vindicative tirade against Mr. Mix or the male sex in general. What it is intended to be, is a plea for a fairer and more broadminded attitude. In other words, women have certain faults and virtues, and so have men. If you discard all prejudice and face facts squarely, you'll find that the average human being, man or woman, is a mixture of good and bad traits, but withal is a pretty good sort.

SPOTLIGHT

By Don Mix

Now that spring, with its profusion of yellow sweaters and white shoes, has definitely caught up with us, it seems highly possible that summer will follow along very shortly. It is then that the Great American Athlete who has been chained to a desk all winter will slip out of the irons to have a fling at active sports. The sad part of this is that most of these enthusiastic outdoor lovers are not as good at the games they play as they would like to be. Henry McLemore, famed United Press sports columnist, has decided that there is an urgent need for a manual or primer which would explain to the dub how he could appear to be much better at games than he really is.

We have had considerable experience in playing the role of the dub on the golfing green, and feel that we are well qualified to give a few pertinent pointers on the art of making the other three of a foursome think that we are a rare combination of Bobbie Jones and Walter Hagen. The main thing to remember is to keep the others thinking that all your bad shots are the result of carelessness and not a lack of skill. We have tested the following expressions and found them very effective.

"That's the same slice that bothered me in the Muny Tournament last month."

"Guess I'll have to get to bed earlier if I want to break par on this course. I can feel my right shoulder collapsing on those drives."

"I'll never forget the day I got hot and made a birdie on this hole."

Mix Tells 'em How To Play the Game

Another cloak that will cover a multitude of bad shots is a very tolerant attitude toward faults on the greens. This remark can come in very handy: "Have you ever got a decent brassie lie on this hole?"

When you go to the tennis court, you must always carry at least three racquets, even if you have to borrow them from your neighbors, because there is nothing more impressive. It lends an air of professionalism that you can easily maintain by following these instructions.

Test each of the racquets carefully by taking lusty swings through the air and mumbling about "poor balance" or "lack of weight." When you miss a shot, all the spectators will blame it on the weight. It is also an excellent point to call the racquet a "bat," because this is a term used by all profound students of the game—at least that's what Mr. McLemore says.

You can also make your opponent overlook your poor playing by telling him how his own game is improving. He will generally become so pleased with himself that he will attribute his victory to his own ability rather than to your lack of skill. "Nice placement, old man," or, "That serve was too hot for me to handle" are choice phrases to be used.

After we again confer with Mr. McLemore, we will give you some info on how to handle your swimming and equestrian difficulties.

It's strange, isn't it, how one thing will lead to another? It all started when the Pay Dirt column carried a seemingly harmless item concerning Bing Crosby's ideal girl. Immediately afterward, Jack Campbell, Pay Dirt author, received an annonymous letter accusing him of all sorts of things, and ending up with the statement that there actually existed, in the college, just such a girl. More in the spirit of fun than for any other reason, we put a paragraph in our own column to the effect that the author of the letter should send said "ideal girl" around to WJ, as Jack would like to look her over. Immediately, we receive an annonymous letter accusing us of all sorts of things, and calling all Guardsman reporters a lot of "infants needing nursemaids." We haven't the slightest idea just what the I.Q. of Guardsman reporters has to do with Bing Crosby's ideal girl or the price of butter in Ethiopia for that matter but we would like to set the writer of these letters right on a few things. For that reason (and, by gosh, that's the only one), we'd like to know just who is the guilty party. Come on, now, be big! If you're a gal, (and we don't think you are), we promise not to bite, scratch, or kick, and if you're a man, well, why in the name of something-or-other can't you be big enough to sign your name to your little "billet doux?"

GROUND BREAKING

"There'll be a junior college for us if we have to build it ourselves"

WHERE? THERE?

"That should be an ideal spot for the ceremonies next Sunday."

DISCOVERY

"Boys! What's this?"

"It's over by that tree. Isn't it Jimmy?"

Little Edwin and Jimmy Browne, sons of Dean Edwin C. Browne, couldn't sign their names to the scroll as charter members of San Francisco Junior College. But they did learn of the proposed ground breaking ceremonies a week before hand.

The next best thing, then, they thought, would be being the first to break ground. And, perhaps, they would be more sure of having new buildings when they graduated from high school if they pitched in and helped construction.

So, borrowing Dad's best garden tools, they hopped a street car right after last Sunday's lunch and went out to Balboa Park to see what they could do.

They chose a fine place to dig—but it happened to be

But Dad and Paul M. Pitman, assistant to President Archibald J. Cloud, came out to select a good spot for the following week's ceremonies, and—the pictures tell the story.

Pitman left his children, Betty Anne and Paul Marsh, jr., in his car, but they heard the exclamations of the two alarmed fathers, and came on the scene (right) just in time to see Jimmy and Eddie getting a shellacking.

CONSTERNATION

"Horrors. Ed. this is still Recreation Commission property."
"You mean we haven't our ten additional acres. Pit? But The Guardsman said we had them!"
"No, Ed. not yet. The boys have broken ground in disputed territory. Let's go——"

"Where Ground Is Broken, A Building Must Be Constructed"

SCHMIDT'S STATEMENT CORROBORATED SUNDAY

Editor's Note: Compare the events covered in these stories which appeared in The Guardsman issues from March 10 to April 14, to those which summarized proceedings in building the college in its own building throughout three semesters. San Francisco may have been slow in providing for its infant but lusty junior college, but if action comparable to that of the past month continues, The Guardsman will agree that after all, San Francisco does know how.

From The Guardsman, March 10, 1937:

Strong possibility that the new San Francisco Junior College, now under construction at Balboa Park, will be ready for occupancy next spring was announced by Walter Schmidt, assistant to Joseph P. Nourse, superintendent of schools, in an interview with a Guardsman reporter last week. Schmidt disclosed that the grounds have been cleared and leveled in anticipation of the starting of final construction plans, which are scheduled to begin in the near future.

"I see no reason," Schmidt said, "for placing the date of actual completion of the new college further ahead than the opening of the spring term of 1938."

Schmidt's statement collaborated with that of President Archibald J. Cloud who, in an address to the incoming freshmen at the beginning of this semester, also said that the new college would be finished within the year, if some unforeseen difficulty did not arise.

Schmidt said that the reason for such urgent haste in the matter was realization of the many handicaps that the students now in attendance at the junior college are forced to bear.

"The superintendent's office deeply regrets the present arrangements, which force the student to spend half his day traveling from one class to the other, and intends to rectify them as soon as possible by having no delays in the present construction plans," Schmidt declared.

From The Guardsman, March 17, 1937:

Architects are definitely at work on the new $1,250,000 college buildings, and the plans will be turned over to the Board of Public Works for actual construction within two or three weeks at the most, according to a statement released by President Archibald J. Cloud.

GUARDSMAN'S CAMPAIGN RESULTS NOW APPARENT

THE STORY THAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN . . .

Editor's Note: The following story was written and ready for publication in The Guardsman for March 10, 1937. Instead, another story was made possible through the cooperation of Walter C. Schmidt, assistant to the Superintendent of Schools. This story introduced a month of swift action on the part of civic and educational circles. Excerpts from it, and from those which carried the campaign along until it reached its climax of accomplishment with the announcement of Ground Breaking Day, next Sunday, are reprinted elsewhere in this Ground Breaking issue of The Guardsman.

By BILL RAWSON

Institution without campus or buildings, San Francisco Junior College is now in its fourth semester of existence, apparently established in the eyes of San Francisco as a highly desirable, almost necessary educational plant. The campus has now been provided, and, according to indications, the buildings will soon be in the process of construction.

Establishment of the college as a part of the high school district was made by unanimous vote at a meeting of the Board of Education on February 15, 1935, climaxing what was said to have been a demand of ten years' duration. There was and is hope that eventually a separate junior college district will be formed, taking the institution out of the immediate jurisdiction of the high school district.

Concurring in opinion with Robert Gordon Sproul, president of the University of California, Edwin A. Lee, then superintendent of schools in San Francisco, appointed Archibald J. Cloud, then Chief Deputy Superintendent, and for 30 years actively engaged in public education in San Francisco, as president of the new institution.

Working with Merton C. Hill, director of admissions at the University of California who was appointed by President Sproul to act as coordinator between the university and the junior college, Cloud selected a faculty of successful educators for his new institution.

A survey of the files of The Guardsman, official student publication of the junior college, gives a fair history of developments toward the construction of independent buildings.

In the issue of November 13, 1935, one reads that two locations were suggested. One was the old Calvary Cemetery at Masonic, Geary, and Turk streets. Those San Franciscans who know the history, either fact or fancy, of this historic spot—well, need more be said, other than that a general taboo on even talking of the place seems to be existent? The other proposed location was in the Sunset District, where the Board of Education was reported to have owned four blocks of land at 22nd Avenue and Quintara Street.

The September 27 issue of that year carried a feature story telling how students of the junior college were gradually, yet firmly, usurping the traditional rights of the pigeons of Union Square, humorously remarking that the situation offered a grave problem to the City Fathers, as it became imminent that students intended making the park part of the San Francisco school system.

One week later, brief bulletins said:

"To San Francisco has been allocated a large sum of money for the repairing, completing, and building of schools by the four billion dollar federal loan.

"That the vacant building directly opposite 540 Powell may be rented for extra junior college classes was rumored late yesterday.

"A decision from the Board of Education on the location for the proposed junior college building is expected in the near future (it is interesting to note that this 'decision' did not come until February 12, 1936!)

"Mayoral candidates for the forthcoming city election are making the construction of a junior college building a major plank in their platforms." (Did the plank have a knot in it?)

President C. Harold Caulfield of the Board of Education was quoted in the October 18, 1935, issue as saying that the Sunset District property was "the only property belonging to the city which is suitable for a modern college campus."

On and on the problem went, with the matter of selecting a site alone taking months. In the October 25 issue of The Guardsman, Paul Green, then assistant news editor of the college paper, listed more than a dozen proposed sites, "ranging from jails to cemeteries." They were as follows:

Ingleside jail—38 acres, between Ocean and Marston avenues, and railroad right of way and Phelan Avenue.

Abraham Lincoln School site—four blocks, bounded by 22nd and 24th avenues, and Santiago and Quintara streets, Sunset District.

Old Odd Fellows' Cemetery—four blocks, between Geary Blvd. and Turk Street, and Arguello Blvd. and Parker Ave.

Good Brothers' Ranch—166 acres (Glen Park) bounded by O'Shaughnessy Blvd., Hoffman Ave., Portola Drive, and irregular line to Bosworth Street.

Old baseball park—area not given, located between Valencia and Guerrero streets and 14th and 15th streets.

McLaren Park—100 acres, between Burrows St. and Velasco Ave., and La Grande Ave. and Dartmouth St.

On November 15, it was announced that a public hearing on the selection of a site would be held December 3 by the Board of Education, and, "should the site chosen be privately-owned, the board will endeavor to effect a trade with the owner for property already possessed by the city."

Then came a plan to take over the recently completed Marina Junior High School building for the junior college. Marina residents strenuously objected, and Superintendent of Schools Edwin A. Lee withdrew the suggestion. The "public hearing" was announced in the December 13 issue of The Guardsman for December 23.

The January 8, 1936, issue boasted a headline that inspired hope, saying "College May Be Settled in Own Building." The Board of Education was reported to have considered spending $100,000 for the construction of temporary frame structures, just where, however, being somewhat uncertain. It was said at that time that a legal technicality—that the property was given the city for jail purposes—somewhat hindered possibility of selecting the Balboa Park site (later, however, it seems that this "technicality" was that "recreational purposes" were involved, not those of education or housing of law-breakers).

The second semester opened, and a new staff took over The Guardsman. On January 27, 1936, the rumor of $100,000 for "construction of temporary buildings on a site yet to be selected" still persisted.

"Forced to resign themselves to at least one more semester as a 'college sans campus,' student and administrative heads are still looking hopefully toward the San Francisco Board of Education for the selection of a site whereon the San Francisco Junior College can be built," Paul Green, then managing editor, wrote.

The Guardsman sponsored a student poll, and the Ingleside (Balboa Park) location was voted on by a four-to-one majority over the Abraham Lincoln School site.

One week later (not that The Guardsman's straw vote had anything to do with it), Caulfield announced that the Board had definitely selected the Ingleside site. A sketch of the ground plans was published in the February 19 issue of The Guardsman. (The sketch was made by the editor from informal scratches made on the back of an envelope by Caulfield—and discreetly put in a pocket when his back was turned—during an interview with the Board president, whether he ever realized it or not.)

Caulfield then said that the buildings were to be of one story, Spanish type, in quadrangle arrangements, about 14 class-rooms per building:

The September 16 issue of The Guardsman carried a four-column picture of the Balboa site, showing progress (nothing but bare land and trees appeared in the picture), and Skip Irwin of the staff wrote, "Ground breaking exercises were held earlier in the year (records seem to be hazy about this), and to date there are ditches in which pipes are being laid for plumbing purposes, to show for activity . . . by WPA workers.

"The Guardsman wishes to take this opportunity to thank the Board of Education for its whole-hearted efforts in endeavoring to hurry the completion of the new home for the junior college.

". . . the actual selection of the 33 acres within Balboa Park seems to be one of the small items yet to be settled between the Park Department and the Board of Education."

Hopes soared high on September 23, when it was announced by Phillip Lee Bush, chairman of the Board's finance committee, that $525,000 "is virtually assured to construct 'necessary buildings'."

Bush further revealed that "the section of Balboa Park in which the junior college will be located was definitely deeded to the Board for educational purposes last year."

It was then said that actual, earnest construction could not begin before the first of next year (1937), but that the Board would have approximately $900,000 for the buildings if PWA funds were granted, or about $500,000 if they were not.

Again, things seemed to lapse with a philosophical resignation to the present adverse, congested conditions, until the December 16, 1936, Guardsman published extracts from minutes of the Board's meeting of previous week: One excerpt read:

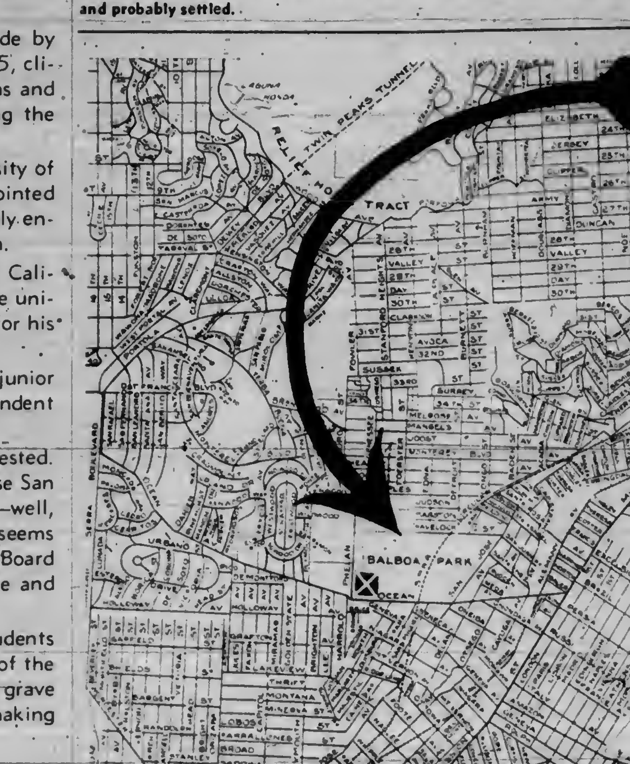
RESOLVED: That the Board of Education hereby authorizes the Physical Properties Committee of said Board, the President of the Board of Education, Mr. A. J. Cloud, President of the junior college, and Mr. Joseph P. Nourse, Superintendent of Schools, to sit with said architects to be appointed by the said Director of Public Works and to advise with said architects in the matter of the development of details desired in connection with the various types of buildings or units to constitute said junior college and to recommend any changes that may be necessary in said plans

Fast Work?

Seeking definite information instead of vague, melifluous phrases, The Guardsman editor one morning last December (before the above adoption of the Board was made) wandered around the halls of the City Architect's office and of the Department of Education. He was informed that an architect—Timothy L. Pflueger of the firm of Miller & Pflueger—had been selected, but as yet definite building plans were not made.

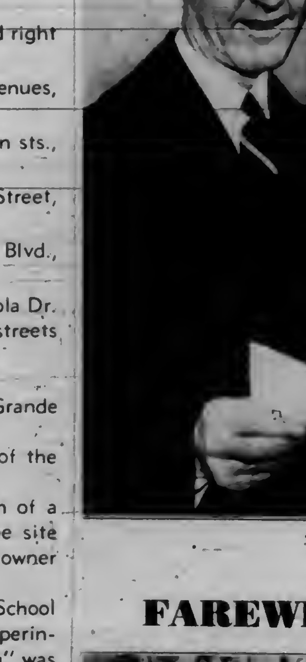
A plaster of paris layout was available for inspection in the Board's council room, but the editor was hastily assured that it was made only to meet specific requirements for a federal money grant, and that by no means did it indicate anything definite. Indefiniteness regarding the junior college seemed to be the by-word.

In the meantime, the college's administration has taken steps to make the present set-up more efficient. Through the courtesy of the University of California Extension Division, certain classes are now permitted to run until 3 o'clock at 540 Powell Street, and the bulk of the college library has been moved from Galileo High School to the down-town location.



And so the college waits. Since the slogan "San Francisco Knows How" is appearing so often in print these days, there can be no doubt . . .

Perhaps if the powers that be were to visit Los Angeles and see that the southern city has the largest junior college in the nation, boasting facilities more complete than those found at many small universities; nothing would then do short of making the Russ Building immediately available to San Francisco Junior College.



School Board Short Changed by Recreation Commissioners' Deal

Although apparently in accord concerning the transference of ten acres of Balboa Park land necessary to the College building program as outlined by Timothy Pflueger, architect, word from the school department revealed that as yet the matter was not completely settled. Only three and one quarter acres of the land need to square the "L" shaped ground plan were actually released by the Recreation Commission.

As The Guardsman goes to press a second meeting of the Board of Education and the Recreation Commission is scheduled at which the situation will be discussed further, and probably settled.

Accessible directly by the Municipal K line, or the Market Street 12 and 26 lines, the Balboa Park site, shown by the cross at the point of the arrow, will be the scene of ground breaking ceremonies next Sunday afternoon, beginning at 1:30 o'clock.

college building, the ground breaking ceremony signifies the conclusion of an active three weeks during which land and building problems were smoothed sufficiently so that a central unit erection uppears as an actuality ready for occupancy by 1938, as previously anndunced in The Guardsman.

President Cloud, Vice-President Eugenie A. Leonard, Dean Edwin C. Browne of the administrative staff, agreed that Sunday will be a day of gaiety for the college and a symbol of progress. Paul Pitman, assistant to the president, keynoted the day's celebration when he said, "Transference of a former reform site to that for an educational institution already providing, under handicap, opportunity to 1,700 students, is enough in itself to give us pause to include in our usual Sunday observance thought for the social task in its early accomplishment."

Students and faculty will find members of student organizations at tables assisting in completing the testimonial signatures which are to be presented to President Cloud.

FAREWELL TO POWELL

The dream of President Archibald J. Cloud (above, left) is about to become reality as first definite work on the new college site is scheduled for next Sunday afternoon. Soon replacing the dream of the future, then, will be the above Powell Street scene in dreams of the past.

MUNICIPAL MACHINERY MOVES WHEN STARTED

had been attending an educational convention, President Cloud enthusiastically pointed out that "the architects have a fine conception of educational buildings that will be a great asset to this city."

From The Guardsman, April 7, 1937.

In model and blueprint form, plans for the college buildings were formally presented to Mayor Angelo Rossi before a joint meeting of the Board of Education and Recreation Commission last Monday afternoon.

As previously outlined in The Guardsman, the building program is based on a unit conception, with the erection of the central unit building, costing approximately $700,000, the immediate concern of the Board of Education.

A three story, reinforced concrete building of new design, the central unit will be set on the highest point on the 27 acre site at Balboa Park, Ocean and Phelan Aves., and will be easily accessible to carlines and campus. It will stretch 450 feet from north to south, 80 feet above the street level at San Jose Avenue.

Actual ground breaking depends upon speed with which municipal machinery will move to transfer about six additional acres from the Recreation Commission to the Board of Education. This is necessary in order to square out the present "L" shaped site to provide a building scheme that will meet wind conditions in that area.

From The Guardsman, April 14, 1937.

Municipal machinery moved swiftly last week in the interests of the college when ten acres of Balboa Park land were transferred from the Recreation Commission to the Board of Education to allow ground conformation to the building plans

The plans themselves, which were presented formally to Mayor Angelo Rossi and the Board of Education last week, called for an "L" shaped site, all but six of which acreage was already included in the original grant.

Meeting with the Recreation Commission, Timothy L. Pflueger, noted California architect, and personal designer of the college buildings, showed, with Board President, C. Harold Caulfield, the need for ten additional acres to provide a building scheme that would meet wind conditions in that area.

Pflueger, who has been working concentratedly and steadily on college building plans, successfully visualized the situation to the satisfaction of the Recreation Commission. Mrs. Sigmund Stern, president of the Recreation Commission, graciously agreed to the necessary transfer, called a special meeting of the commission and effected the transfer immediately, through unanimous vote of that body.

Although ground breaking, always indicative of actual construction and progress, has neither been announced nor started, action similar in swiftness to that of the past week is expected to continue, so that the fourth college semester will not close without tangible milestones to mark its development.

(Only it may have been a fiasco.)

GUARDSMAN HOPES FOR BEST

And now, The Guardsman, in publishing the plans for the Ground Breaking ceremony, would like to relax. At present that is impossible. There was an unfortunate boomerang in the transaction effected last week and revealed in the April 14 issue of The Guardsman. The ten acres of land apparently transferred from the Recreation Commission to the Board of Education turned out to be three and one-quarter acres. The rest of the necessary acreage has become disputed territory. The Guardsman herewith hopes and urges that the accord previously existing between the Commission and the Board may continue to the satisfaction of both so that there may be no more delay in the construction of the college buildings.

By LAMBERT MEYER

San Francisco Junior College has an athletic team under its roof that eight out of every ten students know nothing about. It's not just another team but is a squad of championship caliber that looks to this writer like a cinch to win the Northern California Junior College Conference championship. It's Coach Tom Wilson's tennis squad, a group of fast men that have yet to bow down in defeat to a rival tennis team. The group composed of such stars as Al Altfield, Kay Lyman, Bill Lazzeri, Harold Mitchell, Bill Cardinal and Chandler Ennis has had an easy time defeating U. S. F., Armstrong, Salinas, Menlo, STATE, San Mateo and Modesto. All meetings have been won by overwhelming scores. The team does not harbor one oustanding racqeteer but is strong as a complete unit. Nobody ever hears of the gang of netmen that practice diligently for each and every encounter, but they are true representatives of San Francisco Junior College. The tennis team still has a few matches to win before it is crowned league champ, but the road looks bright and shiny and Coach Wilson is going around these days with a slight grin on his face. Lots of luck, fellows, and we hope these few lines get you a little support.

Trying to pick a winner in the junior college baseball league is like trying to bum a cigarette in front of the Powell Street building. The six teams (Menlo is not in the conference) all have tasted defeat and with 12 games yet to be played by each squad it looks as though anything may happen. The strong nines showed that they were not unbeatable by dropping contests and the weaker outfits proved their fighting ability by coming back strong to take parts in major upsets. The Rams, after knocking over the powerful Modesto nine, lost a double header the following Saturday to a weak Santa Rosa club. And that's how it will probably happen for the remainder of the season. We predict that the winning ball team will have at least five defeats to its credit.

Louie Bertolucci, baseball manager and sports writer plus, had a little trouble when it came to taking his senior picture last week at Galileo. Lou sauntered into the photo room clad in a smart blue suit and blue necktie, his moustache neatly trimmed all ready for a terrific picture. Was Louie burned when he was told that he had to don a graduation gown before he could have his cute mug photographed? He finally consented to wrap himself in a toga and had a couple of shots taken of himself. Photographer Sam Galstaun admitted that Lou was the handsomest lad he had snapped in a long while.

Ray "Bubblenose" Englehofer, Ram first sacker, is doing right well for himself in the De Molay league being staged among the various chapters in the city. Our ballhawk is smacking the old apple at a terrific pace collecting doubles and triples like a second Joe DiMaggio. He is also holding down the third base post like a veteran. Looks like a standout for all De Molay or something. It's too bad he just can't get going when he is on the field for the San Francisco nine.

The trackmen travel to Santa Rosa this week-end to do battle with Santa Rosa Junior College. The cindermen are due and anxious for a victory and Saturday looks like their big chance to score a win. All of the men are now in good shape and should give a very good account of themselves in the northern village. The Santa Rosans have lost meets by bad breaks this season and will be out to knock over the men in Red and White. We pick Coach Sweet's tracksters to walk off with the honors.

The Sacramento-San Francisco meet that was called off two weeks ago will probably be held Saturday, May 1, at Sacramento. The State meet that was scheduled for this date will most likely be held in the middle of that week.

Coach "Dutch" Conlan is still in hopes of organizing a junior college golf team to enter the Northern California Junior College Conference. If enough men sign up for the squad a tournament will be held with the best players being chosen to represent the college. Medals will be presented to the winners of the inter-college tourney.

A putting tournament is being held at Funston under the direction of Coach "Hole in One" Sweet. Max Brewen, college marksman, is the dark horse of the contest. When Brewen gets his putting eye there is no stopping him.

This week's flock of posies go to Jim Fahn, popular Ram pole vaulter. Fahn, high school record holder, cleared the amazing height of 12 feet 6 inches in a vault at the Commerce oval last week. He not only cleared the height on his first attempt but was handicapped by rain that was falling at the time of the jump. No junior college pole vaulter has arrived at this tall height as yet. Jim proved that his 12 foot 6 inch jump was no fluke as he came back later in the week to clear the bar at an even 12 feet and cop the honors at San Mateo-Ram track meet.

Around the Bases

By LOUIE BERTOLUCCI

The second round of the NCJC Conference starts this Saturday with the Rams tangling with San Mateo at Funston Park beginning at 12:15 o'clock. San Francisco was supposed to have played the Bulldogs earlier this year at San Mateo but the contest was rained out.

San Mateo isn't rated much in the league but it will be a tough outfit to knock over. The men only won one game and lost three but they have played the two toughest nines, Sacramento and Modesto.

The Bulldogs managed to nose out the Capitol City lads in a fifteen inning thriller by a 2-1 score but were trounced in the shorter tilt, 14-2. Their victory over the Panthers is something to talk about for it is the only loss on the Sac's record. The Rams were set back by Sacramento in two games, 5-3 and 8-0.

While the Peninsula nine lost a doubleheader to Modesto the local team played its best ball to upset the Pirates. In one case the Bulldogs have the advantage by their showing against Sacramento, but in the other the San Franciscans look good on their Modesto series. But the contests look to be a toss-up, with the team getting the breaks becoming the eventual winners.

As a warm-up before the San Mateo series, the Rambling Reds take on the St. Mary's Freshmen nine at Moraga tomorrow. The Gael yearling always has a great team and this year's is no exception.

Coach Lee Eisan will probably use Al Giddings on the mound against the first year fly-chasers. Al is ineligible for conference play and has been the Ram's stand-by in most practice tilts this season. It is doubtful if the Freshman will be able to hit him often, as he throws an awful fast ball that is in the catcher's glove before the bat is off the man's shoulder.

Following is a letter received from the San Francisco State College baseball manager:

San Francisco Junior College
Baseball Manager
Dear Louie:

Without my knowledge our coach scheduled a game that interferes with the game that we slated for April 27. As our season ends on May 1, it would be impossible for us to get another contest this season.

I am awfully sorry about this as the fellows would have liked to have met your team again. Wishing you lots of luck in your conference, I remain,

Yours very truly,

Baseball Manager.

Maybe the Stumbling Staters are sorry about not being able to play us again but they aren't half so down-hearted as they might appear. They have a victory over us and would like to close the season one up on us. Another game at Funston would probably end in favor of the Red Raiders, and by a much bigger score than the last game.

It was somewhat of a let-down for the Ram ballplayers as they were looking forward to tripping up the Alley-Gators. The general opinion was that a game on any regulation ball-park, as Funston, would surely end up with a Red and White tint.

	W	L	PTS
Sacramento	5	1	10
Modesto	5	3	10
Marin	3	3	6
San Francisco	2	4	4
San Mateo	1	3	2

Last week-end saw a mild series of upsets, with Sacramento taking two games from a highly rated Marin nine by 3-2 and 4-0 scores in the feature game. Santa Rosa thumped the Rams twice by 8-3 and 4-3 scores, and the Modestans took two from San Mateo.

Saturday, in addition to the Ram-Bulldog fracas, Marin takes on the favored Modesto team at Kentfield. At the Capitol City, Sacramento tackles Santa Rosa in what should be another victory for the Panthers.

The Santa Rosa pitchers took several of our leading batters down a few notches last week-end. Milton Berman fell farthest when he dropped from .583 to .368 as the result of failing to get on base safely in seven times at bat.

Paul Hjort took the lead, although he dropped 57 points in his average, clipping the ball at .409. Following him is Tony Scafani who comes up from fifth place to second with an even .400 average.

AMATEURS SLUG FOR HONORS AT VERDI FIESTA

Some Titles Change, But Others Made Secure in Wrestling and Boxing

Plenty of fighting, but not much boxing or wrestling, more than filled the card of 16 events, as some battlers retained their titles and others lost them at the Men's Club slugging fiesta held last Friday night at the Verdi Club.

In the featherweight class, Frank Sylvestri and Don Bryant tapped at each other for three rounds, which ended with Sylvestri declared winner by the three judges in the semi-finals.

Two little orientals flurried at each other to the extent of giving each other bloody noses in this class, as George Urabe took the decision over Dick Moon. Sylvestri unavoidably defaulted to give Urabe the featherweight title.

BALLET ROUTINE

Bill Weinstock and Everret Abar shuffled through a boresome routine in the slowest waltz of the evening, and, although neither did the slightest damage to his opponent, Abar was judged the winner in this lightweight class.

Surprising nearly everyone, James Neal, president of the Associated Students, displayed the best boxing form of the evening, as he easily outpointed Bob Fujimoto in the bantamweight event.

GREENWOOD SMACKS HARD

Coming out to paste his opponent all over the ring in the opening seconds, Randy Osborne, colored lad, appeared a sure bet to lay Ray Greenwood away for the count.

In the second round, however, Greenwood landed a right on Osborne's chin to make the negro take the 9 count, and, a few seconds later, Osborne walked into a stiff one that kept him on his knees while Referee Joe Amori counted him out.

WIND MAKERS

Opening with a wild waving reminiscent of Don Quixote's windmills, Wilson Camp and Joe Manning hay-makered it out for three rounds that saw Camp emerging middleweight champ on points.

Two bantamweights exhibited some inexperienced wrestling technique, but did their best, as Victor Robelet took Charles Doudiet in 4 minutes and 12 seconds.

MARTER TAKES ANOTHER

Marter came out of his own class to give Hugh Waite 23 pounds, which still didn't keep the little fellow from taking the Frosh Class president on points.

After antagonizing and agonizing each other for 3 minutes, 9 seconds, Fred Brown and Andy Oddstead laid down together, only Oddstead took an end to end stretch on the other, and Amori gave Andy the winning pates.

FENCING OFFERS VARIETY

After playing around with the college's Frank Knowlton for a while, Ernie Doudiet, Pacific Coast inter-collegiate wrestling champion, got down to business to pin Frank in 2 minutes, 20 seconds. Knowlton gave the champ some good bumps for his money before being twisted for the final stretch.

Offering a distinct novelty, Leon Tichin fenced for five minutes with Rhys Jones with the college championship at stake. Tichin won the match on touches.

Serge Olferieff and Abar tired each out in the lightweight class, and by mutual gave him the most points.

Crew Garners Top Conference Place

Climbing to first place in the conference standings, the college crew annexed another victory last Saturday afternoon by eking out a close win over the favored boat from San Mateo Junior College over the 2000 meter Yacht Harbor course. The Gaddymen managed to establish a slight lead at the half-way mark, and used a killing sprint to good advantage in the final quarter mile to increase the margin to a length and a half at the finish.

The locals displayed their best form to date in winning this contest and showed marked improvement over their last performance. The winners used a powerful 36 stroke through most of the race and made the time of 8:03, a minute faster than they had rowed the same course last week.

Tuberculin Readings to be Given Today, Thurs.

Readings on the tuberculin tests given last Monday and Tuesday will be held today and tomorrow, according to R. Duffrey Friedlander, college physician. These readings may be obtained at the Extension building from 9 a. m. to 12 noon in the staff room, or at Galileo building from 3 to 5 p. m. in room 201.

Dr. Friedlander stressed the necessity of having readings taken not later than 48 hours after the test has been given. The doctor said it was essential for all students who have taken the test on Monday report today for readings and for all those who had taken it on Tuesday to have readings by Thursday.

All those who register positive reactions to the tests are not necessarily infected with the germ, Doctor Friedlander said, but they will be advised to take advantage of the X-rays given free to those who desire them. The X-rays will definitely determine whether or not the infection is serious enough to warrant immediate attention, he advised.

MARIN HANDS RAMS DOUBLE SHELLACKING

Two of the main factors in winning ball games are to get base hits and to field the ball without making errors. When a team fails to do both, it cannot come out ahead in any contest. This was the case of the Rambling Rams, who forgot to ramble, and as a result went down to defeat in a double-header against Marin last week-end by scores of 10-0 and 3-2.

BASEBALL TEAM WINS FROM MENLO, BUT LOSES TO DONS

After a double setback at the hands of Santa Rosa, the Ram nine hit the comeback trail by handing the visiting Menlo Junior College ball players a 7-1 shellacking. However, the Rams slid down the ladder to their previous level by losing out to the University of San Francisco varsity 8-7.

Coach Lee Eisan used a makeshift pitching staff against the weak Menlo club as Larry Wilgus of the regular mound corps saw duty for only two innings.

Paul Hjort started on the rubber, followed by Wilgus, Berutich, and Scafani. The first three hurled no-hit-no-run ball for six innings. Scafani tossed the last three cantos, and was nicked for three hits and the lone Menlo score, which came in the ninth.

Arvedi and Hjort each hit four for four to take batting honors.

Against the Dons, the Rams garnered an early lead of 6-2, and looked to have the game in the "bag," only to have the pilltoppers come from behind with a big seventh inning splurge that put them out in front, 7-6. The Rams knotted the count in their half of the eighth, but USF came on again to grab the lead and the ball game in the last of the eighth.

A belated Ram ninth inning rally was nipped in the bud.

Berkeley Frosh in Easy Track Victory

By scoring six clean sweeps out of 14 events on the program, California's freshman track team ran rampant over the Rams in a dual meet at Edwards Field last Saturday afternoon to defeat them 97 to 25.

The meet was purely all Blue and Gold with sprinters, milers, weightmen, and jumpers scoring victories to keep the Berkeley squad far ahead of the San Francisco rivals.

Ram trackmen, Jim McGruer, hurdler and Ernie Loustalot, high jumper, were the only junior college first place winners, McGruer upsetting the dope to take the high hurdles in his final stride and Loustalot clearing the bar at 5 feet 8 inches to win the event easily.

Joe Garcia, San Francisco sprinter, was unfortunate in getting a sliding start in the century to take a close second to Frank Brombacher, Bear speedster. Brombacher was the day's only double winner, taking the furlong in a fast 21.6 seconds.

Coach Russ Sweet's men showed a marked improvement in running form, and will prove to be a great threat in future track and field exhibitions.

Gym Department Plans Coeducation Badminton

With the increasing number of men participating in the badminton mixed doubles matches, the physical education department is considering offering a coeducational class in this sport next semester, according to Vera Spencer, instructor of women's sports.

"There has been so much interest shown in the sport this year that the coaching staff feels that a class which would give the players gym credit would be advantageous. The idea is unique and certainly worth trying.

Two Northern California Junior College records in track and field were shattered last Wednesday afternoon when the San Mateo Junior College trounced the Rams, 86 to 36, in a dual meet at the Peninsula oval.

Led by Cecil Cole and Bill Whole, the Bulldog squad took 11 first places out of 14 events on the program to prove to spectators that it is one of the strongest junior college track teams in the conference.

Cole ran the 880 in 1:56.2 to overshadow all existing marks, and Whole tossed the shot 49 feet 5½ inches to establish a new junior college record.

Ram trackmen Jim Fahn and Joe Garcia turned in the best performances for the Red and White, Fahn winning the pole vault at 12 feet, and Garcia barely losing to the fast Ted Ellison in the 100-yard dash.

Tennis Team Moves to First Conference Rank

With two wins to its credit, one over Menlo Junior College, the other over Armstrong Junior College, the tennis team moved into a tie for first place in the conference race. The Rams have only dropped one match out of 12 league encounters.

Last Tuesday the Red and White racquet wielders whipped Commerce 6 to 3. The college garnered its 6 points from three single wins by Ennis, Altfield, and Cardinel, and two doubles matches played by Ennis-Altfield and Cardinel-Mitchell.

Yesterday afternoon the team played host to the barnstorming tennis players from the University of Portland. The teams met at the Palace of Fine Arts. Tomorrow Polytechnic High School will offer some competition to the college netsters.

"One of the deciding matches of the conference will be played this coming Saturday," said Coach Tom Wilson. "We play Modesto and, according to advance notices, they have an exceptionally strong team. We still have hopes, however, of defeating them. If you aren't busy Saturday afternoon, come out to the Palace of Fine Arts and watch your team perform."

CINDERMEN SEE FIRST VICTORY AT SANTA ROSA

Confident of scoring its first win in track and field competition, the college track team travels to Santa Rosa this Saturday afternoon to meet the downtrodden Rosa Cubs. The Santa Rosans are in the same predicament as the Rams, as they have yet to score a victory on the cinders. Completey annihilated by a strong Sacramento squad and beaten down by the San Francisco State College outfit, the Cubs in the northern village are hungry for a win.

The home team has a one man track squad in the form of "Big Nick" Minitzky, a seasoned veteran who runs the 100 in ten flat, the 220 in 21.8, tosses the discus 130 feet, throws the shot 42 feet, and tops the day off by running as anchor man on the relay team. He is aided by a flock of other stalwarts who are sure to give Russ Sweet's chargers a mighty fine fight.

SPRINTS FAST

Joe Garcia and Nick Minitzky should offer the thrills in the century and the 220 yard dash. Garcia came very close to taking Ted Ellison, San Mateo sprinter down the line last week and very likely will cross the tape ahead of his fast opponent. The Cubs have another able racer in Silver Hall, a real speedburner that has been making the highly touted Minitzky step.

Bill Rocktoff and Don Bryant should capture the 440 dash by taking care of quartermilers Charles Orloff and Elton Nipress.

The 880 yard run should offer the spectators a lot of excitement when Harold Mitchell, Ram runner and Doug Whited and Crowenshield, Cub tracksters meet. More experience should spell victory for Mitchell in this event.

COUNTRY MILERS GOOD

Santa Rosa's big chance to win an event easily comes in the mile run. They have Harold Mead, a lanky youngster of six foot three that has tramped off the mile already this season in the fine time of 4.35. Coach Sweet has not developed a miler that will be able to cope with this fast trackman. Elton Nipress is another mile man that will offer the Rams a lot of competition.

HURDLES A TOSSUP

The Cubs are strong in the timber events with such hurdlers as Kenny Mahurin and Ed Keegan. Both men have taken places in all of the track meets so far this year.

Battling for the locals will be Jim McGruer, Joe Sanderson, Ty Barre and Bill Gerhughty. All of these men have improved as the season has progressed and should be at their best against the country team. A double victory in these two events would warm the cockles of Coach Sweet's heart.

POLE VAULT EXCITING

A really exciting battle is expected in the pole vault when Jim Fahn, San Francisco vaulter and William Knowles, Santa Rosa height man stage a duel in this event. Fahn is the most improved man on the squad clearing 12.6 already this season. Last week he took a first in the San Mateo meet by doing a neat 12 feet against stiff competition. Knowles has cleared 13 feet already this season and although Jim has not reached this height anything can happen in the pole vault and the Powell Street lad may surprise by clearing a new height for himself. Knowles is Santa Rosa's lone vaulter and is expected by conference officials to set a new record before the season draws to a close.

RAM JUMPERS FAVORED

Ernie Loustalot and Ty Barre, Ram high jumpers should have no trouble in subduing any home team contestors both being 6 foot jumpers. No line is available on the Cub high jumpers but in past meets none of their men have been able to come close to the opposing team.

The weights will be close with George Bedrosian, Walt Loving and Duke Worsham tossing against Nick Minitzky, Harvey Lyman and Bill Knowles. Lyman, a returning veteran, tosses the shot 46 feet, consistently.

In one complete summary the clash between the two institutions will be a contest worth viewing. Although the Cubs have been defeated several times many of their men have turned in fine performances. Coach Sweet's men have improved with diligent training and are out to win their first track meet of the season.

ALTFIELD WINS NET TITLE FOR COLLEGE

Playing brilliant tennis in the finals of the men's championship of the college, "Bitsy" Altfield, a miniature dynamo of energy, engaged in a hard, steady game to outlast the favored Chandler Ennes in three out of five sets at the Palace of Fine Arts last Wednesday.

Altfield started slow by dropping the first set to Ennes. The next two sets were all Altfield, making the count 2-1 in his favor. In the fourth set, Ennes broke through his opponent's service to win the set and tie the match at two sets all.

Sports will play an important role in the Fiesta. There will be yachting, swimming, a boxing tournament, track and field events, aerial exercises, with schools, colleges, athletic clubs and men from the Army and Navy participating.

Receptions, balls and countless parties will be given under the auspices of the Fiesta committee and in the homes of people. Visiting dignitaries will be accorded the honor due their presence. There will be a reception to the officers of the United States fleet, and of the fleets of other nations given by the Army and Navy Club. The Club will also sponsor a dinner for the warrant officers, and will give a Mardi Gras party in the Civic Auditorium for the enlisted personnel of the Army and Navy. A formal ball at the Fairmont Hotel will be the highlight of the program of formal festivity.

MELTING POT DRAWS

Robert Louis Stevenson called San Francisco a melting pot, with its mingling of many bloods and accents. For example, San Francisco has the largest Chinese population of any city outside of China. Bret Harte once said:

"Thou dearest all things small or great
To thee, beside the Western Gate."

This, of course, means that San Francisco has a great invisible magnetic force that seems to attract anything and everything from all parts of the globe. This City by the Golden Gate offers each nation of the world the opportunity of portraying that nation on a small scale. That is, each nation presents her native festive mood, its folk ways, and her native customs and costumes. During the Fiesta each foreign colony will act as host to the hundreds of thousands of visitors. On each street corner there will be music, shows, wandering minstrels signifying that the United States is not a country of one people, but a country of many peoples. The impression received by foreign visitors of the treatment of the people of their native land will tend to strengthen the international relationship of the United States with the rest of the world, especially the Pacific Area.

DREAM FULFILLED

San Francisco, sometimes called the Gateway of the Golden West, will serve as the linking city between the North and South, and the East and West. The completion of the Golden Gate Bridge will fulfill the dream of many people, that of a North-South Coastal Highway from Alaska to South America.

Throughout the week of festivity, San Francisco will play host to more than 1,500,000 people. All this goes to show the great importance of the opening of the Bridge. From the day that the conception of bridging this mile-wide portal was first announced, through each stage of its construction, the capitels of the world have followed its progress with great interest. The officials at Washington have also eyed the building of the bridge, although the Bridge was constructed with local and not Federal funds.

MAGIC MEETING PLACE

There is magic in the very name Golden Gate. It is the gate to one of the most magnificent natural harbors in the world, its fame is celebrated in song and story. It is a source of national pride and wealth. It is a meeting place of the nations.

If the Fiesta Committee fulfills its ambition, this celebration in San Francisco will be a period of festivity which promises to be the greatest ever held in the West.

QUALIFICATIONS FOR WSS SCHOLARSHIPS ANNOUNCED BY PRES.

Through the efforts of the Women's Service Society and the co-operation of the Associated Students, a scholarship fund has been established for the benefit of San Francisco Junior College students, according to Parnel Brown, WSS president.

Miss Brown announced that any student who has a grade point average of 1.5 and who needs financial assistance in order to complete his or her work at this college, is eligible to apply for the scholarship, and may secure applications from the junior college office at Gallieo any time after May 1.

"Students must have at least a high freshman standing when applying," Miss Brown said. "The successful candidate will be selected by a committee composed of faculty members and the service society's scholarship committee, and the first award will be made at the college commencement exercises in June."

ARMY NAVY CLUB TO VISIT MARE ISLAND

Discussion of a proposed trip to the Mare Island Navy Yard on May 10 constituted the main topic at the last meeting of the Army and Navy Club.

John Keeting was taken in as a new member, and other proposed field trips were discussed. The next meeting of the club will be held April 29 at 7:30 p.m., at the home of Gordon Sollman, president, 1239 Fifteenth Avenue.

PICNICS

Not even flies in the mayonnaise jar and a downpour of rain can spoil a picnic —if you're a good sport. And, incidentally, a little dirt orgsickles doesn't matter. Just remember, everyone eats a peck of dirt in a lifetime, anyway.

Don't go on a picnic dressed for an afternoon tea. For all you know, you'll be shinning up trees before the day is over. A three-piece play suit will keep you from looking sad on the dance floor, in case there happens to be a pavillion near. And don't moan about how hard it is to dance in brogues. It isn't, really.

Stay with your own man. Chiseling may ruin the whole day for everyone. And be sure that both of you stay with the crowd.

Be ready to do what the rest of the gang suggests. Even though you may handle a baseball bat like a stick of dynamite and never make the ball and the bat meet, make the crowd feel you are having a "perfectly marvelous time."

According to announcement from the swimming club of the WAA, it will be possible for women who did not complete life-saving courses last semester to do so this year. Such women should plan to get practice from now till the middle of May, as the examination for Senior Red Cross Life Saving badges will be given at the end of that month. The examination will be given at the Y. W. C. A. by official American Red Cross examiners.

Some 19 members of the WAA swimming club attended the UC water pageant held last Tuesday at the University of California Women's Gym. Each guest received a lei as a gift, as the theme of the swimming meet was Hawaiian.

Since the water pageant, the swimming classes have shown a great flare for diving. It seems that lots of diving was on the program of the pageant. At any rate, the advanced swimming class has done quite a bit of work on the running front, and swan dives, and is starting the back dive. They hope to start practicing the jackknife soon.

Finally, after many delays, the scheduled baseball game between the WAA baseball club and the WAA council was played last Thursday afternoon with the council emerging as the victor. Members of the council also emerged with battered counteriances and stiff necks as payment for their victory.

The baseball club, undaunted by its loss, plans two games, one with State, and the other with San Mateo. The dates are April 24 and May 8, respectively.

The tennis club came out of the Marin matches with but one loss. San Francisco won the singles matches, and Marin took one of the doubles, San Francisco winning the other. This tournament was held only last week, but Marin hopes to play San Francisco very shortly at Marin. The tennis club is now practicing for the matches with State which will be held April 24 at State.

Mixed doubles tennis matches are getting along well. They are about half up the elimination ladder, and should finish early in May.

Spring weather has made a great difference in the scores made by the archery students. Many have moved back from their target until they are shooting at 25-, 30-, 35, and 40 yards. The archery club is hoping for continued good weather, as it plans a sport play day with Marin in conjunction with the baseball and tennis clubs. The play day will be held soon, according to those in charge, who hope to get sufficient practice so that they can be in top form for the competition.

Tournaments seem to be the theme of WAA activities this semester. The Basketball club is having an intramural tournament—which means that the two basketball classes will play each other after they have chosen a team out of each individual group.

The tentative schedule is as follows:

Freshmen vs. Sophomores, coached by Vera Spencer.

Sophomores from one class vs. Sophomores from the other.

Wholesale House Jobs Announced By Browne

Possibility that several permanent positions in a wholesale house will open at the end of the semester was announced last week by Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, who will interview applicants at their earliest convenience.

The work might lead to permanent positions in the sales force, Browne said, requesting that only those seriously interested in making salesmanship a life vocation apply.

Browne also announced that frequently he has opportunity to place students who are willing to learn college in permanent positions. He requests those interested to leave their name in his office so that he may notify them as soon as opportunities arise.

Women Prove That Riflery No Longer Exclusive for Men

No longer can the men of the college boast that riflery is solely a man's occupation! The women of the college rifle marksmanship class have proved once and for all, that they also can shoot.

All members of the Newman Club are urged to attend the meeting on next Monday, April 26, at St. Mary's Cathedral, Pete Jambruno, group president, has announced. It is planned to have a speaker present to discuss the labor situation, and a general symposium on that subject will be held, Jambruno said.

"I should especially like to see all the members who have attended only a few meetings during the semester," Jambruno said, "because we are using this next meeting as an indicator to determine just how many active members we really have in the Newman Club, and to find out how many students in the college are interested in this type of organization."

It is planned to have a breakfast for club members in the very near future, Jambruno announced, and tickets for the dance to be held at the end of May will be on sale soon.

Putting Tournaments At Funston During Classes

In conjunction with his regular golf classes, Coach Russ Sweet is running a putting tournament on Tuesdays and Thursdays at the Funston Field putting green. Over 80 men students of the College qualified for the tournament, Sweet said.

In the 10 o'clock class, Lou Garcia led the qualifiers with a blazing 68 for 72 holes which is six under par for the course. In the 11 o'clock class, Bob Hunter bumped up the course with a 67, which is the present record score for 72 holes on the Funston layout.

Due to the large number of entrants, the men were divided into three flights, Championship, first and second.

Amori Enters Typists In Contest At Modesto

Entering his fastest and most accurate typists to represent the college, Joseph Amori, typing instructor, has announced proposed participation of some of his students in the state-wide typewriting contest to be held at Modesto Junior College in the near future.

Sonia Lesh and Norma Parent will represent the college in speed writing tests which will take about 15 minutes and which will be checked by students, instructors and contest judges.

Miss Lesh and Mildred Farquhar will enter the practical business test, which includes letter writing, word division, centering, tabulation and envelope addressing.

PACIFIST GETS WET WORKING FOR CAUSE

It takes a strong determination to work for a "cause" until 2 o'clock in the morning. No amount of determination, however, saved Charles O'Gara, working in the cause of the college peace rally, from getting a bad case of wet feet last week.

O'Gara had finished working up a series of Peace Posters for the Extension building, at Betty Brown's house in the Richmond district. Tucking peace posters under arm, Propagandist O'Gara left Miss Brown's house for his home on the other side of town. Without watch, he waited hours for a street car that did not come. Two A. M. came around, it started to rain, and O'Gara trudged home over wet pavements.

COLLEGE DEBATERS MEET SOLONS FRI.

Dealing with a matter of current national interest, Lloyd D. Luckmann's debate teams will meet those of Sacramento Junior College next Friday in double forensic events, as arguments pro and con are presented on the subject, Resolved: That the Supreme Court be changed to meet with President Roosevelt's demands.

Isabel Sharrett and Gene Blumenthal will travel to Sacramento to engage the opponents' negative team, which is reputedly strong. Miss Sharrett and Blumenthal have worked together on many debates, and according to Luckmann, they form one of the strongest teams in local debating circles.

Blumenthal has debated with the capitol city team before, and is confident that the encounter will be successful for San Francisco.

In the evening of the same day, the college will be represented by Jacques de la Montaigne, veteran debater, and James Shorb, a dynamic newcomer, in the second debate with the Sacramento team.

This engagement will take place at the Lafayette School auditorium, located at Thirty-sixth Avenue and Cabrillo Street in the Richmond district. The local team will uphold the negative side of the question, defending the courts against any change.

Chivalrous Student Praised in Letter

Editor, S. F. J. C. Guardsmen:

In The Guardsman of April 7th, there appeared a comment on the commendable attitude of one of the J. C. men students in assisting an elderly lady negotiate the Powell street hill. May I add my compliments not only to the individual who proffered his assistance but also to the reporter who took note of the instance? Activities of this type are too few, in school or out.

E. C. Browne.

NYA Situation Hazy From Now Till June

Uncertainty characterizes the NYA employment situation for the remainder of the semester, according to Director Helene Turner, who spiked the erroneous report that workers may earn 45 dollars during the months of March, April and May.

"Students may make not more than $42.60 during these three months," Miss Turner said, "and even this amount may be slashed without previous warning, or hours may be cut, because of the recent depletion of funds available."

Election System Changed at Meet of Shooting Club

Providing a different system of election of club officers, an amendment to the Rifle and Pistol Club's constitution was made by members at last week's meeting.

ATTENTION!
All members Rifle and Pistol Club. There will be a meeting this afternoon at the Gallileo range, at 5:30 o'clock. Nominations for next semester's officers will be main business. All members are requested to attend.

To enable members residing in the East Bay to vote, elections will in the future be held on two consecutive days.

In appreciation of his co-operation, Dean Edwin C. Browne was elected unanimously to honorary membership in the club.

As a grand finale to the end of the semester, intra-class shooting matches for men and women will be held with National Rifle Association Medals as awards, William Bancock, rifle team coach, announced at the meeting.

In order to be distinguished from the block or circle awards, the Rifle teams have selected an entirely different type of emblem. A large and S will form the background, a small white F over that and white crossed rifles over both will complete it. This will set up a new emblem for the college, in a third-class of awards.

Those members of the teams and the managers who receive these emblems are:

Team	Second Team
Dick Pitman	John Benton
Don Smith	Dallace Ogilvie
Ed Rundstrom	Kermit Wright
George Dieser	Syd Farley
Frank Doupnik	Charlie Doudiet
Max Brewen	Virginia Kwiatt
John Stewart, Mgr.	Betty Hyde
	Fred Wright, Mgr.

Chosen from the work displayed at the Project headquarters, the collection is an interesting expression of the art sense of college students, and reveals discriminating and intelligent taste. Among the many pictures now being shown, Ballet Dancers, a group of drawings showing impressions of a performance of the dance) is notable for a quality of rhythmic motion. Frolic, an impression of jungle beasts, shows a sensitivity to color and form, and American Indian, which has been heavily favored by students to win a place in the collection, displays a bold, colorful technique that brings out the vivid qualities of the portrait. In Anticipation catches facial expression and develops a psychical quality when studied. Alchemy and Scene on a Plane are interesting examples of surrealism, while Men Digging presents a cubist and angular treatment of a subject that lends itself well to such technique. Several examples of academic art are also present, such as the portrait of Jack London. Taken as a whole, the exhibit is balanced between examples of modern and academic technique.

Several other exhibits are scheduled for the remainder of this semester, to be changed at two-week intervals. They include the lithographs and prints to be shown until April 30, water colors and oils from May 1 to 15, and originals by Charles H. Suydam, illustrator, from May 16 to 31.

NIGHT RIDE FRIDAY

Moonlight will prevail (it is hoped) next Friday night, when the WAA Riding Club goes on its annual gallop to Lake Merced.

Provisions have been made for ten women and ten men to go on the trip, and those interested should sign up at once in the women's gym or with James Neal.

Gloria Swicegood, manager of riding, announced that the charge for the horse would be two dollars, and that everyone who intends to come should bring a lunch.

The group will start at 6:30 p.m. from the St. Francis Riding Academy on Seventh Avenue near Fulton Street. From there they will ride through Golden Gate Park to Lake Merced, where a picnic will be held by an open camp fire.

HOTEL EQUIPMENT INSPECTED

Students of the college hotel and restaurant management division were invited by Harvey Toy, president of the San Francisco Hotel Association, and Hotel Manx manager, to attend an exhibition of modern kitchen and dining room equipment for hotels and restaurants at the Golden Gate Ballroom, Friday and Saturday, April 15 and 16. Those who accepted Toy's invitation had an opportununity of seeing the most modern dining room furnishings, kitchen equipment and electric appliances now on the market for use in hotels and restaurants.

IF YOU WANT A JOURNAL, YOU'LL HAVE TO ACT NOW

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 28, 1937 — No. 11

MAYOR LOOSENS DIRT TO MAKE WAY FOR BLDG.

President Cloud Honored By Dedication of Rock Overlooking Park Site

Enhanced by perfect Spring weather that vindicated Joe Williams of the science department as a prophet, ground-breaking ceremonies for the college's new buildings at Balboa Park in the [illegible] district were held last Sunday, as Hon. Angelo J. Rossi, mayor of San Francisco, turned the first shovelful of earth, marking the spot where the first unit—to cost $700,000—will be erected.

As a dedication to the junior college's President, Archibald J. Cloud, who, more than anyone else, has made the college possible and has campaigned ceaselessly for buildings for it, the stony edifice on the highest point of Balboa Park was named Cloud rock.

HIGH TIME FOR ACTION

Just previous to the actual groundbreaking, Mayor Rossi pointed out to those assembled, and to the radio audience listening over station KYA, oyer which the ceremonies were broadcast, that 38 counties in California had junior colleges, and, consequently, that it was high time San Francisco did something for its young-est educational institution.

"It is, therefore, a joyous occasion today, as we take the first step toward actual construction of buildings for San Francisco Junior College," said Mayor Rossi.

"NO MORE NEGLECT"

"Despite the depression," continued the Mayor, "this city of San Francisco has constructed great things. Among these are the two bay bridges, many public buildings, and miles of beautiful boulevards. Our junior college has been neglected long enough. It is with pride, then, that the city should watch the growth of the College and its pending beautiful buildings upon this magnificent site. Under its president, Archie Cloud, it cannot help flourishing."

Other speakers were Leo J. Halley, chairman of San Francisco's Public Schools Week Committee; W. L. Kuser, president of the West of Twin Peaks Public Schools Association; President Cloud, Hon. C. Harold Caulfield, president of the Board of Education; Joseph P. Nourse, superintendent of schools; Thomas H. Sonnickson, Eugene Blumenthal, student, and Mimi Colton, former student, who dedicated Founder's Cloud—Rock.

NO RETAKES OF UNSHAVEN MALES OR SHINING NOSES

Prospective graduates who have not yet had their pictures taken for the first college journal are just plain out of luck now, the staff of the book has announced.

"Sufficient time has been granted high sophomore," the staff said. "With 105 pictures taken, we are ready to put the pages together, and to turn Photographer Sam Gulstean loose on other things."

Repeating the warning familiar toward the end of the two preceding semesters, the staff advises all members of groups and clubs to keep appointments with the photographer punctually, and to appear clad as the individual seas fit.

"There will be no retake for the benefit of some woman who forgot to powder her nose, or for some men who forgot to shave," the staff declared.

The sale of options has already exceeded the hopes of the ardent optimists, and proved unwarranted the dire predictions of the wet-blankets, according to Tyler McHugh, in charge of sales.

"There is really no reason for us to promote the book further," McHugh said. "A sufficient number of books has been sold, but as long as there are any options left, we shall permit the stragglers to trade 50 cents for each option."

Student Candidates Must Observe May 14 Deadline

That all candidates for Associated Student offices for the Fall Term, 1937, must have their petitions in by May 14, was announced by Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, last week.

Browne said that these petitions must be signed by 75 people, and that the candidates for office will be presented at a student body assembly on Monday, May 17. On Friday, May 21, the regular election will take place.

Pacifists, Militarists Vie for Peace — Battle of Methods Rages

By FRED VAST

Five hundred students rallied for peace last Thursday morning in the lecture hall in conjunction with the national anti-war demonstration by a million students.

Student speakers emphasized the danger of war today, the fascist invasion of Spain, and the questions of neutrality and collective security. They condemned the ROTC and industrial mobilization plan, which some think provides for a military dictatorship of the United States in time of war. The necessity for action against war was stressed.

Concrete action was taken in the form of three resolutions. The first resolutions condemned ROTC, opposed the Gannon bill, which extends compulsory ROTC to state colleges, supported the Pelletier-Rosenthal bill in the state assembly and the Nye-Kvale bill in the United States Senate which would make ROTC optional in state universities and opposed the Sheppard-Hill bill which would introduce dictatorship of the military in time of war.

The second resolution called for the introduction of peace education into the curriculum and for a committee of representatives of the administration and faculty and students to work this out.

Last but not least was a resolution calling for the establishment of a permenent peace council by the Associated Student Council consisting of representatives of all college organizations and any interested individuals to carry on an all-year program for peace.

That the peace rally provoked extensive discussion of problems of peace throughout the college was shown when most of the social science classes turned Friday periods into round table conferences on peace. Using ballots distributed at the peace rally, students debated various phases of the rally thoroughly.

The peace ballots cover nearly every conceivable attitude on war policies. They will be collected by the Forum Club and the results of the poll tabulated.

"DEFENSE BEST INSURANCE FOR PEACE"—T. G. SOLLMAN

By CHASON TUCKER

As an aftermath to the ill feeling generated at the peace rally, T. Gordon Sollman, Army-Navy Club President, in special interview said:

"I state the position of my organization in this college. Because of the attitude displayed by leaders at the rally last Thursday, we withdraw our support from the existing peace faction of this institution.

"We are in favor of peace, as opposed to war, realising the horrors of bloodshed perhaps even better than many peacestorn. However, our belief is that defense is the best peace insurance, and though we stand strongly for peace versus war, we are Americans and will fight if necessary!

"As to the rally, I do not believe that both sides were fairly represented, for the Army-Navy Club invests stock in tolerance and cementing friendships between nations. We are not altogether militaristic, and I can truthfully say that we made no attempt to block the resolutions presented at the assembly, but voted as we felt.

"I regret that my society is forced to take an opposite stand, in regard to the present peace faction—regretful, too, that ill feeling sprang up. We respect their ideas, but do not agree."

The world at large knows several types of workers. Among these, two larger classes can usually be distinguished—that in the foreground, and that in the background.

It is necessary to have the "front men." Every organization requires them for successful continuance. Equally necessary, however, are the quiet few who, usually because of a modest, unassuming nature, remain in the background, yet who work ceaselessly in their unobstruvise manner for the desired goal.

Firmly embedded on a hillock long centuries ago by nature, a rock stands at the Balboa Park site of the future San Francisco Junior College buildings. Fittingly, this rock and the nature whose processes, chemical and mechanical, caused the stony projection to come into being and to be so placed, strike an analogy to the man to whom the rock was dedicated last Sunday — President Archibald J. Cloud.

President Cloud is a man whose work for the junior college, whose efforts to obtain a suitable site and suitable buildings, are just as hard and, comparatively, just as everlasting as the rock which was dedicated to him, and which now bears his name.

In the process of making a rock from its component elements, nature takes a long time, and works in a manner scarcely perceptible to the most searching human eye.

Similarly, President Cloud has worked, in the all-essential background, along a path of sure results, to bring into being, and to make sure the continuance of its existence as long as educational institutions can exist, the San Francisco Junior College.

Unlike nature, however, President Cloud is by character of even, consistent temperament. Nature sometimes destroys the very things it creates. Its winds do not always blow from the same direction. This is also true of most men. President Cloud, however, has guided his work continuously along the one straight line, the line at the end of which is a greater San Francisco Junior College with its unrivalled campus; an institution that cannot be destroyed.

Most students and faculty members assumed that once San Francisco Junior College was established, it would continue. That it might suddenly be forced to become just another shattered vision never occurred to them.

Now that, principally through the unerring, intelligently directed guidance of its president, it is a definite institution whose future is assured, it is safe to reveal that more than once since August 26, 1935, it came perilously close to the brink of oblivion.

Every time that students and faculty members, past and present, pass Founder's Rock—Cloud Rock—let them think with respectful and admiring remembrance of the man whose name the rock now bears—the man whose hand snatched San Francisco Junior College away from that dangerous brink of oblivion so often.

UNIVERSITY OF SAN FRANCISCO ONE OF CALIFORNIA'S OLD

When gold was foremost in men's minds, and San Francisco was a small village, a pioneer Jesuit built a school and church in the hills nearby. The year was 1855; the hills located at Fourth and Market streets, where the Emporium now stands, and the founder was Rev. Anthony Maraschi. The school was called St. Ignatius College, now known as the University of San Francisco. In 1859, the California legislature empowered the college "to confer degrees with such literary honors as are granted in any university in the United States."

Now, 82 years after its organization, a full-fledged and progressive university, it is offering two scholarships to junior college students. Students that are interested in the offer should consult members of the scholarship committee for details. Members of the committee are: John Selig, chairman; Mary Jane Learnard, Francis Colligan, Lloyd Luckmann, and John Gaddy.

Believing that students would be interested to know a little about the University, Selig described the growth of the institution.

"San Francisco was growing rapidly, and soon surrounded the institution of learning," he said, "and the college had to move westward in 1880 to where there was more room. The new site was Van Ness Avenue and Hayes Street, where Commerce High School is now located. From many years of growth evolved several buildings: library, gymnasium, halls of science, theater, and church. Extensive

Administrators to Participate in School Week

With the combined participation of Gallieo High School, Gallieo Evening High School and San Francisco Junior College, a program for San Francisco Public Schools Week, which opened Sunday with the college ground breaking ceremonies, will be presented at the Gallieo Auditorium on Thursday evening, April 29.

Beginning with the customary salute to the flag and the singing of The Star Spangled Banner, led by Gallieo's R.O.T.C. band and color guard, the program will be chairmanned by President Archibald J. Cloud, of the junior college.

The principal speaker of the evening will be Dr. Paul F. Cadman, educational director for the San Francisco Stock Exchange. Entertainment will be provided by the junior college Verse-Speaking Choir, directed by Ruth Jensen, dramatics coach, and a group of singers from the Gallieo Evening High School, led by Constance Keohan.

In conjunction with Public Schools Week, Dr. Eugenie Leonard, vice-president and dean of women of the college, will speak at Lowell High School on Wednesday evening, April 28.

Named as Chairman of the Citizens Committee for this annual event is James Halley who has appointed the following members of the School Co-operation Committee:

Today, the advance sale of the FORUM magazine takes place. Two hundred fifty tickets at 15 cents each will be available to students and faculty alike. These tickets will entitle the holders to copies of the magazine when it is issued on May 26. Tickets may be purchased from members of the staff who will sell them at various places around the buildings. The library desk in front of the study hall at 540 Powell Street will afford the only definite, specified location for the sale.

The FORUM staff wishes to make it clear that the 250 tickets which go on sale today represent the entire edition of the magazine. Therefore, in the interest of those who wish to be absolutely certain of a copy, the staff urges that they buy tickets at the first opportunity, for, according to late indications, this limited amount will sell rapidly.

Those persons who procure tickets before the supply is exhausted can be assured of getting their money's worth, said the staff, for the magazine is to consist of almost 50 pages of the "pick of student literature." The type of material to be found within its pages will be varied. There will be fiction, drama, semi-fiction, essays, satire, humor, articles on social questions, translations, and poetry—all of which will total approximately 20,000 words.

The magazine is to have an attractive cover which will be printed from a woodblock. The design and the cutting of the block is being done by Consuela Collins.

Rally Presents Constitutional Changes Today

Class Schedule Permits Participation in Auditorium

Primarily for the purpose of voting on the newly revised Associated Students' Constitution, a rally will be held this afternoon at the Gallileo Auditorium between 3 and 4 o'clock.

Deming Smith, head yell leader and chairman of the rally' committee, announced that he was attempting to secure Paul Pendarvis, local orchestra leader, for an appearance at the rally, but as The Guardsman went to press, no definite plans had been made.

Smith said that the Administration expected students to report to their 2:30 classes for roll call to be excused at 3 o'clock for participation in the rally.

"A highlight of the afternoon," he said, "will be the presentation of a gold cup to the college crew for its fine showing in the Washington's Birthday regatta.

"If we secure Pendarvis, as we hope to, we are in for an afternoon of fine entertainment. If by chance he can't make it, we should have a fine turnout anyway, for the assembly will be in the nature of a pep rally for Saturday's track meet with State, and there should be a lot of noise to cheer the boys on to victory."

First AWS Tea Tuesday Honoring Three Schools

Opening a series of similar affairs sponsored by the Associated Women Students, a tea honoring representatives of the students and faculty of Lowell High School, Miss Burke's School, and Gallieo High School will be held Tuesday, May 4, in the gallery of John Howell's Book Shop, Elaine Dominguez, AWS president, has announced.

"We have chosen this unusual setting," said Miss Dominguez, "because we are anxious that the high school representatives receive an opportunity to inspect the art exhibit on display there."

The invitations have been extended to Roy Minkleo, Aurelia Orsland, George La Nicca, and Vice-Principal Eugenie Lacoste of Lowell; Patricia Lynch, Marion Nasstigio, Jean Fuller, Principal Barbara Burke, and Marion Marcus of Miss Burke's School, and Dudley Steinar, Bernice Sherman, Frank Pignalia, Stanford Jurvig, and Vice-Principal Georgia Hawkins of Gallieo.

As representatives of the faculty of the college, Flossita Badger, music instructor, Verrel Weber of the Women's physical education department, Ruth Gavin, business instructor, Edward Sandys, English instructor, and Robert J. Parker, history instructor, will attend.

Prize Dance Features Beta Phi Semi Formal

It is still not too late to obtain a bid to the Beta Phi dance on next Friday night, at the Century Club, according to David York, fraternity president. These bids may be purchased from any member of the organization for $1.25 or may be bought at the door.

The dance committee has planned a feature in the form of a prize dance, fraternity officials said, but they did not disclose what these prizes were. Lou Wingler's orchestra will play.

COLLEGE NOW TO OFFER OWN ARTS IN COMPETITION

Ecke Plans May 9 Exhibit At S. F. Museum; FAP Show in Fourth Stage

Officially described as the first exhibit devoted solely to Northern California Junior College art, a showing of work done by students will be held at the San Francisco Museum of Art from May 9 to 22, according to Evans Ecke, art instructor in the college. Several instructors are excusing students interested in the exhibit from class so that they may attend.

All junior colleges in Northern California have been invited to participate in the show, which will offer a talk by an outstanding guest speaker on Friday, May 14. Ecke, who is serving as secretary of the art section of the Northern California Junior College Association, said: "Until this time there has been very little concerted action on the part of the various junior college art departments in the northern area, but we hope that this exhibition will inaugurate a period of great activity and increased interest among students and faculty of junior colleges. Another aim of the exhibit is to make the public conscious of junior college art as a separate entity; the distinct product of the two-year institution."

The showing, sponsored by both Richard M. Allman and Ecke, has as its purpose the furthering of cooperation among junior colleges.

Coincident with the interest in college art in the college-sponsored Federal art exhibit at John Howell's gallery, voting currently is progressing among the various pictures competing for a place in the permanent art collection. Among those receiving high votes are American Indian, a vividly colored, bold portrait, Ballet Dancers No. 5, an impression of whirling ballerinas, and Mardi Gras Frolic, an intensely colored animal scene. Steel Riggers and Italian Comedy, a colored drawing shaded with bold strokes, and The Gentleman with the Loud Voice, a fantastic prize-fight scene, are also favored in the voting. The two examples of surrealism, Alchemy, and Scene on a Plane, are being discussed but thus far have not drawn interest comparable to the other attractions. Alchemy, an attempt to symbolize the medieval science, uses the philosopher's stone and its allied objects. Scene on a Plane is somewhat more baffling, and few students have been able to fathom its meaning.

Twenty-two students of Ruth Jensen's speech and drama classes attended the current production at the Wayfarer's Theatre of Maxim Gork's The Lower Depths. The purpose of this excursion was to tie the theory of practice of class work in speech and dramatics to appreciation of finished work in interpretation, acting and diction, lighting, and scenic art.

Commenting on the art exhibit now being held at Howell's Book Shop, Dr. Eugenie Leonard, vice-president and dean of women, said, "There has been a gratifying response to our request that the students vote for the pictures they would like to see as part of our permanent art collection, but I would like to remind the students again to visit the showing and cast their votes, if they have not already done so."

Be it remembered:

» » Whereas the Ground Breaking Ceremony of the San Francisco Junior College held on Sunday, April 25, 1937, at the Balboa Park Site is an event of signal honor to the people of San Francisco:

» » Therefore, we, the undersigned members of the Associated Students of the San Francisco Junior College, consider it a unique distinction to have our names enscribed on this scroll which we herewith present to President Archibald J. Cloud as an indication of our faith in the Junior College as an Institution and in our President as an able administrator fully capable of guiding the San Francisco Junior College to its ultimate objectives in the service of the people.

FOR GOSH SNAKES! HOIMAN DON'T LIVE HERE ANY BOA!

Imagine, if you can, our feelings when we found that Hoiman wasn't with us any more. Hoiman, the little stranger from Central America, was no longer a part of our little institution!

After many inquiries, we found that Hoiman had been taken to the Steinhart Aquarium. In order to find out just why (and besides, it was Friday), we gathered up our scattered parts and trekked out to Golden Gate Park, and Hoiman.—

"Why," we pleaded with tears streaming down our once rosy cheeks, "Why did you leave us for this place, which everyone knows there is something fishy about?"

Hoiman uncurled himself to his full two feet. He looked straight into our one good eye and, in a voice that fairly shook the barnacles off the starfish in the next case, said:

"Young woman, a snake of my type must have plenty of mice every day in order to keep alive. While there are many rats at the junior college, there is a great shortage of mice. For that reason, Glenn Noble, Kenneth Hobbs, and the other boys in the science department felt it would be best for me out here, where there are not very many rats but plenty of mice.

"Aside from that, there is the minor detail of my size. As you no doubt know, members of my family have grown to be twenty feet long, and feeling that I am definitely not to be an exception, the boys were a little worried over what to do with me when I reached maturity. Don't feel sad over my leaving you. I like it here. In fact, I prefer it to living so near those chemistry labs. The way some of those mixtures smelled! Ugh!"

When most college students were in elementary school, they at some time or another, took part in a little chant which went, "Cheaters never prosper, cheaters never prosper." When they reached high school, they found that there wasn't much chance of cheating because the teachers would patrol the aisles during examinations, and all books were put out of sight, under the seats.

Then they went to college and found that their old chant must have been slightly delusive. At college, the cheaters seemed to be the only ones who did prosper. If you didn't put notes in your blue-book or keep your text book open during an examination, you didn't stand a chance of passing, for the "cheaters" raised the average so high that the poor but honest student did not have equal footing.

As was pointed out here by "I Care" in a recent letter to the Ram's Horn, just such wholesale cheating is going on among the students of San Francisco Junior College. Complaints have reached The Guardsman Editor countless times, but "I Care" was the first to put his down in black and white.

Almost every college student has either taken part in, or noticed, a large amount of cheating going on around him in mid-terms, finals, and even in the daily quizzes that are given in some classes. It is a known fact that in a history class recently, a whole set of test papers was destroyed and the class given the opportunity of retaking the examination because the instructor was intelligent enough to know that the students had participated in just such "wholesale cheating."

On the cover of blue books appears the statement "dishonesty is not tolerated by the students of this college". It is up to each student then, to prove that this statement is a true one. If he sees someone cheating during an examination, it is not necessary to pull the somewhat juvenile trick of "telling teacher," but it is his place to let the guilty student know that he has seen him, and that he in no way condones such actions.

Most fair minded students will admit that they have been given more than their share of "breaks". Members of the administration and the faculty have been exceptionally lenient in their attitude toward student affairs. The matter of class attendance has been left almost entirely to the student himself and there has been little or no interference in college social affairs.

This same lenient attitude has prevailed at all times during examinations and for that reason it seems only the decent thing for college students to live up to the confidence placed in them.

MENTAL MUTTERINGS

By FEM

We're mad! Yep, we're just awfully mad, and for no good reason at all. Did you ever feel that way? You know, go around with a chip on your shoulder (glued on so nobody can knock it off) and grunt at everyone who even tries to be civil. Well, that's just the way we feel right now. Of course, there's no reason for telling you about it, you don't care. But we've got to write a column, and as long as we can't think of anything important to write about, we might just as well write about us.

It's funny. We're writing this when we are mad, just boiling mad, at ourselves, our friends, or enemies, and everybody else. Then when Wednesday comes around and the paper comes out, we won't be mad any more and the whole thing will seem rather silly. Worst of all, we may be in a gay mood. You know about gay moods, too, don't you? The kind where you love everybody, you smile at perfectly strange people, fairly fly up Powell Street and even carry a pocket full of rice to feed the birds in Union Square.

Gay days are a lot more fun than mad days. You get so much more done! On the bad days everything goes wrong. From the moment you miss the street car in the morning until you find that little brother has put salt between your sheets, it's all wrong. On gay days it's just the opposite. The motorman may even hold the car up for you while you run that last quarter of a block. When you get home, you find a letter from someone that really counts, or find that mother has prepared your favorite dish for dinner.

Yes, gay days are a lot more fun than mad days. Why even writing about them makes us feel better. Say, this isn't such a bad old world after all! Mad? Who said we were mad? Why we feel like a feather in the breeze! Oh boy!

Just because we like to keep up with what's going on, we took one of our old bandana hankies, rolled it carefully and draped it around our head. Coming to school bright and early, and feeling like something out of Vogue, we received the following bits of admiring encouragement from the masculine portion of the collitch:

"Wot's the matter, Flo? Got a headache?"

"Gee! You look just like an Indian! Where's the feather?"

Ah well, what's the use, you can't win!

SPOTLIGHT

By Don Mix

We are eighteen years old, of average appearance, average ability, and, we hope, average intelligence. And yet, despite these qualifications which stamp us as one who has an even chance of achieving some degree of success, we feel, in common with many college students, a definite fear of the future. No longer do we live in the Utopian land of our fathers where the young man started as a delivery boy and eventually, after the required period of frugal living and industrious labor, became president of the company. We live in a land of capitalistic monopolies where the chief requisite for getting ahead is to have a "pull" with the front office.

Perhaps some of you who will graduate in June and go out to face the much discussed "cold, cruel world" are sons of executives or store owners and know that your future is virtually assured. You simply go to work for "Pop." But then there are some of us who are not so fortunate and have to depend on our own God given abilities to win for us the place which is yours by inheritance. And we are told by those who have made a success in the modern world that "hard work" is no longer the magic word that opens the vista of financial security but that we must base our careers on the old "never give the sucker a break" theory. It is because of this predominant philosophy of American life that the potential college graduate must fear the future.

This hard, practical outlook seems to leave no room for the ambitious youngster who has hopes for being anything more than that most hapless figure of modern society, the wage slave. In the days when independence really meant something, most men had as their ultimate ambition the owning of their own store or plant. We can never hope for this. What chance would we with our paltry savings have in competing with any one of the great corporations which control evey possible line of endeavor? Politicians talk of freedom. Our only freedom, it seems to us, is a choice of whether we want to be chained to a desk or a pick and shovel.

All of this may sound a note of discontent and cynicism with present conditions but these are merely observations that we hold in common with all thinking college students. We are not "reds." We love our country and have a firm belief in the intrinsic goodness of the fundamental principles of Americanism. It is not against these principles that we protest. We rebel against the misuse and distortion of these principles that have allowed our nation to come under the control of a few men who rule under the title of King Moneybags. We don't want Henry Ford to divide his millions up with us. All we want is the same opportunity that Henry Ford had.

It is very difficult to come to any logical conclusion in regard to this question. Each of us, with an optimism so characteristic of youth, feels that we will, somehow, find our niche in modern society. All that we can do is to hope that this optimism is not misplaced.

PAY DIRT

By Jack Campbell

Have you ever walked into a theatre in the middle of a picture, and, because you did not think, or had nothing better to do at the moment, groped your way blindly to the nearest seat to sit through an agonizing half hour of confusing events which were insignificant until, an hour later, you were shown the movie in proper sequence? And how you complained afterward to anyone who would listen! Yet no "me miserams" have been forthcoming from junior college students who can look back to their "childhood" days and recollect vividly how they were forced to sit through the picture of history from the middle to the then present, back to its commencement, and from there to the now present.

The first historical character to whom unsuspecting little Johnny of the primary school is introduced, is Christopher Columbus. Now Chris was a fine old boy, make no mistake about it, but by what right do the moguls of education decree that life begins at 1492?

Skipping the moot question that what little history the student has absorbed was viewed through the aid (?) of rose colored glasses, we come to the remarkable disjointedness entailed in its learning, a fact which cannot be overlooked. "Countrified" history is taught. First England is studied, alone and apart from the world of which some people contend it is an integral part. "And what's wrong with that," one educational dignitary poraneously, are ages and asks, "It's all history?" To which an intelligent person answers, "Certainly, why not? Why not give lectures, using just adjectives one day, only verbs, the next, nouns alone on the succeeding day. They're all words." But we have to segregate these different types of words and group them together in logical order, to produce sane speech. So is it necessary for historical events to be linked together in an unbroken chain to make its significance intelligible.

Because of this lack of unity in the teaching of history, few people stop to consider such facts as: that while Benjamin Franklin was flying his famous kite, in a far off German town a comparatively unknown musician, Johann Sebastian Bach, was conducting spirited research into his chosen vocation, the results of which revolutionized the art and science of music; and that shortly after the vigorous colonists of New England secured their independence from "Old" England, in distant Haiti one self-made, truly great military genius was handed the "double cross" by his highly regarded, but much over-rated "friend". Reference is to immortal Toussant L'Overture and immoral Napoleon. The student is led to believe that happenings such as these, actually occuring contem-

Perhaps, in the light of future years, an intelligent educational system will be developed. When and if this great change is effected, it is entirely possible that an orderly and unified program of history will be presented.

Every so often some San Francisco moron, a little "more off" than his numerous fellows, rattles the lonely cell in his spacious cranium. The noise caused by this procedure he calls an idea. While struggling under this delusion, the unfortunate one may do any or all of many futile things. He may suggest building a bridge or staging a parade. He may even write to his congressman. When this cerebral disturbance becomes acute, "old one cell" advocates having a "week".

Not content to allow seven harmless days to wend their brief way unmolested, he smites them with some senseless moniker such as "Get Your Hair Cut Week", or his latest "Spruce Up San Francisco Week", in which the city is urged to scour its buildings and otherwise purge itself of dirt so as to make a good impression on Fair visitors. But why should we make these concessions to visitors when we might reasonably take this attitude:

We are the sweet selected few,
Let all the rest be d—.
There's room enough in H— for you,
We can't have Heaven jammed.

If we are so magnanimous as to allow strangers to view our paradise, they should be gracious enough to accept it as they find it.

Among other things, we have observed recently that the cultural level of the students (particularly the women students) of this college has been woefully underrated. From remarks made by various instructors, the co-eds have gathered that said instructors think their cultural pursuits consist of going to the movies twice a week, reading the funnies, movie magazines, and Liberty, or else perusing the pages of the latest Rob Eden or Kathleen Norris. One misguided gentleman even said, "Women spend too much time thinking about how they look, and not enough time thinking."

Please, professor, it isn't so. Cynical observers have remarked on the gratifyingly high cultural level of the women of this college, and we have noticed that quantities of excellent contemporary literature are consumed on the campus and environs, as are some well-chosen periodicals. The girls also display excellent discrimination when choosing movie fare—if things like Lost Horizon and The Good Earth aren't art, what is?—and when legitimate plays come to town, they turn out for the performances in droves. Many of the women students, too, have been attending the lectures given by the famous authority on Shakespearean literature, Brother Leo, and it seems to us that it requires a rather high cultural level to attend a lecture for one's evening relaxation after having sat through three or four during the day.

Of course, there is still much room for improvement. For example, you may get twice as much fun out of Vogue as you do from Time, but it's still a good idea to keep up with current events as much as possible. When the conversation turns to politics, this spring's hat isn't going to keep you from being classified as a Little Miss Dumbbell if you've neglected your current events for current fashions. Another tip—don't confine your reading to contemporary literature; try branching off into poetry and the classics for a refreshing change.

AFTER DARK

By way of criticism of Maytime:

The armed camp of art is forever breaking apart and falling into many disputes and separate combats. It will never be that man will take all and sundry into his ego, finding beauty in each leaf and in each page. Thus critics speak for themselves alone, and all art lovers criticize.

The motion picture is a hot-bed of personal likes and dislikes. There is no perfect meeting ground. At the moment Maytime is running the gamut of appraisal. There are those who shout and those who murmur, those who understand and those who think they understand.

That someone should ever have suggested that Jeanette MacDonald could sing opera seems quite incredible. It must appear obvious to those who have heard real opera that Miss MacDonald has very little, if any, technical background for such exacting music. And yet the producers seem to see fit to star Miss MacDonald as a coloratura, lyric soprano, dramatic soprano, contralto, etc. It might be quite a shock to those producers to learn that there are opera singers actually alive in this twentieth century!

For roles that call for a light-operatic voice, Miss MacDonald is delightfully capable. She has a pleasant personality and a neat gift for acting, and in these roles she should deserve a better support than Nelson Eddy. In the first place, Mr. Eddy needs a great many lessons in the gentle art of acting. In the second place, he should stay away from operatic attempts because they aren't exactly flattering. And, finally, he is a trifle too experienced in the art of being a man to try playing a guileless youth with a feather in his hat. Something a little more dignified might be more in character.

It must next appear that Hollywood learns less and less about opera as it goes along. To have Miss MacDonald rise from Isolde to the Bohemian Girl in one act is slightly ridiculous to say the least. And this happened in Maytime, if you remember. Also, Hollywood seems to have overlooked Verdi and Bellini and Gounod and Massenet in its search for opera. Or have they already exhausted such prolific composers?

To have toddled off and found a perfectly innocent Tschaikowsky symphony, thrust it into the dress of an opera, and proceed to blame it on a composer with an Italian name is in astonishingly bad taste. Only Hollywood could have committed such an act; only the American public would accept it.

Is there a remedy? Indeed! Let Hollywood make an operetta that has every right to the name and leave opera for the pictures of Grace Moore, Lily Pons, and the other opera singers. There is nothing more delightful than an honest operetta. Remember: The Vagabond King? And there would probably be a large market for an honest filming of an opera such as Carmen or I Pagliacci. But, unfortunately, opera and operetta do not mix well. Especially when the singers are switched around.

By LAMBERT MEYER

We're beginning to get sick and tired of those Monday morning moaners who greet you with the same old phrases, "Gosh, is that baseball team retten," or, "Well, what's the track team's excuse this time?" Yes, it happens every Monday morning like clockwork, and the snickering questions are always asked by some bright college lad who has never taken the trouble to spend a five cent fare to see one of the Ram teams compete. The inquirers do not expect an answer from the assembled players, but put their questions in a manner that seems to say, "A disgrace to San Francisco Junior College." To those to whom this is directed (and they know who they are) we are asking for the sake of the players that you either come out and yell for the team, or else shut up and take no part in the discussion of junior college athletics . . . The teams may lose, but the men who stood up and took the defeat feel worse than you do about the score. Why make it more difficult for them in their next conference engagement? Instead, spend an afternoon out in the open air and see for yourself just why the defeat took place, instead of blabbing all over the college that the squad is no good. Reading a final score in the Sunday morning newspaper gives you no right to criticize the teams. If you saw some bad errors, that is a different story. Funny things happen in sports, and from here on the wins might be all in favor of the Rams.

The Ram trackmen had a big sporting day when they met the California Freshmen team two Saturdays ago. They had a meet with the Bears in the morning and before lunch had time to take in a part of the Cal-Stanford baseball game. After putting on the feed bag, the cindermen viewed the Bear-Michigan track and field meet, and from Edwards Field rode out to the Oakland Estuary where they were able to see the annual California-Washington crew races. Those exciting events (which Cal lost) sort of eased the Rams' severe defeat by the Bar freshmen.

Upsets will come in the sports world, and it was the sad fortune of Coach Tom Wilson's racket team to have an upset lower them in the conference tennis rankings. The men were rolling along to championship honors when up popped the San Mateo netmen who took four sets out of six from the Rams, hoisting themselves into the initial spot, and dropping the San Francisco squad into second position. The locals still have hopes of becoming league champs, and are praying for the Modesto tennis team to trample down the high-riding Bulldogs.

Last Monday afternoon, the Rams split a series of six matches with the Oregon tennis team. Each took three contests.

The San Francisco-Sacramento Junior College dual track meet that was originally scheduled for April 3 will take place this Friday afternoon at Sacramento. No dope is available on the Panther squad except that they dumped the Santa Rosa Cubs by running their grand total past the 100 point mark.

It's a tiring week-end for the track team, as Coach Sweet's ramblers meet the Solons on Friday afternoon, and without a layoff, meet the State team on the following afternoon at Kezar. The Gaters are really the team that the men are aiming to defeat. The Alley gators are strong, but not unbeatable, and the Rams may score an upset. We hate to predict this, however, but it looks like an 80 to 42 victory for the Statemen.

It is the opinion of this column that the participants in future Associated Mens Students boxing and wrestling bouts be forced to train for a stipulated length of time before entering the ring in active competition. Poor physical condition of a boxer or wrestler does not only dull the bout, but also ruins the loser's chances to come out of the match unscathed. In some of our recent fights, the battles were slowed up considerably because of the lack of condition of the pugilists. A short training period would make the engagements closer, and there would be less chance of anyone's becoming badly injured.

Coach Louis "Dutch" Conlan has kept his Galileo gym classes interesting and exciting by organizing a series of hunch tournaments between the various men students. Squads are made up of four-man teams, and an official rating is kept by Conlan. Groups are divided into various sections so that the strong teams play the strong, and the weak teams the weak. Thirty-two points and a field goal constitute a complete game. Drop over to the gym any afternoon except Friday and observe some heated battles.

P. S. The tournament seems to keep the "cuts" pretty low.

San Francisco's crew is now holding first position in the league race, and looks like a cinch to take the championship. Last week, Coach Jack Gaddy's men easily defeated Galileo at Yacht Harbor, and rowed the 2000 meter course in the time of 6 minutes, 52 seconds. This is the fastest time made for this distance since a Lowell High School boat roiled the choppy waters in 6.32, establishing a long standing record. Yes, we have a hunch that a new cup will be adorning the office of Registrar and Commissioner of Athletics J. Paul Mohr before the semester is ended.

The baseball team will have an opportunity for revenge this Saturday afternoon when it again plays Sacramento Junior College at Funston Field. In the initial meeting, the first of the season, the locals dropped a double header to the Panther nine. The men are finally getting serious about winning a few ball games, and are confident of a victory over the visitors.

EISANMEN TRIP ST. MARY'S BY 12 TO 7 TALLY AT MORAGA

Coach Lee Eisan's rejuvenated Ram horse-hide flingers had to travel all the way to Moraga Valley to annex their first major victory since the Modesto series. The Rams overcame a one run lead late in the ball game to win out by the score of 12 to 7.

Showing surprising batting strength, the Red and White slugged out an early four to one lead which was maintained until the sixth frame when the Gail Frosh staged an uprising to forge into a 5 to 4 lead.

Trailing by the 5-4 margin going into the first half of the seventh, the San Francisco lads tallied four times. Scafani opened festivities with a line single to left. Arvedi was safe on a fielder's choice and Ardanaz singled to load the bags. Hjort fanned. Berutich walked to score Scafani. Kiley forced Arvedi at the plate. Holmes singled to center to tally Ardanaz and Berutich. Eglehofer knocked a hard drive to right for two bases, but Wilgus hit a deep fly to left for the third out.

Little Joe Ardanaz impressed with his three blows in five trips to the plate. Larsen also looked good while he was on the mound.

Tony, Louie Miss Meals at Hall of Justice Session

It's too bad that junior college students Tony Scafani and Louie Bertolucci didn't know the words to If I Had the Wings of an Angel last Wednesday afternoon because they had plenty of time to croon the tune in a nice quiet cell in San Francisco's Hall of Justice.

It seems that Scafani had parked his model "x" jillope in a colored zone on the Powell Street hill and was attending a class when an officer of the law happened by chance to stroll up the steep incline past the Extension building. The officer with his eagle eye, spotted the car (if it can be called a car) immediately and was proceeding to issue a traffic tag when out of the building strolled Scafani and sidekick Bertolucci. The two baseball men endeavored to talk the bluecoat out of the ticket and when sports write Bertolucci hurled a few misplaced verbal phrases at the husky policeman the man with the badge wasted no time in dragging the two traffic violators down to the Hall of Justice.

Having arrived at the justice building both young men were quietly ushered into a small but clean cell with nice shiny bars and a big lock on the door.

Were they scared? They say no, but the rest of the college has a different opinion.

Louie stated that he cooled his heels for two hours by reading a newspaper and Tony did a pacing act up and down the tiny barred enclosure.

The law must have seen that the two junior college students wouldn't frighten so easily and finally let them go just as Dean Edwin Browne arrived with sufficient bail. The pair received a stern speech on the rules and regulations of parking a traffic vehicle.

Tony's only regret was that they didn't serve any eats while they were held captive.

BASEBALL TEAM WINS TWO FROM SAN MATEO SAT.

"Pepper" Holmes, Larsen, Scafani Big Guns in Local Batting Spree

San Francisco Junior College's baseball team went on its biggest hitting spree of the year to trounce the San Mateo nine in a double-header last Saturday at Funston Park. In the two-game series the Rams slammed out 30 base-hits to come out in front by 12-11 and 14-4 scores.

This amazing willow wielding spree ended a Red and White hitting famine that has continued since the Modesto series. At that time they collected 26 hits and since then have been unable to garner more than 12 and as a result lost two series.

The twin victory is the second of its kind this season and was made at Funston where the boys seem to be able to hit the ball.

It was truly a slugfest, with San Francisco getting 18 hits in the first contest. Les Larson pitched the opening tilt and can take full credit for the impressive win. Les slammed out three hits himself, one going for a home run in the sixth frame. He struck out eight men and allowed eight hits in the eight innings he worked, five coming in the fatal fourth when the Bulldogs scored four runs.

The Rambling Rams scored twice in the opening canto and led until the fourth when the Blue and White made four runs to lead at 4-2. In each of the fifth, sixth and seventh innings, Coach Eisan's swatters put across three runs to take command at 11-5. The sixth inning spree was featured by home runs by Joe Ardanaz and Larson.

San Mateo came fast in the closing frames to tie the score at 11-11. They tallied three times in the eighth and ninth to close a 6-run lead held by the Reds. Adler, the Bulldog pitcher, hit a homer in the ninth with two men on to knot the count.

RAM RACQUETEERS IN WIN OVER MODESTO

Serving notice that it is still definitely in the running for the conference title, the Ram tennis team last Saturday bowled over Modesto in convincing fashion, overwhelming the southerners by the score of five matches to one. The match was held at the Palace of Fine Arts.

Star of the encounter was the veteran Chandler Ennes, playing in the number one spot for the first time this season. Forced to use a borrowed racquet, Ennes dropped the first set to the number one man from Modesto, 5-7, but came back to wear down the invader and win the last two sets, 6-4, 6-2.

San Francisco succeeded in winning both the doubles matches, the only casualty of the day being Kay Lyman, who lost a close match in the singles. Altfield, Lazzeri, and Cardinal also performed for the Rams.

With twenty-four of their scheduled thirty-six matches behind them, Coach Tom Wilson's men show a record of eighteen wins and six losses, and are second in the standings only to San Mateo. Since the Bulldogs still have two tough opponents on their schedule, a loss to either of which lowers their standing, Coach Wilson still concedes his squad a good chance to cop the title.

The Rams ~~meet Sacramento~~ next Saturday at the Palace of Fine Arts, in what figures to be a pushover for the San Franciscans. The team will be trying hard for a love match, as this would greatly enhance their chances for the title.

plans for further development," he declared, "were shattered by the earthquake and fire of 1906. In a few hours only ruins remained of what had taken a half century to develop.

"But the leaders of the organization were undaunted, and with characteristic pioneer spirit moved westward, ultimately settling at the present location. The University law school, founded in 1912, is today one of few California law schools recognized by the American Bar Association.

"After 75 years, during the college's diamond jubilee celebration in 1930," he continued, "the institution changed its name to the University of San Francisco. The biological and physical sciences, economics and business administration, languages, history and government, mathematics, philosophy and psychology, and public speaking comprise the major courses taught in the University.

"Plans have existed since the purchase, in 1931, of the Masonic Cemetery for the extension of the University to keep pace with pressing educational needs."

Materialism Versus Ideals Worries Forum Club

Discussion of Materialism versus Idealism will feature the next meeting of the Forum Club, Friday, May 14, at the home of Charles O'Gara, 1142 Filbert Street, accessible by "E" car and Hyde Street cable.

At the last meeting of the Forum, a lively discussion on "Prostitution—should it be legalized?" was held, according to members. Madelon Brodie and Richard Date led the discussion, each presenting different sides of the controversy with general discussion by members following.

"No conclusion is reached by the Club," Malcolm Longaker, chairman of the group, said, "as our object is to let the members decide in their own minds what is correct."

Plans were made for a banquet some time in May to celebrate the first anniversary of the organization. The banquet will also serve as a farewell to the members who are leaving, which includes the majority of the club. In connection with this, it was decided to open membership to freshmen because only a few members are returning next semester and a great many more students are needed to have an organization.

Household Arts Offer Fashion Show May 13

To complete plans for a fashion show, a special meeting of the Household Arts Association will be held Friday, April 30, in Room 317, Galileo High School at 2:10 o'clock.

From among the members present at this meeting seven women will be selected to model correct campus apparel at the fashion show which will be held in the Lecture Hall at Powell Street, Thursday, May 13, from 12 to 1 o'clock.

With the co-operation of Janice Street, representative of O'Connor & Moffitt's College Shop, the HAA plans to present a fashion show which will interest every woman in the college. Miss Street will act as commentator at the show and will present a suitable clothes budget for college women. Featuring the event will be suggestions concerning the use of costume accessories to add variety in a wardrobe.

TO CLUB OR NOT TO CLUB

Students interested in the continuance of the college Spanish Club are requested to attend a meeting next Friday in Room 204, Galileo, at 4:30 o'clock. Zelma Romaine, group chairman, announced. Plans for activities to be sponsored by the organization, such as a banquet or a picnic, will be discussed.

Crewmen Finish With 10 Length Lead Over Poly

Gaddymen Climb to League Leadership; Meet San Mateo Saturday

Continuing its march toward the conference championship, the junior college crew annexed another win last Saturday, scoring a ten-boat length triumph over the Oakland Poly boat. It was the third consecutive victory for the locals and placed them in undisputed leadership in the league race.

The Ram boat pulled out a length in front at the start and used a short powerful stroke to open water between the boats at the first quarter mark. Calling on his crew to close up the gap by a series of "big tens," the Poly coxswain managed to cut the lead slightly toward the middle of the course, but Ram Coxswain Willie Cordano kept the Gaddy-coached outfit in front by increasing the stroke to a fast 38. This speedy stroke again shoved the Red and White far into the lead and they were never pressed during the remainder of the race.

The time for the race, 8:33, was comparatively slow, but Coach Gaddy said this was because of the ebb tide and the lack of stiff competition in the closing stages of the race, where it was not necessary to call for the usual finishing sprint.

Gaddy said he was particularly pleased with the work of his two strokes, Bob Caratto and Ty McHugh, and that he felt they were mainly responsible for the smoothness and stroking power which has been so much in evidence in the last few races. His pair of bulky bow men, Bill Schoenfeld and Harold Wagstaff, have also been important factors in the success of the crew thus far and have apparently developed the unusually powerful stroke that is necessary when rowing in the front of the boat.

Some of the men who had never touched an oar until the beginning of the semester have also shown surprising ability in their first year of conference competition. These novices are Art Nelson, Joe Arnold, and "Tip" Hamilton. The present lineup includes the names of Elmer Hubacker, Carl Brogger, Joe Kissel, Chris Buckley and Don Mix.

The conference "croocial" is scheduled for next Saturday when the Ram galley men meet San Mateo Junior College in a return engagement. The Gaddymen hold a victory over the Bulldogs but the peninsula boat has won all of its other races and a defeat of the Red and White boat would throw the conference race wide open.

WORLD SWIM RECORD BROKEN AT FAIRMONT

Breaking the world's record for the 75-yard medley relay, the college swimming team, composed of George Windberg, Herb Brotman and Ward Cox, swam the event in 39.2 at the Cap and Meg swimming party held at the Fairmont plunge, last Friday night. The former record which was held by last semester's San Francisco Junior College swimming team, was 40.8.

Deming Smith, Cap and Meg leader, expressed his pleasure at the large turn-out for the swimming party and announced that he intended to plan other and similar forms of entertainment in the future. Prizes for the evening were won by Earl Hoffman and Norma Parent and were donated by Beard's Ltd., and Bertha Walsh.

TRACKMEN FACE CROSS TOWNMEN IN MEET SAT.

Gater Cinder Squad Will Be Favored Over Sweet Struggling Ram Team

By L. M.

It's State again. Just when everything in the San Francisco Junior College begins to run smoothly those sarcastic Gaters from Buchanan Street, known as the San Francisco State College, enter the sports picture to endeavor to show up their arch rivals in a bit of athletic competition. This time it is track, and the exciting meeting is scheduled for Saturday afternoon, May 1 at Kezar Stadium. Track and field is one sport in which the Purple and Gold lads are mighty powerful. They have a team that has taken only one defeat and that by the well-balanced California Aggie outfit. Their list of victims include Modesto Junior College, Santa Rosa Junior College and Marin Junior College. The Rams have not been as fortunate this season although they have met stronger track squads than the Statesmen.

GARCIA, HOPKINS, DUEL

The 100 and 220 yard dashes will be a battle between Daryl Hopkins, Gater star and Joe Garcia, Ram speedster. Garcia looks to be the best of the two sprinters, having broken ten flat in the 100 this year. He has also shown improvement in the furlong dash and will very likely lead his competitor to the tape. Hopkins is a whole track team in himself, entering five events and usually coming through all in splendid style.

Ronny Lindlow and Frank Collins, State 440 yard runners look like good bets in the quarter mile although Don Bryant, 440 man has a chance to break through and is a consistent trackman.

In the 880 and the mile it looks mighty dark for the Sweetmen as the State team has such brilliant distance men at Bob Cota and Stan Kuder in the 880, and "Biff" Shreeve, and Fred Kline in the mile. Cota runs a good two minute half mile, and when pressed has exceptional speed. Coach Russ Sweet is still on the lookout for a distance man to hold up the honor of the Rams.

HURDLES CLOSE

State's hopes in the barrier events rest on Daryl Hopkins, Gater iron man. He has a habit of taking both the low and high hurdle races but should be pushed all the way by Jim MacGruer, and Ty Barre, junior college timber toppers. MacGruer has been coming along fine these past few weeks and upset the dope at Berkeley by taking the high's in fast time. Hopkins is State's only hurdler and here is where the Rams have a chance to collect some badly needed points. If Bill Gerhughty, Red and White hurdler, decides to run he will have a fine chance to take a couple of points or even win the event. MacGruer and Hopkins will probably split the honors in the two barrier races.

WEIGHTS EXCITING

Shot put, discus and javelin will be toss-ups and if the Ram huskies have a 100 per cent turnout they have a great chance to walk off with the majority of the markers. Steve Ebert, Gater weightman will fight it out with "Muscles" Boitano, George Bedrosian and Walt Loving, junior college strong men. Ebert hurls the platter about 135 feet and puts the heavy ball approximately 44 feet. Boitano and Bedrosian should give Ebert

"THE VAN WHIFFLEBAUM WEDDING!!" I gasped. Dear diary, he was asking me to cover the wedding that I had been reading about that very morning on the society page! Well, I was so absolutely thrilled that I could hardly ask him where it was to be held. He said that it was to take place at the famous Van Whifflebaum mansion on a mountain called Russian Hill.

"Have you a car with you?" asked the city editor. "It's quite a way from here."

Templeton replied, "No, sir, but I have my bicycle."

"Sorry, but that won't get you there fast enough," said the city editor. "Take a taxi instead. Here's some money," he continued, handing Templeton two silver dollars. Then he turned to me. "Bring back a good story," he said, "and be sure to describe the ceremony, especially the bride's dress."

"Yes, sir," I said. "You can always depend on a Blotz to come through with a story!"

"But not the kind you should know," the editor replied. So, puzzled, we left the building.

Outside, a taxicab, which was painted the most perfectly hideous shade of orange, waited in front of the door. Templeton held the door open for me, said "The Van Whifflebaum residence on Russian Hill, my good man," and we were off. While we were riding, the taxicab man turned around and asked, "Going slumming?"

"No," I answered. "We are going to attend the Van Whifflebaum wedding. You see, I am star society reported on the Daily Plunk."

"I should say not," I replied with dignity. "I never was one to display my emotions in public."

Just then the taxi drove up in front of an enormous mansion, which was almost as large, just as white, and twice as elaborate as the Public Library. So out of the cab we walked and up the footpath, which was paved with marble bricks. A man in a swallow-tail coat like Great Uncle Alexander Zilch's answered the door. "Do you wish to see someone?" he asked.

"Of course," I answered, tripping over a gilt cupid. "We are reporters from the Daily Plunk and would like to cover the wedding."

He frowned. "Come inside, be the veddy quiet," he said, and then led us into a great big, enormous room where the guests were already seated. Well, after a few minutes, they started to play the wedding march, and the groom and best man took their places at the altar.

"Who is the groom, Templeton?" I whispered.

"He is Prince Antoine Stiggenheimer, of the marrying Stiggenheimers," Templeton replied.

Well, dear diary, I was just awfully puzzled because he couldn't be Prince Stiggenheimer. You see, when he was father's hired man about a year ago, he was just plain Hugo Comfed, so how could he be a prince now? It was very, very confusing. I felt that Cordelia Van Whifflebaum should know that he wasn't a prince, but she had already come down the stairs and was walking up the aisle. What to do? Time, precious time, was fleeting.

"Because there wasn't any wedding," I said. "You see, Prince Stiggenheimer turned out to be Hugo Comfed."

The editor took his eye-shade off and began to tear it up. "Yes, yes, go on," he said in an excited tone of voice. I guess he was a nervous man. So I told him all about it, and he began to yell, "Scoop! Scoop!" and threw the pieces of eyeshade up in the air. He must be a very nervous man. Then he yelled, "Copy desk, copy desk quick!" but all of a sudden he turned to Templeton and me and said, "That's all for today, and thanks," and he thrust a ten-dollar bill at each of us.

CANDIDATES NAMED FOR PENDING CLUB OFFICER ELECTION

Nominations of officers for next semester was the main new business when the college Rifle and Pistol Club held its meeting last Wednesday, April 21. The following club members have been nominated:

President—Fred Wright, George Delser, Virginia Kwiatt, John Benton.

Vice-President—Priscilla Smith, Virginia Kwiatt, Gail Hanna.

Treasurer—Fred Wright, Frank Doupnik, John Benton.

Board of Control—Frank Doupnik, Gail Hanna, Virginia Kwiatt, George Delser, Charles Doudiet, Helen Elliott, Ronald Smith.

At the next meeting there will be another opportunity for members to make further nominations, according to John Stewart, president.

Because of the success of the women's intra-club match, the men of the club are requesting that a similar match be arranged for them. The women will shoot again for team scores from April 21 to April 28, using the prone position, and the intra-club matches for men will probably follow.

The social committee is busy planning an event to be held in the early part of May.

Suddenly I made up my mind. The duty of a Blotz was indeed clear. "Stop!" I screamed.

They did, and everyone looked at me. "This man," I continued, pointing an accusing finger at Hugo Comfed, "is not Prince Antoine Stiggenheimer, as he has told you. He is——" here I paused dramatically —— "plain Hugo Comfed, my father's hired man!"

"Eek!" screamed Cordelia, and fainted.

"Antoine," said Mr. Van Whifflebaum, turning to Hugo, "is this true?" But Hugo wasn't there! He had disappeared!

So, as there was now a lot of shouting and confusion, Templeton and I left. Outside the same taxi was waiting, and it took us back to the newspaper office.

Then in the city editor's office we were asked if we had a good story.

"We haven't any," I sadly replied.

"What!" the city editor exclaimed. "Why haven't you?"

"Because there wasn't any wedding," I said. "You see, Prince Stiggenheimer turned out to be Hugo Comfed."

The editor took his eye-shade off anti began to tear it up. "Yes, yes, go on," he said in an excited tone of voice. I guess he was a nervous man. WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By PAT MADDEN

Echoes from the WAA conference reveal many interesting facts, according to Ruth Johnson, president of the organization. Among them Miss Johnson noticed the fact that San Francisco Junior College is more advanced in the organization of women's sports than many junior colleges that are much older than this one. San Francisco Junior College is now a member of the Women's Athletic Federation. Most of the time was spent in organizing the constitution for the federation.

The emblems which go on the women's block jackets have at last arrived. They are round, with a WAA in the center, red on white felt. Encircling the initials "San Francisco Junior College". These emblems, which are the highest award given, go on the upper pocket of the white felt jacket. There are three block wearers at this time.

GAVELS MAKE PRESIDENTS

Inter-class matches for women will be held by the rifle club this week. These classes give credit for WAA, and it is possible to make a first team award in this sport.

A gavel will be given to the president of WAA soon. The president of the association has never had a gavel although the council has been meeting for some time.

THE RAILS?

COMPTROLLER LISTS FINANCIAL DETAILS; SEEKS COOPERATION

Because the California School Code requires that all school funds be audited, it is necessary that the following procedure be followed in handling all funds passing through the Associated Students' Finance Office, Ward Nichols, comptroller, explained for the benefit of student organizations.

A. Procedure for handling collections.
Deposit all funds collected from the students for any purpose with the finance office.

1. A receipt book will be provided for your convenience. If you plan to collect any funds, please call at the finance office (Room 260 Galileo) for your book.
2. Control of the sale of tickets to all activities will be centralized in the finance office. However, your assistance in furthering their distribution is solicited.

B. Procedure for handling disbursements:
No obligation upon the Associated Students may be incurred without proper authorization through issuance of a purchase order by the finance office.

1. To secure authority to make expenditure of Associated Students' funds, a requisition blank (which can be secured at the finance office) should be filled out. After approval by the properly authorized committee a purchase order will be issued granting the holder authority to obligate the Associated Students.
2. To make refunds on key deposits, etc., complete the copy of the receipt retained by you and return it to the finance office.
3. For small expenditures, the finance office is authorized to reimburse you to the extent of not more than $1.00 upon the receipt of a sales slip evidencing a proper expenditure.
4. All requisitions for items costing $25.00 or more should be accompanied by bona-fide bids from at least three vendors.

"It is highly desirable that the finance office be able to demonstrate that all receipts and disbursements are in order," Nichols said.

The Cry of the Few

By THE STAFF

Since the beginning of this college, a small, noisy group that is always yelling for something has been present. Members of this clique cry first for this, then for that, disregarding entirely relative merits and demerits, basing their wails solely upon personal desires and preferences.

Because of the intensity and consistency of the agonizing moans of this group, some mistake it as representative of all the students in general. This is precisely what the "Criers" (as they shall be called henceforth) want. They fail, however, to reckon with the few students and faculty members who are able to evaluate such things, to identify a loud noise with its exact source.

The Powers (just who compose the "Powers" group is not relevant, although suffice it to say that they are the wisely-applied brakes), however, finally gave in to the Criers. A year-book, a college annual, was to come into being as a result of the pleading anguishes of the noise-makers.

This book, however, was not to be a hit-miss publication, but an intelligently directed annual handled on a basis of strict business.

With fingers crossed, and a knowing wink, The Guardsman pointed out that it was acceding to student demand, financing the bulk of the book, and assuming the editing of it.

The Criers, however, were to raise an additional hundred dollars through sale of options at 50 cents each. April 30 was agreed by all concerned as the deadline for sales. That date arrived, and, as per prognostication of the Powers, the Criers fell short of their quota. Exactly $49.50 was in the safekeeping of the Comptroller's office.

Regrettably, the Criers have an alibi upon which they can fall. It was falsely rumored that the sales period would be extended, that books would be sold even after publication.

The Criers argued, then, that many students, in characteristic manner, would wait until the last minute, until they could actually see the book, before buying.

Publishing a book is a business proposition, because it must be handled through business concerns. Printers who work on pure faith do not remain long in business. The staff of the annual, somewhat imbued with the judgment of the Powers, is not at all inclined to work on faith.

If the students of this college must wait until they see the book before purchase, they shall wait a long time—into infinity, as far as the Powers are concerned.

Supposing that students were permitted to wait until seeing the book before they had to buy, then what? Supposing it did

Water Colors Featuring 4th FAP Art Show

Selection of Permanents Continues to Draw Student Votes

Water colors are featured in the fourth college-sponsored Federal art exhibit that opened Monday for a two weeks showing at Howell Art Gallery, 464 Post Street. Consisting of 45 pictures, the exhibit is drawing interest comparable to that shown in the three preceding. Students may vote for the three pictures they prefer from the water color group, those receiving the greatest number of votes to be added to the college's permanent art collection.

Votes cast for the lithographs and prints comprising the preceding showing were tabulated on Friday, the last day during which they were exhibited. The three pictures winning the largest number of votes are American Indian, by Maxine Albro, with 25; Steel Riggers, by Arthur Murphy, with 12; and Washington Square, by Chee Chin, with 11. These will be presented to the college by the Federal Art Project. Runners-up in the voting included The Garden and Top of Telegraph Hill, by Chee Chin; Man Digging, by Marian Simpson; Jack London, by Douglas Crane; and Frolic, by George Gaethke.

Another event drawing interest in Junior college art is the exhibit of student work from Northern California junior colleges to be held at the San Francisco Museum of Art from May 9 to 22. Invitations to participate in the show have been sent to all junior colleges in the region, but sufficient time has not yet elapsed for replies to be received. Richard Allman and Evans Ecke, art instructors in this college, and chairman and secretary respectively of the art department of the Northern California Junior-College Conference, sponsor of the exhibit, said, however, that the following institutions definitely will participate: Marin Junior College, Sacramento, San Mateo, Williams, and Salinas, and that Cogswell-Polytechnic, Modesto, Yuba, and Stockton probably also will send exhibits. Students of this college who may contribute to the San Francisco Junior College group are Louis Michels, la Celebres, Bob Bettencourt, and Charles Cox.

Commenting on the exhibit, Allman said, "Since San Francisco is a convenient, central point, and since we have been given the use of the fine gallery at the San Francisco Museum of Art, we feel that success of the exhibit is assured."

On May 14, Allman said, a Students' Day will be held. At this time representatives of junior colleges in the Northern California region will come to San Francisco to view the exhibit, and to hear a guest speaker scheduled for that day. Several instructors in this college are discussing students who are interested in the showing from classes on Students' Day.

May 15 Announced Date Of USF Tuition Contest

Men students who are completing their third or fourth semester, and have maintained an average of B or better in University grade studies, are eligible to compete May 15 for the two scholarships being offered by the University of San Francisco.

Rev. Harold E. Ring, S.J., president of the University, in announcing the competition, said that a written examination testing students' preparation in English composition and literature, current events, sociology, American government, hygiene, public speaking, philosophy and economics will be given at the University, Saturday morning, May 15, from 9 to 12 o'clock.

ANNOUNCED AT COMMENCEMENT

Awards will be given to the students receiving the two highest grades in the examination and will be announced at the commencement exercises, June 18. The student with the highest grade will receive a two-year scholarship to the College of Liberal Arts at the University, and the second successful candidate will be granted a one-year scholarship.

The junior college scholarship committee, which includes instructors John Sella, chairman; Francis Colligan, Lloyd Luckmann, John Gaddy, and Assistant Registrar Mary Jane Learnard, urges all students who are eligible to take advantage of the opportunity offered them, and will gladly advise those who are interested in taking the examination.

These scholarships are the first to be made by the University of San Francisco to a junior college, and indications are that they will become traditional awards to San Francisco Junior College men students.

ART GALLERY SCENE OF SECOND AWS TEA FOR HIGH SCHOOLS

Representatives of Polytechnic, Mission, and Balboa high schools will be honored at a tea held tomorrow in the Howell Gallery, 464 Post Street. The tea, the second in a series of similar affairs, will entertain senior officers and faculty representatives of the three high schools. Hostesses for the teas are women students of the college who have graduated from the schools, being entertained. Several instructors from the college will attend.

"We chose this unusual setting," commented Elaine Dominguez, President of the Associated Women Students, sponsor of the series, "because the guests will be able to view the Federal Art Project exhibit now being shown there."

Tuesday, Lowell, Galileo, and Miss Burke's School were honored at the first tea of the series.

Dr. Eugenie A. Leonard, vice-president and dean of women, said, "I think that the present series of affairs is valuable in two ways; first, it serves to acquaint the students attending the tea with the junior college and its activities, and second, it informs the high school faculty members about the courses offered here."

The third and last tea, Miss Dominguez said, will be held on May 11.

Photographer Photographed

Photographers are accustomed to being behind the cameras, not in front, so when someone sneaked up on Sam Galstoun and snapped him while he was taking pictures for the annual, the resultant picture is almost news—just another interpretation of the adage, "When a dog bites a man," ate.

COUNTRYSIDE THEME FEATURES NEXT JIG SPONSORED BY AMS

With a great sufficiency of straw and ballyhoo, plans for the Men's Club Barn Dance are progressing rapidly, according to the A. M. S. officials in charge of the plans. The date has been definitely set for Friday, May 14, and the committee has tentatively chosen Vallemar Grove, near Rockaway Beach, as the place.

Present plans include the much discussed hay ride, a barbecue, and a great variety of novelties in the way of entertainment.

The only charge to attend the dance will be the ten cents which must be paid to go on the hay ride. Tickets for the hay ride will be sold next week, and everyone who intends to go is urged to buy his ticket immediately, so that officials can determine how many trucks will be necessary. These tickets can be obtained from any of the Men's Club officers or the committee, which includes Don Mix, Don Mills, Johnnie Dismeyer, Ed Fredriani, Art Nelson and Elmer Hubacer.

The hay ride will last about an hour and, if the advance weather reports are correct, it will be a clear, warm night. The distance from Vallemar to San Francisco is 15 miles.

A huge barbecue pit is located close to the barn, and it will be used to roast weiners. Everyone will be provided with a barbecue fork and allowed to "boild his own."

Among the orchestras which are being considered is that of Irv Armstrup, former Palm Springs maestro, who has promised to go Hill-Billy for the occasion.

Prizes will be awarded for the best costumes and for the most profuse beards, it was said.

Discussing the presentation to the college of a souvenir tube of ground-breaking soil turned by Mayor Angelo Rossi at Balboa Park, Sunday, April 25, the Army-Navy Club met last Thursday at the home of T. Gordon Sollman, president, 1239 15th Avenue, at 7:30 p. m.

Though sponsors Francis Marsh and James Hughes were absent, two new members, Ronald Smith and Walter Thompson, were voted into the organization. Round table discussion was conducted in search of a suitable two- or three-word motto signifying the ideals of the club, which will be placed upon felt emblems to be issued immediately after the rendering of a final decision.

Other routine business involved final plans for the all-day auto trip to Mare Island Navy Yard, Monday, May 10, led by Commander F. Grant Marsh, faculty adviser, with a party of 25 students.

President Sollman said: "Prospective candidates for the C. M. T. C. vacations to be conducted July 1 to 30, in San Francisco, Monterey Presidio, and Fort McArthur, Los Angeles, are reminded that the registration deadline is slipping near. There is no obligation for future military service attached to these sojourns. I urge you to see Mr. Hughes of the faculty as soon as possible to guarantee your trip."

Next meeting night was tentatively set at May 10, at a place to be announced on the bulletin board.

Student Leaders Oil Political Machines

Campus politicians will gather their forces for the Associated Student elections which will be held Friday, May 21, according to word received from the administration. No students have definitely declared their candidacy for any of the offices, but several likely possibilities are already being discussed.

DARK HORSE LIKELY

Don Mills, president of the low sophomores, and active in college activities during his three semesters of attendance, is being talked of as a candidate for the presidency and might be opposed by Bob Anderson, high frosh prexy, or by Don Mix, Men's Club leader. None of these men has actually been put forth as a candidate as yet, but they are the only ones about whom any information can be obtained. There is always the possibility of a dark horse who would step in and win the post.

DEADLINE MAY 14

The vice-presidency may be sought by Elaine Dominguez, president of the A. W. S., but it is not known who the affair-minded seekers will be. It is also impossible to state who will enter the ballot battle for the positions of secretary or head yell leader.

All candidates must have their petitions in by May 14, according to Edwin C. Browne, dean of men. These petitions must be signed by 75 people, and the candidates who meet all the requirements will be presented at a student body assembly on Monday, May 17.

Clift Hotel Selected For Low Soph Informal

Sponsored by the college Social Committee and featuring a setting entirely new to college affairs, the Low Sophomore class will hold a semi-formal dance on Saturday evening, May 8, at the roof garden of the Clift Hotel.

Helen Davis, Vice President of the Associated Students, and Social Committee head, announced that she was particularly anxious for this dance to be a success as it is to be the last social committee affair this semester.

"The Social Committee," Miss Davis said, "hopes that every student has enjoyed the dances we have given this semester. We are especially interested in the reaction of students from across the bay to our Saturday night dances and hope that they have been able to attend them without experiencing the inconvenience that seems existed.

"I would like to thank the students of the college for their splendid cooperation in coming to the dances and in acting like good gentlemen at all times. It is really a pleasure to prepare for an affair when it is so genuinely appreciated."

HIGH SOPH MEET

A meeting of the High Sophomore class will be held this afternoon at 2:10 in room 205 at Galileo, according to an announcement by Tyler McHugh, High Sophomore president.

Students, Faculty Asked To Rummage Around a Bit

Co-operation of the entire student body and faculty was asked by the Women's Service Society, that the rummage sale sponsored by that group May 20 and 21 may be a success.

The sale, which will be held in a vacant store at 24th Street and Folsom, is for the purpose of adding to the scholarship fund which will be made available to students at the end of this semester. Commenting on the sale, Madeline Brodie, chairman of the committee in charge, said:

GOOD CAUSE

"We are asking for help from the student body and faculty because we would like to have as many articles as we can obtain. We believe that, as the proceeds will be applied to a cause that will benefit the students of the junior college, everyone would like to help so that someone may continue his education who otherwise could not.

"Any article will be accepted—coats, dresses, sweaters, shoes, baby clothes, book ends, vases, pictures, jewelry and anything you have that is no longer of any use.

"The plan of sale will be slightly different. Instead of putting a group of articles on a table marked at one price, we intend to mark everything individually, the prices ranging from 5 cents to approximately $1.50. Everything will be cleaned if necessary and renovated as much as possible, for we would like to make the display attractive."

In recent weeks the large closet at the back of the Women's lounge in the book store has been used for the storing of contributions. However, anyone who is planning to bring anything may leave it in the office of Helene Turner, N. Y. A. head, at Galileo. A truck will move the entire stock to the selling location at a later date.

SERVICE SOCIETY SELLS

Sales girls will be the members of the Women's Service Society, who will work, in relays on both days of the sale.

People who have a large amount of materials they would like to contribute, and who have no way of bringing it to Galileo, should notify Miss Turner or a member of the club. Arrangements will be made to call for the bundle if there is no other way to obtain it.

"We would like to have the contributions in as soon as possible," concluded Miss Brodie, "as there is not a great deal of time in which to prepare the articles for the sale."

CONSTITUTIONAL CHANGES GIVEN UNANIMOUS VOTE

Efficient Council Grants Charter to Men's Order of Ram, Blocks to Crew

Officially adopting the constitutional changes agreed upon by the Associated Students at last Wednesday's rally, the Executive Council of the college held its semi-monthly meeting last Thursday afternoon at Galileo high school.

Among the other business carried on by the council was the granting of a charter to The Order of The Ram, a men's service society formed as a follow-up to the Skull and Blade Society which formerly held an important position in the college but which fell by the wayside last semester.

BLOCKS TO CREW

The council decided unanimously to accept the decision of the Athletic Council in regard to changing the college crew from a minor to a major sport and awarding members of the crew Block letters instead of Circle letters as in the past. This decision was reached after a letter had been read to the council concerning the excellent showing made by the crew in conference races.

The idea of entering a college queen in the coming Golden Gate Bridge Fiesta was definitely abandoned because of the commercialism involved and because of the tremendous expense connected with preparing a float for the Fiesta parade.

FORUM REQUEST DENIED

A letter was read from the Forum Club requesting that the council support that organization in establishing a Peace Council, but it was decided, because the Student Council represents the entire Associated Student Body, some of which are not in favor of the policies of the Peace organization, that it would be advisable for the Forum to establish its own council, independent of the Associated Student group.

JOURNAL STAND PRESENTED

Tyler McHugh, High Sophomore president, requested that the council support him in his sale of tickets for the college annual. Some discussion ensued during which the reasons for the necessity of selling a certain number of tickets by May 7, was explained, and several suggestions for increasing sales were offered.

NYA WORK LIMITED TO 31½ HOURS FOR LAST TIME PERIOD

For the last month of NYA work (April 27 to May 26) all students, with the exception of those working in the men's and physical education department and the cafeteria, will be limited to 31½ hours, according to NYA director Helene Turner. These departments have a flat appropriation and the men are limited by the number of hours allotted by the heads of their departments.

"No time slips will be accepted after 5 p.m. on May 26. Names cannot be inserted on the pay roll after that time, and if slips are not turned in a complete loss of pay will ensue," said Miss Turner.

COLLEGE EDUCATION

Written by S. G. T., editor of The Richmond Banner, in his column Looking At It From Here, the following discussion of education, precipitated by this college's own ground breaking exercises April 25, is herewith reprinted by the editor that the college as a whole, which does not see, perhaps, the neighborhood papers, may gain some realization of its effect throughout the city, not only in terms of building and land, but in the intangible, infinitely more solid foundation upon which the college was organized.

Last Sunday afternoon at the ground breaking exercises for the new San Francisco Junior College a student speaker gave a splendid talk. He possessed just enough nervous intensity to give dramatic force to his words and the result was impressive—particularly to two "old timers," plain citizens of the community, who listened intently.

Said one to the other, "The kids nowadays can talk as well as the grown-up officials. It sure is good."

Replied the second man, "Aw the schools teach 'em all that now. All the kids are taught to speak out in public and they can all do it."

Each repeated his thought many times.

It is true all schools teach public speaking but people who have been through the moden educational mill decline to give the schools all the credit. They do a lot of polishing, to be sure, but the stone must be capable of taking the high polish. This boy was chosen to speak Sunday because he was presumably the best the school had to offer. And he could not have been the best the school had to offer unless he possessed a high degree of natural ability. He would probably have become a convincing public speaker without ever attending school, despite how much the school has helped to adapt his speaking to an educated world.

It is still possible, to seek the opposite extreme, to find a man well educated but a very poor public speaker. In him have been inculcated scholarly habits of thought, considerable information and powers of judgment but his natural defects remain, however disguised.

—o—

Which brings us to another link on a chain of thought. What is an educated man? We have just decided it is not his speaking ability or his general powers of persuasion. It is not necessarily the amount of formal schooling he has received. Genius, uncultivated, has often reared its head from obscurity while colleges turn out their percentage of chaff. Indeed, we are reminded of a woman, a college graduate, who is even highly cultured while remaining comparatively uneducated, if you grasp the distinction we seek to make. She went through school and college with the ambition to become a fine lady and has succeeded very well. She majored in music, studied literature and art. She never took a course in the history of human thought (philosophy) and so retains all the powers of a child to dismiss unpleasant realities as unworthy her attention. The scientific method of inquiry (call it the agnostic spirit of education if you can remove the word from any religious connotation) is not for her. In a growing unconscious selfishness, that which is not compatible with her desires for peace, serenity and beauty, are removed from her presence. The present convulsions of the world keep whittling away her acre of Paradise until she can now find solace only in the self-induced hypnosis of small cults. Once upon a time some knight might have said, "I'll place thee in a lovely bower, I'll guard thee as a tender flower" and they might have lived happily ever afterwards. Today the challenge of reality is too vital. She, unknowingly, is cultured but uneducated, despite a college degree.

One of the most interesting things about formal schooling is that the greatest psychological value of a maximum of it is the confidence that you haven't missed anything. People without it invariably credit it with powers far beyond its just desert. The old codgers last Sunday who fell into the logical pitfall of basing a conclusion upon an insufficiency of evidence in believing "all kids in school can talk like grown-ups" are an excellent example. They lack self-confidence and admire thereby all the more the youngster with it: That is why so many eighteen-year-old college boys became second lieutenants in the closing days of the world war while forty-year-old men of the world remained privates. It is the story once again of the highly successful man who still ate peas with his knife and who met a shocked glance of the waiter with the gulp, "We haven't all got a college education, you know!"

Keep your minds open and alert, try to preserve a balance with the aid of such devices as sportsmanship and humor and education will come to you, more efficiently by formal schooling but at any event on every step of the road of life. Close your mind to what you emotionally dislike, fall into

By FEM

Mainly because we've been advised to make this column a bit longer this week to make up for several shortages, we drag forth a little offering that was written in one of our classes, and which was definitely not meant for publication. The only reason that we're breaking down and using it is that we can't think of a darn thing to write about and deadline is drawing dangerously near. Here it is and if you live through it, you deserve to!

THOUGHTS INSPIRED BY THE TOO TOO DIVINE WEATHER!

With the days becoming balmy,
Every Harry, Dick, and Tommy,
Gathers hotdogs and salami,
For a picnic in the park.
And as days become more sunny,
It strikes certain people funny,
To be over-extra punny,
And as happy as a lark.
But with little flowers blooming,
(And for want of proper grooming)
I'm inclined to find me fuming,
'Cause I have to go to class.
But if I should be a cutter,
I would end up in a gutter,
Down where Powell Street crosses Sutter,
And where lots of people pass.
They would heckle me and taunt me,
And my former self would haunt me,
'Til not even Ma would want me,
And how lonely I would be!
So to save myself from sorrow,
No more trouble will I borrow,
And I'll come to class tomorrow,
With a banjo on my knee!

Now that the long hashed-over "Major vs. Minor Sport" situation has been cleared up and the crew awarded their much discussed blocks, we wonder if maybe some of the other so-called "minor" sports won't use as their theme song, "Boo hoo, they're giving blocks to the crew". Personally, despite the razzing we've given this group of rugged oarsman, on paper and otherwise, we are really quite pleased that they have received the recognition that they so justly deserve. Nice going, fellows!

* * * *

A little late, perhaps, but nevertheless, how about a little dirt from the Ground Breaking? Here it is: Deming Smith telling Cap and Meg members to be there early so they could "tell people where to go" . . . Faculty families picnicking in Ingleside Park after the ceremonies . . . Norma Parent all put away in her "Rah Rah" hat . . . Senor Wilson Camp showing up the Fiesta representatives with his huge sombrero, which was actually that big . . . Knuckle-Head Holmes risking his neck to get a beeg sign as a trophy for his room, only to have his kid brother roll home with a similar sign, garnered, so they say, with absolutely no effort . . . somebody bringing her lunch and wishing she hadn't.

Jack Martin, junior college student, acted as master of ceremonies at a Student Hour on Station KGGC. Each bay district school took turns putting on performances, and Jack Martin, Charles Brickley, and Jack Carter represented the San Francisco Junior College.

High sophomores hold first meeting to discuss plans for commencement exercises in the Municipal Opera House . . . a mere 66 students were down on paper to graduate . . . a slight difference in the number of high sophs this semester.

College relay swimming squad composed of Herb Brotman, Waldon Klaffke, Bob Mowat, and Monroe Staley won two relay races to stand out among numerous aquatic stars in the annual Northern California Championships at Berkeley . . . the team shattered the 150-yard medley relay record by three seconds . . . Klaffke and Staley now attend Modesto Junior College.

Once in the dear dead days beyond recall (and Governor Merriam should be reminded that he is far from being "beyond recall") California had a capable legislature. This body of legislators actually sanctioned one or two sensible measures. Immediately after the enactment of these laws, the body sank into a lethargy. It became a lax-islature.

Then along came "Sunny Jim" to rouse the boys from their peaceful slumbers: "All right, boys, on your toes! Snap out of it! The people elected me because they want action, and they're going to get it. Let's see you fellows make a few snappy laws. Let there be action!"

And there was action! Too much action, in fact. The body then became a taxislature.

But the "boys" went too far. They taxed the people's patience by an offensive levy called the "sales tax." Seeing the havoc their feverish activity had caused, and being just as weak physically as mentally, they decided that discretion was the better part of courage, and again went to sleep. And what a sleep! The "fellows" have been pronounced dead, and would have been buried long ago but for the strange phenomena surrounding their "death." Every pay day the "boys" are seen by close observers to open their eyes, take a quick glance at the calendar, wink slyly, and once more depart for slumberland.

As long as this game is played, just so long will the men behind the counters play "Pennies, pennies, who's got the pennies?"

"Never again will I attempt a dramatic interpretation," wails a Massachusetts self-alleged actor after a colorful performance in a Boston theater. The color was tomato red. Just another cured Puritan Ham.

Glasses have sometimes been called "cheaters"—referring specifically, of course, to those of the "rose-colored" type.

* * * *

San Franciscans, it seems, just won't be allowed any pennies. First the State Legislature snatches their few extra "coppers" through a hellish device called the "sales tax," and now their own civic body of law manufacturers threatens to raise the price of a street-car ride.

San Francisco has always been hailed as the "City That Knows How." Why must it be forced to admit that it doesn't know how—to pay?

The vogue, at present, is to have a sit-down strike when the boss complains. . . . That's a good position to be in when anyone starts "kicking."

Remember our little treatise on the art of winning athletic honor by the spoken word rather than the rippling muscle? We gave you instructions on how you could fool the folks on the tennis court and on the golf links and, after weeks of research, we continue, inspired by Mr. McLemore, and will now treat of swimming and equestrian sports.

Swimming would seem rather difficult to improve by any verbal methods, but it really isn't. We simply apply our subtle principles of deception, and you're all fixed. Suppose you're the lad who can only swim the crude "dog paddle"? You're at a pool, and all around you are handsome males gliding through the water by means of the Australian crawl. There is just one thing that can save you from embarrassment. Just before you leap in, turn to the crowd and, with a twitter, say: "Wonder if I can still do that stroke I learned when I was a kid?"

Then you jump in and smartly dog-paddle across the pool. Everyone will then agree that you're a card and think nothing of it when you say that you have a chest cold and had better not stay in the water any longer. The poor diver can apply the same tactics. Just stand on the edge of the springboard and announce that you are going to attempt the old "bellyflop" of your boyhood.

In polo and other equestrian sports, always manage to get very friendly with your horse; call him "Silver" or "Ebony," and inquire, in a very intimate manner, how the bowed tendon he received when you took him over the jumps is healing. This will give the impression that you are a veteran horseman, and if you bounce around considerably everyone will think it is because your lame horse has developed an irregular gait.

Short shots: A consensus of opinion among those who should know reveals that the football lineup next fall may shape up something like this: Joe Guedet and El Pearce at the ends, Willie Dolman and "Tip" Hamilton at the tackles, Andy Oddstead and Randy Osborne at guards, Duke Worsham at center; and a backfield consisting of Bill Ravetto, Ray Englehofer, Wes Olson and Jim Wilson.

Potted geraniums to Ray Greenwood for the swell fight he put up over at State a couple of weeks ago . . . the lad certainly has an abundance of the old "moxie."

Wonder if there is anything to the persistent rumors about the football team's traveling to Utah next term . . . what a trip that would be!

Joe Arnold insists that he's going to make hey! hey! at the barn dance. . . . Guess it sounded funnier when he said it with gestures.

If this column sounds a little "crewy," blame it on Coach Gaddy . . . if he'd only let us cut practice once in a while!

There is a first-class battle raging just now among learned educators as to which form of college course is more valuable—the specialized, technical form, through which the student is taught a particular trade or profession, or the more general, academic type, which endeavors to give the young hopeful a cultural background and transform him into something resembling an educated man. From the first, we were struck by the very important bearing this has on college women, a point that most of the educators overlooked, being preoccupied, as usual, with the male side of the question.

Just what is this relation between the educational controversy and the position of the college woman? A few statements about the present economic status of women undoubtedly will make this clear.

First of all, it is an important and well-known fact that most of the jobs open to women require training of a highly technical sort. Want a position in an office? Then you'll have to learn typing, shorthand, perhaps p.b.x., and sundry accomplishments. What is true of the office situation (and office jobs offer the largest field for women seeking employment) is true of nearly every other field of endeavor. In fact, about the only types of employment open to women and not requiring a great deal of specialized training, are retail selling, which is physically exacting, poorly paid, and offers little opportunity for advancement; housework, and various types of unskilled factory jobs and menial work.

In speaking with business people, employment experts, and economists, we have heard the same story over and over again: one of the greatest problems of the unemployment situation to contend with is the question of how to put to work the hordes of untrained women who daily storm the gates of business, asking for jobs. In the overwhelming majority of cases, these applicants are either wholly unprepared for positions or very sketchily trained. If the truth be known, there are many positions open for capable secretaries or stenographers, but the trouble is that most of the girls looking for office jobs can scarcely type the minimum 60 words a minute and still fewer know shorthand.

By now there is little doubt as to what is our personal stand on the matter of whether higher education should be technical or general in nature. Academic education is, of course, theoretically much more valuable. It broadens one's viewpoint, develops the powers of observation, and generally makes one a more interesting person. But general knowledge is so easy to acquire by independent reading, attendance of plays, recitals, symphonies, and lectures that it is not really necessary to take nothing but a general course of study in college. The most practical situation, we think, is one in which the individual spends from two-thirds to three-fourths of his time in college on subjects designed to prepare him for a specific vocation, the remaining time on general subjects, and his leisure time after graduation on a program of extension of that general knowledge.

This, we admit, is anything but an ideal situation, but, to the college woman faced with the stern necessity of getting a job in the near future, it seems to offer the most convenient solution to a puzzling problem.

AFTER DARK

BY John Ward

The Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra is now making its second tour of America, this time, however, without its greatest asset, Leopold Stokowski. The first tour, last year, made musical history of a kind, both artistic and financial. The outcome of this season will be quite interesting from the same angles. Without the publicity draw of the Stokowski name and with programs of little interest, it may be doubted that the financial success of last year will be repeated. But there may be a surprise in store; who knows the public's mind?

It seems rather amusing that such a superlative orchestra would have the cheek to present such "pop" concerts in a city that has just witnessed the conclusion of a fine symphony season. Of the four programs to be presented, two are passably interesting, one atrocious, and the fourth quite dull.

Last year's ballet, issued before the San Francisco concerts, told Mr. Stokowski that Bach and Wagner are the two most popular composers in this city. This year both names are conspicuously missing. Rather, it seems, Johann Strauss, waltz king, held the "lucky number."

The main reason for this criticism is not found in the composers chosen, but in the works of those composers that are to be played. Sibelius is worthy of more than Finlandia and The Swan of Tuonela. One may hear both works too often, as is the case. But there are many of his finest works yet to have their first performances in this city. Again, Schubert's C major symphony is less heard of by a large percentage as compared with his "unfinished." Why, then, must they appease the popular taste by repeating one of the too-often played masterpieces? Surely, music is not such a limited field as some would believe. There are more than fifty works written for symphony orchestra. And yet it must appear that only in New York or Philadelphia is one allowed the great privilege of hearing the unpopular.

When the Philadelphia Orchestra plays under Ormandy or Iturbi during the four days, May 2-5, it is devoutedly to be hoped that San Francisco will prove it has a discriminating musical taste and a sense of musical balance. Let it be seen that San Francisco is not a musical public to be sung down to, but one that knows the highlights of greatness and can appreciate the unexplainable outbursts of genius.

CONFERENCE MEET SATURDAY AT MARIN

By LAMBERT MEYER

The annual Northern California Junior College track and field championships to be held at Marin this Saturday afternoon should provide plenty of thrills for the spectators. The participants, Marin, Modesto, Sacramento, Santa Rosa, San Mateo and San Francisco, all have outstanding trackmen in a variety of events, and each test of competition is sure to be exciting. San Mateo is the strongest cinder squad in the league and will very likely romp home with the honors. The Bulldogs have defeated all of their conference rivals already this season and should repeat in the combined meet. The Ram team will offer plenty of competition, especially in the sprints with Joe Garcia and in the hurdles with Jim McGruer. Both San Francisco men have a habit of taking double victories. The only conference runner who has defeated Garcia in the century this season is Ted Ellison of San Mateo, and as Ellison has given up track work, Garcia is touted as a probable winner. So it's the final meet of the junior colleges this Saturday afternoon, May 8, at the Marin Junior College oval at Kentfield.

* * * *

The Modesto Junior College nine has a chance to get even with the Rams this Saturday afternoon when the two clubs clash on the Modesto diamond. In the last series at Funston field the locals captured a close double header to hand the country men their first and second defeats. The Pirates are defending league champs but are slowly turning into the conference "chumps" as the baseball season drags along. The Rams started the Modesto team on its downfall and it has been in the lower bracket ever since. Let's have another twin killing, fellows.

* * * *

Those two outstanding trackmen from San Mateo Junior College, Bill Whole and Cecil Cole, are still shattering records at a terrific clip. In the recent Marin-Mateo meet Whole smashed the shot put mark with a back-breaking toss of 50 feet 9½ inches to smash all existing junior college shot put marks, and teammate Cecil Cole ran the two mile in the very swell time of 9:32.2 to break a national junior college record by a full 13 seconds. The performances of these two individuals in this week's conference meet should be quite interesting to watch. Whole has bettered his shot mark at least four times already this year.

* * * *

Ernie Loustalot, Gus "Chubby" Kotte and Paul Rippon, Ram basketball stars are planning on entering College of Pacific next semester. If their plans go through the Stockton institution should be able to pick up a couple of more basketball men in order to form a very fine casaba squad. "Chubby", Ernie and "Ripp" have all been outstanding on the hardwood while attending the junior college.

* * * *

If the classes seemed a trifle empty last Friday afternoon the professors can attribute it to the opening of trout season on May 1. Plenty of men students were planning on doing a little angling on the first day of fishing season but we have heard no stories of "how it got away" as yet. One student tells us that he was afraid to bring home his mess of rainbow because his folks wouldn't believe that he actually caught the fish himself. Sounds a little "fishy" to us. Good huh?

* * * *

Glenn Wunderling, Ram gridder, practices daily with the University of San Francisco football team on the hilltop gridiron. Wunderling, diminutive backfield ace will transfer to the Don institution at the end of this semester and hopes to be a big factor in the San Francisco backfield.

George Clarke, teammate of Wunderling on last year's junior college grid machine is also a strong candidate for the halfback position on the same outfit.

Nice going crew. The rowers under the able tutelage of Coach Jack Gaddy have finished on top of the junior college conference ladder. The huskies (anyway they look like that in their street clothes) defeated San Mateo, U. S. F., and Oakland Polytechnic boats to claim the league leadership. All of the boatmen practiced diligently throughout the rowing season and deserved to finish on top.

At last Wednesday's rally Admiral Gaddy was presented with the trophy awarded the crew for their gallant victory in the Washington's Birthday regatta at Yacht Harbor. The handsome cup is now resting along with other San Francisco victory emblems in the office of Registrar J. Paul Mohr. Step in and have a look.

San Francisco's rugged Ram racket men terminate their conference schedule this Saturday afternoon when they clash with the Marin Junior College net team over in Kentfield. The squad has taken one defeat so far this season and still have a chance to win or tie for the league leadership if, by chance, the powerful San Mateo netmen get upset. Win or lose, the tennis team has been a very successfull one for Coach Tom Wilson and his chargers.

* * * *

With high hopes of molding another championship soccer outfit, Coach Tom Wilson called soccer practice last Saturday afternoon at the Chalet field. The spring practice will continue for some time and all men interested are urged to contact the soccer mentor as soon as possible. Last year the fast moving Ram outfit beat all opposition to win the junior college title, dropping only one close contest during the entire season. Although Wilson loses some outstanding kickers the team has a few returning veterans that are sure to give a good account of themselves. Returning soccermen include Mike Klepinoff, all-conference win, Ed Frediani and Bob Anderson.

* * * *

The second Ram-San Mateo baseball double header that was scheduled for last Wednesday afternoon at the peninsula diamond was called off because of wet grounds. The series will probably take place either this week or next. The Bulldogs are anxious to come back and upset the San Francisco nine after the severe double drubbing that they took at the hands of the Eisanmen two weeks ago. It looks as though the Rams have the Indian sign on their rivals from the peninsula.

* * * *

Leading the junior college baseball league at the present time is Ralph Polidoro, slugging Modesto centerfielder. Ralph has rolled up an incredible batting average of .630 and has participated in every ball game this season. He is easily the outstanding outfielder in the conference and his hitting sprees in the last four contests have been sensational. Against the Rams he collected something like seven for eight including a terrific home run clout far over the left fielder's head. Looks like real big league material.

* * * *

The way we pick the track squads to finish in the big meet this Saturday at Marin: First, San Mateo; second, Modesto; third, San Francisco; fourth, Sacramento; fifth, Marin; sixth, Santa Rosa.

SOCCER TEAM HAS SPRING PRACTICE UNDER WILSON

With high hopes of retaining the Junior College Conference Championship Cup, won last season, the Ram soccer team has begun to organize for their "Spring Practice" sessions.

According to Coach Tom Wilson, practice will begin in earnest tomorrow, May 6. Funston Field will be the scene of activity, and workouts will be held between the hours of 12 noon and 2:30 p. m. daily.

With a strong nucleus of at least seven players from last year's squad, among whom are such veterans as the All-Conference Wing, Mike Klebenoff; Leo Johnson; Ellard Taylor, fiery little halfback, and Vincent Zuardo, sturdy fullback, the team will have a powerful and strong foundation. Among the prospective members are: Irving Armstrup, Syl Friedman, John Herrman, and Bill Flynn. These men are expected to fill the shoes of graduating stars Jimmy Fahn, Walter Odone, Bob Nelson and Harold Oberhaus.

At the present a few practice engagements have been scheduled by Coach Wilson. Battles for starting positions will start when the Red and White boys swing into action against the devastating A. A. A. city championship High School of Commerce eleven, in a few weeks. Games are also tentatively scheduled against other high school and club teams.

The Ram soccerites will attempt to uphold the brilliant record of twelve wins and one defeat, set by last season's team. That lone loss came in the last contest of the 1936 schedule.

"Anyone interested in competing for a place on this year's team will please report to Funston Field on the day designated," Coach Wilson said. Physical education credit will be given.

Looks Like Fair Shooting, Fair Shooters

Ho Hum! Another week, and the baseball team goes down to defeat twice more, this time before the potent bats of the Sacramento Jaysee horsehide flingers. Oh, yes! The scores of the long-drawn-out doubleheader were, 12 to 10 in the first contest and 20 to 5 in the second massacre. The first game took over three hours to complete.

Although the visiting Sacramento batted thirty-two runs across home plate, they only connected for twenty-five hits for the two tussles. Miscues and "bone-head" plays donated more than a few tallies to the Sacs.

Compared with the second engagement, the first game was really close. The Senators cinched the contest with a two-run rally in the eighth and added an extra run, for good measure, in the ninth frame. However, the Rams were in the ball game until the last out.

Sacramento tallied one run in each of the first two innings to grab a two-run lead, which they held until the third inning, when the Rams dented the rubber thrice. After Holmes flied out, Arvedi walked, Marfinez singled and Scafani walked to load the bags. Berman received a pass to force Arvedi across the platter and Ardanaz smacked out a hard single to right to chase across Martinez and Scafani. Hjort and Berutich hit out to end the rally.

In the fourth canto, Ram hurler Wilgus had a little tough luck and the Sacs punched over three more scores. The fifth setto also saw the Solons score once more and in the sixth the invading marauders tallied three runs to make the count read 9 to 3, in their favor.

Came the last of the sixth and the Rams busted right back into the ball game with a two-run spree. Ardanaz poled out his second single to open the inning. Hjort singled, but Joe was thrown out at the plate. Berutich was called out on a bad third strike; Fex drove out a long single to right field to score Hjort, and Bob took second on the throw-in to the plate. Holmes then lined a one-base blow to left to count Fex. Egelhofer batted for Arvedi and struck out for the third out of the inning, leaving the score at 9 to 5.

Martinez relieved Wilgus on the mound and he held the Sacs scoreless in the seventh. In their half of this "Lucky Seventh" the Ram batters scored three tallies to creep within one run of Sacs. Martinez fanned for the first out. Scafani singled infield and went to second on Berman's ground ball single to left. Ardanaz struck out for out number two. Hjort was safe on an error, scoring Scafani. Berutich worked the pitcher for a walk to bulge the sacks. Fex's hit ball was messed up, allowing Berman and Hjort to cross the plate, but Holmes popped out to short.

With the count 9 to 8, the Senators garnered two markers to take a three digit lead in their half of the eighth. However, the Red and White, not to be outdone, came right back to make the scoreboard read 11 to 10, with a two-run splurge in the last of the eighth. Johnson, who relieved Arvedi behind the log, drove a long fly ball to center for the first out. Martinez walked, Scafani singled to center. Berman forced Scafani at second base, Martinez going to third on the play. Ardanez lined out his third hit to right to bat in Martinez. Hjort was hit by a pitched ball to once again populate the bases, and again, as in the previous frame, Berutich walked, this time working Berman across the home plate. Fex ended the promising rally by grounding out.

Sacramento chalked up another score in the ninth. The Rams could not do anything in their half, going down one, two, three.

Virginia Kwiatt in Lead for WAA Shooting

Leading her team to victory in a recent WAA match, Virginia Kwiatt, a member of the college Rifle and Pistol Club, made a score of 241 on her second target which is the highest ever made by a woman in the college.

According to Bill Hancock, club coach, this record is especially noteworthy as it has been equalled only by two men in the college and has been surpassed only by Alfred Plaw and Don Smith.

Total Scores for this match were:

BLUE TEAM

Junerose Bellew 457, Gail Hanna 448, Muriel Rademacher 445, Diana Duncan 444, and Jean Kidwell 439. Also shooting on the team were Betty Hyde, Mary Ellen Cook, Bette Hammerton, Janet O'Neill, and Dorothy Moore.

RED TEAM

GALLEYMEN SUFFER FIRST LEAGUE LOSS TO SAN MATEO CREW

Halted momentarily in its march toward the championship, the college crew suffered a one length defeat at the hands of the long-stroking San Mateo Junior College in the feature of last Saturday's Rowing Association regatte at Yacht Harbor. The loss was the first suffered by the Ram oarsmen in conference competition and put them into a tie for first place in the league standings.

The race was a thriller all the way down the course and the result was in doubt until the final stroke when the Bulldog boatmen managed to finish in front in spite of the withering final sprint put on by the Gaddymen. The boats pulled away from the starting buoys together and matched each other in a series of "big tens" in the first few hundred yards. The San Mateo coxswain then speeded up the stroke to a 32 and managed to get his crew a half a length in front. Willie Cordana, fiery little Ram coxswain, tried to force his weary charges to close up the gap at the half way mark, and although they moved up slightly at this point, the bow of the peninsula galley remained in the lead.

The second half of the race was a heart-breaker for the local crew as they tried desperately to overcome the San Mateo lead but the Blue and White bladesweepers were not to be denied and they fought off every Ram attempt to capture the front position. An unfortunate "crab" caught in the midst of the Gaddymen's last wild sprint about two hundred yards from the finish culminated whatever chances the San Francisco cutter had of pulling out in front and allowed the Bulldogs to slide over the line a winner.

The Ram blade-dippers will attempt to hit the comeback trail next Saturday when they meet the last-place Oakland Poly crew. The locals should be able to win this one but they will have to row a better race than they did last Saturday. The race will be held over the usual Yacht Harbor course and the starting time has been announced as 4:30 p. m.

Gaddy has announced that he plans no shakeup in the Red and White boat despite the defeat and that he will probably use the same lineup. This lineup consists of a starboard side with Ty McHugh, Carl Brogger, Joe Arnold, Joe Kissel, Art Nelson, and Harold Wagstaff and a port sweep of Bob Carroto, Elmer Hubacker, Chris Buckley, Don Mix, "Tip" Hamilton and Bill Schoenfeld.

Here are the present conference standings:

	Win	Lose	Percent.
San Francisco J. C.	3	1	.750
San Mateo J. C.	3	1	.750
U. S. F. Frosh	2	2	.500
Oakland Poly	0	4	.000

SWEET'S TRACKMEN SCARE CROSS CITY FAVORED THINCLADS

What looked like a glorious upset, turned into an heroic effort as the Red and White cindermen bowed to the favored State track team 63 to 54, at the Kezar oval last Saturday. The ambitious Rams pushed at the dope cart enough to rock it dangerously, but they couldn't upset it.

Deryll Hopkins, State's highly publicized iron-man, grabbed three first places and one third to lead the individual scoring with 16 points. The High Hurdles, which was conceded to State in the pre-meet dope, found the Jaysee turning the tables. One of the hurdles took a fall out of Hopkins and McGreuer and Barre sneaked in for first and second places.

Joe Garcia registered a double win in the sprints, setting up two new meet records, to lead the Ram attack. "Little Joe" had able support from Walt Boitano, erstwhile weight man, who was a surprise entrant in the dashes. This bit of Sweetonian strategy gave the team a second in the century, and a third in the 220.

Putting on a little Ironman stunt himself, Mitchell, middle distance runner, dropped two close decisions in the 880 and mile, taking second by a matter of one yard in both races. The time in the 880 was 2:02, setting the third new meet record of the afternoon.

Jimmy Fahn and "Sky High" Shardin, both cleared 11' 6", with the greatest of ease, tying for first, and adding eight digits to the junior college's total.

100-Yard Dash—1st, Garcia (J. C.); 2nd, Boitano (J. C.) 1 yd. back; 3rd, Evans (S) 2 yds. back. Time 10.2 (new meet record, old record 10.3).

San Mateo Favored To Capture Conference Title At Kentfield Oval; Rams Depend on Wins by Joe Garcia To Garner Points in Finale.

With six of California's most powerful junior colleges assembled in the Marin oval next Saturday afternoon, the annual Northern California Junior College Conference track and field championships will take place in what is expected to be an exciting finale to the 1937 cinder season.

Coach Tex Byrd's San Mateo Bulldogs are favorited to walk off with the honors, as the squad is very strong in both track and field event competition. The Mateo team has trounced all of its conference opponents so far this season and for that reason looks like a probable victor. The Peninsula men have winners in Bill Whole, shotput artist, and Cecil Cole, miler. Both men have shattered national junior college marks already this season, and spectators would not be surprised to see one or both of them set new records in their particular event. The Bulldogs suffered a severe loss when sprinter Ted Ellison dropped out of college, but the team figures to make up these points in the hurdle events with such timber toppers as Lloyd Dod and Al Johnson.

Sacramento Junior College is the dark horse of the meet. They have only been heard from once this season, and that single time the team thumped Santa Rosa to run their total past the 100-point mark. They are said to be strong in the sprints and field events.

MODESTO GOOD

The Modesto outfit has a well-balanced group with such outstanding stars as Jerry Lopes, a 4:20 miler, and Joe McNabb and Bill Hawkins, Pirate distance men. The sprinters are also sure to give a good account of themselves and may upset such speedsters as John Russell of Marin and Joe Garcia of the Rams.

The cindermen from Marin should offer a stern argument, especially in the pole vault, broad jump and the sprints. In the pole vault there are Bill Grabe and Will Kirby, both 12-foot men, while Russell takes care of the century and the broad-jump. Other consistent second place winners are sure to gain a number of point positions.

Santa Rosa cannot be considered to garner more than eight or ten markers, as the team is especially weak this year. Bill Knowles in the pole vault is a probable winner, and Ed Lyman in the weights should take a first or second.

SAN FRANCISCO?

What will Coach Russ Sweet's rambling Rams do against such stiff competition? Here lies the question mark of the entire meet. The Rams have downed Santa Rosa easily, but that is all the meets they have had against conference rivals. Each event must be analyzed man by man, and if the locals turn in a miracle act they can finish 'way up among the leaders.

Joe Garcia, sprinter, should take two places, one in the 100 and the other in the 220-yard dash. He has finished either first or second all season and very likely will turn in the same performance this Saturday.

Don Bryant and Harold Mitchell will uphold the honor of San Francisco Junior College in the 440 and 880, while "Whimpy" Keyer and George Cassin run the mile. In these events most of the conference rivals are strong and will very likely whip the Ram cindermen.

Jim MacGruer looks like a cinch to place in the barrier events, especially the high's, and Tye Barre and Bill Gerhughty will also be in there battling to the tape.

The weights should go to San Mateo, with Bill Whole and Bill Talcott taking the shot and discus as they please.

Either George Bedrosian or "Muscles" Boitano will take a place in the shot, but the discus looks dark for the Rams.

Duke Worshem will not be eligible to hurl the javelin, and as Sweet has no other capable throwers in this event, points are nil as far as San Francisco is concerned.

Ernie Loustalot and Ty Barre must do 6 feet to win the high jump, and one or both could turn the trick. Ernie has placed high up in all meets so far this season.

"Kangaroo" Henshawe and "Specks" Kawaguchi will do the broadjumping for the San Francisco team, and it will take a 22-foot jump to win the event. Both are consistent 20-foot leapers.

The thrill of the afternoon comes in the pole vault when Jim Fahn and Charlie Schardin, Ram vaulters, compete against Bill Knowles of Santa Rosa and Bill Grabe of Marin. If Fahn hits peek form he may win the event with a 12-foot 6-inch leap. The winner is sure to do 12 feet.

And there are the statistics. Upsets will probably mark the afternoon, and the weakest squad may wind up to be the strongest in the conference.

Right now the Bulldogs from San Mateo look the best, but the other junior colleges will make the step next Saturday afternoon at Marin.

Freshmen Gain Nod Over Sophomore Baseballers

Freshmen 6, Sophomores 4. That's the score of the freshman-sophomore baseball game that was played last Wednesday afternoon at Funston field.

The teams made up of members of the Ram ball club played a heated contest with frosh hurlers Ardanaz, Hjork and Berutich taking the mound for the yearlings and turning back the high and mighty sophs.

Tony Scafani started the game for the second year men but left for the showers when he allowed five hits and six runs in the first frame. Bob Fex relieved Scafani and finished the remaining six innings by blanking the freshmen and allowing only a few scattered bingles.

Ray Englehofer, freshman first sacker lead the hitters by collecting two for two.

No box score was kept.

DIVOT DIGGER'S NOTE

Attention, all divot diggers! If you want to play in the second San Francisco Junior College golf tournament, be sure to sign up at the Powell Street building. There will be a sign-up sheet on the bulletin board in the lower lobby.

Coach "Dutch" Conlan stated that if enough golfers signed up, they would be divided into flights according to their ability, in order to give everyone a chance.

If the scores warrant it, a team will be formed for entrance in the Northern Cali-

not satisfy them, and they refused to buy? WHO IS GOING TO PAY THE PRINTERS?

Led by vague, yet highly optimistic word of the Criers, The Guardsman has been stretching the truth a long way to capitalize on psychological publicity in the hope of boosting sales of the annual—boosting them, not for itself, but for the benefit of the Criers. The Guardsman is not materially worried one way or another concerning the publication of an annual.

The truth, however, must sometimes be brought to the surface, so that students of this college may know precisely what is going on in their organization.

Conceding a point because of the aforementioned false rumor, the Powers have extended the period for the sale of options to next Friday, May 7. Just as prospective graduates who failed to get their photographs taken on time learned, so will the Criers and all else find that the annual staff and the Powers mean business. The May 7 deadline will not be fudged upon one minute.

Originally, it was thought that, if 200 options were sold, the book would be published, for with the 100 dollars from such sales, and with the generous allotment conceded by The Guardsman through omitting its traditional rotogravure edition, financial coverage would be ensured.

Wth the laxity of the Criers now definitely proved, however, the Powers are forced to take a slightly modified stand. No books, nor options for them, will be sold after May 7. Those not holding options will not be permitted to buy books, even though there may be several hundred unsold. This is business. NOT ONLY THAT, THIS IS FINAL, ABSOLUTE, DEFINITE, CONCRETE, AND UPON THIS BASIS THE POWERS AND STAFF STAND ADAMANT.

Were the truth to be known, the rank and file of this college does not particularly want a year book. The average student does not care the slightest one way or another. Sure, he will say that it is a fine idea, and that he is in favor of it, but when it comes to doing anything about it—such as paying 50 cents—he loses all interest forthwith.

The average student, too, cannot be condemned for this stand. After all, will his happiness, or will the length of his life, be materially increased by a mere book, even though that book may be of far better structure than similar publications found elsewhere?

No, the entire blame must rightfully fall upon the Criers, those students whose mouths boast more capacity than their heads, the mistaken few who foolishly think that what they want is what the rank and file wants.

an "ism" to the exclusion of too many other things, or clutter your mind with unrelated and useless facts and education in its truest sense has eluded you. Education should help you talk, it is a pity if it doesn't, but that is not its major test. It must help you to think. It must be a companion amid both the complexities and the loneliness of life. We feel like saying, "If it weren't for our minds, we would lose our minds."

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By PAT MADDEN

Although the semester is but three-quarters over, many of the W. A. A. clubs have reached the climax in their programs for the year. Some of the groups will shortly complete their programs with large events, for which the work is going on continually.

Tennis and baseball clubs will hold a series of playdays with San Mateo, Marin, and State. The date for the State game is Saturday, May 8, at 9:30 o'clock at the Palace of Fine Arts. Asking for new recruits, the baseball club hopes to have two complete teams available for the various playdays. Members of the W. A. A. Council have been helping out, but they are not always able to come to the games, so that it is necessary to have more women playing at every practice in order that the positions be filled permanently for the two teams.

DECORATIONS AND REARRANGEMENTS

Committees for the W. A. A. banquet have been chosen already, and plans for the affair have been made. The committees are working on the program and decorations for the banquet, which will be held early this year, according to those in charge. Chairman of the committee on general arrangements is Dorothy Holcomb. Other committee chairmen are: Margaret Wormell, decorations; Mary Catherine Way, rearrangements; Dorothy Canavan, banquet. The exact date of the banquet has not been set, but it is thought that it will be late in May.

AGAIN, ELECTIONS

As the W. A. A. activities are drawing to a close, the nominations for new officers will be made this week. The election is usually held during Tourney Week, the climax of which is the banquet.

Selection for the first team awards is made known at this time, as well. The entire organization is concentrating on the banquet and the elections now. Those who have been slack in their attendance are endeavoring to reinstate themselves in the ranks of those from which the first teams and the W. A. A. officers will be chosen.

Announcement of the cancellation of the recital put on by the dance club at the end of the semester has been made by Josephine Tobin, manager of the group. A hike and picnic will be held by the dance club on Sunday, May 16. The club plans to take the 8:45 o'clock boat, and hike to Rattlesnake Gulch.

"We have made no plans to hold an esthetic dance recital," said Miss Tobin. "This is merely a hike."

The tennis singles tournament will conclude next week with Helen Davis the only sure player in the finals. The doubles tournament will conclude at the same time. A tennis playday will be held with the baseball club versus San Mateo, May 8 at the Palace of Fine Arts.

No Decision Reached in Supreme Court Debates

With the Supreme Court question as the topic, Gene Blumenthal and Isabel Sherratt, college debaters, met Sacramento Junior College on Friday, April 30, in a non decision contest at the Capitol City. On April 23 the San Francisco debaters met Sacramento again on the same question with James Shorb and Jacques De la Montaigna representing the local forensic group. Speaking for Sacramento on this occasion were Jack McKinnon, president of the State Junior College Debate League, and Jack Lemmon, veteran college debater.

On May 14, the college debating group, represented by Morris Rabinowitch and Ed Frediani, will meet San Mateo Junior College debating team at San Mateo. Frediani and Rabinowitch will uphold the negative side of the question.

It has been announced by Lloyd Luckmann, mentor of the society, that since many of the members of the present debating squad will graduate this term, there will be several places open for anyone interested in this type of activity. Those who are desirous of joining the society should see Luckmann for complete Information.

Election of officers for the fall semester will be held at the next meeting of the Newman Club, according to Pete Jambruno, group president. Nominations were held at the meeting on Monday, April 26, and Bob Fex and Jack Reynolds were selected to run for the presidency. The date for the election meeting has not been set definitely but members will be informed of this date by a sign on the bulletin board, Jambruno said.

Because of conflicting dates the plans for the dance were postponed and it was decided to have a picnic sometime within the next few weeks. Tentative plans are to have this picnic somewhere near St. Mary's College In Moraga Valley.

All students who have not as yet taken a complete physical examination are urged to do so as soon as possible by Dr. R. Duffrey Friedlander, college physician.

Stressing the fact that the examination entails little inconvenience for the student, and is exceedingly valuable in checking on the latter's health, Dr. Friedlander stated that the number of examinations performed by him this semester is ridiculously low.

"A free medical examination should be welcome to anyone," said Dr. Friedlander. "Last semester the medical department fitted numerous students with glasses, took several X-rays, and, in general, corrected many physical ailments which were not suspected by the students themselves.

"For the sake of public health and the well-being of the student, the few minutes of time taken by the examination should be spent."

Students wishing to be examined may be so by going to Room 201, Galileo, any weekday afternoon between the hours of 2:30 and 5 o'clock.

WARNING, SAN JOSE; RIFLE CLUB COMING

Plans for the Rifle Club picnic which will be held at Alum Rock Park on Sunday, May 16, are progressing rapidly, according to the latest reports of the social committee. At a meeting of the club board of control last week it was decided that all club members who are able to bring cars should see Gordon Sollman in the lobby of the Extension building some time this week. Every one will bring his own lunch and will share the expenses of the trip with driver.

All members desiring to swim should bring their swimming suits, as the pool is said to provide good swimming. The cost of the drive down will be the only expense of the trip.

Plans are being formulated to have a club dance some time in June, officials of the organization stated.

Choirs to Participate In Stockton Music Fete

Represented by The A Cappella Choir and the Men's Glee Club, San Francisco Junior College will take an active part in the annual Music Festival of Northern California junior colleges which will be held at the College of Pacific in Stockton on Monday, May 10.

An interesting program has been arranged with vocal and instrumental groups from nine different colleges taking part. Directors of these respective groups will meet with Edna Barr Love, commissioner of fine arts, to draw for places on the program.

One of the highlights of the day will be the criticism of the choral groups by each director. Form and plans for this criticism will be made by Clinton Lewis, assistant commissioner of fine arts.

Monday, April 26—I am footsore and weary, dear diary, and so deep is my exhaustion that I can scarcely guide my pen to write these words. Ah, me! I know that you can hardly wait to hear my tale, dearest diary, so I will start immediately, now, and without further delay. Allons! (French).

Sunday morning Templeton brought his bicycle over to my house, for we were going to the ground-breaking ceremonies in Balboa Park. We had a delicious lunch consisting of strawberry Jello and two cookies and then decided to leave, as we wanted to arrive there early in order to loosen up the earth around the site so that dear Mayor Rossi wouldn't have to work very hard when turning his shovel.

We trundled Templeton's brother Cuthbert's bicycle out into the street, and started off. Halfway down the next block, however, we suddenly remembered that we didn't know how to get to Balboa Park! Ah, dear diary, what to do!

As is our custom when in predicaments, we asked a passing policeman how to reach Balboa Park. "Two blocks down and turn to your left," he said. On we rode, but found ourselves on an ordinary street instead of a park. A sign on the corner read BALBOA STREET. So I guess the policeman misunderstood us.

A little girl was shooting peas at the sign, so we asked her how to get to Balboa Park. "Ride straight down 20 blocks," she answered. Off we started again. As we rode along, the birds circled overhead, the flowers bloomed, the butterflies flew, and the sun shone. This lovely sight inspired me to start a poem:

Elvira and Templeton went riding one day,
It was the 25th of April, in fact, almost May—but just then we rode into the twentieth block. However, there was no park in sight, just a theater with BALBOA THEATER over the entrance. I guess the little girl must have misunderstood us. So we asked another passing policeman where we could find Balboa Park. "One block down and turn to your right," he said.

We did so, and drove up in front of a grocery store with BALBOA MARKET over the entrance. This policeman must have misunderstood us, too. Well, anyway, an old lady was passing by just then, and we asked her. "Just drive out over to Golden Gate Park," she said, and then drew us a diagram of how to get over to the place. At last we knew how to reach it! We rode across the park with the speed of gazelles, followed the diagram exactly, and drove up to the spot. But there was a big building on it with BALBOA HIGH SCHOOL over the entrance.

Suddenly everything went black. That, dear diary, is all I remember, but perhaps this clipping taken from the Daily Plunk will make everything clear:

"Elvira Blotz and Templeton McQuiddle, both San Francisco Junior College students, were taken into custody today when found near Balboa High School. They were taking a bicycle apart and throwing the pieces at various policemen, small girls, and old ladies that passed the spot. Later it was found that they were suffering from a slight dementia caused by the heat."

Lazzarone, Sac chucker, sent 11 Ram batters back to the bench via the strike out route. Joe Ardanaz hit three for five.

As for the second game, well, the less said the better. It was a good ball game until the last inning, when the Rams went to pieces and allowed the Senators to hang up ten runs. Joe Manning made a beautiful one-handed catch of a twisting fly ball by the right field foul line, and Hjort made a back-hand stop of a ground ball to get his man. Berutich came out of his slump to double and single in three trips to the plate.

'I GOT MY RIGHTS' —YEH, WRONGS TOO

"Listen, Mister, you can't do this t' me. I got rights just like any other citizen." The voice, strangely enough, considering the person it addressed, did not express a plea, but a demand.

"Sure y' got rights, buddie, but I ain't interested in them; I'm only thinking of your wrongs and this is one of 'em—an' leave that horse alone, he's particular who he associates with."

The errant youth hung his head, not in shame, but to mutter caustically in sotto voce for the benefit of the crowd gathered around, "What are you doing near him then, y' big tramp?"

"What's that?" bellowed the man on the horse.

"I said 'I'm not hurting him'," put in the would-be wisecracker hastily, "but you're wounding me deeply by this."

The man in the saddle bent his head and scribbled furiously in his solemn-looking book. "Maybe this'll teach ya a lesson, fella," he lectured. "Anyway, I'm getting tired wandering around these streets never earning my money. Your donation will help to pay some of the expenses of our department. Now c'mon, sign on the dotted line."

So Bob Neal, unfortunately one dollar poorer, but fortunately richer in understanding, vows that never again will he make a "U" turn in the middle of the block. . . . At least not while there's a cop in sight.

KNIGHTS RALLY TO FESTAL BOARD HERE

In conjunction with San Francisco Public Schools Week, the Knights of the Round Table, a San Francisco service club, held their regular business meeting at the invitation of President A. J. Cloud in the San Francisco Junior College dining room.

Luncheon was served by the members of the Hotel and Restaurant Management class, who were introduced to the guests by John Gifford, co-ordinator of hotel and restaurant division. Gifford explained to the guests the work of the division and its place in the junior college.

Present at the luncheon were: C. Harold Caulfield, president of the Board of Education; William Benedict, also of the Board of Education; James Leo Halley, chairman of Public Schools Week committee, and the secretary of the committee, Charles Cooper. Guests representing the San Francisco Junior College were J. Paul Mohr, registrar, and Helene Turner, N. Y. A. director.

HILL-BILLIES, CITY SLICKERS WELCOME AT VALLEMAR DANCE

Thin Dime Hay Ride Highlights Men's Club Jig Friday Night; Prizes, Costumes, Dizzy Reels Scheduled in Barny Back to Farm Movement

Promised by its organizers to be the most novel affair ever staged in the history of the college, the Men's Club Barn Dance and Hay Ride will be held next Friday night, May 14, at Vallemar Grove, near Rockaway Beach and will provide a wide variety of entertainment, ranging from a hog calling contest to a barbecue.

Admission to the event, at which costume prizes, dance prizes and refreshments will be given away free, will be by student body card only, according to Don Mix, president of the Men's Club. Those who are going on the Hay Ride must procure a ten cent ticket from any of the Men's Club officers or committee which includes Don Mills, Ed Frediani, John Dismeyer, Elmer Hubacker and Mix.

HILL BILLYS

Irving Amstrup and his Mountain Boys will supply the rhythm with members of the band offering a variety of songs and comedy numbers in the approved rural fashion.

The Hay Ride is to be one of the highlights of the evening and will start in front of the Galileo Gym at 8:00 o'clock. The trucks will provide an easy method of transportation for those who otherwise would be unable to attend.

Numerous prizes for costumes and novelty contests will be offered during the evening. A bid to the Soph Formal will be given to the couple proving to be most agile in the Virginia Reel, while the fellow sporting the loudest shirt will also be given a worthwhile prize. In order to test the ingenuity of the students, the Men's Club is offering a special prize to the one that brings the best animal to the affair. Among those who will vie for this prize are Art Nelson who has promised to have a herd of porkers on hand, while Bob Neal has threatened to bring his famous Ram.

OLD CLOTHES

"We want all who attend this dance to rig themselves up in the real rural fashion," Mix said. "Wear old jeans, flannel shirts, gingham dresses and straw hats. Any one who comes not dressed in the approved fashion will feel rather out of place because informality is the keynote of the evening."

A huge barbecue pit near the hall will provide ample facilities for a weiner roast. Everyone will be given a stick and allowed to "build his own" sandwiches. In keeping with the farm theme cider will be provided as the drink.

LOCATION

Vallemar is located about a quarter of a mile off the highway on the road to Rockaway Beach and is easily accessible by driving down the Skyline Boulevard to Rockaway Road and then proceeding along this road about five miles to signs pointing direct to Vallemar.

All preparations for this affair have been directed by Joe Amori, faculty sponsor for the Men's Club.

COMPLETE SELLOUT ASSURES FORUM OF LITERARY MAGAZINE

Having been assured of the financial success of their book by the heavy advance sale of tickets, the editors of the Forum Club Literary Magazine have announced that they have made final selection of material to be published. The entire 250 copies which will be printed have already been sold, according to Dorothy Mercer, college English instructor and faculty sponsor of the Forum Club.

Don Flash, editor in chief of the publication, has disclosed that the book will contain approximately 50 pages of the pick of student literature. The type of material to be found within the pages will be varied. There will be fiction, drama, semi-fiction, essays, satire, humor, articles on social questions, translations, and a few poems. The entire publication will number about 20,000 words.

The magazine cover will be designed by Consuela Collins and will be in the form of a wood cut in a unique shape.

Among the articles which will be featured in the magazine is a play by John Ward, feature writer for The Guardsman, and several clever short stories by Betty Deming. An article on the Navajo Indian by Jack Dyson is also considered among the better works of the edition. Charles O'Gara's essay is reputed to be of fine quality, according to the editors.

It is hoped that the book will be ready for distribution on about May 28, Flash said. The books will be placed in the booth on the mezzanine floor at the Powell Street building and will be given on the presentation of the ticket.

IF YOU ASK US, IT'S A LOT OF BULL!

Faculty adviser Joe Amori and president Don Mix (in hat) work up a little spirit for the Men's Club Barn Dance and Hay Ride to be held next Friday night. Could it be that the boys are trying to given us a bum steer?

Caulfield Acts As Toastmaster for USF Luncheon

With C. Harold Caulfield, president of the Board of Education, acting as toastmaster, a luncheon will be given at the University of San Francisco on Saturday, May 15, at 12:30 o'clock for San Francisco Junior College men who are competing for the scholarships offered by Rev. Harold E. Ring, president of the University.

Caulfield, a USF graduate, received his A.B. and LL.B. degrees at the University and in 1931 was given the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws. He has served as an instructor in the University Law School since 1925.

As formerly announced, there will be two scholarships offered, one for two years and one for one year, to the College of Liberal Arts of the University. Any man student, who is completing his third or fourth semester and who has maintained an average of B or better in university grade studies, is eligible to try for these scholarships.

The examination will be held from 9 until 12 and the luncheon will follow immediately. Contestants are requested to contact one of the following scholarship committee members before Saturday, John Selig, Francis Colligan, Lloyd Luckmann, John Gaddy, and Mary Jane Learnard.

Results of the competition will be announced by President Archibald J. Cloud at the annual commencement exercises on June 18.

Graduation Ceremony Plans Still Imminent

With the minute details of the graduation exercises still to be decided, the date of graduation has been set for Friday, June 18, and will be held at the War Memorial Opera House at eight o'clock, according to the present plans of the administration.

The graduating class is planning to have a Class Day on Friday, May 28. A class program has been arranged for that day, and the traditional Soph Formal will be held in the evening at the St. Francis Yacht Club. A meeting of the class and a preliminary rehearsal for graduation exercises will be held in the afternoon of that day. A dress rehearsal is being planned for Friday, June 18, at the Opera House.

Fitting and selection of graduation gowns was held last week, and will continue through tomorrow afternoon in Room 260 at Galileo. Those who have not procured them will not be allowed to participate in the exercises, Edwin C. Browne, assistant dean of men, advised.

Tomorrow is the last day on which sophomores may be measured for caps and gowns. Graduating students are urged to appear in the lobby of the Powell Street Extension Building between 10:00 and 1:00, and at Galileo in Room 260 from 2:15 to 4:30. The rental fee, to be paid at the time of measurement, $1.50.

Co-operation of the graduating students is requested to facilitate and hasten the measurements. To date, only 60 of the 200 graduating students have been measured.

HIGH SOPH MEET

A meeting of the High Sophomore class will be held this afternoon at 2:10 in room 205 at Galileo, according to an announcement by Tyler McHugh, High Sophomore president.

Hotel Div. Places 3

Three men students from the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division of the college, Trevett Wilson, Collin Oveland, and Ozzie Torricelli, have joined the forces of the Mannings Coffee Company. While working with the coffee company they are acquiring practical experience and training for hotel and restaurant management work.

Discussing the ever-present female question, "What shall I wear?" a fashion talk, sponsored by the Household Arts Association will be held tomorrow in the Extension building lecture hall, between 12 and 1 o'clock.

Janice Street, college consultant at O'Connor & Moffatt's, will speak on fashions for college, business, and social activities, and her discourse will be illustrated with living models. Miss Street has an unusual understanding of the college woman's budgeting problems, and in addition to answering the question of what to wear and when to wear it, she will demonstrate the best way of making the most out of a single outfit by the clever use of effective accessories!

PROGRAM ARRANGED

The program has been arranged by Claire Cuneo, HAA faculty sponsor and HAA president. The living models will be chosen from the following members of the organization: Lenore Anderson, Edith Alpers, Dorothy Bonacich, Louise Corica, Marjorie Delhi, Anita De Martini, Vera Griffin, Paula Hardeman, Beth Hillyard, Marion Howard, Lucille Jung, Myrtle Mendez, Lillian Moriwaki, Caroline Orginos, Olive Reed, Meadus Rygel, Mary Skattabol, Tomika Takashi, Faith Thomas, Alice Thompson, Cecile Thompson, and Jo Jordan. Seven students will be selected to model and the remainder of the members will act as hostesses at the affair.

ALL INVITED

All women students are invited to be the guests of the HAA to hear Miss Street's lecture and to see a few original costumes created by a leading American designer for exclusive use in San Francisco by the store Miss Street represents.

Leaving for the East, where she will participate in some enterprises connected with the physical education in which she is interested, Helen Davis, vice-president of the Associated Students, has completed her final examinations and obtained a leave of absence for the remainder of the semester.

Active in social affairs since the beginning of the junior college, Miss Davis has served as president of the Associated Women Students and president of the Women's Service Society. She has taken an active part in sports, and has had the honor of being one of the three charter members on the women's block letter society.

Miss Davis expressed her sincere appreciation of the support rendered her by the general student body during her term of office, and expressed her regrets at having to leave at a time so close to graduation.

"I would like very much to be here to graduate with the 'pioneer class' but existing circumstances make is impossible. I do wish to extend early congratulations, however, to all the graduates, and wish everyone else continued success during his college carreer."

Blumenthal, Mills Candidates For Presidency; Election 21st

With campaign enthusiasm beginning to reach a high peak, all prospective nominees for Associated Student offices are urged to have their petitions turned in at the office as soon as possible since next Friday, May 14, is the absolute deadline, according to Edwin C. Browne, assistant dean of men. All nominees whose petitions have been accepted will be presented at a nomination rally on Monday, May 17, in the lecture hall at Powell Street.

Election will be held on Friday, May 21, announced Deming Smith, chairman of the election committee.

MILLS, BLUMENTHAL, GARDNER

According to advance reports, three prominent college figures are seeking the office of president. Don Mills has definitely announced his candidacy for the presidential post. Mills is president of the low sophomores, vice president of the Associated Men Students, and a charter member of Iota Chi fraternity. He will be opposed by the college's number one orator, Gene Blumenthal.

Blumenthal has been outstanding in debating circles during his attendance at the college, but has as yet to hold a prominent political post. He was chosen as the student speaker at the recent college ground breaking ceremonies.

CAN'T DECIDE

Bud Gardner, assistant yell leader and officer in the Music Club, has also been suggested as a candidate for the presidency but he is undecided whether to compete for this position or that of head yell leader.

There is always the strong possibility of a dark horse appearing to take the spotlight away from the present leaders. Among those who are being mentioned in this regard are Ed Frediani, popular Men's Club officer and former student leader at Polytechnic High School, and Bob Fex, Newman Club official and baseball star.

At this writing no names have actually appeared for signatures for the vice presidency, but it is expected that the Women's Service Society will sponsor a candidate as it has in all past elections. Roslyn Kissel is being supported for this office by several large factions but it is not known at this time whether they have taken any official action.

DEARTH OF CANDIDATES

The post of secretary, which has been combined into a single office since the last elections, is being sought by Pat Madden, Service Society member and AWS officer, according to unverified reports. No other names have been mentioned for this position.

SCIENCE DEPARTMENT FEATURES SEVERAL TRIPS AFIELD

Tossing aside school books in favor of actual observation, science classes of the junior college have several field trips scheduled during May. Geology Instructor George L. Green has planned field trips for his geology 1A, geology 1B, and geology 2 classes, which include approximately 125 students. The geology 1A class will be divided into two sections and will travel to Half Moon Bay via the Spring Valley Lakes, on May 8 and 9. Students in geology 2 will take virtually the same trip on May 23. The geology 1B class will visit San Joaquin Valley on May 29. The trips will be made by bus and the students will share the expenses. On April 21 the geology class in ground water inspected the Calaveras dam.

In regard to these excursions, Green said: "Their purpose is to give students an opportunity to observe in the field what they read about in books, and to gain a clearer understanding of the formation of features of the earth which geology treats."

Student astronomers and their friends will see stars when they join the 70-mile peregrination of the junior college Astronomy Club to Lick Observatory, atop Mt. Hamilton, on May 15. The trip will be made in automobiles, with students sharing the expenses. The party will meet in front of the main branch of the public library, McAllister and Larkin streets, at 3:30 P. M., and will arrive in time to view the exceptional sunset as seen from the summit. After dark, celestial bodies will be scanned through the great 36-inch refracting telescope and a 12-inch instrument.

If the weather on Mt Hamilton is adverse on the day selected, the trip will be postponed.

Giving a worldly touch to the expedition to view the stars, Louis Berman, instructor of astronomy and faculty member in charge declares, "All persons making the trip should be supplied with their own supper, as there are no eating facilities on the mountain, and everyone should dress warmly."

Those who wis hto make the trip should fill out the questionnaire below and give it to Dr. Berman.

Statewide Junior College Day Set for May 14 At San Francisco Museum

Presenting a group of 15 pictures by San Francisco Junior College art students, the college will take an active part in the Northern California Junior College Association art exhibit, which opened Sunday, May 9, for a two weeks' showing at the San Francisco Museum of Art.

ART DAY

With Friday, May 14, set aside as Junior College Art Day, students from San Mateo, Stockton, Salinas, Sacramento, Marin, and other surrounding cities, will come to San Francisco to attend a special program. Claudia Davis, curator of the museum, will lecture at 2 o'clock on "Art—Vocation and Avocation" and a tour of the major displays now being shown at the museum will be conducted by Charles Lindstrom at 3 o'clock. Several instructors of the college are planning to excuse students from classes on this day so that they may attend.

Richard Allman, art instructor of this college said, "At this time I would like to express my appreciation to Dr. Grace L. Morley, director of the San Francisco Museum of Art, for her help in obtaining the museum lecture gallery for the exhibit. Dr. Morley has shown great interest in work being done at public educational institutions and her help was one of the factors that made the exhibit a reality."

According to Allman and Evans Ecke, also of the art department, the response to the invitations to participate in the exhibit has been so enthusiastic that it may be necessary to change the groups, since only 45 pieces can be shown at a time, and 70 or 75 may be sent in.

SELECTIONS MADE

The following pictures were selected for the San Francisco portion of the exhibit: Still Life, Back Yards and two ten-minute sketches by Louis Martucci, Still Life In Wash, Steel Mill, and Cement Plant by Ward Cox, Grasshoppers by la Celeber, Vegetable Garden and Flamingoes by Robert Bettencourt, Jungle Fowl by Herbert Duncan, Cabbage Patch by Consuela Collins, Two Ducks by Marian Peterson, Landscape by Jack Miles and Golden Gate Bridge Approach by Doris Michels.

In conjunction with the junior college exhibits, there will be three one-man shows of watercolors and oils by Earle Loran, Abel Warchawsky and John Gutmann, and Paintings by Karl Hofer. There will also be an Exhibit of Techniques, especially arranged for the benefit of the attending students.

AWS Teas Complete Aim To Meet School Grads

Marking the last in a series of three teas honoring San Francisco high schools, representatives of Commerce and Girls High Schools were entertained at the John Howell Art Gallery, 464 Post Street, yesterday. The teas, which were to acquaint high school seniors with the junior college, were sponsored by the Associated Women Students.

Those attending the tea from Girls High were: Joy Balcom, Margaret Ness, Estelle Cohen, Dorothy Smith, and Tillie Heselberg, vice-principal. Representatives from Commerce were: Edward Russell, Irene Tensfeldt, Eleanor Wildhagen, Willard Marcum, and Vice-Principal Ida Garbarino.

Faculty members from the junior college who attended the teas were: Yvonne Stoupe, Ruth H. Jensen, Mary Jane Learnard, Thomas A. Gabbert, and Henry D. Soule.

Dr. Eugenie A. Leonard, vice-president and dean of women, said, "I think the teas were valuable in two ways: first, they served to acquaint the students attending the teas with the junior college and its activities, and second, it informed the high school faculty members concerning the courses offered here."

High schools who were honored at the teas were: Lowell, Galileo, Miss Burke's, Polytechnic, Mission, Balboa, Commerce, and Girls. Women students of the college who had graduated from the schools entertained were hostesses of the teas.

Forum Ponders Again

Materialism vs. Idealism is the topic which holds the spotlight at the next meeting of the Forum Club, Friday, May 14, at the home of Charles O'Gara, 1142 Filbert Street. Sybil Hurning will speak on idealism, while the speaker on materialism has not yet been named.

COMPROMISE BY ADMINISTRATION ASSURES ANNUAL

Although an original agreement between administration representatives and the sophomore class and Executive Council included certain stipulations that were not met by student groups, the administration, yielding on all but one point, decided against holding these groups to the stipulations, and sanctioned publication. The agreement, preserved in a letter dated March 17, and written by Edwin C. Browne, assistant dean of men, to The Guardsman staff requesting its cooperation, was as follows:

"Please be advised that the administration has sanctioned the printing of an annual of 32 pages, to be issued at the close of the semester.

RUMOR CAUSES EXTENSION

"Seven hundred fifty copies will be printed. Of this number, seven hundred will be for sale at fifty cents each. ALL COPIES MUST BE SOLD AND SOPHOMORE PICTURES TAKEN BY APRIL 30. All funds must be handled by Mr. Nichol's office as per our arrangement at a recent committee meeting."

Because at the deadline time only 99 of the 700 copies had been sold, and because a rumor had circulated effectively that copies would be sold after April 30, the deadline was extended one week, to allow sale of 300 copies which had been originally set as the number required to ensure publication. At the time of the second deadline, last Friday at 5 o'clock, $117.50 was in the comptroller's office, indicating sale of 235 annual tickets, rather than the 300 previously stipulated.

COUNCIL BOOSTS PRICE

With the generous allotment offered by The Guardsman staff, this sum barely finances the cost of the annual, and the administration deemed it a worthy enough experiment to continue publication plans in spite of the deficiency in the fund agreed upon.

At the same time, the administration allowed continued sale of the annual, but at a boosted price of 75 cents, effective last Monday, as urgently requested by the Executive Council at its last meeting.

Confident of success in his sales campaign, Tyler McHugh, sophomore class president, and director of annual ticket sales, based his continued optimism on the expression of demand for an annual as precariously indicated earlier in the semester by a petition said to have been backed by 500 student signers.

RAWSON EDITOR

With The Guardsman staff ready to continue its publication plans, necessarily postponed until financial adequacy was guaranteed, the annual will be ready for publication by the end of May. It will represent the first two years of the junior college, and specifically outline the career of the graduating class, which includes both January and June graduates. William Rawson, January graduate, and former editor of The Guardsman, will be editor-in-chief of the college's first journal, and will be assisted by The Guardsman staff, with sales still conducted by McHugh.

Photographer Sam Galstaun has completed sophomore and organization pictures, and will snap athletic groups this week. No pictures will be taken after May 14.

ONE POINT STANDS

Tickets may be secured now at 75 cents, from McHugh or the Comptroller's office, until the remaining 465 copies are gone. Although student optimism, as voiced by the Executive Council that the college as a whole desires an annual, has resulted in Administration concession to setting aside the original agreement on most points, one stipulation still remains. No more than 750 copies will be printed, and only 700 of these will be for sale.

CREWS WILL ROW TO MUSIC SATURDAY P.M.

Sponsored by the crew of this college, the annual dance of the California Collegiate Oarsmen's Association will be held next Saturday, May 15, at the Residence Club, 950 Powell Street, at nine o'clock. Bids for the dance may be purchased from Tyler McHugh, Bill Schoenfeld or Merv Weiner.

FOLLY OF RUMOR

Defined by Webster as "a story current without any known authority for its truth," a rumor might well be compared with the snowball which increases in size as it rolls down a hill. No one knows just how it starts, but once started, it becomes practically impossible to stop.

The best breeding place for a rumor is a college. Here, always, there exists that prolonged, indistinct murmur, which indicates that the old grapevine system is at work, spreading far and wide the "maybe's" and "might-have-beens" that cause most of the mix-ups and misunderstandings of college life.

Students should take the things they hear around college with a large grain of salt. If you are doubtful about something, do not depend upon the information given you by the fellow next to you in English who heard it from the girl in front of him in Spanish. Go directly to those in charge, and find out the authenticity of the rumor so that you may squelch it immediately, and not allow it to spread until it has done the damage that is not always easily undone.

If you had a final scheduled for a certain date and heard, indirectly, that it had been called off, you would not think of chancing failure by not reporting at the appointed time. Let this principle apply to all phases of college life and don't believe everything you hear!

THE UNKNOWN VOLUME

The average student's definition of a dictionary, if one can judge by the examination papers received by instructors and by the copy handed in by Guardsman reporters, goes something like this:

"A dictionary is a large, clumsy looking book that can usually be found resting upon a tall stand in the corner of a schoolroom. They are always found in libraries, too, I think, and some of us have them at home. What's in them? I don't know, I never looked!"

Oddly enough, this little definition is not as far-fetched as it may sound. Despite Mr. Webster's statement that a dictionary is "a book containing the words of a language, usually arranged alphabetically with explanations of their meanings," and despite a full page in the front of his largest dictionary explaining that within may be found "the pith and essence of an authoritative reference library," students have managed to get through elementary and high schools without so much as peeking at the first page of this valuable volume.

When one comes right down to facts, there is really very little that cannot be found in a dictionary. Glancing over the first page of Webster's New International, we find that it contains the following:

First: The general vocabulary of over 408,000 defined words and phrases with thumb index tabs to each letter of the alphabet from A to Z. Here are given the spelling, part of speech, pronunciation, derivation or etymology, definition, and synonyms of each word in our language, together with other dictionary and encyclopaedic information. The general vocabulary also includes Scripture names, names in mythology, names of fictitious persons and places, etc., foreign phrases and proverbs, abbreviations, simplified spellings, etc. New words are found just preceding the general vocabulary.

Second: The gazeteer of the world, which can easily be turned to by means of the thumb index marked "Gaz." This is a geographical dictionary of the world, giving the spelling, pronunciation, and most-sought-for information regarding nearly 32,000 places.

Third: The biographical dictionary, which contains the spelling, pronunciation, and the most-sought-for information regarding 12,000 eminent persons, both living and dead.

Fourth: The reference history of the world, with its topical index containing 35,000 historical references. Under this is found a section which contains history since the World War.

As if this weren't enough, there are pages of colored illustrations of flags, coins, seals, vessels, plants, and other things which should surely interest everyone, even those who can't read and just like to look at the pictures.

Everyone should look at a dictionary some time. It is really an amazing and extremely interesting experience.

Mental Mutterings

By FEM

It isn't very often that we forsake the frivolities of life in putting forth this column, but every other writer on this page has had his or her turn at a bit of of serious writing and we would like to let everyone know that we, too, often sit down and have ourselves a think.

A few weeks ago Don Mix, in his Spotlight column, pointed out the problems facing the college student upon graduation, the fear of the future existing in most student minds, and the unstable conditions surrounding all his hopes of future security.

Since reading this, we've managed to run across two articles in a recent issue of the Saturday Evening Post, entitled, "I Graduated Last June" and "Move Over Please." The first article was written by a young college graduate who, according to the accompanying editor's note, "tried to sell his education in the business market," and gives his "reaction to that education as a result of his experiences."

In "Move Over Please," J. P. McEvoy gives the young man an answer, pointing out that the college student is not the only one who doesn't know where he is going and what he is going to do when he gets there. He explains how parents, teachers, college presidents and leaders of industry share with the student the puzzled uncertainty surrounding the solution to the problem of the unemployed college graduate.

Both of these articles make interesting reading and form an excellent basis for a perfectly grand argument. As Tro Harper points out in his Bull Session column in the Stanford Daily, every freshman should read the articles but probably won't, and every senior has probably read them and is scared to death.

We've read them, and while they did make us think for awhile and blasted a few of our most cherished hopes, we're not "scared" and we still believe in that "why - worry - everything - will - work - out - in - the - end" theory that has been our pet philosophy for such a long, long time. Perhaps we're all wrong, but that's the way we feel about it. (H'm, can it be that Mister Mix had the right idea about females who refuse to worry about the future because it is "not solely dependent upon their earning capacity"? Or could it be that we, as Exhibit A, are judging others by ourself? Heaven forbid!)

A word of sincere congratulation goes to Helen Davis for the grand way in which she has carried out her duties as vice-president of the Associated Students. Full details regarding her departure for the East may be found elsewhere, but we would like to take this opportunity to bid a purely personal goodbye to a swell girl whom it has been a real pleasure to know.

Presidential Ink Splashes

By James Neal

Next Friday night a new and different kind of intertainment is promised by the mens club. The clan will gather, everyone is invited. Be in front of the Galileo Gym by eight o'clock. Trucks filled with hay will be provided and the fun will begin. The ride will end up at the Vallemar near Stanford. From then on will be program and dance. All this intertainment is at your command for the mere sum of one dime. Are you going?

On Saturday nite the fifteenth the crew will hold their crew dance at the Residence Club 950 Powell Street. Bids will be sold by crew men for the sum of one dollar.

Because of the unaminous request of student council the Powers that be instead of holding to their agreement with the students and puting a stop to ticket selling for the annual by last Friday as promised, have agreed that tickets could still be sold but at the increased price of seventy-five cents. Better get one while they last.

In ending up my column I want to say how much we in school regret to see a very willing and hard worker in student affairs leave us. Helen Davis has very capably handled her position of Vice President of the Associated Students.

PAY DIRT

By Jack Campbell

If you should suddenly emerge from a mental mist to find that you have been in said mental mist, and further discover that you have "knocked off" a few of your acquaintances, or even less fortunate individuals, while thrashing about in that fog, then, brother (and the word is used in its more extensive sense), you have been a victim of Dementia Praecox. (Don't be too much impressed by that title, for the chap responsible for its concoction is probably at this very moment waving his arms—if they aren't tightly strapped to his sides [to improve the figure, y'know]—to lash his troops on to Waterloo.)

In reasonable explanation of Dementia Praecox (called D.P. by those in the know) let it be said that the affliction manifests itself in the performing of murder and other less exacting forms of mayhem (usually by hacking with a knife) without a motive by the "afflictee." It differs from other forms of unmotivated killing, such as is practiced by certain states in punishment of capital crimes, in that the victims are not selected for execution.

Science, of course, comes forth in her usual brilliant style with the description of this "murder without a motive" affliction as "a subconscious reaction to ever-increasing phobia," which seems motive enough to commit anything. Science, going further, states that the number of victims of Dementia Praecox is steadily increasing, and vouch that, at the present rate, within a few decades half of the people will be running around with D.P., while the other half, we presume, will conveniently crane its craniums to facilitate the decapitating process. (In which case, how tell the sane from the crazy?)

Further to distinguish just ordinary murder from D.P. execution: Suppose an offensive scoundrel steals your girl friend, tramples on her heart, and, adding injury to affront, treads heavily on your belt-buckle (with you wrapped in it). Quite naturally you would accost him with gleaming sabre and dispatch him, after having first shouted, "Die, foul fiend!" But, my friend, that would be murder, and you would sway for it.

However, should you approach a stranger who has not even so much as bitten his thumb at you, ask him for a match and, as he obligingly complies, nonchalantly whack his head off with a slyly drawn cleaver, that would be Dementia Praecox. You would be placed in a comfortably cushioned apartment, fed well for the rest of your life, and be amused by numerous visits from pop-eyed old men who would dangle things at you and write in funny little books. (And they would call you crazy!)

Are you a brave man or a coward? The time is not far off, the experts are agreed, when you will be forced to swing to one extreme or the other. For war is in the offing.

Will you be courageous, or will you be a miserable craven—and go to war?

A man does not go to war because he is brave; he goes because he is afraid. He is in more terror at the awful thought of remaining at home to be bombarded with the "white feather" by some scathing-mouthed female, than at the comparatively mild alternative of treading lightly under the delicate sprinkle of dainty shrapnel. This in the case of a reasoning man.

There is another class of the species, however, which is duped into considering as truth the rantings of falsely patriotic "pop-offs." These dupes, though, incite in us no feeling of censorship, but rather one of pity. For they are mentally unbalanced.

Decide for yourself, now, and pray to God that your true colors will not be a thin veneer of false red, white and blue on a true "yellow" background, but white—not the white of the "white feather," but of honesty, and true fearlessness.

Would you rather be a martyr to the cause of peace or a murderer in the interest of war?

Have you noticed the recent tendency of the men students to break out with remarks ranging from the mildly facetious to downright derogatory? More than likely these remarks were directed at the present fad of draping a piece of cloth around one's head in halo effect, the co-eds who essay to keep up with the current mode being greeted with "Call that a hat?", "That thing looks like a necktie!", or even "Gee, it looks terrible!", than which there is nothing more nor less than the traditional masculine reaction to a new style, however becoming. Just ask Mother what the boy friend said when she changed her bustle for a hobble skirt.

Masculine sneers to the contrary, however, we have never seen anything to equal the flattering, face-framing effect of one of these draped turbans. A little private scouting seems in order, therefore, and so we pass on a few ways in which you can take advantage of the fad while it lasts.

First of all, if you are willing to spend a dollar or a little less, you can commandeer the prettiest fashion of all for your own. We mean two chiffon handkerchiefs, in your two most becoming colors, folded flat and linked together. The girl at the handkerchief counter where you buy yours will show you how to do this. Wind the filmy stuff around your head and step out to Powell Street of a Monday morning feeling like a cross between Dietrich and Mrs. Simpson. Funny, isn't it, what two handkerchiefs can do!

Just as devastating a style is the newer one of buying two rectangles, also in your most flattering colors, of pleated rayon crepe, then twisting them together until they form a thick roll, and winding around the head. These are sold in one of the large department stores for about 60 cents for the two pieces.

Simpler even than these, look up all the odd triangle scarfs you may have. Fold each one into a flat strip about two inches wide, tie the ends in a knot at the neck, and let the excess cloth float in the breeze. You can vary this by tying a loose, thick knot in the very center to give a lift to the band if it looks too flat.

Looks as if the men will have to get used to another innovation!

Spotlight!

Along about this time of the year we always set ourselves in a receptive frame of mind to listen to the loud gusts of wind that are produced by those groups which have a candidate for some student body office. In various years, according to the temperament of the candidates, the intensity of these windstorms may be akin to a cyclone, while in some cases we can run all the way down the list to the mild southern breezes. But the origin of the atmospheric disturbance seldom varies. The wind is almost inevitably produced as the office seekers sing their little piece about "strong student government." The subtitle of this over-used little number is "I promise to defy the faculty."

We saw this little farce produced annually for three years in high school and again last fall we saw it staged, with certain collegiate variations, in this college. We suppose the reason for the overworking of this rather trite idea is because of a lack of originality, which is traditional among politicians. For the sake of variety, however, it is too bad that the lads can't devise some other method to impress the voters of their moral strength, managerial genius, and sense of responsibility than by promising to say "No" to any and all suggestions advanced by faculty leaders.

This portion of the campaign is never stated in speeches or in interviews but is always the most potent argument in bull sessions. If the candidate will just gurgle, "I'm no stooge for the faculty," everyone will look very much impressed and feel that he is in the presence of a great student liberator.

We suppose it is rather in tune with the times if we give a few personal qualifications that we think should be possessed by a good student body president. We will assume that all candidates are reasonably intelligent and have a firm sense of responsibility. Further than that we think the chief requisite is a personality which is capable of "getting along" with the majority of the students. He must be able to talk sensibly with athlete and scholar alike and to number friends in all important student cliques. It was this inability to understand all the elements of the college scene that caused some of the past administrations to be branded as weak. We believe that only one of the present candidates possesses this needed political amiability. What do you think?

By John Ward

The art world of today is a complex headache. And this is no joke, either. Surrealism is the cult of the moment. Where it leads, what it has to offer, why it exists? —these and a hundred other questions are of paramount interest and importance, yet no one seems to know the answers nor has anyone produced a good theory thus far. It would not, or should not be necessary that every art-work have a guide book, but there is nothing else with which to face surrealism.

There are those who disclaim it already. There are others who laugh, others who call curses down on commercial sensations. And there are those who take the safe and sane view of waiting and watching, and forming ideas later. It is obvious that there should be no lawmaking yet. Certainly, everyone has a right to judge for himself, to choose and to cast aside. But criticize?—not yet. One does not say a baby will be ugly because his small face is wizened at birth.

The moneychangers have arrived on the steps of the surrealism temple. And business is extraordinarily good, if reports are true. But they are part and parcel of life. If one will treat them with the disregard which they deserve, the way will be much clearer. For it must appear that some of the works being done by surrealism's high-priests are interesting, done with great craftsmanship, and often beautifully creative, if not truly inspired.

Such men as Max Ernst, Salvador Dali and Giorgio de Chirico could not be such traitors to the age-old arts that they would swing art by the tail and shout bloody-murder for nothing but publicity and money. One of the prerequisites of all artists is an artistic conscience; another, sincerity. Artists aren't widely known for lacking such strains. Rather, it would seem that in seeking new means of expression they had gone too far ahead and found mediums too new. It now remains for the Cezanne of the hour to appear.

It remains for some genius to enter and put the pieces together. To take and to cast aside. To discriminate. Out of a seeming chaos much material and many ideas may be born. Most great art movements, if not all, have had their John the Baptists shouting in the woods and byways.

The wise man of today is he who lets time tell, as it will and always has. He does not hurry things. He will sit, not in critical judgment, but in silent appraisal. A new sound, a new language, a new idea must be approached in the same spirit in which they took life. Acclamation is one of the prime functions of art, both from the creative and the appreciable sides.

An exhibition of surrealism and Dada art will be on view at the San Francisco Museum of Art during the month of August. This is the same show that caused mild panic in New York, and should be as entertaining as it will be intellectual.

By LAMBERT MEYER

Those hard-hitting country gentlemen from Santa Rosa travel down to San Francisco this Saturday afternoon to do battle with the Ram baseball team. In the last meeting of the two nines on the Santa Rosa diamond the Cubs blasted San Francisco's hopes of a championship baseball aggregation by swiping a neat doubleheader from Lee Eisan's men. Since that sorrowful afternoon both squads have been defeated more than once and now must win every future engagement in order to finish the ball season near the top of the Northern California Junior College Conference ladder. The team from the northern village has a better chance to finish ahead of the Rams, but a double drubbing by the red and white would set them back too far in the league standings to offer any strenuous argument in later competition. Both earlier games were quite close and both were hard ones to lose for the Rams. The fellows have stated that it will be a different story this Saturday when the two clubs clash on the Funston turf, and we have a feeling that there is plenty to what they have to say. The initial contest starts at 12:15 o'clock.

Coach Russ Sweet's track outfit had quite a bit of trouble last Monday afternoon when it engaged in a meet with the powerful Sacramento Junior College cinder squad at Sacramento. We've forgotten the exact scoring of the meet (maybe we were bribed not to tell, or even threatened) but have a faint recollection that the capital city tracksters won the dual meet by a few points. Yes, just a few. Anyhow, who wants to read about a losing team? If any of you ardent track fans really want to know the score we refer you to Track Coach Russ Sweet. It's safer to drop the matter entirely, as the season is over and all will be forgotten in a couple of weeks . . . we hope.

Recently, a flip of a coin won a trophy for one junior college and lost it for another. In one of the closest track meets held among colleges in many seasons, Santa Rosa and Marin tied for first place. Each emerged with 43½ points from a Class "B" meet in which five junior colleges participated. The two victors tossed a coin to see which would carry home the award, and the Santa Rosa outfit was the lucky team. Salinas Junior College missed a triple tie by one-half a point, with 43 markers. That track squad from the lettuce country must be all right, to amass so many points in a five-college track and field meet.

Yes, sir, we were right. The opening of trout season found plenty of eager fishermen but no fish. Richard Cory and Dick Simpers, junior college anglers, cast from five in the morning till late in the afternoon at Purisima Creek and brought home a mess of finny friends that looked more like baby guppies. To see some of them you needed a high-powered microscope. (Game wardens, attention.) Bill Cohen, another student fly caster, journeyed all the way to Angels Camp only to come back with the tallest fish story heard in these parts in many years. Bill contends that he caught a brilliant mess of rainbow, and as he was staying over Saturday evening, he decided to leave the catch in one of the country store's refrigerators. It happened that on Sunday the store was closed, and William was forced to return home minus his limit of trout. It takes nerve to tell a tale like that without batting an eye.

Up to this time it looks as if the basketball team will be treated to a dinner by the base-running lads. The agreement between the two teams was that if the baseballers failed to finish in third position or better in the final conference ratings, they would stand the bill for the dinner for the basketball team, or vice versa. Right now the ball-hawks are sighltly lower than third position on the league ladder, and the basketball men are beginning to lick their chops. Tracy Slattery, basketball man, is none too optimistic, and has offered to settle for a beer before the baseball season draws to a close.

The track season is at an end for San Francisco Junior College, and although it has been a rocky period for the cindermen, the squad really took on the most powerful outfits in and out of the conference. They were dumped by two teams in the league: San Mateo and Sacramento. A meet with the State group was very close, but the Gaters were just a trifle too strong for the Rams, who were outrun by the Stanford and California freshman track squads, also. The locals could have had a successful season if they had chosen to clash with such weak teams as Marin, Menlo, Salinas, or any of the smaller colleges. The team deserves a hand for competing against the toughest track and field groups in northern California.

Frank "Buck" Holmes, brother of the Ram baseballer, did a bit of big game hunting recently in the back yard of Don Mix, Associated Men's Student prexy. It seems that Holmes spotted a plump wildcat roaming around in the flower beds of the Mix family, and promptly got out his shiny rifle and shot the ferocious cat smack between the eyes. Rumor has it that a neighbor of Mix has lost her pet tabby. Both junior college men live in the wilds of San Bruno or somewhere in that vicinity.

The tennis team is back again in first place due to the defeat of San Mateo by the Modesto racketmen. The squad won the Marin matches by default, but still have Sacramento to worry about before they can become league champs. They must defeat the Solons' 6 matches to 0, in order to win the championship, in the event that San Mateo remains undefeated. All of the fellows are confident, however, and should emerge victorious at the end of the season.

The first game of the Ram-San Mateo doubleheader, played last Wednesday afternoon at San Mateo, set a new college record for short time for nine innings of baseball. The entire contest took only one hour and 20 minutes, with the San Francisco team eking out a 2 to 1 victory. The second game was taken by the Peninsula outfit, 10-7, which makes it three wins for the Rams and one for the Bulldogs in the season's baseball clashes.

If the soccer team keeps going next semester as well as it is doing in spring practice, the outlook will be bright for another championship trophy. Practice is held daily in earnest at Funston, and such stars as Mike Klebenoff, Ed Frediani, Bob Anderson and Vincent Zuardo should form a strong foundation. Prospective kickers include Irving Armstrup, Syl Friedman and John Herrman. Last year the squad had 12 wins and one defeat. Anyone interested in going out for the team should contact Coach Tom Wilson immediately.

The track team has decided that it will not have a representation at the annual West Coast Relays, to be held at Fresno on May 15. In the last 10 years there have been 11 world records shattered in this colorful track and field meet.

Our baseball men were a trifle peeved, recently, when one of the daily newspapers announced that San Francisco State College defeated San Mateo Junior College, 2 to 1, in a baseball game. It was the Ram squad that had turned the trick. Imagine our fine group of baseballers getting themselves mixed up with the braggarts from Buchanan Street! Another game between the two colleges at Funston would be worth viewing because, in the last encounter, Lee Eisan's men moaned that the rotten turf on Roberts Field cost them the old ball game. It's too bad that the alley-gators won't give us another crack at their ball club.

Track Team Ends Season With Six Points In Finals

By LAMBERT MEYER

Sacramento Junior College's powerful track and field team successfully defended its 1936 championship title last Saturday afternoon when it walked of with the honors at the annual Northern Junior College track championships that were held at the small but fast Marin oval.

The Sacramento team accumulated for itself a grand total of 60 points to beat out the strong San Mateo Junior College squad with 49 points. Modesto was third with 26, followed by Menlo, 7; San Francisco, 6; Santa Rosa, 6; Marin, 0, and Salinas, 0.

It was purely a meet between the Sacramento and San Mateo outfits, with Marin being the perfect hosts and failing to take a point. The Peninsula team started off the festivities with a mint of first places, but were caught in the final stages of the meet, as the mighty Solons closed the gap with scads of second and third place positions. The Bulldogs annexed six winning places to three for the capital city men, but still were outpointed in the final analysis.

NEW RECORDS

Two new national junior college marks were shattered when Cecil Cole of San Mateo ran the 880 in 1:55.5 and Bill Wohle of the same institution tossed the shot 49 feet, 10½ inches. Wohle made his record on his first put and was never threatened.

Ted Ellison of San Mateo tied the Northern California conference mark of 0:9.7 in the 100, and tied with teammate Cecil Cole as a double winner of the day.

Ernie Loustalot, Ram high jumper, brought in the first points for San Francisco when he took third in that event. Ernie cleared 5 feet 9 inches but was unable to go any higher.

Walt Boitano, local shot put artist, upset all dope sheets as he placed fourth in the 100 yard dash. Walt got off to a very slow start and was in sixth place at the 75 yard post. Closing a tremendous gap the Ram sprinter edged into the finish in fourth position.

MACGRUER FAST

Jim MacGruer, San Francisco hurdler, collected two markers for his team when he placed third in the high barrier event. MacGruer put on the best exhibition of hurdling of the afternoon when he closed much valuable ground to win his place. At the half way mark the Ram timber-topper was in fifth position and with 10 yards to go moved himself into the third place spot. Ty Barre, teammate of MacGruer in the same event, failed to get a place.

The Rams collected their sixth and final digit when the relay team composed of George Compas, Bob Youngdale, George Cassin and Don Bryant placed fourth in the final event on the program.

Ram trackmen, Captain Jim Fahn in the pole vault and George Bedrosian in the weights, failed to come up to their best efforts:

Joe Garcia, San Francisco sprint ace and a cinch point collector, failed to run because of torn ligaments in his back. Harold Mitchell, 880 star was declared ineligible as was Walt Loving, weightman.

Coach Sweet's Rams have no kick coming today. They gave the old college try but were beaten under simply by too powerful competition.

TENNIS TEAM WINS CONFERENCE CROWN AS SACTO. FORFEITS

Champions! That's the title the Ram tennis team has earned for itself. Forfeiture by Sacramento of the match scheduled for last Saturday literally dumped the championship into the laps of the Powell street netsters, giving them the title by the narrow margin of one match over San Mateo. The Bulldogs blew their chances on Saturday by halving a contest with Modesto, which team the Rams had downed the previous week.

Those stalwarts composing the team are Bill Lazzeri, Kay Lyman, Alvin Altfield, Bill Cardinal, Harold Mitchell and the star and first man, consistent Chandler Ennes. They will compete next Friday and Saturday in the individual championships, to be held on the courts of Stanford University for the purpose of determining the outstanding player of the league.

The championship climaxed a season marred only by one defeat, which was suffered at the hands of San Mateo in mid-season. Armstrong, Modesto, Marin, and Menlo all fell before the title-bound Rams. Sacramento, a team low in the rankings, apparently considered its cause hopeless and forfeited by failing to make the trip, automatically giving the match to the Rams, 6-0.

The individual championships loom as a toss-up, since all of the players have been beating each other with alarming inconsistency. Ennes and Ellis of San Mateo shape up as the ones to beat, but there will be a number of "dark horses" in the running who are capable of upsetting the dope. This event will conclude what has been, for San Francisco, a most successful season.

JIMMY FAHN ELECTED TRACK TEAM CAPTAIN

Jim Fahn, San Francisco Junior College pole vaulter, is today captain of the 1937 Ram track and field team as a result of an election held last Saturday morning prior to the running of the annual Northern California Junior College track and field championships at Kentfield. Fahn has been outstanding in San Francisco Junior College activities for the past two years and was unanimously elected by the track squad as its 1937 season captain.

CORONATION RECEPTION HERE

Broadcast of coronation ceremonies crowning the King of England will be received at the Extension building this morning, and run through a public address system so that all students may hear, Paul M. Pitman, in charge of morning classes, announced late yesterday. This arrangement is being made through the courtesy of Radio Corporation of America, and the University of California Extension Division, Pitman said.

Gasps and incredulous stares met the announcement that Junerose Bellew had completed three perfect rounds in archery at thirty yards.

Another Double Loss Suffered By Struggling Baseballers Sat.

Modesto Nine Pushes Ram Team Closer to Cellar By Winning Double Header by 8-6, 10-4 Counts In Contest Held On Valley City's Ball Diamond

San Francisco's varsity baseball team journeyed to Modesto last week-end with light hearts and high hopes of bettering its standing in the Conference race for the pennant. Although the team had defeated Modesto twice earlier in the season, the stout-hearted lads were doomed to take two losses smack-nab on the chin, by the scores of 8 to 6, and 10 to 4.

The Rams played in and out ball throughout the doubleheader, going along wonderfully for a few innings and then suddenly and without a word of warning, blowing sky high.

In the first embroglio, with the score tied at nil to nil, the Modesto opportunists chose the third inning to start their scoring activities. This they did with much success, accumulating some four markers, to take a definite lead in the ball game. However, not all four runs were of the earned run variety. Two errors, besides three safe blows, contributed to the total four digits tallied.

A few frames later, the fifth, the Red and White horse-hide flingers unleashed their heavy artillery, which had been silenced by the Modesto hurler, to add two tallies to the blue side of their ledger. Hits by Hjort, Scafani and Wilgus were responsible for the runs scored.

No sooner had this happened than the Modesto batters found the range again and chalked up two more scores to put the running score up to 6 to 2. But the Rams came back to within two runs of the home towners, 6 to 4. Again the Pirates of Modesto became rebellious and tallied twice more to make the scoreboard read, 8 to 4.

The eighth canto, from its inception, gave promise of being a very productive inning for the boys from the City by the Golden Gate, but once more bad breaks prevented the Rams from reaping more than two counters from the harvest crop on the bases.

To top off the scoring for this game, the Modestoans scored two more runners to make the final score 8 to 6, and send the Red Raiders, who forgot to raid, deeper into the doldrums. Yet a few individuals improved their batting averages and played good ball. Wilgus, besides pitching fairly good ball, banged out two hits, as did Hjort. Judy, the Modesto pitcher, held the Rams to a measly six bingles in this first game.

After a short rest in between games, the teams were at it again. In the very first inning the Rams started going to town and looked like sure winners by hanging three runs up on the scoreboard without wasting any time. But, as in a few previous games, the Rams blew the lead before much time had elapsed.

Modesto soon overtook the fast stepping Rams and captured the lead five to three and later stretched the margin to 7 to 3.

Nevertheless, the Pirates were not through as yet, for they commenced shelling Paul Hjort, San Francisco twirler, and at the conclusion of the barrage and after the dust on the diamond had subsided, the home club had safely guided three more runners across the home plate. Thus the final units of the ten to four score were annexed to the Modesto total, and another day and another baseball series slithered by into the past.

Paul Hjort hurled good ball, even though he came out on the short end of the score. Berman hit three for three. Jack Berutich, who has been hitting in tough luck these past few weeks, came out of his temporary slump and hit the stitched apricot for a double, and also bounced one against the left center field fence for a triple in the second contest.

This coming Saturday the Rams get their last chance to win a series and close their season with the proper flourish, when the Santa Rosans come to San Francisco. Four Sophomores will be making their final appearances in Red and White uniforms and these boys: Tony Scafani, Dick Holmes, Infielders; and pitchers Larry Wilgus and Joaquin Martinez, intend to make their farewell series a memorable one by defeating the favored Santa Rosa baseballers.

It took a rejuvenated outfielder to turn in the best pitching performance of the season for the Ram horsehiders. Paul Hjort, ex-flychaser, took the mound for Eisan's team in the last half of the first inning, in the first game of a doubleheader with San Mateo Junior College. Hjort started the year as an outfielder, was moved into the infield to plug up a weakness in the first line of defense, and when Larry Wilgus' chucking arm went back on him in the first frame, Hjort was called upon to take over the pitching chores.

Hjort struck out 10 men and allowed only 4 safe blows in the 8½ innings that he chucked, winning the game, 2 to 1. In the second encounter the boys from San Francisco practiced soccer by kicking the ball all over the lot to the tune of 6 errors, which cost them the game by a score of 10 to 7.

The first game also set a new record for college competition, as it is probably the fastest college game on record, being played in 1 hour and 22 minutes. Most of the games this year have taken close to three hours.

POSITIVE REACTORS ASKED TO SEE DOC

All those who received a positive reaction in their tuberculin test should report immediately to Room 201 at Galileo, according to Dr. R. Duffrey Friedlander, college physician. The first seven to report will receive cards allowing them a free X-ray. Those who do not obtain the cards at this time will be able to get them in the near future, Dr. Friedlander said.

Gaddymen Must Defeat Don Boat In Final Contest

Local Galley Again Whips Weak Poly Boat, Regain Conference First Place

By DON MIX

With the championship at stake, the college crew will face the University of San Francisco freshmen over the Yacht Harbor course next Saturday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. This is the final conference race of the season, and the Rams must garner a win over the rejuvenated Don boatmen to retain their hold on first place.

The Gaddymen regained leadership in the league standings by a decisive victory over Oakland Poly last Saturday afternoon. Making a comeback effort after being upset by San Mateo the week before, the Red and White oarsmen swept to a five length victory over their cross bay rivals.

LEAD FROM START

The locals took the lead after the first few strokes and then settled down with a powerful "32", until the first quarter pole had been reached. At this point, Coxswain Cordano called for the first "big ten" and his charges responded by opening water between the crews and establishing a lead that never was threatened for the remainder of the race.

As they passed the half-way mark the Poly boat challenged the San Franciscans for the top position but the threat fell short after it had worn the men out by speeding up the stroke for several hundred yards. Although they moved up slightly, they could not keep up this terrific pace and found themselves dropping back again as the Rams began to sprint. This decided the issue and the only thing in doubt for the remainder of the race was by how many lengths the Gaddymen would win to finish in front.

REJUVENATED DONS

The University of San Francisco yearlings won the right to challenge the junior college crew by virtue of their surprise victory over San Mateo J. C. After trailing for the entire race, the Hill Toppers put on a withering sprint in the final quarter mile and managed to slide over the line with a scanty three-foot lead over the Peninsula boatmen. This was the big upset of the current season and established the Dons as at least an even choice to put themselves into a tie for first place by knocking over the Red and White bladedippers.

The junior collegians hold a victory over the U. S. F. crew in the first conference race but Coach Bill Lenhart's boys have shown vast improvement since then, and will be in an ugly mood to reverse that decision.

Comparative times on last Saturday's races give little indication as to the possible victor. U. S. F. won its race in the time of 7 minutes and 48 seconds, while the Powell Streeters negotiated the same distance in 7 minutes and 51 seconds.

SAME LINEUP

The Ram boat will be manned by the same crew that it has had for the majority of its conference races, according to Coach Jack Gaddy. Powerful Bob Carotto will do the stroking duties, from the port side and will be backed up by Elmer Hubacker, Chris Buckley, Don Mix, Sims Hamilton and Bill Schoenfeld. Ty McHugh will remain at the first position at the starboard sweep with Carl Brogger, Joe Arnold, Art Nelson, Joe Kissel, and Harold Wagstaff pulling behind him. A possible shift in this lineup would put Merv Weiner or Ed Cassidy in the boat.

Willie Cordano will call the strokes and Bob Fujimoto will be the pilot, Gaddy said.

Gaddy also disclosed that he has made tentative plans to enter his crew in the Golden Gate Bridge Regatta on Monday, May 31.

COMES AGAIN WAA TOURNAMENT WEEK

SEMI-ANNUAL ROUND OPENS MONDAY WITH COMPETITION KEEN

Once again the Women's Athletic Association prepares for its semi-annual Tourney Week to be held all next week as a climax to the year's work, and boasting a series of tournaments, a horse-show and a banquet.

During the week the basketball, recreational games, hockey, golf, rifle, archery, riding, and baseball clubs will play off their last games. The swimming club will hold a meet with diving competition keener than ever because of the increased interest. The riding club is scheduling its horse-show on Thursday night, May 20, instead of in the afternoon on the day of the banquet. More spectators are expected with this arrangement.

Banquet plans are being held in the strictest secrecy, but it is certain to be different and exceptionally decorative. Margaret Parks heads the decoration committee.

As the ultimate end of WAA activities this dinner is the most important event of the week to some. It is then that the awards for the year are announced and the officers for the ensuing semester are introduced. Usually the introduction of the president is awaited with anxiety but this year the candidate for that office, Gloria Swicegood, is running unopposed.

Another event, which because of uncontrollable circumstances will not be on the program, is the dance recital. This dance program given by the modern and tap dancing classes has heretofore been long awaited and will be missed this year.

Seventh Avenue stables will be the scene of the horseshow. The riding club issues an invitation to everyone to attend. The events of the show include the demonstration of the three gaits, trophy races, and jumping.

Archers are busy with Columbia rounds with Junerose Bellew leading with a 375. This score is remarkable and places her among the champions.

Even the baby sport of the association, riflery, is entering into the spirit of the week with a series of tournaments.

Baseball is finishing its season with several play days and a final game between the sophomores and freshmen.

Preliminary games of the basketball tournament are being played now and on May 17 the final game will be played. Speculation is running high with the sophomores and freshmen of the three classes battling hard for the final positions. At a glance, those who have followed practices closely believe the sophomores of the WAA class and the freshmen of the other classes will play the final game.

Tennis ladders show that the leaders are having a hard time staying on top and it is predicted that many upsets will occur before the last set is played.

CONSTITUTION SETS ELECTORAL LIMITS

Gavin, business department. Treasurer: Milton Pollisar, chemistry department; Dorothy Mercer, English department. From the faculty at large will be chosen as an Executive Committee, three from the following four candidates, Alfred Agosti, science department; Edward Sandys, English department; John E. Ross, political science department; Verrell Weber, physical education department.

The constitution provides the following for the election of officers:

IV. OFFICERS

1. The officers of this association shall be a president, a vice-president, a secretary, and a treasurer.
2. The term of office shall be one year.
3. Elections shall be held annually at the May meeting.
4. The internal business of the association shall be entrusted to an Executive Committee consisting of these four officers and three members-at-large who shall be chosen at the annual election.

V. ELECTIONS

1. Nominations for office shall be by petition endorsed by five members of the association and filed with the secretary one week prior to the election.
2. All members in good standing shall be eligible for nomination for office and shall be entitled to vote.
3. All elections shall be by ballot.

In addition to the election of officers there will be a report of the Professional Rating Committee.

BULL'S EYES TORN

Setting a record in archery at which all other women in the junior college who participate in the sport might aim, Junerose Bellew, a student of the college, completed three perfect rounds at thirty yards.

A perfect round is explained as six consecutive bull's eyes made with one set of arrows. The achievement appears more interesting when it is made clear that only one other woman at the junior college, Edith Rand, has won the coveted set of tournament arrows presented for the completion of one perfect round.

FAN THE FIRE

San Francisco Junior College men students will have the opportunity of trying for two scholarship awards at the University of San Francisco, when a competitive examination is held at the University on Saturday, May 15.

On behalf of the scholarship committee, The Guardsman sincerely urges that all students who meet the stipulated requirements and who can possibly do so, take advantage of this opportunity and participate in the examination.

Awarding of these scholarships, which are given on scholarship alone, looms as a possible traditional award from one of the oldest institutions in the west to one of the youngest. Because of this it seems particularly important that an especially fine showing be made. It seems important, also, that such a fine, growing tradition should not be allowed to slip into oblivion because of lack of sufficient interest on the part of junior college students.

Any men interested in taking this examination may secure whatever help or information they desire from the scholarship committee, whose members are: John Selig, chairman, Mary Jane Learnard, Francis Colligan, Lloyd Luckmann and John Gaddy.

By PAT MADDEN

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE.

With the W. A. A banquet but one week away, excitement has mounted to a peak. Plans and ideas are circulating at a fever heat among the members of the organization. The banquet will be held Friday, May 21, at Galileo. It will conclude Tourney Week, during which each sport will hold its final game, which will be the climax of its activities for the semester. First team selections from each sport will be announced at the banquet, as well as the results of the election of W. A. A. officers.

Voting for the election will be held from Monday, May 17, through Thursday, May 20, at the Powell Street building in the mornings, and the Galileo gym in the afternoons. Speculation as to who will be nominated for W. A. A. officers has been wild an dstartling, so to settle all doubt, here are the nominations: President, Gloria Swicegood, who is running unopposed; vice-president, Isabel Sherratt and Margaret Wormell; secretary, Virginia Kwiatt and Dorothy Canavan; treasurer, Gail Hanna and Margaret Parks.

Selection of managers will be made differently for each sport, which will elect its own team captain or manager from the group of women signed up next semester, which means that there will be no managers until the sports have officially started next fall.

Entertainment for the W. A. A. banquet has not been definitely chosen, but one part of the program will be furnished by the tap dancing class, which will present several group numbers and perhaps some solos.

With plans for the horse show to be held during Tourney Week directly before the banquet fairly well completed, the riding club will hold its last pleasure trip of the semester when the members ride to the Valley of the Moon, May 15.

Tennis and baseball competitors from Stata and the college will meet Saturday morning, May 15, at the Palace of Fine Arts for a joint playday. The events will start at 9:15 o'clock.

Proving once again that one may achieve success although handicapped, the W. A. A. sophomore basketball team won from the freshmen last Thursday by the score of 30 to 11, with five players against the six freshmen.

The W. A. A. rifle club, having completed a successful match among its members, is progressing to "sitting position shooting," which is, they tell us, much harder than the lying position.

A new hockey manager was recently appointed by the W. A. A. Council to fill the vacancy left by the resignation of Barbara Latz. The new manager is Margaret Parks. The two hockey teams appear to be coming into the home stretch neck and neck, with the competition very keen for the final clash. An interesting item in the line of instruction is the picture of the students' mistakes tacked on the hockey bulletin board. The pictures show the fouls made by various members of the team, and from these illustrations instructions for improvement can easily be given.

INSTRUCTOR TO SPEAK

Louis Berman, astronomy instructor, will lecture on his experiments in connection with the rotation of the galaxy, at a meeting of the San Francisco Club of Science Teachers at the John Muir School auditorium, Webster and Page streets, on May 12.

DIARY OF A CO-ED JOURNALIST

May 2—Ah, dear diary, yesterday was May Day, traditional day of springtime festivity. How I longed for the beautiful maypole we had in Hickville! As a substitute, therefore, I erected a maypole of my own in our backyard, using a broomstick stuck into the ground and wound around with two pink ribbons to hold while dancing around it—one for Templeton and one for me. But when Templeton came over, he was cruelly unappreciative and absolutely refused to dance around my lovely maypole. Ah, me, men are so fickle!

So instead of dancing around the maypole, Templeton suggested that we go to see a show. As I hadn't seen one for almost two days, I gladly agreed, and picked out "Camille;" with Miss Garbo and Mister Taylor. Well, we went to the theater, in front of which was a big sign with "Garbo loves Taylor" shamelessly emblazoned on it in huge red letters. "The children of this neighborhood are getting too bold," I indignantly complained, blushing in spite of myself. "Why, they don't even know dear Miss Garbo and dear Mister Taylor."

"Huh?" asked Templeton, but just then the doors opened for the kiddies' matinee. A man at the door was handing out lollipops to each child that entered, but when it came to our turn, he held out a package of cigarettes instead. "How dare you, sir!" I indignantly exclaimed. "Do you dare to infer that a Blotz would smoke?" and with that I haughtily passed on into the interior.

Well, dear diary, the picture was so sad that I just cried and cried. Poor dear Miss Garbo wasted away to a mere shadow of herself and finally died, and poor Mister Taylor was left alone. Ah, me!

Well, dear diary, Templeton and I walked home in utter, complete romantic silence. Can you imagine? It was too utterly wonderful. When we reached my humble door, Templeton asked me to shut my sapphire eyes and hold out my hand. I did so, and you'll just never guess what I found when I opened them—Templeton's Alpha Epsilon Kappa and Stuff fraternity pin! I was to utterly, completely surprised, dear diary, that I couldn't say a word, not a single word! But instead—"Blotz loves McQuiddle," Templeton said. I guess I do, dear diary.

IT WILL NOT BE A RUM TIME, SOCIETY SAYS OF RUMMAGING

As contributions of clothing, old vases and other odds and ends, pour in from members and their friends, preparations for the Woman's Service Society rummage sale, to be held on May 20 and 21, are nearing completion, according to Madeline Brodie, chairman of the rummage sale committee.

"Although we have secured a number of valuable articles," Miss Brodie said, "it will take a great deal more material to make the affair a real financial success. For this reason we would like to repeat our plea for help from the student body and faculty. All contributions may be left in the office of Helene Turner, NYA head, at Galileo. In the event that someone has a large amount of material and no way of bringing it to Galileo, he should notify Miss Turner or any service society member and it will be called for."

The sale will be held in a vacant store at 24th and Folsom and each article will be marked individually from 5 cents to $1.50. All material will be cleaned if necessary and renovated as much as possible so that the display may be made more attractive. Members of the society will act as sales girls and will work in relays on both days of the sale.

Miss Brodie once more outlined the purpose of the rummage sale, explaining that its main aim was to swell the scholarship fund of the society.

"We feel that as long as the proceeds will be applied to a cause that will benefit the students of the junior college, everyone should be willing to help so that some worthy student may continue his education."

"It was a new experiment for us," said Joe Amori, typing instructor, concerning the second annual Statewide Typing Contest, held at Modesto Junior College last week, "and even though we placed only two out of four students entered, it was a good start in the right direction."

The contest was divided into three divisions, namely, novice, amateur, and unlimited. The college did not enter anyone in the novice division, and failed to gain recognition in the amateur class, which is restricted to those with only one year of typing experience. In the unlimited class, however, two San Francisco Junior College students placed. Robert Re and Marion Yager both received certificates of proficiency. Miss Yager, from Helen Reveal's advanced typing class, typed 66 words per minute with 8 errors, while Re, of Amori's typing 2 class, wrote 60 words per minute with only 7 errors.

The winner of the unlimited division was Kenny Masuaka, Japanese student from Woodbury's Business College, in Los Angeles, who set the high mark of 89 words per minute with 6 errors. For those who are not acquainted with typing speeds, the average stenographer types about 65 words per minute, so Masuaka's achievement is noteworthy.

Rifle Club Asks Sign-up of Those Going Picknicking

All members of the rifla club who expect to go on the picnic to Alum Rock Park, Sunday, May 16, must sign up with Gordon Sollman and be assigned to an automobile for the trip, according to an announcement by James Hughes, club sponsor.

Calls are still out for those members who are able to obtain cars to provide transportation for the trip, as several more cars are still needed to take passengers. Every one is requested to bring his own lunch and swimming suit. Plans are for the party to leave from the Forest Hill station which is accessible by either an L or K car. The party plans to leave at 9:00 o'clock on Sunday morning.

Next meeting of the club is set for Tuesday, June 1, according to officials.

A president's gavel was presented to the W. A. A. Council last Thursday afternoon.

RUMMAGE SALES MAY 20, 21 AT 3100 FOLSOM

Vol. IV WEDNESDAY MAY 19, 1937 No. 14

CANDIDATES FOR EXECUTIVE POSITION

"Looking back over the past two years, we can see the progress this college has made, and the things accomplished by past student administrations. Future leaders should develop even further the good features of the past and add to them new and desirable ones.

"It is my purpose in seeking your support as a student leader, to coordinate the activities of the students and the administration. That further interest may be stimulated, every effort should be put forth to carry out an adequate social program.

"We have all been encouraged by the recent ground breaking for junior college buildings. As yet, however, nothing more than the ceremonies has been effected at Balboa Park. Looking to the future, then, if I were to become president of the Associated Students of San Francisco Junior College, I should continually use whatever influence this office may have in an endeavor to hasten the time when definite constructive action will take place on the spot so ceremoniously dedicated."

—EUGENE BLUMENTHAL.

"A dark horse is usually a long shot. If he wins, those who laid it on his nose clean up; if he loses, his supporters lose little. You can take a long chance on cleaning up with me.

"In keeping with my equine nature, of course, I shall feel obligated to vote neigh on all questions, and to bring all horse-play up to the desired levels of Kentucky equestrian dignity."—The Dark Horse.

"As a candidate for President of the Associated Students of San Francisco Junior College, I promise you no flowery speeches, no display of impromptu eloquence, but instead I promise you action and plenty of action. With a foundation for the greatest Junior College in California, we should all of us cooperate in making this building be a fact and impress it upon the minds of every loyal San Franciscan. So bear this in mind when you poll; 'Action speaks louder than words'."

—BUD GARDNER.

"I feel highly honored at this opportunity to be listed as a candidate for the office of presidency of the student body. I will not attempt to insult the intelligence of my supporters by making vague promises that I have no intention of fulfilling. I promise only this: Executive leadership with moderation, prompted by pertinent needs; strict adherence to constitutional government; a sincere effort to understand and satisfy the needs of all student groups."

—DON MILLS.

ART SEASON TO END WITH E. H. SUYDAM PRINTS

Famed Local Illustrator Loans Thirty Originals for Final College Show

With the college's first "season" swiftly nearing its completion, E. H. Suydam, famous San Francisco artist, has loaned a large collection of his most valuable drawings to top off the current exhibitions at the Howell Art Gallery, 434 Post Street.

Although Suydam at present is not in San Francisco, he gave Dr. Eugenia A. Leonard, vice president and dean of women, access to the vault of the De Young Museum in which are kept several thousand of his originals. Some thirty of these, mostly of local interest, were chosen to be shown by the college as a climax to the recent college-sponsored FAP exhibits.

CITIES SERIES ILLUSTRATOR

Suydam is best known for his inimitable illustrations designed for the Cities Series of Books published by Appleton-Century, namely Boston, New York, New Orleans, and best known to San Franciscans, those two written by Charles Caldwell Dobie, San Francisco: A Pageant, and San Francisco's Chinatown. From the group of originals with which Suydam illustrated these books, will be chosen most of the drawings to be shown, including pencil sketches, block prints, and black and white drawings. Of these, the outstanding will be those which first appeared in the San Francisco romances.

Student voting for the group of pictures which will be presented to the college by FAP officials, continued last week, naming few water-colors which will be in the final large group from which presentation will be made. Although Suydam's generous offer of exhibition of his own collection does not come under the FAP grouping, and therefore is technically not eligible for student selection, it looms as a possibility that, should sufficient appreciation of Suydam's excellent illustrations be evidenced by the students, a Suydam might find itself in a place of its own among the proposed college collection of art.

SUYDAM INTEREST REMARKED

Commenting on the Suydam show, Dr. Leonard said, "Mr. Suydam's generosity in loaning the students of San Francisco Junior College so large a collection of his exquisite originals would be most unusual if one did not know how keenly he is interested in helping young people of America see the beauty of the scenes about them in the cities in which they live. The city is ordinarily thought of as being ugly, crowded, and stuffy, but Mr. Suydam has picked out the characteristic, lovely spots for artistic treatment, and thus has interpreted the typical quality of each. San Francisco's cosmopolitan atmosphere, the French quality of New Orleans, the puritanical associations of Boston, all are captured, and their individual beauty brought out in these pictures. Therefore, I am very happy that the students can see the original drawings."

Suydam's drawings will be on exhibition until the end of May, and will close what has been an outstanding artistic season for the college.

COLLEGE ACTIVE ON OWN

Not only has the college regularly sponsored exhibitions of artists not connected with the college, but it has taken an active part in entering its own students' efforts in local shows. One at Mills College provided the first active participation. Another, that reached a high point last Friday with a gala Art Day at the San Francisco Museum of Art, marked the beginning of a Northern California junior college group interest in college art.

This exhibition will be continued through May 22, and will then possibly be sent on tour to the eight junior colleges participating in the event. Local students whose work was exhibited include Louis Martucci, Ward Cox, Ia Celeber, Robert Bettencourt, Herbert Duncan, Consuela Collins, Marian Peterson, Jack Miles and Doris Michels.

RE-ENLISTMENT FOR NYA WORK NECESSARY

All students who are now employed on NYA and who desire work next semester, are requested to see Helene Turner, NYA director immediately.

"Failure to sign up at once," Miss Turner said, "will result in loss of eligibility for NYA positions next fall."

Miss Turner also said that those who are not employed at the present time and wish to apply for NYA aid for next semester should see her as soon as possible.

With selection of student speakers for the college commencement exercises as the main business of the afternoon, a meeting of administrative officials was held last Wednesday at Galileo High School. Commencement will be Friday evening, June 18, at the War Memorial Opera House.

A committee, consisting of President Archibald J. Cloud, Dean of Women Eugenie A. Leonard, Sophomore Sponsors Claude Shull and Margaret Dougherty and Tyler McHugh, Sophomore president, listened to a number of speakers and finally selected Helen Norman and Bradley Schwarz to deliver the addresses at the exercises. Both of these students are experienced public speakers and have been active in college debating circles.

Other speakers at the commencement will be Dr. Merton C. Hill, Director of Admissions at the University of California, Hon. C. Harold Caulfield, president of the Board of Education, and President Cloud.

The exercises will be held in the evening and admission will be by invitation only. Members of the Women's Service Society and the Cap and Meg Society will act as ushers for the affair.

Women Show Higher TB Resistance Than Men, Exams Indicate

With 86 men and 49 women having taken the tuberculin bloodtests which were given to students of the college recently, appointments for X-ray examinations are now being made for those students whose tests read positive, according to Dr. R. Duffrey Friedlander and Dr. Alice B. Potter, college physicians.

Of the 86 men who took the blood test, 40 showed a positive record. However, since there were eight who were given the test but did not return for the reading, the positive reactions constituted 51 per cent of the readings.

The women showed more resistance against the germ than the men. Of the 49 women given the test, only 14 showed a positive reaction. This made the tally for the 127 students read 60 per cent negative and 40 per cent positive. These figures are in strict accordance with those of the National Tuberculosis Association, which found approximately 40 per cent to react positively in congested communities.

Dr. Friedlander expressed dissatisfaction with the meager number of students tested. "If the students are no more interested in their health status than the tuberculin tests indicate, there is no point in the San Francisco Department of Public Health's conducting these wide-spread tests for the benefit of the city's youth," declared Friedlander, "Failure to avail oneself of such an opportunity can mean but one of two things: laziness or lack of interest."

Approximately .08 per cent of the students were given the blood test. This was the second tuberculin test given at the college, a similar one taking place a year ago.

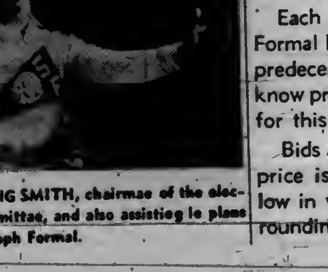
Article VI, section 2, of the Constitution of The Associated Students of the San Francisco Junior College, decrees that "Nominations shall be made at a general meeting of the Association which shall be held on the Monday preceding election day."

Nominations for this semester's Associated Student officers were made at a rally held yesterday afternoon, which was the Tuesday preceding election day rather than the Monday stipulated in the constitution.

Exercising the prerogative granted him in the preamble to the constitution, namely, "Whereas, to the students are delegated extensive powers of self-government, it is understood that the power of final judgment and decision in all student matters rests with the President of the College," President Cloud decided that it would be more advisable to hold the rally on a Tuesday instead of taking time away from the Monday classes which have already been invaded on several occasions during the semester.



HIGH SOPH MEET

A meeting of the High Sophomore class will be held this afternoon at 2:10 in room 205 at Galileo, according to an announcement by Tyler McHugh, High Sophomore president.

SOPH FORMAL AT ST. FRANCIS YACHT CLUB

Dancing to the nautical rhythm of Nick Morrisey and his Commodores, 150 couples will swing and sway in the beautiful St. Francis Yacht Club on May 28.

A tremendous rush to the finance office for tickets is expected, as, according to the committee, "There will be only 150 bids available, and there are 200 graduating sophomores plus 1600 regular students who wish bids. A word to the wise is sufficient. Get your bids early, or not at all."

DEMING SMITH, chairman of the election committee, and also assisting in plans for the Soph Formal.

Each succeeding Sophomore Formal has proved better than its predecessors and those in the know predict even greater success for this one.

Bids are on sale for $1.25. This price is considered exceptionally low in view of the beautiful surroundings of the Club.

Galileo Thinks That College Student Is Well Behaved--Yeah?

What does Galileo think of us? For two years the junior college has played the role of the proverbial in-law, and with the usual audacity of in-laws has prolonged its visit, made use of the high school's laboratories, athletic fields, cafeteria, and auditorium, as well as all the regular classrooms.

The first to give her impression of the junior college students was a busy high school teacher who declared that the college students were well-behaved and really not a bother—except for a few irritating individuals. (Well, reporters have to garner inches some way.)

"Some of the boys are awfully good-looking," blushingly admitted a lovely little maiden. And this, it seems, is the only impression we have made upon her.

"Pop," the genial old fellow who sells confections to both high school and junior college students, using a cigar box for a cash register, could detect little difference in the affluence of the two groups, except to remark with a hint of a bantering tone in his voice that we seemed to purchase the most fruit. (Could it be that even Pop has heard of our reputation for polishing apples?)

"Kids is kids," growled the cop on the corner, "and when it comes to driving sensibly, none of them seems to know how." Where, oh where, is college dignity?

Then came the fatal blow—the reporter timidly approached a surly-looking high school youth who, 'tis said, had recently lost his heart's desire to a dashing block SF man. "And what do you think of junior college students?"

"Those bird—!"

Freedom Rings May 27, 31; Holidays!

Students of the college will be treated to two days of freedom during the next few weeks, according to an announcement from the registrar's office.

Thursday, May 27, has been declared a holiday to celebrate the opening of the Golden Gate Bridge Fiesta. Memorial Day, which falls on a Sunday, will be commemorated on Monday, May 31 with all classes being excused.

PLANS FOR SALE BY SS MEMBERS SEE COMPLETION

Rummage Sale Offers All White Elephants Chance to Forget in New Homes

After many frantic attempts to secure enough material to ensure the financial success of its enterprise, the Women's Service Society of the college has completed most of the plans for its rummage sale.

Primarily designed to raise money for the WSS Scholarship fund, the sale will be held on Friday and Saturday, May 20 and 21, in a vacant store at 3100 Folsom Street. A committee chairmanned by Madeline Brodie and consisting of Barbara Latz, Gail Hanna and Florence Murphy, will be in complete charge of the affair with other members of the society acting as salesgirls on both days of the event.

APPRECIATION EXPRESSED

Miss Brodie expressed her sincere appreciation to those who were kind enough to contribute clothing, toys, and other material for the sale.

"Although we have not received as many things as we had hoped to," she said, "I feel that we should be able to carry on with what we have and make the sale fairly successful. I really believe that our main handicap was the difficulty of not have a permanent building to which material could be brought. A great many more students would have made contributions had it not been for the difficulty of transporting them via street car.

COMMITTEE PRAISED

"In most cases the students did not feel that they had amassed enough material to warrant us sending a truck and failed to realize the truth of the old adage that 'every little bit helps'. However, we will be able to manage quite nicely with what we have and with a little super-salesmanship on the part of our salesgirls, we should be able to put the affair over with a bang."

Speaking of her committee, Miss Brodie stressed the splendid way in which most of them had cooperated. She especially praised the work of Miss Latz, who along with Miss Brodie, was responsible for the selection of what is believed to be one of the best sites in the city for such an event.

STILL TIME TO CONTRIBUTE

"Most of the girls have been grand about gathering material among their friends and in spreading the good work around the college. A great deal of help was needed in renewing the material contributed so that it would look fresh and attractive for the sale. At the present time the girls are hard at work placing price tags on the various items. Instead of the usual jumble of material one sees at rummage sales, each individual piece of merchandise will be marked separately and the prices will range from 5 cents to $1.50."

In closing, Miss Brodie urged that anyone, who had gathered together material and neglected to turn it in at either Galileo or the Extension Building, should see her or any other Service Society member at once in order that arrangements might be made to call for the contribution before Friday.

Although original plans called for placing only 250 copies of the Forum Club Literary Magazine on sale, the fact that the majority of the 250 tickets was sold the first day, led to more than 50 additional tickets being printed. With the financial success of the magazine assured, Dorothy Mercer, Forum Club sponsor, is confident that it will prove a literary success as well.

The mimeographing of the 300 copies of the Forum began last Friday, and it appeared certain that the student publication would be out May 26 as scheduled, according to Don Flash, editor in chief. The copies will be given out at the desk in front of the study hall at Powell Street upon the presentation of a ticket.

The Forum represents the first literary publication of the club, and Flash expressed high hopes that it will be well-received.

"With nearly 20,000 words of fiction, essays, drama, humor, and poetry—the pick of student literature—included in its 50 pages, the Forum is certain to provide the buyer with his money's worth," Flash stated.

BUTTON, BUTTON, WHO'S GOT THE BUTTON?

When a certain point in the semester arrives, those of us who are not new to the college exchange knowing glances, and commence to sit back with one eye shut and the other on that well known campus character—the politician.

Perhaps many of us are recalling the not-so-long-ago days when an election around these parts meant a great deal of excitement, a fight or two, and perhaps a bit of unscheduled funny business.

If we can believe those who claim to know, the youngsters of our institution are an unlucky lot. They, it seems, will not have the opportunity of seeing a genuine, bang-up affair, for this semester it is going to be different!

Would it be deemed a complete sacrifice of Editorial dignity should we reply, "Nuts!"?

Already the political machines have started to revolve and the air is filled with the familiar odor of nostalgic campaign promises. Every little group in the college has pledged its support to one candidate or another. In exchange, that candidate has promised to support each particular group in whatever activity it happens to be interested.

Fair enough, isn't it? You do something for me, I do something for you. That is the spirit behind any college election, all denials to the contrary.

It is not, however, the task of The Guardsman to take the scrubbing brush to the political situation in our present day colleges. We have neither the time nor inclination necessary to bring about a complete change in the existing set-up.

The candidates have been presented, and the only thing that remains is for the students of the college to pick those they think are best qualified to serve as leaders for the next semester.

May the best man win, and may we extend to him our deepest sympathies!

THEY KNEW WHAT THEY WANTED

In an institution where many enterprises are planned but few are ever carried through to completion, it always seems particularly commendable when a group of students works together in a successful attempt to prepare and present a worthy project to the entire Associated Student group.

One of the most potent examples of a group worthy of this commendation is the Forum Club and the successful way in which it has prepared copy and regulated sales for its forthcoming literary publication.

Working together as a complete unit, the group is not only preparing an interesting magazine containing "the pick of student literature," but also accomplished the seemingly impossible feat of selling nearly every copy well in advance of the publication date, which has been announced as sometime around May 28.

Far larger groups in the college have planned entertainments, dances and similar undertakings, but after receiving a great deal of publicity and making many plans, leaders found that their ideas had to be abandoned because the majority of their group failed to lend the necessary support.

Almost any idea sounds well on paper. It is always an easy task to make people promise to aid in putting over an idea, but when it comes to the actual hard work involved, there usually appears to be an amazing lack of willing workers.

Congratulations, therefore, are extended to the Forum Club. They have done a fine job, and it is hoped that larger organizations will, in the future, profit by the excellent example that has been set for them.

"A WORD TO THE WISE—"

Uncalled for advice is generally neither heeded nor appreciated. Thus it is with tongue in cheek that we casually mention that finals begin June 7.

The futility of attempting to do six months' work in one night of last minute cramming has been outlined a dozen times. Nevertheless, a great many students, armed with black coffee and aspirin, will hold all night tussles with books that ordinarily require a good six months of careful study before being thoroughly digested.

According to an old proverb, "a word to the wise is sufficient." Therefore, consider this Editorial that word and forsake the companionship of "Procrastination" for a tete-a-tete with "Concentration." Even in the few weeks remaining, it will be a difficult task to catch up with all the work that has been left undone, but almost anything is better than waiting until the actual "night-before-the-final," and frantically trying to swallow whole that which should have been carefully chewed.

By FEM

Recently we received, through the mail, a letter which appears to be a sort of backfire from the gone but not forgotten "send-a-dime" craze which was so prevalent a couple of years ago. The idea behind this particular letter was to shower us with "dozens of lovely hankies" and all we had to do was send a handkerchief to the top name and recopy the letter in our best Spencerian handwriting, and send it to three of our "intimate friends."

Not being in a very receptive mood at the time, and being in the midst of a rather nasty head cold, we decided that we couldn't spare a hankie, not even an old one, so we tempted the fates, broke the chain and threw said letter into the wide open mouth of the nearest wastepaper basket. As soon as we got that taken care of, we sat down and did a little plain and fancy reflecting on the possibilities of making a racket of this chain letter situation. Yes, we understand that experts made a racket of the "dime-letter" business, but we worked out a few new angles which may appeal to you.

Suppose a girl is going to be married. She could type a few dozen letters with her own name and address on top, saying, "Please send the top name a hand painted curtain rod, an accordion pleated muffin tin," or whatever else she happened to need to complete her hope chest. If she were smart enough to pick out a receptive group of people, she'd soon have enough propert [illegible] second-hand store and, who kn [illegible] ght forsake the state of matrim [illegible] "career woman!"

The [illegible] ckish" individual, who was de [illegible] arting a zoo in his own back y [illegible] send out notes informing the [illegible] to send a tiger, lion, ape or wha [illegible] and the first thing you know, [illegible] a collection that would make [illegible] ishhacker fold up his cages [illegible] way.

To [illegible] dea a bit farther, now that it [illegible] he end of the semester, how al [illegible] g letters to your brainier acquai [illegible] ing "Please send a term paper [illegible] vils of the Present Day Capit [illegible] m,' typed on one side of the p [illegible] e spaced and carefully correc [illegible] nd so." Think how much simpler it would be to type a few of these letters instead of working on the papers yourself!

Oh yes, there are lots and lots of possibilities but why should we spoil all our fun by telling you everything? If you can't figure out your own rackets, well, you'll just have to stick to golf!

PAY DIRT

The morons have been loosed again. This time, for a pleasant change, they held their revelries far from San Francisco, for pompous old Britain has crowned her king.

The newspapers report that "hundreds of thousands of people jammed every available space to view the great pageant," and that's all it was, a pageant, and a poorly managed one at that. Didn't the people have to stand in the rain for hours? If it rains on the day of a baseball World Series Playoff, the game is called off, and they play "for keeps" in those games. It does seem foolish to have continued the trivial game of coronation in spite of the dampness. It's no fun playing in the rain.

Mary and Marge were "best friends." When Mary's "steady," Bill, asked her to provide his out-of-town chum Bob with a girl to take to a dance so that they could all attend in a foursome, Mary thought of Margie immediately.

The first part of the evening was pleasant enough, although Mary noticed that Margie seemed to be dancing more than half the time with Bill. Later, however, Margie became quite obvious in her attempts to annex her friend's man, and Bill left Mary more and more to dance with her. At last Margie and Bill ignored the other two completely, neglecting even the bare formality of looking them up during the intermissions.

As soon as it was plain that Margie and Bill had switched partners, an amused Bob took a thoroughly hurt and humiliated Mary home and both put the evening down as something to forget.

The scene changes. What of Margie? When that enterprising young lady came home in the small hours, escorted by Bill, she glowed with the pleasant feeling of having scored a major triumph over Mary. In the weeks that followed, however, her trick seemed to boomerang in a hundred small ways.

First of all, Bill, whom she had thought would be such a nice "steady," took her out just once and then dropped her as suddenly as he had fallen for her. Next, two other boy friends followed his example. Margie could not understand this, but if she had known that they were Bob's friends the answer might have been obvious enough. Somehow, men often feel honor bound to warn their cohorts against a girl who spoils a party. Of course she had lost Mary's friendship, and strangely enough lost out on two party invitations because the hostesses were friends of Mary's and wisely decided to cross the troublemaker's name off their guest lists.

This little bit of fiction, which has its real life counterpart over and over again, has, as far as we are concerned, only one moral. This is the season when dances and parties hold full sway. (It's also the season of the blind date, the foursome, and the triple date.) Need we say more?—just fill in the rest yourself. And if you get the right answer and apply it as well, we will have done our bit.

Recently this college voted into being a new constitution. (See Guardsman April 28.) Certain members of the student body and faculty worked diligently to produce this dignified manuscript, all, it seems, to no avail. For this constitution was written to govern a democracy, and we have no democracy to govern.

Paraphrasing Shakespeare, "To vote or not to vote, that is the question," seems to be the trend of popular thought as election time draws near. Judging from past elections, the majority will decide in the negative. In the election of one year ago, approximately three hundred students voted; and if we are to believe rumors still afloat, in reality less than three hundred actually voted, for there was a bit of ballot juggling (to phrase it politely) which permitted one voter double or even triple privileges. Last semester this number of students who availed themselves of their opportunity to participate in self-government was somewhat increased, giving us the pitiful figure of little more than one-third of the student body carrying out its duty. For, strange as it may seem to some of our candid aristocracy, voting IS the duty of each and every member of the student body.

Let's consider Webster's definition of "to vote." That estimable gentleman tells us that it is the 'right to exercise a wish, choice, or expression of will." Are junior college students such spineless jellyfish that they have no wish to exercise their will? Sadly enough, the honest observer finds that the answer must be Yes. Why else the lack of interest?

Still thumbing our way through the dictionary, we like Mr. Webster's definition of democracy, that intangible something which is supposed to be present in any system of self-government, such as that under which this college operates. According to Noah it is "belief in, or practice of, social equality; disregard of social barriers, as of class; absence of snobbery." ABSENCE OF SNOBBERY. Turn that phrase over in your mind. Does the light begin to dawn? San Francisco Junior College certainly is not free of snobbery. Even now the first faint rumblings can be heard from that group who say "Oh I don't know anyone who's running. Why should I vote?" which will swell to a crescendo on election day. This is snobbery in its rankest form. Think before you join the group who carelessly utter these words, for upon these unthinking students is set the mark of utter selfishness, ignorance, and egotism. Perhaps these light-hearted slackers do not mean to be all these dreadful things, but nevertheless they are.

A final word of warning—remember (dragging out poor old Webster again), that to elect means to make a discriminating choice. Think before you vote.

This post-spring, pre-summer time of the year is perhaps the most desolate of the year. Concert halls are closed, symphony orchestras put up, the artists speed for foreign ports, and the art world takes on the sensations of a typical "morning after." It is in such contemplative mood that most critics and art lovers begin to take inventory—to sort and select for permanent file in the chambers of the memory. So:

First to be stored away should be the revelation that is the voice of Marion Anderson. The negro race has made many contributions to the arts of the world; surely, no finer folk-art than the spiritual has ever existed. And of these contributions none should rank higher than the voice of Miss Anderson. After her two concerts here, it is possible only to repeat Toscannini's prophetic words: "One is very fortunate to hear one such voice in a lifetime."

There comes next a small, sad faced man with strange and silent features, whose attitudes are typically Russian and whose personality is one of extreme friendliness and intellectual simplicity. Thus: Igor Stravinsky, who conducted an electrifying performance of his Symphony of the Psalms. An experience of direct contact with genius for those who were present.

With some regret, one sets the Philadelphia Symphony concerts in a corner by themselves. Here one may again marvel at an orchestra that creates pure honey in sound. And here one may curse silently at stupid programs. But there is the memory of a breath-taking moment when Eugene Ormandy drew the cool, rich singing of Ravel's Dapnis et Cloe into altogether too short a time.

Nor should one forget the New York Philharmonic broadcasts, the playing of the Brahms violin concerto by Isaac Stern, Cimarosina as danced by the Ballet Russe, Flagstad's Isolde, Lehman's Sieglinde. Nor should the fun that George Gershwin brought to San Francisco be too quickly dismissed.

Thus: an interesting season in every way, a season of subtle variety and extraordinary quality. For the ever-pressing tomorrow and the lengthy summer there is some interesting, if not spectacular, fare offered those who enjoy chamber music. The ever-generous Elizabeth S. Coolidge offers a festival of Beethoven and Schonberg at the University of California. The festival is open free to any who choose to hear. And again to the Coolidge generosity a profound "thank you very much," which is really all one can do, for another season of the Pro Arte quartet at Mills College. This year there is to be a Mozart cycle on Wednesday evenings, and the usual Sunday afternoons of variety.

If you, as a music listener, find it difficult to understand and to appreciate quartet music, let this advice be given: the only way that you may be initiated into this highest of all musical art is by going and hearing it until some begins to satisfy your ear and your mind. It is a refining of the ear and musical taste, a matter of understanding that underlies this music. And the only way in which you may find a key, if it may be called such, is by hearing, hearing, hearing.

Let's get out and vote this semester. Remember, the candidates you elect to office will represent you. Think it over. Elect the one you think will serve the school best.

Try and meet the candidates. Find out what they stand for, what they have done, how capable they are.

Above all, we want every one of you to vote. Voting machines have been secured from the city. Let's use them. The polls will be open for one day only: Friday, May 21, at Powell Street between 9 and 1, and at Galileo between 2:30 and 4:30.

DON BOAT KEEPS TITLE FROM GADDYMEN

By LAMBERT MEYER

Some of our local statisticians (not to mention any names) seemed to have the annual conference track meet doped out a little wrong in this sheet. Sacramento, the team figured to get but 15½ points, showed its championship caliber by amassing 60 digits to win the title. The Rams, slated to sneak into a second position, found themselves tied for fifth with Santa Rosa. A hand to San Francisco tracksters Walt Boitano, Ernie Loustalot, and Jim MacGruer for keeping the Sweetmen in the point column; also to the relay team of George Compas, Don Bryant, George Cassin, and Bob Youngdale, who gave the Rams their sixth and final point. The loss of Joe Garcia and Harold Mitchell, because of injuries, cost the Rams a few markers. Both men will be eligible to compete for the junior college next year.

A real exciting game of baseball is expected tomorrow afternoon on the Funston diamond when Coach Conlan's Cute Kids clash with Coach Lee Eisan's varsity nine. The Cute Kids team is made up of members of the Ram basketball team, and they have challenged the ballhawks to a contest, the loser to stand treat for a dinner later in the semester. Conlan will hurl for the casabamen. The engagement is sure to be a riot of fun, with both clubs eager to win that much-wanted dinner. Come out tomorrow afternoon and watch the antics of both squads.

Ted Ellison, winner of the 100 and 220-yard dashes at the conference meet, is planning on leaving San Mateo Junior College to enter Colgate University in the Fall. Ellison ran a brilliant 100 in the time of :9.7, and scampered the 220 in :21.4 to become a double winner.

The peninsula sprint ace tied with his teammate, Cecil Cole, for high honors and won the flip of the coin from Cole to take home the high point medal, a diamond-studded one! He just couldn't lose that Saturday afternoon.

Jim Fahn, track captain of the 1937 cinder squad, is planning on entering College of Pacific next semester. Jim has improved greatly in his vaulting since coming to the junior college, and should go far in this particular event at the Stockton institution. The "Cap" reached a height of 12 feet 6 inches this season, but just couldn't get started in the confeernce meet.

Congratulations to Coach Tom Wilson and his tennis team. The squad has annexed the Northern California Junior College Conference championship. Forfeiture by the Sacramento netmen gave the Rams the title by a margin of one match over the powerful San Mateo Junior College team. The Bulldogs blew their chances when they halved a series of six matches with the Modestons. The championship climaxed a fast tennis season marred only by one defeat suffered at the hands of the San Mateo rackoteers. Armstrong, Modesto, Marin, U. S. F., Menlo and even lowly STATE bowed before the smashing Ram net squad. Sacramento would probably have been dumped 6-0 by the Wilsonmen, so the forfeit saved them both a bad drubbing and a long trip to San Francisco. A hand to racket wielders Bill Lazzeri, Harold Mitchell, Al Altfield, Kay Lyman, Chandler Ennis and Bill Cardinal for their glorious victory. Also, a posie to Coach Tom Wilson, who gave so much of his time to molding an athletic squad of championship caliber.

Five man basketball teams have now been organized in Coach "Dutch" Conlan's gymnasium classes. Six teams are entered in each period league and two court games are played every afternoon except Friday. Right now the best outfit looks to be the "Comets," a team made up of five Japanese students, with the "Hicks" and "Maniacs" coming along strong. Some of the contests are real, heated struggles, with the men with the tempers letting those old elbows fly. There are no referees and no time outs.

Another meet is still ahead for the junior college track team. The men are entered in the annual Pacific Association Junior Championships to be held at Kezar Stadium in the very near future. As many participants as possible will be entered in the event, with colleges from all over northern California competing. Here's a chance for the San Francisco Junior College to pick up a few points, and make up for its season's losses.

Have we or have we not a junior college golf team? It surely looks as if we have no such team. First everyone is enthusiastic about forming a golfing squad, and when a sign-up takes place, a joke is made of the whole situation. Those men students who did put their "John Henry's" on the line have forgotten all about it, and have failed to see "Dutch" Conlan or anyone else acquainted with the divot-digging sport. Right now it is pretty late to organize a college golf team to be intered in the N. C. J. C. C. A. championships. We had plenty of low 70 golfers in the college, and would have made quite a fine showing in the tourney. Ed Frediani worked hard to get together a formidable mashie team, and we're sorry it fell through.

One of the most outstanding baseball players we have seen in a long while is Johnny Allen, colored Marin shortstop. Allen is a veritable dynamo of energy on the field, and any ball hit within 15 feet of him is sudden death. At his shortstop spot, he covers the ground like an antelope, besides being a good man at the bat. Can't seem to see anybody else for that spot on the all-conference baseball team. Next week's Guardsman will publish an all-star nine as selected by the sports staff of this sheet.

Statistics show that Joe Garcia, Ram dash man, led all other track and field men in amassing points for the Red and White throughout the 1937 track period. Joe collected 37 points by placing in every meet in which he was entered. Jim MacGruer, timber topper, took second in the ratings with 32 markers. Jim also placed in all of his barrier events. Walt Boitano and George Bedrosian led the weightmen with 13 points, and George Cassin topped the remainder of the outfit with 8 digits.

A suggestion has been made to give both the captain of the team and the high point men of the season some sort of award for their services. It's not a bad idea, and some sort of medal or pin wouldn't break the Associated Students treasury. (If it isn't busted already.)

The State College (that's the school across the tracks) has just finished a successful spring football practice and thinks it has a fairly good football squad. In fact, it thinks itself so good that quarterback Meury Schwarz ('member him?) states that it's the best team ever assembled in that institution. He would. One of the Gater poets published this poem about the San Francisco Junior College:

"Last year
They beat Jaysee.
That's good ono' for me."

The braggers must be pretty punk to have to hold a spring practice. Coach Sweet's gridmen will probably annihilate them without extra effort or spring practice.

Ed, taking over the pitching assignment from his catching spot, had allowed two hits the whole game and in the last inning, with the score knotted at 1 up, one of the gentlemen from the northern village smashed out a four-bagger to cinch the contest 2 to 1. Ed finally allowed four hits for the entire tussle.

RACQUET MEN WIN LEAGUE, LOSE AT STANFORD MATCH

Chandler Ennes Forced to Default by Cramps, but Makes Valiant Effort

By DICK SIMPERS

With the conference team championship already tightly sewed up, members of the tennis team last Saturday journeyed down the peninsula to Palo Alto for a try at the individual championships, held at Stanford. They failed, but only by the narrowest of margins and after a valiant battle which was brought to a close by the sudden withdrawal of the finalist, Chandler Ennes, because of an attack of cramps.

Ennes fought his way into the finals in the singles by defeating the favorite, Ellis of San Mateo, and, teamed with Alvin Altfield, also reached the finals of the doubles competition. The terrific strain of this iron man act took its toll, following as it did upon a season during which Ennes was first man and mainstay of the squad. He was half-way through the first set of the singles finals, and hitting the ball with all his usual power and effectiveness, when suddenly something snapped; the muscles in his arms and legs went taut, making every move agony. Showing unparalleled grit, Ennes was still willing to carry on the battle, but Coach Tom Wilson spared him the ordeal and defaulted both matches. San Mateo won the singles and Modesto the doubles.

FINIS DISAPPOINTING

Thus was a disappointing finis written to what has been a highly successful season, which found the Ram netmen carrying off the trophy symbolic of the league championship. The men responsible for bringing home the title are, besides Ennes, Alvin Altfield, Bob Lazare, Harold Mitchell, Bill Cardinal, and Kay Lyman. Rod Rogaway, one of the squad's outstanding players in pre-season matches, was forced to withdraw from competition because of a deficiency in the number of units carried last semester.

SEASON ARDUOUS

After having completed an arduous practice schedule without a defeat, the squad embarked on its conference season with high hopes. Marin, Menlo, Armstrong, and Modesto all went down to defeat, San Mateo eked out a close decision, and Sacramento defaulted to give the Red and White netsters the championship of the league. For a time there was a question of whether Sacramento's forfeiture would be valid, but there now appears to be little doubt as to the authenticity of the Rams' claim to the title.

Prospects for next season are bright, as this year's team will remain practically intact, and will be augmented by several promising new-comers from high schools. Members of the title-winning team will receive their medals at a rally to be held in the near future.

THEY ADD TO THE COLLEGE HALL OF FAME

USF Men Eke Scant Win Over Rams to Prevent Clear Victory Title

By LAMBERT MEYER

Putting on a tremendous burst of speed in the last 75 yards of the race, the University of San Francisco crew eked out a very close victory over the Ram boat last Saturday afternoon at Yacht Harbor, thus causing a triple tie for the conference championship.

The San Francisco crew needed the victory to take the league championship but were unable to match the very powerful strokes of the Don boatmen.

Both outfits started the race on even terms and at the half-way mark were neck and neck. For a while it looked as if the Rams would take the lead, but the tiny U. S. F. coxswain speeded up the stroke and put the hilltop lads in the front once again.

DONS SPEED UP

Coxswain Cordano of the Rams tried his best to speed up the San Francisco boat, but the Don varsity seemed to be superior with the oars. The locals again challenged their rivals at the three-quarter mark but the threat fell short as the men were out from the terrific clip they had been hitting. They moved up just a trifle, and at the end of the race the Gaddymen found themselves slipping behind the mighty U. S. F. crew. This decided the race and also decided the conference. If the Rams had been the victors the trophy would have been presented to them at the end of the course, but the upset by the Don boat brought about a three-way tie between San Francisco, U. S. F. and San Mateo Junior College.

HILLTOPPERS GOOD

The men in Green and Yellow have come through in the pinches at least three times this season. Two weeks ago, after trailing the San Mateo boat by many lengths, the Dons began to speed up their stroke and put on a desperate finish to overtake the Bulldogs in the last 15 yards. That was their big victory of the year and that exciting race gave the U. S. F. men confidence enough to come back and sink the championship-headed Ram boat. In the first encounter between the two institutions the junior college crew won easily over the exact same course.

Each of the teams that are tied for first position in the league has dropped two races, and if possible a row-off will take place on Memorial Day at the Yacht Harbor course.

Because of the triple tie, Oakland Polytechnic finds itself resting in second position in the final conference standings, although the east bay boat is really in fourth or last place.

In the event that there are no more conference crew races, the junior college men will probably stroke in the Golden Gate Bridge Regatta on Monday, May 31.

Port: Stroke, Bob Carotto; No. 5, Elmer Hubacker; No. 4, Chris Buckley; No. 3, Don Mix; No. 2, Sims Hamilton; Bow, Bill Schoenfeld.

After having three regulars declared ineligible the previous day, the Ram baseball club was severely drubbed in a doubleheader played at Funston Field last Tuesday: the scores were 14 to 6 and 16 to 7. The three men who were protested were: Paul Hjort, leading hitter of the club and shortstop; Joe Ardanaz, hard-hitting center fielder and a very good one, too; and Jack Berutich, right fielder, who was just starting to hit his stride. Jack hit a home run, not a triple as was reported last week, against Modesto. No team can lose men of their caliber and get through unscathed against a strong team, hence the large scores.

Coach Lee Eisan had to use a makeshift lineup in both contests. Coach Eisan used Eglehofer, Baker and Berman in the open outfield positions, and they did fairly well for stop-gap men.

Larry Wilgus started on the mound in the first game, but poor support made Larry's fine hurling go for naught. He stayed on the firing line until the seventh, when Coach Eisan decided to save him for the Santa Rosa series. Ed Arvedi, erstwhile catcher, ascended the hilltop in this frame and proceeded to stop the Mariners cold, allowing three runs on two hits and striking out three batters. Holmes garnered four bingles in five tries, to take the hitting honors for the day.

The second tussle was a nightmare for Coach Eisan, with runs crossing plate in every canto but one. Martinez was nominated for the pitching duties and lasted but two, when his old arm injury returned and he had to leave the game. Although Joaquin was touched for eight runs he only gave up three hits; errors played a large part in the scoring. Once again "Peaball" Arvedi took over the relief twirling duties and he did very well, his fast ball accounting for five more strike out victims. Arvedi also slammed out three hits in four trips to the plate, to become a full fledged slugger.

NINE TAKES ANOTHER DOUBLEHEADER LOSS

By TONY SCAFANI

San Francisco's varsity baseball team closed its conference ball schedule as it inaugurated it, by losing a doubleheader, this time to the Cubs of Santa Rosa Junior College. The first loss was a heartbreaker for Pitcher Ed Arvedi, while the second contest wasn't even close. The scores were 2-1 and 11-3.

"Schoolboy" Arvedi hurled some fine ball in the opening game, but was the victim of circumstances. Ed chucked two-hit ball until the last inning, when Freeman, Cub catcher, hit one of Ed's sizzling fast balls for a home run to sew up the ball game.

FORCE-OUT STOPS SCORE

The Rams threatened to win out in their half of the final frame, but failed. With one down, Wilgus singled to left, Johnson walked, Martinez batted for Fitzgerald and drove a hard hit grounder which the shortstop barely came up with and threw to third to force out Wilgus. Berman ended the game by flying out to the left fielder.

"Peaball" Arvid allowed only four hits, two in the first canto and the other two in the last. The homerun was the only extra basehit garnered by the Santa Rosans. Ed also whiffed eight batters for a good day's work. Fred Baker was the hitting star for the Red and White with a long triple and single in three times at bat. Between them, two Cub pitchers held the Rams to six hits.

WILGUS PITCHES LAST

In the second game, Wilgus toed the rubber for his last mound duel for the Rams, and as in previous series throughout the season, he was given some terrible support. The boys committed six errors behind Larry, practically to give the game to the Cubs.

In direct contrast to the second tussle, and many preceding games, the home town boys looked like champions in the first game of the doubleheader.

In addition to these boys, Paul Hjort, Joe Ardanaz, Jack Berutich and Gene Kiley did not have a chance to make their last games of the season winning ones, their last contests being the Modesto series.

DEBACLES ENDED

So ends San Francisco's most disastrous major sport undertaking, and it is hoped the last to end this way. All the ball players have left is their "blood" ball game with "Dutch" Conlan's "tantalizing tarantulas," tomorrow afternoon at Funston Field. On the "Spider" nine will be a majority of the basketball men, who say they will drub the regulars.

Coach Lee Eisan has done a good job with what men he had, and next year he come back: Hjort, Berutich, Ardanaz, Berman, Eglehofer, Hoppe, Baker, Johnson, Fitzgerald and Manning, should form an excellent nucleus for a great team. should have a fine team, if all the boys

With the track season ended for the junior college, statistics show that the Rams participated in six dual meets and one conference engagement. Out of these six clashes, the Sweetmen emerged victorious only once. In the conference meet at Marin, the squad tied with Santa Rosa for fifth position.

Following is an individual track and field summary of the point score of every man that took a place throughout the entire cinder season.

Joe Garcia, sprinter, and Jim MacGruer, hurdler, are 1-2 on the list with 37 and 32, respectively.

Joe Garcia, 37; Jim MacGruer, 32; Harold Mitchell, 18; Don Bryant, 16; Jim Fahn, 16; Charley Schardin, 16; Ernie Loustalot, 15; Ty Barre, 14; Walt Boitano, 13; George Bedrosian, 13; Duke Worsham, 9; George Cassin, 8; Charley Keyer, 5; Bill Henshawe, 5; Walt Loving, 5; Joe Rocktoff, 5; Bill Dobson, 3; George Compas, 2; Charles Gerughty, 3; Joe Sanderson, 3; Charley Kawaguchi, 2; Jack O'Neill, 1; George Woodland, 1; Al Gibeau, 1.

The relay team collected 5 points at Santa Rosa, 5 at San Mateo, and 1 in the conference to make a total of 11 markers. Relay men included Compas, O'Neill, Mitchell, Bryant, Youngdale, and Cassin.

Riflemen to Engage in Intra Club Competition

First of its kind, a club members' .22 caliber rifle match, sponsored by the Rifle and Pistol Club, will be held during the week of May 24 to 28. There will be handicaps, to be worked out by the Club Executive Officer, and the match may be fired at any time during the above-mentioned week—all on one day, or one stage per day.

The match will consist of two stages: first, 25 shots prone, with not more than 5 sighting shots allowed; second, 25 shots sitting, with not more than 5 sighting shots allowed. Each stage will be fired on a six bull target, with the sighting bull marked.

Eight medals will be awarded: one first, one second, and one third place medal for the men's shooting; one first, one second, and one third place medal for the women who shoot; and two other medals for the high man and woman who started shooting this semester and did not place in the first three medals in their respective class. Medals will be awarded to the next highest in ability, if those above mentioned placed in the whole class scoring.

A track banquet will be held this Friday evening, May 21, at Veneto's Restaurant, corner of Bay and Mason streets, at 7 o'clock.

Thirty track members will partake of a feast, together with Coach Russ Sweet and a member of The Guardsman sports staff.

Now that the cinder pounders have practically faded from the sport picture, and the mothballs are claiming the red and white track scanties, the spotlight focuses on other fields of competition, particularly those of baseball and crew, and some radiator athletes are already discussing the sport of moleskins and pigskins, but before we bid aloha to the boys of the track squad a few closing remarks would be fitting.

Joe Garcia, bantam sprinter for Russ Sweet's thin-clads, deserves a world of credit for the manner in which he took the doctor's decision forbidding him to run in the conference meet due to a back injury. Joe started the season slowly, failing to round into top form until mid-season, but when he reached the top he was tough to beat. He ran the best race of the season against Ellison, double conference winner from San Mateo Junior College, when he finished second in the century less than a foot behind the Bulldog flyer. After this race a back injury, sustained in early season trials, became more and more annoying, hampering Joe's sprinting to a great extent and eventually, a week before the big meet which Garcia had been pointing to for a whole season, the injury sent him to the doctor, who put a taboo on Joe's running for this semester. It was a tough break, but he took it like a true competitor. Let's hope he comes back next year to take up where he left off—at the top.

Some more of those silly rules restricting competition in sports have been brought to light. It appears that Paul Hjort, Joe Ardanaz, and Jack Berutich, Ram willow wielders, were ruled ineligible for any further conference play this term, because they play baseball on Sundays with another team—which all sounds very silly to us, but perhaps there is a reason behind this madness, quien sabe?

While on the subject of useless and apparently unfair rules, perhaps the new regulations controlling the pole vault and high jump in college competition takes the first prize. Under this new situation the jumper or vaulter clearing the bar first automatically wins, even if another clears the same height on a later jump. Its unfairness was recently exemplified in the recent U. S. S.-Stanford track meet, when Earle Meadows cleared 14 ft. 8½ in. to duplicate Bill Sefton's effort, only on a later vault, so Meadows was given a second place with a world record. Very fair, indeed!

Student Wins Chicago Business Scholarship

Because of his executive ability, initiative and scholastic attainments in business, David Moonie, graduating student in the college, was awarded a scholarship which entitles him to one year at the University of Chicago's school of business, beginning September, 1937.

Moonie's application was endorsed by business instructors, Ward Nichols and Joseph Amori, and by Paul Pitman, assistant to the president.

CONLAN'S HOOPSTERS TAKE ON LEE'S MEN FOR BASEBALL GAME

In what promises to be one of the real crucials of the 1937 sports season, a heated contest will take place tomorrow afternoon on the Funston diamond when Coach "Dutch" Conlan's Cute Kids tangle with Coach Lee Eisan's baseball varsity.

The Cute Kids, made up of members of the Ram basketball team, have challenged the baseball club to a game of ball, the losers to treat the winners to a dinner at one of San Francisco's more fashionable eating establishments.

Conlan will be on the mound for the casabamen and Lee Eisan will probably hurl for the varsity nine. Coach Jack Gaddy was to take over the catching assignment but the smashing of a pair of fingers leaves him on the bench.

A heated rivalry has been brewing for many weeks between these two San Francisco College athletic teams, and the payoff comes tomorrow afternoon at 2:00 o'clock, when the two colorful squads begin to strut their stuff.

The keystone combination of Ernie Loustalot and Gus Kotta for the basketball players is touted as being a fast working unit, and Ram ballhawks, Tony Scafani and Mickey Berman, will really have to go to town to cope with the smooth casaba infield.

Lee Eisan's regular team will probably start the ball game and all of the fellows are sure to see action. Both groups want that delicious dinner awfully bad.

Announcing the arrival of one dozen Army-Navy Club watch charm emblems, today, T. Gordon Sollman, president of the group, said that prospective buyers had "better get them while they're hot."

Sollman, in discussing the emblem, said: "We have been considering for some time, an honor award to be given by the club to outsiders who render some service to the country, or to humanity in general. The award will probably be in a ribbon lapel in red and white."

NICHOLS SETS JUNE 11 LINE FOR BILLS

Faculty sponsors and treasurers of college organizations are asked to co-operate with Ward Nichols, Comptroller of Finance, in keeping college accounts up to date. It is imperative that all bills be presented to the Finance Office before June 11. No accounts will be settled after that date.

It is necessary to take this step in order that no bills will be left until next semester to be settled.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By PAT MADDEN

The biggest, and the only news in women's sports now, is Tourney Week, the exciting conclusion to WAA activities for the season. The organization has been unusually active and successful this semester, and the events of the week should add the final touch to a completely successful year. Every day provides at least one event to which every woman of the college has been invited, and of course there is the banquet, the crowning affair of the week.

WAA regulations require every woman to participate during Tourney Week in the sport in which she has been enrolled. This regulation is enforced because the results of the tournaments of the week will help to determine the first team awards in each sport. Each woman enrolled should be given a chance to participate in the competition for the awards.

As a post Tourney Week event, the hockey club will hold a playday with State, Saturday, March 22, at Funston Field at 9 o'clock A. M.

The recreational games section of WAA will hold open house in both gyms Friday afternoon, May 21, to which everyone in the college is cordially invited. Table tennis and badminton tournaments will be held to determine the winners of the women's singles and the mixed doubles matches in both badminton and table tennis. Anyone who has not participated in these sports officially is invited to the gym for pleasure games.

Remaining events of WAA Tourney Week, now taking place are listed as follows:

WEDNESDAY, MAY 19

Swimming—Elementary meet YWCA Pool.

THURSDAY, MAY 20

Tennis—Mixed doubles final.
Swimming—Advanced meet.

Tired Sea Lion Finds Quiet on Busy Army Dock

"Ugh! Ugh!"

No,—'twasn't a Stanford Indian,—merely a tired sea lion who, Wednesday last, crawled upon the Fort Mason dock for a wee nap, watched all the while by curious collegians and soldiers.

Measuring five feet in length, the baby lion came ambling upon the pier at 12:30 p.m., sleepily surveyed the curious dock people for a few moments and then rolled over on its side, bound for slumberland.

Two-thirty and Mr. Lion still "sawed knots". Sergeant Davis, Dockmaster, placed a fish at the animal's disposal, whereupon said fish made the well-known alimentary trip.

At three fifteen, the Alcatraz launch "McDowell" tied up, and ye lion, unmindful of several toots from the boat, sat six feet away and cast heavy-lidded eyes at the passengers as they boarded the prison vessel. Having waged a successful battle (?), upon the ships retreat, he turned over again and "took off."

Three-thirty found amused students wending their ways to class. The lion?—Oh, he kept right on snorin'—snorin'—snorin'!

Mare Island Trip Gives Army-Navy Group Supply of Awe-ful Adjectives

"Interesting." "Wonderful." "Educational." "Splendid."

A class in adjectives? No, the Army-Navy Club's reaction to their Mare Island visit, Monday, May 10, 1937.

The student cavalcade, led by Commander F. Grant Marsh, faculty, embarked from the Powell Street Building, Monday morning at 7:40 and the five cars arrived in Vallejo at 11:30.

Immediately taken into tow by two Naval officer guides furnished by the yard commandant, wide-eyed collegians encountered machine shops, lathe shops, and a bewildering assembly of mechanical equipment, excellently explained by the attending officers.

Among those elements which most attracted the body's attention was the huge, black hull of a submarine under construction and the noisy arrival of the naval transport "Chaumont" crowded with sailors.

Upon the completion of the two hour journey through the naval set-up, the party of twenty-five students retired to a shady park within the yard and enjoyed a picnic spread lunch. The group returned to the Extension Building at 4:30 p.m.

With seventy-five students still to be measured, those who have charge of the cap and gowns for graduating students have extended the time limit, in order that all might be accommodated.

Thursday, May 20, will definitely be the last chance for measurements and those who are interested should report to room 260 at Galileo between 2:30 and 4:30 p. m.

Faculty Association To Hold Annual Dinner At Women's Club May 28

Gathering in the Gold Ballroom of the Western Women's Club, the San Francisco Junior College Faculty Association will hold its second annual dinner on Friday evening, May 28, at 7:15.

The committee in charge of the affair is chairmanned by Claire Cuneo, household arts instructor who will be assisted by Flossita Badger, Margaret Dougherty, Evans Ecke, Miriam Gatley, John Gifford, Ruth Jensen, Dorothy Mercer, Ward Nichols, Helen Reveal and Henry Soule.

According to Miss Cuneo, the dinner will be semi-formal and entertainment for the evening will be contributed by members of the Faculty Association.

On Thursday, May 13, the group elected officers for the Fall semester with Joseph Williams succeeding Alfred Agosti as president, Thomas Gabbert replacing Ward Nichols as vice president, and Dorothy Mercer being re-elected treasurer. Ruth Gavin tok over the office of secretary formerly held by Margaret Flournoy. John Ross, Edward Sandys, and Agosti, were chosen as members-at-large of the Executive Committee.

Co-ed's Diary

May 13—Ah, dear diary, yesterday was the momentous day on which dear Mister George Windsor was crowned King of England. Such a thrilling event occurs only once in a lifetime, and so it was that I sent a personal telegram of congratulations to dear King George on this happy day. One of my dearest friends, Welcome Wallace, sent the telegram for me, since she lives near a telegraph station.

As you know, the Blotz, as true aristocrats, should attend the coronation in person. But pressing business at Father's goat ranch kept him at home, and I had my studying to do. The next best thing was to listen to the ceremonies over the radio, so on that historic night Father, who is still negotiating his business coup to buy the Ferry Building, Mother, Guinevere and I gathered about our new Super Static radio at the ranch, whither I had gone to visit for a few days.

The first thing we heard was a man saying, "Hello, America!" We listened and next he went on to say, "This is Archie Crumpet, speaking to you from London. It's veddy, veddy foggy and I cahn't see a thing. Cheerio!"

We were all very sleepy and yawned quite a bit, but all of a sudden we woke up, because the doorbell was ringing. Who could it be at that hour? Father answered the door.

"Telegram for Miss Elvira Blotz," said the intruder, as Father signed for the message. Well, dear diary, I was too utterly thrilled. Who could be sending telegrams to poor little me?

As Father handed me the missive, I trembled with suppressed excitement. But I almost fainted, dear diary, when I read the message, because—but here it is, copied exactly:

Miss Elvira Blotz
Hickville, California
U. S. A.

Please be informed that because of your telegram the British Crown is suing you for libel stop enclosed is a copy of tha message we ara holding the original for evidence. Stanley Baldwin

Oh, dear diary, isn't it horrible! But I don't see why they objected to my message. After all, the only thing wrong with it was that the operator misspelled dear Welcome's name. Here it is, and you can see for yourself that it is charmingly typical of what a Blotz would send:

King George VI
Care of Coronation
London, England

I am sending this for Miss Elvira Blotz, Hickville, California, U. S. A. Stop Congratulations and we hope that you will have a perfectly lovely time as King and that you will reign as long as your predecessor did stop now goodbye daar King George. Welcome Wallis

DIVERS, RACERS TO COMPETE TOMORROW

Presenting diving competition and medley relay races, the WAA swimming club will hold a meet tomorrow at the YWCA pool. Elementary participants will compete today from 12:30 to 1:30 o'clock.

Intermediate and advanced swimmers will hold their contests tomorrow, from 12:30 to 1:30.

Life saving classes will demonstrate correct technique.

WAA Tennis Group In Guardsman Cup Playoff Thursday

Concluding the tennis events for the semester will be the playoffs in both the mixed doubles and the women's singles, scheduled tomorrow at 12 o'clock at the Palace of Fine Arts, when the trophy, The Guardsman Cup, will be awarded to the winners of the mixed doubles.

The final game in this division will be played between the teams of Richard Lum and Lucille Jung, and Harold Mitchell and Faith Thomas. Much practicing has been done by both teams, so the outcome is being watched with great enthusiasm by those interested in tennis.

The departure of Helen Davis, who until last week led the women's singles tournament, placed Jacqueline Kramer in the position of winner by default. However, it was decided to hold a playoff among the five highest women on the ladder in order to decide the relative ability of each, and to determine the WAA first team awards. As a result, one woman will be placed at the top of the ladder as the outstanding tennis player of San Francisco Junior College, while the four others will be ranked in the order of the number of their wins.

Outstanding contender for the honor of leading the tournament is Dorothy Canavan, who has achieved an undefeated record so far in the last two weeks of competition. Jacqueline Kramer is expected to place high on the ladder.

The match will start at 12:30 o'clock.

75 TO ATTEND DINNER

Approximately seventy-five guests are expected to attend the semi-annual WAA banquet which will be prepared and served by students of the Hotel and Restaurant Management division in the San Francisco Junior College dining room, Friday, May 21.

GALA BANQUET ENDS CO-ED'S TOURNAMENT WEEK FRIDAY NIGHT

With the progress of women's sports as a theme, a WAA Sports Banquet will be held Friday, May 21, at 6 o'clock, in the Galileo faculty cafeteria. Every woman in the college is invited to attend; and tickets for the event may be purchased this week from members of the WAA council at 60 cents.

Concluding the program of the banquet will be the announcement of awards and the results of the WAA elections for officers. A fashion parade will be presented featuring either the progress of fashions in sports attire, or the latest styles sponsored by one of the women's shops in the city. Each manager will appear at the banquet in old-fashioned costume representing the sport which she manages.

Although it is not definite as yet, the WAA plans to have as guest speaker, Helene Meyer, fencing star from Mills, and a member of the Olympic team of 1936. Following is the banquet program:

Toastmistress—Dorothy Holcomb.
Guest Speakers—Helene Meyer and Bertha Keller.
Fashion Show.
Tap Dancing numbers.
Presentation of Awards—Ruth Johnson.
Introduction of New Officers—Vera Spencer, women's athletic instructor.

MUELLER NOW PH. D.

Adding to his store of honorary degrees, Manfred Mueller, chemistry instructor of the college, was awarded his Ph. D. degree from the University of California, last week. Mueller received his A. B. and M. A. at the same institution.

BUILDING PLANS IN ROUGH DRAFT GIVEN TO MOHR

Survey By Registrar to Determine Points Best Suited for Park Site

Educational practicability and architectural symmetry combine in the college building plans, presented in rough draft to the Administration last week.

With J. Paul Mohr, college registrar, working from the standpoint of usefulness and Chief Architect, Timothy F. Pfluger considering the architectural soundness, a careful survey is being made among the various colleges and junior colleges in California, in order that only the finest ideas in building construction may be used.

TWO TYPES CONSIDERED

"We have two types of building plans in mind," Mohr said. "One is the conventional type and the other is of a more radical nature. We are faced with an unusual problem in that our buildings will be on the crest of a hill and will have no definite distinction between the front and the back. This makes it imperative that the buildings be equally attractive from all angles."

One of the first plans to be considered fully is that for the science building. Patterned somewhat, after the Life Science Buildings at the University of California, Pfluger has added a number of revolutionary ideas. The most important of these is the arrangement of the laboratories in a manner which allows light to enter from two sides. This plan also makes the structure more compact and allows for more laboratories than would be ordinarily possible.

WORK ON OTHER UNITS

In addition to the plans for the science building, architects in Pfluger's office are working on two general schemes for the remaining units. One group is at work on the Administration buildings, while another is formulating plans for the Library, Cafeteria and Auditorium. Plans for the gymnasiums have been left until the last because the exact date for occupancy of the site depends upon the speed with which the plans for general class rooms are completed.

Speaking of the excellent job being done by Pfluger and his fellow architects, Mohr stressed their willingness to cooperate with the Administration in an attempt to secure structures which will meet adequately the demands of the junior college set-up.

"These men," he said, "are constantly on their toes for new ideas and act at once on any suggestions we may have. They are perfectly willing to enter into any number of surveys and studies in order that everything shall be just as we want it.."

FLIGHTY CHEMICALS RESPOND TO BRADY

With a resounding bang and a shower of chemical solution, Eugene Brady, president of the college Chemistry Club, displayed his authority in Chemistry 9 the other day.

It seems that Brady poured a little too much concentrated acid into a little too much sodium hydroxide with the result that the liquid leaped to the ceiling in its exuberance at being given the opportunity to neutralize.

"I wasn't scared—not much anyhow," said Brady, "but what I'm worried about is how to get that spot off the ceiling and how to regain my lost prestige."

Eight Colleges Participate In Current Shows

Conference Sponsors Art Exhibits at S. F. Museum Through Friday

With eight colleges participating, the Northern California Junior College Association art exhibit, held at the San Francisco Museum of Art with San Francisco Junior College as host, has been extended through Friday of this week, Richard Allman, art instructor in this college, has announced. San Mateo, Salinas, Marin, Placer, Williams, Stockton, Yuba, and San Francisco junior colleges, took part in the show, which was so successful that because of limited space at the museum and the number of exhibits sent in a different group was hung at the end of the first week.

TALK GIVEN

Visitors from many of the colleges participating came to San Francisco on Friday, May 14, to attend a special Students' Art Day, highlights of which was a lecture given by Claudia Davis, Curator of the museum, on "Art—Vocation and Avocation." Her talk, keyed to the student viewpoint, discussed the problem of whether or not art may be made a vocation, or whether it must be carried on by people who have other means of earning their livelihood. Miss Davis said that, with a few notable exceptions, few artists are able to make fine art their vocation, the commercial field offering the greatest opportunities to ambitious men and women. This does not mean, Miss Davis said, that one cannot make a valuable contribution to art, as evidenced by the lives of some of the most important modern painters. Many of the greatest artists have had to paint in their free time, while others could devote all their time to art only because they had some economic security..

Miss Davis later divided painting into two classes; first, decorative painting, which is chiefly concerned with pictorial beauty, and because of this is the more enjoyed by the public; second, propagandist art, which seeks to point the way to social reform.

CONDUCTS GROUP

At the end of the lecture, Charles Lindstrom, member of the museum staff, conducted the group through the other exhibits, notably the exhibit of art processes which displayed the various materials used in the different types of art, with examples of the finished pieces. Engravings, lithographs, aquatints, water colors, oils, frescoes, and mosaics were displayed in this exhibit, which was of particular help and interest to art students.

Another show in which the group displayed interest was the Karl Hofer exhibit. Hofer is one of the propagandists who reflects the bitter scenes of war-time and post-war Germany in his work, and he brings out the dependency of human beings on one another. Hofer's landscapes, however, display a dreamy quality quite different from the realistic attitude of his more human pictures.

ECKE COMMENTS

Commanting on the junior collega art exhibit, Evans Ecka, art instructor in this collega and secretary of the art section of the Northern California Junior College Association, said, "This year's show was such a success that we are hopeful about junior collage shows in coming years. It is, we believe, a stimulation for art students to see work done by students at other institutions, and wa in San Francisco are eager to come to know the othar junior colleges in tha northarn araa so that we can all work hand in hand for the furtherance of junior college art."

HIGHER LEARNING

"Hi Joe," when referred to Joe Arnold, college crew star and ace exhibitionist, is not a salutation, but a nick-name. Joe is the lad who startled his fellows by climbing, without the aid of mirrors, to the top of the flagpole in the Galileo court.

Egged on by a group of his playmates and the added incentive of a $2.00 pool, Joe shinned up the pole with all the ease of the now famous "daring young man."

Seeing that he was about to win, tha eggers-on departed with the money leaving poor Joe "holding the pole."

Never daunted, Joe soon collected another crowd and another pool and repeated his feat to the amazement and admiration of his spell-bound audience.

Joe reached the ground successfully and collected his money but when he looked around for his shoes, which he had ramoved, along with his socks, to make the climb with greater ease, they were not to be found! Some scoundrel, disapproving, perhaps, of Joe's seeming lack of respect for the mooring post of "Old Glory," had absconded with his very best pair of tootsie toasters.

Surrounded by the colorful atmosphere of the Bay Bridge Fiesta, the graduating class will hold its traditional Sophomore Formal next Friday evening, May 28, at the St. Francis Yacht Club, located on the Marina in a position overlooking the scene of the celebration activities.

Nick Morrison and his Yacht Club Commodores will furnish the music for this occasion. Tyler McHugh, class president who is in charge of the arrangements, announced that he felt he was very fortunate in obtaining the services of this popular orchestra who, he asserted, are well-known to all dance minded college students.

MOST BIDS SOLD

Most of the bids have been sold, but it is still possible to purchase the few that remain at the Comptroller's office at Galileo this afternoon at the price of $1.25, McHugh said.

In an interview for some last minute comment on the Formal McHugh declared that the arrangements are so planned that this affair is bound to be the most enjoyable social function ever sponsored by the college.

POLICE PRESENT

Because of the huge celebration to be held at Crissy Field on the same evening, police lines will be formed to prevent automobiles from entering that area. Arrangements have been made with the Police Department, however, and anyone who shows his Formal bid will be allowed to drive through the lines.

"We sincerely hope that all of the graduating Sophomores will be able to attend this affair," McHugh said, "because it is traditionally their official social adieu to junior college days. It would also please me very much to see those last few bids sold. The financial success of the Formal is already assured, but the amount of pleasure had by those attending the dance is always increased when a sufficiently large crowd is present."

HELP OFFERED

"If any member of the graduating class feels that the other expenses of the evening will put him in financial difficulties, I might be able to help him get his bid if he will come around and see me before Friday."

For the benefit of those who have not yet secured a tuxedo for the evening, McHugh has made arrangements with the Famous Tailors, 2516 Mission Street, to have a complete outfit rented to college students for $2.50.

Publication date for the college annual has been definitely set for June 3, according to word received from William Rawson, editor of the book. Those who have already paid for a journal can obtain it by presenting their ticket at the booth on the mezzanine floor of the extension building.

Under the direction of the editor, the annual staff, composed of members of The Guardsman staff, has worked diligently to present the college with an outstanding publication. All pictures have now been taken, and attention is being centered on the arrangement of the several sections into which the book will be divided. It is planned to have the picturas of the graduating class in a novel classification, while all prominent campus organizations and clubs will also be featured.

The groups whose pictures will appear in the annual include those of the Newman Club, the Rifle Club, Phi Mu Gamma, Iota Chi, Beta Phi, Block "SF" Society, Japanese Club, Chinese Club, Filipino Club, Pre-Medical Society, Chemistry Club, Household Arts Association, and several others.

A brief pictorial athletic history of the past year is also a part of the final plans for the journal. Other important sections will contain a history of the junior college since its opening in 1935 and pictures of the Associated Student officers.

Tyler McHugh, who has been in charge of sales for the annual, declared that almost 300 tickets had been sold. This number, considerably less than the number that McHugh at first estimated, barely insures the actual cost of publishing the book. These journals, which originally sold for 50 cents, can now be purchased for 75 cents, McHugh said.

Robert J. Parker, member of the history department, has announced that his book, "A Chapter in the Early Life of Thomas Oliver Larkin," will be published some time this summer. The first half of the publication has already appeared in the March issue of the California Historical Society Quarterly. The second half will be published in the June issue, after which time the Association will issue the material in book form.

Containing a foreword by Dr. Herbert E. Bolton, chairman of the history department and director of the Bancroft Library at the University of California, plus an introduction by Parker, the book deals principally with Larkin's life and experiences in North Carolina from 1821-1826. It not only paints a picture of the South of the 1820's but also reveals Larkin's character, standard of values, and views on life.

In commenting on his work, Parker stated:

"While it is true that Larkin, for whom Larkin street in San Francisco is named, spent the first twenty-nine years of his life on the East coast, his place in history was earned by his activities in California. During the time he lived in Montarey he was one of tha foremost business men on the Pacific Coast. He was the Unitad States Consul at Monterey when California belonged to Mexico and he played a dominant role in securing California for the United States."

The publication is the first in a series of biographical chapters which will eventually become a complete biography of Larkin, but it will take a number of years before the final study is ready for publication.

"Larkin's life as a political figure has been dealt with, but in this work the main emphasis has been placed on his business career to demonstrate the effect his mercantile connections and experiences had

Ceremony June 18 To Graduate 199 Argonauts

Hill, Caulfield Named as Guest Speakers at Commencement In Memorial Opera House

Commencement exercises, at which 199 students will receive their diplomas as Associates in Arts, will be held at 8 o'clock on the evening of June 18, at the War Memorial Opera House. The program will be made up of speeches by several eminent educators of the Bay District and by representatives of the graduating class.

Of the graduates, 164 will be of the June class, while 35 will be from the class of last January. Since the exercises are held only once every year, those students who complete their courses at Christmas time must return in June if they wish their diplomas to be presented formally.

The featured speaker of the evening will be Dr. Merton C. Hill, director of admissions at the University of California and co-ordinator between the university and the junior college. Dr. Hill is an authority on junior college development, and has shown an outstanding interest in San Francisco Junior College since its inception in 1935. He has worked with President Cloud in organizing the college, and is thoroughly familiar with all its activities.

Another speaker will be the Hon. C. Harold Caulfield, president of the Board of Education, who will present the diplomas. President Archibald Cloud will preside over the ceremonies.

Student speakers will be Helen Norman and Bradley Schwarz, who were selected from a large field as being best fitted to represent the graduating class.

All graduates will be attired in the traditional commencement garments, cap and gown, and will receive their sheepskins in a folder.

Music will be provided by the college A Cappella Choir and the local WPA orchestra.

Ushering will be taken care of by members of the Women's Service Society and the Cap and Meg, and admission to the exercises will be by invitation only.

Any high sophomores who have not yet been measured for caps and gowns are advised to bring their measurements to Margaret Dougherty, sophomore sponsor, as soon as possible, or have them taken by her so that arrangements can be made for procuring the garments.

For the benefit of those taking their own measurements, the following instructions have been issued: measure length from the head down, around the chest, and around the head above the ears.

The graduating women have been asked to wear white dresses, white shoes, and light stockings. Caps and gowns will be collected from the exits of the stage, according to plans.

Literary Magazine Out Today With Variety of Student Writing Types

Inaugurating its advent into literary fields, the Forum Club today presents its student magazine containing fiction, poetry, articles and features which represent the cream of the crop of literature submitted by students of the college.

Contained in the magazine are 22 poems, 13 pieces of prose, two feature articles, two short stories, a semi-fiction article, two personal articles, a humorous article, a play, a translation, a critique, and two discussion articles.

A linoleum cut designed and cut by Consuela Collins has been printed on a green French-fold cover. Last Tuesday the mimeograph began to turn out the pages of the Forum. The mimeography was done by Floyd Nelson and the stencil cutting by Urania Paizes and David Chin.

There are to be 375 copies of the Forum printed; 361 of these are either paid for or promised to date. Copies will be given upon presentation of a ticket, while those who have reserved copies may obtain theirs also at this time.

The Forum, edited by Donald Flash, consists of the literary efforts of the following authors: John Ward, George Devany, Jack Dyson, Betty Deming, Elizabeth Brown, Charles O'Gara, Jane Kiddie, Don Smith, Guilford Frolich, David Chin, Walter Giubbini, Sibyl Huming, Yoshimi Kawaguchi, Henry H. Evans, Vernon Peck, Richard W. Dennison, Ely Chertok, Helen Lever, and Jerome Lipman.

Cost of publication of the Forum amounted to $45. The staff expressed its appreciation of the extensive cooperation of the faculty and The Guardsman in this enterprise.

Originos, Haffemayer, Williams Selected to Fill Associated Student Positions; Light Voting Characterizes Friday Elections By Machine

Sweeping through with a plurality of 83 votes, Eugene Blumenthal was officially designated president of the Associated Students at Friday's election, as announced at a rally Monday. Accompanying him into the student leader position was Caroline Orginos, unopposed candidate for the vice-presidency.

With a poll of only 395 votes cast for the presidential post, the total number was an increase over that of previous semesters, and through tha use of voting machines, and careful supervision by the election committee, chairmanned by Deming Smith, voting was speedily and simply accomplished.

Complete returns were as follows:

PRESIDENT
Eugene Blumenthal (alected)	198
Bud Gardner	82
Don Mills	115
VICE-PRESIDENT
Caroline Orginos (elected)	298
SECRETARY
Lorraine Haffemayer (elected)	228
Isabel Sherratt	148
YELL-LEADER
Shiplay Prugh	132
Allen Williams (alected)	247
VOTES CAST
President	395
Vice-Presidant	298

Miss Haffemayer assumes the reporting and enscribing duties from Marie McKnight, while Allen Williams will take over the responsibilities cheer-fully shouldered this semester by Deming Smith.

Termed by faculty supervisors and the election committee as one of the most efficiently and honestly performed election procedures, credit was directed largely to the triumph of modern machinery—the voting machines—which were secured from civic authorities by the committee to facilitate voting.

Officers were formally presented to the college at a post-election rally held Monday. Members of the election committee were Dean Edwin C. Browne, Joe Amori, faculty supervisor, Tyler McHugh, and Smith.

NEW LEADER

ARMY-NAVY GROUP TO INVADE HAMILTON BASE SATURDAY

Holding its last meeting of the year, the college Army-Navy Club met last Tuesday at the home of its president, Gordon Sollman.

Discussing the season's final field trip to be held Saturday, May 29, to Hamilton Field air base in Marin County, group leaders made plans for the journey and for the ensuing outdoor picnic, to take place at a probable location on Paper Mill Creek in northwestern Marin County.

The late arrival of some emblems was explained by the manufacturing company as having broken the charm dies, with ensuing difficulty in replacing them.

Sollman, in a final statement to the press, said:

"I feel that we have accomplished much this year, and I know I speak for the entire club. Most of the founders of tha club are graduating, and although we hate to see them leave, we are going steadily forward naxt yaar.

"I might remind members of the special after-graduation trip of the club to be held on June 19 or 20 in the Santa Cruz Mountains. Our thanks go to the entire college for its attitude toward us."

Prospective members of the Forum Club are urged to attend the club banquet at the New Tivoli Restaurant, 1438 Grant Avenue, Saturday evening, May 29, at 8:30 o'clock.

The banquet will honor the first anniversary of the Forum Club, which was organized just one year ago next week. Sibyl Huming and Jerry Heilbron are arranging the entertainment. The price is 75 cents.

The Forum Club is primarily a discussion group, with informal discussions held every three weeks, but it is also organized as a literary group. Students interested in either discussion or literature will be welcome at the banquet. Those planning to attend should sign up on the bulletin board at Powell Street.

MIX ELECTED GUARDSMAN FALL SEMESTER EDITOR

Selected primarily on a basis of ability, experience and dependability, Mix has been a member of The Guardsman staff for the past two semesters, and has handled the paper from all points. During his first semester he worked in the sports department and in his position as Managing Editor conducted a column, wrote front page news and had experience on the mechanical end of the publication.

Florence Murphy, present Editor, was asked to remain with the staff as Associate Editor. Miss Murphy has been on the staff for three semesters, having been Women's Editor for two and Editor during the Spring semester.

Ardell White, Women's Editor of The Guardsman, will continue in the same capacity next semester. Miss White, in addition to her work with AWS activities, is well-known for her "Diary of A Co-ed Journalist" and her "Girligigs" column.

Dick Simpers, who has been a member of the staff for two semesters, will assume the position of Sports Editor left vacant by the graduation of Lambert Meyer. Simpers will be assisted by Ed Frediani, and though Frediani lacks the journalistic experience of Simpers he is well-informed concerning events in various sports circles.

Frances Kauffman was reelected Exchange Editor, and is expected to carry on in the efficient manner that has typified her work this semester.

Also re-elected, were Sam Galstaun, Staff Photographer and Paul Johnson, Business Manager. Both of these men have worked diligently and deserve a great deal of credit. Galstaun, outstanding for his fine work on The Guardsman, has also found time to take charge of the photography for the forthcoming annual.

SWAN SONG

We find it rather difficult to put into words the mingled feeling of regret and relief that overcomes us as we sit down at the typewriter to tap out the last few bits of writing that will compose our swan song as Editor of The Guardsman.

The position has not been an easy one nor has it been particularly difficult. Just how well we have carried out the ideals set by our predecessors is a matter of personal opinion, and while we are not completely satisfied with the way in which we have done our job, we feel that we have done the best we could under the existing circumstances.

Being a natural born follower, rather than a leader, it was a bit difficult to assume the role of dictator so necessary to a successful editor. However, with the help of our most competent faculty adviser and the capable members of our staff, we managed to struggle through a rather hectic semester and to come out on top with no cuts, bruises, or permanent scars.

To our successor, Don Mix, we can only wish the best of luck. A fine person, capable of doing big things, he should be able to produce an excellent newspaper. As we still have six months or so of junior college work to complete, we will be back next semester; and as our primary interest lies in journalism, we shall be acting in some capacity on The Guardsman staff.

To the Administration and to certain student leaders, who have so willingly lent their aid and co-operation at all times, we extend our sincere gratitude. Those individuals who were dissatisfied with our efforts we can only refer to the old fable concerning the man who tried to please everyone.

CONGRATULATIONS!

On June 18, a group of young men and women will step out upon the stage of the War Memorial Opera House to receive the pieces of parchment paper which will indicate that they have completed two years of college work.

These students will have the distinction of being the college's first real graduating class. They are the pioneers who started here as Low Freshmen when the college first opened and who have managed to go straight through during its two years of existence.

Many of these students will go on to universities and colleges and many will begin work at their chosen careers, but the great majority will go forth into the tritely termed "cold cruel world" and attempt to seek that elusive quantity, "their fortune."

Because this is the final edition for the spring semester, The Guardsman, on behalf of the Associated Students as a whole, would like to extend sincere congratulations and best wishes to the 1937 graduating class.

NO RETREAT

According to Alexander Pope, "a little knowledge is a dangerous thing," yet at the close of each semester, a certain number of students who entered with the idea of completing two years of work, leaves college with but a quarter of that work finished.

Each student has his own reason for leaving. The most prevalent one is poor grades. One student, usually unacquainted with the junior college system, will receive low marks in most of his studies. Disgusted, he will convince himself that he is only wasting his time and had better give up at the very beginning.

In most cases, this is a mistake. If a student is genuinely interested in getting somewhere and has not come to junior college merely to waste time, he should give himself another chance. It may be that once he has caught on to the system of things, he will do better work and receive better marks. As Confucius once said, "Our greatest glory is not in never falling, but in rising every time we fall."

THE BRAINS OF POWELL STREET

From time to time, various members of the faculty and administration have come in for their share of editorial appreciation. One man, however, whose intelligently directed, unceasing efforts have made the Extension building class arrangement as efficient as possible, has thus far escaped almost entirely the praise of the scribe's mill.

Like his boss, President Archibald J. Cloud, Paul M. Pitman, assistant to the president, is modest, and lets others walk away with the glory rightfully his.

Here, however, let recognition for his invaluable services on behalf of the college be officia[illegible]ed, and let students remember him, in after year[illegible] [illegible]enius of Powell Street.

The oyster is a subtle chap,
For, if he lands upon your lap,
He's certain not to leave a stain,
In hopes you'll ask him back again.

The lobster, on the other hand,
Is never sure just where he'll land,
So stains and soils your Sunday suit,
And doesn't seem to give a hoot.

The moral of this little yarn
Is, "Lobsters never give a darn,
Yet fare as well as oysters do."
I guess I'll be a lobster, too!

Being a firm believer in the old song, or something, that went "Always leave 'em laughing when you say goodbye," we simply had to start this, our last column for the semester, with one our here-now-famous "pome's." You've simply got to laugh even if you don't think it's funny, because if you don't, you not only hurt us deeply but spoil the whole point of this paragraph! What? You didn't know the paragraph had a point? Well, that just goes to show how little some people know in comparison to what other people know, or did you know that?

No, Horace, we haven't gone completely balmy, but the thought of a whole summer with nothing (much) to do and no deadlines, mid-terms, or eight o'clocks to worry about has only served to increase whatever wacky-ness we already possessed.

Then, too, we are writing this in WJ with the door locked so as not to be disturbed, and with the radiators doing their darnedest to make the place into a steam bath. We might turn them off (the radiators), but we tried and tried and can't seem to get any results. Hence, we're beginning to be affected by the heat, and, together with everything else, this column should really turn out to be something.

Here's something which may be a bit old, but is nevertheless well worth the telling. Some gals in one of Joe Amori's typing classes decided that they would like Joe to win first prize for having the best animal at the recent barn dance. With this thought in mind, they wandered down to Fisherman's Wharf and purchased a very fancy little turtle with "Mae West" engraved on its back. Placing it in a box and making the return address "Hollywood," they had the varmint delivered.

Imagine Joe's amazement when Edna Denhart burst into his class to inform him that there was a package for him at the office containing a live turtle! And imagine his still further amazement to discover that the animal was a present from "Mae West of Hollywood"!

P. S. He didn't win the prize!

PAY DIRT

By Jack Campbell

THIS world seems to be, by nature, a hero-worshipping one; and most of the worshipping seems to be for someone not known, usually never seen, by the adorer.

A modernization of an old song suggests itself: "Adeste fidelis, Presidentus Rooseveltus, etc."

San Francisco's pioneers little realize the trouble they have caused us. They buried themselves in cemeteries which are now located in the heart of the city. With the coming of rapid transit, they must be rooted out to make way for street-car lines. The more rabid of our citizenry vow—with probable truth—that they'll never get out of it alive.

Locally abounding with enthusiasm, fiesta committees, like many committees, are busiest these days transforming the city from its usual Chamber of Commerce perfection to remembrance of things past. With each district representing a distinct period and region in California history, Rip Van Winkle might do well to waken from his eighty-year sleep, come down from the mountains and visit the forty-niners who have taken Polk Street to their bosoms. A penny for progress!

By Don Mix

Having been duly chastised for our too fervent political activities of last week, the black sheep again returns—a sadder but, we're afraid, not wiser young man. If you were confused by the two "by-lines" atop this bit last week, this should serve as an explanation. Most of you realize with whom our choice in the election lay, so perhaps such an article would have served no purpose other than to cause a great deal of trouble.

It was the stated purpose of your correspondent to attempt to give a picture of things pertinent to the junior college. Well, since this is our last crack at the column, we'll ring down the curtain with a few sidelights of notable happenings around the campus during this semester.

We remember how President Neal and Yell-King Smith opened the semester with loud promises of a period of wide activity. Deming's little brainchild, the Cap and Meg, was the first and one of the most widely discussed subjects for numerous campus "beefs" when it started the memorable "dink stink." It all ended quietly, if not satisfactorily, when Hughie Waite and his Frosh cohorts put forth a noble effort in the Brawl. The Sophomore victory seemed to give the hazers a feeling of triumph, while the Freshmen were seen to wink knowingly at the rather childish antics of their elders.

Then there were those rainy nights in February and March when we used to take that weekly trek out to Kezar pavilion to see our basketball lads coast into third place. Things that impressed us most in this line were the first victory over State (we had the game story in the Guardsman the following morning), Bob Fex's tragic but loudly applauded appearance in the Sacramento series—and Bill Schoenfeld's gorgeous red "rally hat."

There were big plans for that first Block "SF" show. The paper ran long stories and three-column ads publicizing the talents of the Jambruno Players. Everybody got excited, tryouts were held and then—plunk, the whole idea was forgotten.

There was also that little movement started by the vociferous "an-yell" advocates. Ty McHugh carved his niche in college history by being the originator and certainly the chief agitator of this activity.

Weekly wind sessions in the Ex Council came in for some criticism in the public prints along about this time. This was the period when the newspaper staff gave you a vacant stare and played dumb upon receiving inquiries as to "Whoinell wrote this thing?"

The Rifle Club tried to slip into the realm of the "SF" award, but much loud squawking by the muscle [illegible] [illegible]d them to develop a special awa[illegible] [illegible]ey did with a vengeance, and no[illegible] around sporting swanky white sw[illegible] [illegible]orated with an immense emble[illegible]

The Fights and the Ban[illegible] [illegible]ovided all and sundry with an c[illegible] animal spirits—blood, knockouts, straw, crowds, and hillbillies, etc.

There are many things that we would like to write about at some length, but we've about used up our "ration" of space. We would like to give some of the stories connected with our athletic doings—how the crew folded up after seeming to be unbeatable in early season competition, why the baseballers couldn't win a game, raw track meet and so on, infinitum. Such, we can see, will have to be relegated to bull sessions, which themselves go on infinitum.

Recently we have been hearing quite a little about an interesting phenomenon called a "cultural lag," and having no idea what it might be, have scouted around and received the following definition from one who goes in for that sort of thing (we are paraphrasing Stoopnagle): a cultural lag is like, for example, when you are faced with the problems and situations of a 1937 world and nevertheless persist in thinking in the terms of 1850.

As a result of the cultural lag, might there not also be a political lag? The answer seems to be yes, decidedly, as evidenced by a strange situation that is occupying the attention of feminist thinkers all over the world. Although France is one of the first-ranking world powers, and although she is considered to be one of the most progressive countries in the world, French women are denied the right to vote. This is the more surprising, because the liberal Socialist cabinet is now in power, and also because in France there are seven women to every man.

In France, women have long been emancipated, to a large degree, economically. They had to be, for with most of the employable men killed off by a long series of wars, they were needed to do the work of the country. But although Frenchmen had taken women out of the home, they have been slow about granting her political rights. This hostile attitude is thoroughly resented by progressive French women, and, during the last election, crowds of them paraded the streets bound in chains and carrying placards reading, "La France doit voter." An ironical note entered the picture when it was made known that the formerly completely subjugated women of Turkey now have equal suffrage rights, while France, one of the most progressive countries in the world, denies her women the right to vote. A political lag?

Summer draws nigh, and, once over the last hurdle of finals, students can settle down to enjoying vacation. Perhaps you are planning to travel during the merry months of July and August, or perhaps you are going to be a stay-at-home, with or without the monetary advantages of a summer job, but, whatever you do, you have Girl-i-gigs' best wishes for an enjoyable time till we meet again next fall, a few months older; a few shades darker.

I want to thank all of you who have so willingly and whole-heartedly co-operated with the activities sponsored by the Associated Students this semester; both you who have helped to make them possible, and you who have attended and helped to make them successful.

As I look back over the past few months, I am glad that I have had this opportunity to serve as your president, and only hope that I have lived up to your expectations of me in this capacity.

I wish the best of luck to the incoming officers, for they are a sincere and capable group having the best interests of our college at heart.

I know that you will give them the same whole-hearted support that you have given me during the past semester.

Thank you.

After Dark

By John Ward

The fifteenth season of the San Francisco Opera Association has at last been announced: stars, repertoire, and conductors. It now appears that Gaetano Merola and the board of directors are as conservative as they are sure of themselves. Nothing later than Puccini is to be presented. Many old and established favorites are to be repeated. In an interesting and creative age, a pat organization has again played safe by staying near home base.

Lakme, Manon, Traviata, Rigoletto, Lohengrin—these make up the main season. Tristan und Isolde will be repeated from last season—Flagstad and Melchior creating the lovers as few singers can or have. Fritz Reiner will again conduct the Wagner. And the season will be another regular, but sterling repetition of the last five seasons of local opera.

It now appears that some radical changes should take place before the 1938 season. The San Francisco Opera Company is certain of sell-out houses, no matter what it chooses to present. This has been proved on many occasions. Why, then, not sail a few uncharted seas? Some of the finest of opera music has yet to stir within the Memorial Opera House. Pelleas et Melisande, Boris Goudonof, Wozzeck—these three of outstanding importance, yet Mr. Merola cannot see fit to place them in one of his seasons. It has long been accepted that Mr. Merola is quite prejudiced—in favor of Italian opera and singers. (One wonders if the miraculous appearance of Flagstad has not been so tremendous as to force Merola's hand to Wagner and now to Beethoven.)

Among the incredible occurrences of the last few seasons has been the production of only one opera by Strauss, and that the one-act Salome. And it seems equally incredible that such a singer as Lottie Lehman should have been given lesser roles to sing, when her fame for certain other roles is international. Again, why the repeated appearances and re-engagements of men like Martinelli, who are no longer the great singers that they were? Is it not about time that certain changes are made either in policy or in personnel? San Francisco is surely big enough musically to demand higher and more meaty fare than has been handed out these fifteen years.

Why must a financial success, which Mr. Merola and company have realized, go hand in hand with conservatism of a radical sort? This is an age-old question and one that needs little answer in this instant. It needs must appear that in working for ideals and for success, the world has sped by Mr. Merola and his compatriots, and left them under the delusion that playing safe and depending on the popular is a necessity and part and parcel of success. What will happen next when the San Francisco Opera Association finds that it has money in the bank, which guarantees now assure? Can it be hoped that the treasure house will be opened and a few "chances" taken? It is to be doubted. Mr. Merola has given no sign of generosity as yet. Perhaps it will take outside means—fair or foul. Let us hope not!

GADDY'S SWORDSMEN AT WORK

Coach Jack Gaddy, it seems, is a bit partial to sporting events involving the use of blades. Not satisfied with the coaching of crew alone, Gaddy has managed to train the group of fencers shown above. Leon Tichini and Rhys Jones (inset) are two of the outstanding members of the class.

By LAMBERT MEYER

Another sports season has been brought to a dramatic climax. It was a queer athletic semester for the San Francisco Junior College with two of the squads taking championships and the other three finishing the conference race in lower positions.

The tennis team, coached by Tom Wilson, was successful in winning nine encounters and suffering only one defeat to emerge with the Junior College Conference trophy. The netsters displayed brilliant tennis ability by defeating powerful college squads from time to time throughout the season. Trophy number one for the Rams.

Then it was Coach Jack Gaddy's strong crew outfit that finished the league season in a three-way tie for rowing honors. The oarsmen were resting in first position when along came the U. S. F. stalwarts to defeat the crewmen in the last race of the season, thus to bring about a triple championship. There may still be a row-off at the end of this month. Trophy number two for the Rams.

Coach "Dutch" Conlan's basketball team looked like champions upon returning from its successful tour of the southland, where it won six straight tilts, but had a rocky conference season that found the hoopsters resting in third position on the N. C. J. C. C. A. ladder when the final game had been played.

The Ram cindermen were just not good enough for their track rivals and won only one meet during the track and field period. Although Coach Russ Sweet's men met strong squads, they were not even a threat to their competitors. In the "Big Meet" at Marin the Rams collected only six points to finish the season in fifth position. The outlook is bright for a successful cinder team in 1938, as most of the men return next year.

Coach Lee Eisan's baseball club just couldn't get going and from week to week the nine lost heart-breakers to sloppy ball teams. Eligibility rulings ruined the Rams' chances of staying on top of the heap, and as the season drew to a close the Ram ballhawks had lost over half of their conference games. Here is another outfit that has championship hopes for 1938.

You can't be winners in everything, and four championships in two years of athletic competition cannot be held lightly. Since the Junior College opened in '35 we have had a basketball winner, a tennis championship, a crew winner and an unbeatable soccer team. What college could ask for more in such a short period of time?

So the 1937 sport season is at an end, as far as Ram teams are concerned, and not one single player in the institution has cause to feel ashamed for the way his outfit finished in the league race.

We want to take this opportunity to extend our sincere thanks to the men on The Guardsman staff who aided in making this sports page a success during the past semester. Appreciation is extended to Louie Bertolucci, Don Mix, Ed Frediani, Tony Scafani, Dick Simpers, and Sam Galstaun. All of the writers worked together throughout the spring term and should receive due credit. Most of these scriveners return in the fall and will do much to make up a bigger and better sports section. Thanks again, gang, and here's wishing you all lots of luck.

Our most ardent faculty rooter is Thomas Gabbert, Spanish instructor. Senor Gabbert attends every Ram sporting event that is held in San Francisco and thoroughly enjoys each inter-college encounter. His favorite game seems to be baseball, as he has seen the Eisanmen in all their games at Funston Field this season.

Menlo Junior College has finally broken the ice to come through and win a Northern California Junior College Conference championship. Charles (Bud) Finger, Menlo's number one divot digger, won the junior college golfing title recently, defeating his teammate, Bob Skelly, in the finals on the Stanford golf course, 1 up. The two top ranking golfers in the conference, namely, Finger and Skelly, hail from Menlo. The peninsula players were presented the team award when they won the tourney with a total of 315. Individual medalist was Dee Replogle with a 74, three over par. Myers of Modesto and Finger of Menlo hung up 75's.

San Francisco was not entered in the tournament.

San Mateo displayed its track and field superiority at the Fresno Relays when the Bulldogs took second to the Pasadena squad in the junior college class. The Mateans collected 29 points and smashed two national junior college records to miss winning the title by only three points. Those two great San Mateo competitors, Bill Wohle and Cecil Cole, were outstanding, as was expected.

Chandler Ennis, Ram net ace, was the victim of untimely cramps at the recent N. C. J. C. C. A. tennis playoffs at Stanford. In both the singles and doubles matches, Ennis was overcome by pains, and was forced to leave the courts and forfeit the matches. San Mateo and Modesto were the victorious racket outfits.

The present junior college crew conference situation is a laugh. As there are only four colleges in the league the competition has been tough, and when San Francisco, San Mateo and U. S. F. tied for first place, Oakland Poly, the only team in the league that didn't win a boat race, found itself nestled securely in second position spot, although it had no wins and six defeats. For taking a second in the conference, the mechanic crew from the East Bay will probably be presented with a second place trophy, while the three outfits tied for the championship continue to wrangle on how to settle the three-way tie. It is entirely possible that a race between the three top boats will be held on Memorial Day to determine the champion.

The Guardsman batting trophy is now in the possession of Dick Holmes, Ram infielder. Dick won the silver ornament by hitting the old apple at a .405 clip to lead all San Francisco Junior College batters throughout the baseball season. The lanky trophy winner collected 15 base hits in 37 times at bat to lead all of the other Eisanmen. He scored 10 runs for his team in all the games in which he participated.

Dave "King Kong" Smith, former San Francisco Junior College boxing champion, lost a decision to Bill Radunich, San Jose State heavy, in the first round of the Pacific Association Amateur battles held at Dreamland recently. In the most slashing brawl of the evening, Radunich visited the canvas in the initial canto to take a six-count, but came on in the second and third rounds to let loose and plaster Smith with both rights and lefts to earn the nod of the referee.

* * * *

A bunch of daisies to Don Mix, Associated Men's Student prexy, and Joe Amori, adviser to the organization. The recent Barn Dance under the direction of both men was the swellest event ever put on by the San Francisco Junior College. This is not just our opinion, but a consensus of nine out of nine lasses and lads, who attended the gala affair. Everyone who attended thoroughly enjoyed himself to the utmost. Dick Holmes, baseballer, had such a grand time that he arrived home in the early morning, but played a stirring game of ball the following afternoon to annex for himself The Guardsman batting trophy.

The track banquet originally planned for last Friday night was called off in order that both the track and baseball teams could hold their dinners together this evening. Unless further complications develop, the place will be Veneto's Restaurant, corner Bay and Mason streets.

It's a trifle late to harp on the subject of swimming just now, but the junior college certainly missed a sure bet when it passed up an opportunity to form an aquatic squad. With such outstanding mermen as Herb Brotman, Dick Simon, Bob Winberg, Ward Cox, Bob Shine, and a host of other swimming champs, the college would have made a great name for itself in water circles. A group of the stars held a duel meet against California at the beginning of the semester and lost by a single point. This meet was held without a practice session, and the fellows entered events that they had never participated in before. Yes, we had a great aquatic team under our roof and failed to do anything about the situation. Never again will the college have such a splendid chance to be first in swimming meets around the bay area.

A mild upset came near taking place last Thursday afternoon, when the baseball team just barely missed defeating the basketball nine by something like a one run margin. The contest was a riot of fun with errors being as frequent as bases on balls. Treacy Slattery hurled the whole game for the basketball men, but had little support from his fielders. Of course, many of his offerings were not exactly over the heart of the plate. Coach "Dutch" Conlan pitched for one inning and refused to allow a bingle. He struck out one batter. Home runs by Jackie Berutich, Paul Rippon and "Chubby" Kotta kept the game interesting, together with the frequent arguing with the umpires.

INELIGIBILITY COST RAMS 5 WINS; GAVE POSITION IN CELLAR

The Northern California Junior College Conference baseball title today rested in joint ownership between Modesto and Marin. The two teams came up out of the league with 14 wins and six losses to their credit to go into a tie for the championship. According to Commissioner Paul Mohr, that is how the circuit will end; there will not be a play-off for the title.

Sacramento, the favored nine throughout the season, took second place, one game behind the leaders with 13 wins and seven defeats. San Mateo was third and Santa Rosa fourth. The San Francisco nine took last place with 20 defeats.

The final league standings were somewhat upset by the fact that the Rams, who really had won five conference games, were forced to forfeit their victories because of the ineligibility of several of their players. This actually gave Modesto a tie for the crown as the Red and White had beaten them twice, but had to give up the tilts.

Because of the same ruling, the San Mateans finished in third place, whereas they would have occupied fourth position. The Rams had beaten the Peninsula nine three times.

Following is the final standings of the teams:

	Won	Lost	Points
Modesto	14	6	28
Marin	14	6	28
Sacramento	13	7	26
San Mateo	10	10	20
Santa Rosa	9	11	18

DICK HOLMES GARNERS BATTING TROPHY BY LATE SEASON SPREE

Putting on a determined hitting spree that could not be matched by any of the Ram baseball players, Dick "Sherlock" Holmes, San Francisco infielder, came out of the final contest with an unsurpassable batting average of .405 to win The Guardsman trophy offered to the leading Ram batter for the 1937 baseball season.

Holmes started his rampage with but three games left to play, and used the willow to his advantage, to overtake Paul Hjort with an average of .386. Hjort was unable to play the final four contests because of ineligibility.

Third place in base hits went to Joe Manning with .364, followed by Bruno Lucchesi with an average of .333.

Following are the final batting averages for the 1937 baseball season:

Wilson's Tennis Team Wins Ten Net Competitions

Ten wins, one loss. That's the splendid record set up by Coach Tom Wilson's tennis team for the past semester. The net team composed of Bill Lazzeri, Kay Lyman, Al Attfield, Bill Cardinal, Chandler Ennis and Harold Mitchell won the Northern California Junior College Conference championship and trounced strong non-conference college squads.

Prospects for another championship aggregation in '38 are bright, as many of the netmen remain and more racquet wielders are expected from the high schools.

The team did not drop a contest during the practice season, its only loss being at the end of the conference race, to the strong San Mateo outfit.

Following is a summary of the season's play:

San Francisco, 9 matches; U. S. F., 2 matches.

San Francisco, 8 matches; San Francisco State, NO MATCHES.

San Francisco, 6 matches; Salinas, 2 matches.

San Francisco, 5 matches; Modesto, 2 matches.

San Francisco won on a forfeit from Sacramento.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By PAT MADDEN

Climaxing Tourney Week and the entire semester of WAA activity, the WAA banquet was held last Friday night. The banquet, at which the new officers of the organization were introduced, marks the official end of the WAA year. To the outgoing officers we offer congratulations for their fine work and to the incoming officers we wish success and good luck!

Reviewing the semester of activity, it is found that playdays were the form of interschool competition that was followed by most of the clubs.

The tennis and baseball clubs appeared to maintain their supremacy in playdays with State, Marin, and San Mateo. The basketball, swimming, and recreational games clubs offered a large and successful playday and luncheon, with Marin, State and Santa Rosa competing at the YWCA. A playnight was held by State to which every club sent representatives.

WAA REPRESENTED

The WAA, for the first time in the history of the junior college, sent to the San Mateo conference of AWS and WAA officers, two representatives to place the WAA of San Francisco Junior College among the leaders in maintaining fine organization of the Women's Athletic Association.

Each club made an effort during the past year to include in the list of events for the semester, a number of intramural activities. The riding club held a number of rides and the moonlight ride and picnic stand out in the minds of the entire riding group. Concluding riding event was the horse show, held last Thursday night, at which the members of the club entered competition for first place ribbons in various events.

GUARDSMAN CUP AWARDED

Tennis elimination tournaments took the form of women's singles and doubles and mixed doubles, the winners of the latter receiving the trophy, the "Guardsman Cup."

Basketball was played by the four teams, grouped in two classes to determine the winner of each by freshmen-sophomore competition. A round robin tournament ensued which was concluded when the winners from each section played the final game last week.

Recreational games formed a women's singles and doubles tournaments and as a new activity, a mixed doubles badminton tournament. Table tennis was played in both women's singles and doubles. The conclusion of the program of events put on by that club was an open house held last Friday afternoon in both gyms to which everyone in the college was invited. Two swimming meets, held last Wednesday and Thursday were the only intramural activities of the swimming club. The elementary meet was held first, and on Thursday the advanced class featured exhibition swimming and diving and the correct technique of life-saving.

ARCHERS SHOW FORM

Archery and fencing groups contented themselves with the interclass tournaments and practice for advancement in the comparative scores of the classes. Archery staged a demonstration last week of the correct shooting form, and held a unique match called a "clout shoot" with the targets laid flat on the ground. Dancing and hockey were not overly active this year. The dancing club attended the recital held by Trudi Schoup. A hike held by the club was attended by the three dancing classes—elementary, advanced tap and modern dancing. Tap dancing numbers were the feature of the WAA banquet program which concluded the dancing events for the semester.

And so the semester ends with high hopes for a bigger program of events next year, and felicitations for the successful ones of the last semester.

Scribes Name Tony Scafani and Ardanaz

Local Second Sacker and Outfielder Placed on Honor Roll

With the 1937 baseball season finally at an end, the official All-Scribes All-Conference nine is hereby submitted. The team was picked by sports writers Lambert Meyer and Louie Bertolucci, and is based on the performances of the players in the four games played against San Francisco, and on hear-say from other squads.

Sacramento and Marin led the teams in placing men on the nine, each grabbing off three places. Santa Rosa and San Francisco placed two men, with Modesto taking one position.

On the All-Conference team have been placed two pitchers and two catchers. The unanimous choice for the chucker's assignment went to Bob Creighton of Marin, a hold-over from last year's all-star nine, and Lazzarone from Sacramento. Both stood out all year 'round as the best in the circuit.

Behind the plate are Freeman and Jameson of Santa Rosa and Sacramento, respectively, who won out because of their hitting ability. The league boasted at least two other catchers who could have been placed on the first nine. Ed Arvedi of San Francisco and Dwight Moore of Modesto, two little fellows, were tops behind the plate but didn't wield so heavy a willow as Freeman and Jameson.

The only real stand-out in the infield was Johnny Allen of Marin. He could be placed at shortstop by himself and do a good job of retiring the side. His scintillating catches and bullet arm were prevalent in every game. Johnny has already won honors as an all-conference basketball and football player.

Di Gregorio of Sacramento was the only man who could give Allen a run for the shortstop post. Although he also played the short-patch and we have placed him behind Allen, it is impossible to leave a ballplayer of his caliber off the nine. So, to make room for him, he has been moved to third base where he could play just as good ball.

Little Tony Scafani took the second base position. Tony appeared to be the best of the second-sackers, and hit a fair 300. He was too inconsistent, but his performances on his good days rate him as the choice for the honors.

The last place in the infield, first base, goes to Graham of Santa Rosa. He was given a close race by Berman of San Francisco, but finally won out because of his consistency and hitting. Graham wasn't a flashy fielder, but usually came up with the ball. He hit more than .333, which is pretty good for a country lad.

More trouble came up in the selection of the outfield. The league possessed three very good centerfielders in Polidoro of Modesto, Adams of Marin, and Ardanaz of San Francisco. The trio was so good that it was given the fly-chasers assignments. All of them had good arms and could hit the ball. The Modestan, Polidoro, was the fastest, and appeared stronger in getting the ball in, so he was left in center field, with Adams taking over the left side, and Ardanaz shifted to the right side.

BASEBALLERS SCORE NEAT VICTORY OVER CONLAN'S PLAYERS

The "blood" ball game between "Dutch" Conlan's "Three Ring Circus" and Scafani's "Black Irishmen" resulted in an 11 to 8 victory for the Irish (?).

Tracey Slattery started on the mound for the "Circus" nine, and pitched good ball, but the antics of most of the "Circus Clowns" donated some unearned runs to the Irish. "Dutch" Conlan relieved Slattery in the last inning, and the baseball boys made him feel good by letting him get the side out without any trouble.

For the Irish, Paul Hjort was the starting hurler, followed by Scafani and Dave Johnson. They allowed six hits between them.

Box Score:

Conlan's	8	6	5
Scafani's	11	12	1

NYA Workers Warned to Ask Now For Fall Jobs

Warning has again been issued to all students who are now employed on NYA and who desire work next semester, to see Helene Turner, NYA director immediately.

"Failure to sign up at once," Miss Turner said, "will result in loss of eligibility for NYA positions next fall."

Miss Turner said that those who are not employed at the present time and who wish to apply for NYA aid for next semester should see her as soon as possible.

Crew Concludes Successful Bow In Conference

College crewmen will terminate their activities when they engage in the special Fiesta Regatta on next Monday, May 31, over a course that will end in front of the grandstands at Crissy Field, Coach Jack Gaddy announced. This is a sprint race of about 1000 meters, and will find the Rams pitted against boats from San Mateo Junior College, U. S. F. Freshmen, and Polytechnic College of Engineering of Oakland.

The local galley will be rated as a slight favorite in this meeting because all reports indicate that Gaddy's men are the finest sprint aggregation in the bay area.

RECORD GOOD

Finishing its season in a triple tie for the championship, the Red and White crew has established an impressive record in its first year of conference competition. Counting its participation in the Fiesta contest, the San Francisco boatmen have engaged in 18 races and managed to finish first 12 times, which is a pretty fair average in any league. An anticipated win next Monday would raise this win total to 13.

Gaddy's novice sweep swingers gave promise of their later success when they scored a surprise triumph in the Washington Cup Races over several veteran club and college crews.

GADDY JUGGLES

The early practice season saw Coach Gaddy constantly juggling his lineup in order to find a winning combination. He sent his galley against all the prep school boats during March to give his men actual racing experience and to determine whom he would use in the conference races of April and May. The junior collegians usually managed to return the victors in this type of competition despite, the personnel of the boat, their most notable win being chalked up over the A.A.A. championship Balboa crew.

Conference competition on April 10, and the Ram cutter showed evidence of diligent coaching by knocking over all competition in the first round of races, and the end of the month saw it resting in undisputed possession of the top league spot.

SUCCESS NOT LASTING

Such success was not fated to last however, and the second round of contests saw the confident crewmen losing two out of three meetings, the only win being over the woefully weak Oakland Poly crew. This disappointing effort in the final stages of the league race cost the Rams the championship, and gave San Mateo and U.S.F. a hold on the title.

Taken as a whole, the Gaddy machine far exceeded early season expectations, and deserves a great deal of credit for its fine performance over the course of the whole season. Incidentally, the San Francisco crew made the best mark of the season over the much traveled Yacht Harbor course when it covered the 2000 meter waterway in 6:51 in a practice race against Galileo High School.

MADE MAJOR SPORT

In recognition of the excellent record that was established this season it was decided to make crew a major sport and to award block "SF" to the oarsmen.

AND OTHERS

Freshman Bob Caratto stroked the crew through most of the races and showed up in top style every time out. Elmer "Hello Men" Hubacker worked in the net spot and likewise handled himself in a consistently capable fashion throughout the season. The hardest pulling man in the boat was undeniably the hefty 200 pound "Tip" Hamilton. Don Mix completed the port side.

Pudgy Carl Brogger and the pole climbing Joe Arnold were other first year men who turned in first class sweep pulling in all the tussles. Certainly the most improved oarsman and possibly one of next year's best prospects is the muscular Art "Piggy" Nelson. The pilot's duties were taken care of by the colorful and conscientious Bob Fujimoto.

AWARDED TONIGHT

Coach Gaddy had little occasion to dip into his reserve talent, but he had several efficient crewmen who could have stepped into a first boat position at any time. Among these were Merv Weiner, Ed Cassidy, Art Benson, Verne Morse, Jenning Smith, and "Slim" Fisher.

Crewmen will receive their awards at a banquet this evening, Gaddy said.

Final grades for the spring semester will be available for distribution in the Registrar's Office on and after Monday, June 28, between the hours of 9:00 and 5:00. Anyone wishing to have his grades mailed to him should leave a self-addressed, stamped envelope in the Registrar's Office. This envelope should be large enough to hold 4-inch by 6-inch cards.

With nominations by petition, the semi-annual Associated Women Students elections will be held on June 1 at 10 o'clock in Room 101 at the Extension Building. Petitions, each signed by 25 AWS members, have been turned in to Elaine Dominguez, president of the organization, and will serve as substitutes for the procedure of nominations from the floor used in preceding elections. The new method is in accordance with the AWS constitution.

Offices to be filled are those of president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer, with four class representatives also to be chosen. Incumbents in the executive positions are Elaine Dominguez, president; Barbara Latz, vice-president; Norma Parent, secretary, and Patricia Madden, treasurer.

According to unverified rumors, Miss Parent and Miss Madden will run for president, Florence Murphy and Marion Andrqvitch for vice-president, Marion Yager and Pat Tobin for secretary, and Gail Hanna and Virginia Kiwatt for treasurer.

On June 2, from 4 to 6 o'clock in the Howell Art Gallery, 464 Post Street, the AWS will entertain women students of the graduating classes of January and June, 1937, at a tea. Geraldine Roberts is chairman of the committee having charge of the affair, and the administrative staff of the college is invited.

Swicegood In As WAA Leader With Wormell

Officially installed at the semi-annual Women's Athletic Association banquet, held last Friday evening, the following women will serve as WAA officers for the Fall semester: Gloria Swicegood, president; Margaret Wormell, vice-president; Dorothy Canavan, secretary, and Gail Hanna, treasurer.

One of the highlights of the evening was the presentation of block blazer jackets to Junerose Bellew, Dorothy Fidiam, Anita McKay, and Gloria Swicegood. These jackets are the highest award obtainable in WAA activities and are awarded on a basis of attitude, sportsmanship and service to WAA.

Taneko Amemiya and Jeanne Cassinelli were named members of the recreational games first team and Louise Lyon, Isabel Sherratt, and Phoebe Watwood were given second team awards.

HOUSEHOLD ARTS IN 'BON VOYAGE' TO CLAIRE CUNEO

Because many members of the Household Arts Association are leaving college in June and their faculty sponsor is planning a trip to the Orient, "Bon Voyage" will be the theme for the last meeting of the group, which will be held at the home of Claire Cuneo, HAA faculty sponsor, Thursday, May 27, at 3:30 o'clock.

All members are asked to come dressed in their best traveling togs and with their luggage, HAA officers said. Upon their arrival they will go through a rigid customs inspection and prizes will be awarded to the tourists having the most unique traveling equipment.

The following officers elected for the fall semester will be installed Thursday afternoon: president, Marjorie Delhi; vice president, Caroline Orginos; secretary, Cecile Thompson, and treasurer, Lillian Moruwaki.

Men's Club Leaders To Be Chosen Today

Election of officers for the Associated Men Students will be held this afternoon at 2:10 o'clock in the Galileo cafeteria, according to Don Mix, retiring president of the organization. Faculty Adviser Joe Amori urged that all men students attend this meeting and take part in selecting next semester's Men's Club leaders.

DEISER, BENTON VIE FOR RIFLE, PISTOL TOP SPOT

Election of officers for next semester will be the main business of the college Rifle and Pistol Club this week. Nominations were concluded at a meeting held last Wednesday, May 19, and voting will take place today and tomorrow.

Nominees for the office of president are George Dieser and John Benton; for vice-president, Priscilla Smith and Gail Hanna; for secretary, Virginia Kwiatt, Janet O'Neill and Gail Hanna; for treasurer, Fred Wright, Frank Doupnik, and John Benton; and for Board of Control, Frank Doupnik, Gail Hanna, Virginia Kwiatt, Bill Carroll, George Deiser, Chas. Doudiet, Helen Eltoft and Ronald Smith.

According to the organization's social committee, the recent picnic held at Alum Rock Park was most successful and the next event on the club calendar will be a swimming party held somewhere in the city. After the swim, the group will gather at the home of one of the members and wind up the evening with cards and dancing, followed by refreshments. The exact date will be announced later and all members are urged to attend as it will be the last get-together of the semester.

Significance of Larkin Research to Be Marked In Historical Journal

upon his political services to the United States."

Parker has published numerous articles in educational and historical journals. He is now editing a valuable manuscript written by Larkin in 1831. The significance of this letter lies in the fact that it proves historians in error for assuming that Larkin was in New England in 1831, when, as the letter shows, he was still in North Carolina. The manuscript will appear in the September issue of the California Historical Society Quarterly.

Freedom Rings May 27, 31; Holidays!

Students of the college will be treated to two days of freedom during the next few weeks, according to an announcement from the registrar's office.

Thursday, May 27, has been declared a holiday to celebrate the opening of the Golden Gate Bridge Fiesta. Memorial Day, which falls on a Sunday, will be commemorated on Monday, May 31, with all classes being excused.

HELL WEEK HITS FROSH AS ELDERS BRANDISH PADDLE

Inter - Class Events Fill Friday Welcome Plans With Dance as Climax

To acquaint newcomers with the activities of the junior college, Hell Week, under the direction of Yell Leader Alan Williams, is now in progress. This period of freshman initiation was officially opened yesterday at a rally which was followed by a dance in the Women's Gymnasium. Further events scheduled for the week include the traditional Soph-Frosh Brawl which will be held on Friday, a football game between the college's Flying Lambs and Galileo High School, and as a climax on Friday evening, a semi-formal dance to be held at the Women's City Club.

At yesterday's rally members of the entering class were welcomed by both faculty and student leaders in a series of short addresses.

Don Mills, president of the Men's Club, has announced that all arrangements for the Brawl have been completed. He disclosed that the events will be held in the Galileo Gym on Friday from 2:30 to 3:30 o'clock. He also stated that the administration has permitted all classes to be excused at this hour.

FULL PROGRAM LISTED

Working with faculty adviser Joe Amori, Mills has listed a series of the usual rough house events for the interclass competition. The riotous tie-up, the egg fight, the jousting, and the tire race are all on the program along with several innovations in brawl events. Last year's most exciting tilt, the basketball game with boxing gloves laced on the hands of contestants, will again be featured, but this time the period of play will be extended so as to give the lads more opportunity to bounce each other around.

John Cronin, former Sacred Heart grid star, has tentatively been appointed leader of the low freshmen for the day's warfare, according to Mills.

WAR DECLARED

"All freshmen, whether they intend to compete or not, should show up on Friday to cheer on their mates to a victory over the common enemy of all frosh, the sophomore," Cronin said.

Mills announced that there is plenty of room for spectators in the gym and that he wants every student of the college there to see the fun.

Immediately following the brawl a grid contest will be staged on the Galileo Field. This meeting will hring together Coach Jack Gaddy's junior college reserves, sometimes known as the Flying Lambs, and the potential prep champions, Galileo High School.

DANCE AT NIGHT

On Friday evening at 8:30 o'clock, a dance will be held at the Women's City Club, located on Post Street between Geary and Mason, according to Caroline Orginos, vice president of the Associated Students and head of the social committee. The affair will be semi-formal and admission will be free with student body cards. According to reports, an excellent orchestra has been procured for the evening. All students, hut more particularly the low freshmen are urged to attend the opening affair of the junior college social season, according to the vice president. Miss Orginos further stated that a couple will be admitted with one Associated Students Card.

Alan Williams, in his position as rally committee leader, has appointed some forty members of the sophomore class as official salesmen of the frosh dinks and has given them full power to extend their persuasiveness to the use of a paddle if necessary.

DINKS AND PADDLES

Williams said that the freshmen are under no official obligation to purchase the dinks, but that he felt that the traditional paddle wielding ability of the upper classmen should prove convincing to any hesitant members of the freshman class.

Organizations Allow Variety Of Interests

Shoot, Cook, Sing, Write, Sew Star-Gaze

For the benefit of the entering freshman the more important organizations around the college are listed below. Groups who are allowing members of the freshman class to join them have named their club leader so that the newcomer may know whom he must inquire for participation in his desired activity.

Upon paying his student body fee the new student automatically becomes a member of the Associated Students and either the A.M.S. for men or the A.W.S. for women. The male group, usually designated as the Men's Club, is under the faculty supervision of Joe Amori and has Don Mills as its president. Other officers in this club are Vice President Arthur Nelson, Secretary Bob Neal and Treasurer Merv Weiner.

Associated Women Students has Norma Parent as its president.

Among the most active clubs in the college are the Rifle and Pistol Club which is directed by James Hughes of the faculty and the Army and Navy Club with John Stewart as its student leader. Both of these organizations are anxious to enlarge their membership roles by the addition of likely freshmen. The military organization is of course limited to men, but the gun group is open to both men and women.

Those whose interests follow the line of literature and poetry can affiliate themselves with the Forum Club by seeing either student Fred Vast or instructor Dorothy Mercer.

Of special interest to women students who are taking Home Economics as their major is the Household Arts Association. This organization is open to all women students, however, and is hopeful of gaining many new members from the low freshman class.

Music lovers will find those who have common interests in the newly organized junior college Music Club. A subdivision of this organization is the A Cappella Choir. The music group, besides its activities as a club, also makes public appearances during the course of the semester and is often a part of the college rallies and assemblies.

The excellent facilities for observation of Galileo High School make the Astronomical Society at the college of great interest to those who wish to study the solar system. Jack Debenham is the student who is the leader of this group.

All the Catholic students of the college are united in the Newman Club, a national students' religious organization. Announcement of the first meeting of this group will appear in the next edition of The Guardsman.

The Chinese, Filipino and Japanese Societies will also announce the dates of their first meetings in coming editions of the paper.

Those who are enrolled in the Hotel and Restaurant management courses will unite themselves under the leadership of Dick Purdy in the Hotel and Restaurant Managers Society.

Membership in either of the college's two fraternities, Beta Phi and Iota Chi, is restricted to the choice of the present members.

SERVICE—BY THE COLLEGE

Putting its education to practice, the Hotel Division opens Marina Junior High School's cafeteria. Above: Marina students rush the lunch hour. Below: Principal Walter Nolan (center, rear) enjoys the first lunch served at his school by junior college students.

HOMELESS COLLEGE WANDERS FAR AND WIDE; NEED ROUTES?

With a large enrollment of new students reported by the registrar's office this semester, The Guardsman offers the following information regarding the location and accessibility of the various buildings in which the college is housed.

The buildings used by the junior college are the University of California Extension Building at 540 Powell Street, the Galileo High School at Van Ness and Francisco Streets, Girls High School on Scott Street between Geary and O'Farrell and the most recent addition, the Samuel Gompers Trade School at Twenty-Second and Bartlett Streets.

The extension Building can be reached by cars 1, 2, 3, 4, and the Powell Street Cable Car. Transfers from Market Street Railway cars are accepted on the cable line.

Municipal cars F and H and Market Street Car 19 go directly to Galileo and students may reach the 19 car hy transferring from the Sutter Street cars at Polk Street.

Addition to the junior college curriculum of a course in Radio engineering has necessitated the use of the Samuel Gompers Trade School. This building may be reached hy cars 9, 12 and 14 going out Mission Street.

The junior college library is divided into two sections, part of the books being kept in the college book store and the other part located at the entrance to the Study Hall on the lower floor of the Extension Building.

Cloud Welcomes Newcomers To Varied Campi

OUR THIRD YEAR

By A. J. Cloud, President

STUDENTS:

The third year of our life as a Junior College has been begun. We look forward to a good year.

We continue, it is true, to foregather on a variety of campuses, as guests in the buildings or on the play areas of other school or municipal organizations. Nevertheless, we are now meeting under conditions which make for improvement and progress. Through the clear interest of the Superintendent of Schools in the welfare of the college, and the generosity of the Board of Education, new and additional equipment has been supplied; accommodations and facilities extended; an enlarged instructional staff provided; large appropriations made to start the creation of a permanent plant. Building plans are being advanced rapidly toward the time when actual construction of the first unit should get under way at the Balhoa Park location.

Under these circumstances, it is indeed pleasant to greet returning students and newcomers alike. It is earnestly our desire that you be established in such relations to the college as will definitely prove of benefit to you. Wherever we of the faculty can aid, have faith to call on us—freely, as if seeking association with good and trustworthy friends.

Best wishes and high hopes for a successful year!

NICHOLS LISTS PROCEDURE FOR $ DISPERSALS

All faculty sponsors of student activities and all others who use the banking facilities offered by the school are requested by Comptroller Ward Nichols to inform themselves concerning the procedure to be followed in disposition of college finances as approved by President A. J. Cloud and his committee in charge of finance.

John Selig has been appointed faculty treasurer and will he in charge of all receipts of cash. He will handle the banking office and the sales of car tickets, tickets of admission to athletic events, dances, etc., all laboratory deposits, and club dues. All receipts, from whatever source, must be deposited with his office. All ticket sales will be handled from the finance office, and although student organizations will be permitted to select their own dance bids and programs, the actual purchase and sale of these will he handled by Selig.

Selig has announced that the Finance Office will maintain the following office hours: 2:15 to 4:30 P.M. daily except Thursday.

All purchasing and payments of whatever kind have been centralized in the hands of Ward M. Nichols, Comptroller, who outlines the following purchasing procedure.

Purchases of two dollars or less, may be made in cash without purchase order. The purchaser will secure a receipt for the money spent by him and have this receipt approved by the faculty member in charge of the fund to be charged. The receipt will then be presented to Selig who will then re-imhurse the purchaser.

Before purchases larger than $2.00 in amount can be made, a Purchase Order must he secured from Nichols. These orders are kept in Paul Pitman's offices at Powell Street and at Galileo. The order should be prepared in duplicate by the faculty sponsor and should show the name of the vendor, the items to be purchased and their approximate cost, the fund to be charged, and the sponsor's signature. Both copies should be left on the pad for the comptroller's

HOTEL DIVISION OPENS CAFES MARINA, EVERETT HIGH SCHOOLS

Wenzel Peck, Naomi Giffin Lead Student Group Under Enlarged Faculty Staff; H. McKevett, Doble Offer New Courses to Restauranteers

Students in the classes in the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division are, this semester, offered an opportunity to obtain practical experience in conducting an actual restaurant, as the division has assumed operation of the cafeterias at both Marina and Everett Junior High Schools. Junior college students will operate these cafeterias completely, from the preparation of food to the financial end.

Student chef in charge of food preparation at Marina is Wenzel Peck, and Naomi Giffin is acting as student manager. Both have had considerable previous experience, having been employed by restaurants during the summer, Peck at the Hotel Californian in Oakland and Miss Giffin at Wawona Lodge in Yosemite. They were among a number placed by the division in temporary hotel and restaurant jobs during summer. Others were Louis Aber, Gene Boulware, Ralph Cummings, Jean Gahard, Harley Johnson, Barbara Mangan, Lawrence Wong, Trevett Wilson, Ozzie Torricelli and Harold Shacklett.

CURRICULUM GROWS

Several new courses have been added to the curriculum, taught by instructors who have had actual experience in the operation of hotels and restaurants.

A course has been instituted in Hotel Law, which will be taught by Hugh McKevett, the attorney and legal adviser of the Northern California Hotel Association, and deals with those phases of the law which are likely to be useful to a hotel man.

Another new course is in Hotel Insurance, and is taught by Henry Doble, surveyor and analyst of Cosgrove and Co., insurance brokers.

HOUSEKEEPING PRACTICED

Also added to the curriculum is a course in Hotel Housekeeping, in which instruction will be given by the housekeeper of the Whitcomb Hotel, Mrs. Minna Day.

All the old courses have been retained, and will be taught by a staff which includes William Adams, Melvin Erskine, Arthur Kellett, Manfred Mueller, J. J. Schaepfer, Claude Shull, Carl Stough, Graham Sullivan, Harvey Toy, Harry Troupe, Frank Turner, Joseph Beyl, John Shea, and Walter Swanson.

BUILDING PLAN IN FIFTH TERM OF PROGRESS

Plans are moving steadily ahead toward actual construction of buildings for San Francisco Junior College, announced President Archibald Cloud last week. A complete plot plan has been submitted by Architect Timothy Pflaeger to Superintendent Nourse and the Board of Education, who are reported to have received it favorably.

The new plan calls for largely increased ground area, making necessary the acquisition of land which borders on that part of the site already secured. The additional acreage is to be occupied for the most part by facilities for physical education, a football field, tennis courts, etc.

LAND STILL PROBLEM

The land in question must be secured from the Park and Recreation Commissions, necessitating further negotiations with those bodies, arrangements for which are being made by C. Harold Caulfield, President of the Board of Education.

Plans for the buildings themselves remain much the same as they were originally, calling for a three-story central building of reinforced concrete, set on the highest point of the 27-acre site at Balboa Park, Ocean and Phelan Avenues, and two buildings flanking it.

FACULTY ALTER PLANS

Minor alterations have been made in the plans at the suggestion of instructors or of J. Paul Mohr, registrar, but the original idea has been preserved intact.

"Plans for the buildings," stated President Cloud, "will probably be submitted for bids within a few weeks, and thereafter construction will proceed with all the speed possible without danger of faults."

The Science laboratories and the gymnasiums will, according to President Cloud, contain only the most up-to-date equipment. The buildings themselves will be of modern design, and set at a distance from each other, facing upon a large court. The football field will be slightly removed from the central structures.

SWIMMING POOL PROMISED

Another feature of the new plant will be a swimming pool, augmenting the gymnasium. There will also be an adequate auditorium and special rooms designed for meetings of clubs and societies.

Increased laboratory space and equipment will allow for additions to the curricula of the science department. Provisions will also be made for additions to the curricula of the commercial department.

The note stressed by President Cloud throughout the interview was "Patience"; or "All things come to him who waits."

Forum To Solve Dada, Surrealism

To discuss the movement of dada and surrealism the San Francisco Junior College Forum will hold its first meeting of the semester Friday evening, September 3, at eight o'clock. The group will meet at the home of Dorothy Mercer, of the English Department, 1856 Franklin Street, near Clay Street.

"Here's hoping that everyone interested shows up," John Healy, Forum secretary-treasurer, said. "I am sure they will find the Forum a place where one can have interesting discussions of all sorts. Next time we will discuss some other subject the group desires.

"I would suggest," he continued, "that those that are coming to the meeting visit the surrealist art exhibition at Veterans auditorium, Van Ness Avenue and McAllister Street, which will continue until August 31."

He concluded that everyone is welcome and that anybody interested in writing should come to the meeting and find out more about the "Forum", the club's literary publication.

PITMAN GIVES SCHEDULE FOR CLASS VOTING

Class members and class advisers are urged by Paul Pitman, assistant to President Cloud, to be present at their organization elections, which take place beginning tomorrow, in order that each class may be fully represented in the selection of officers for the semester.

"The president of each class is automatically a member of the executive council and local politicians should take immediate action to see that their class contributes to the activity and progress of the student body," Pitman said.

Class elections will be held according to the following schedule as arranged through Pitman.

Thursday, August 26—12 o'clock—High Soph.

Monday, August 30—11 o'clock—Low Frosh.

Tuesday, August 31—12 o'clock—High Frosh.

Thursday, September 2—12 o'clock—Low Soph.

All elections will be in the lecture hall at Powell Street.

The outcome of the elections should be handed to Dean Browne with an official tally of the votes verified by the committee appointed at the meetings.

WOMEN OFFERED MEDICAL EXAMS

That all new women students and all former special students who are taking sports this semester, must make an appointment for a medical examination in the near future, was announced by the physical education department at registration.

"I cannot stress too deeply the importance of a medical examination for women who plan to take part in a strenuous sport," Dr. Alice Potter, Women's college physician, stated. Dr. Potter will give medical advice in the women's gymnasium as soon as health examinations are completed.

It is customary to the point of sacred tradition for neophytes in the editor's chair to devote some space in their first editorial to a statement of their aims and objectives for their period of office. In accord with this time honored tradition, we herewith present what might be termed the policy of The Guardsman for the fall semester of 1937.

The Guardsman, as the single unifying element in a "scattered" institution, cooperates with any individual or group who it feels is working toward the interest of a greater San Francisco Junior College. Such an aim may seem much too idealistic and generalized to offer concrete basis for taking a stand on a specific issue, but when considered at length it will be seen to present definite limitations. To demonstrate this, the following common and possibly pertinent example is offered. When one aims at serving the best interest of his college, he could never condone any vandalistic activities performed against rival institutions under the guise of "school spirit".

Cooperation directs itself instead at three well defined groups—the students, the administration and faculty, and the people of San Francisco.

The paper works hand in hand with student leaders in all and any worthwhile activities, by giving to the Associated Students adequate and intelligent information cocerning student leader enterprises. Perhaps some definitions of adequate and intelligent information will not coincide with certain integral parts of the Associated Student organization, but The Guardsman firmly believes that the Great Whole of the college will appreciate the presentation of news of real interest to the junior collegian.

It is an essential requisite of any college newspaper that it put itself at the right hand of the administration. It will be noted that The Guardsman is and always has been in that position without surrendering its independence. Although [illegible]

STAFF

Some will perhaps remark that we should first trouble ourselves with presenting a satisfactory newspaper before worrying about such abstract things as cooperation. We can however answer this simply by informing the college that the newspaper staff for the coming semester numbers in its ranks several veterans of proved ability whose past records indicate that they are certain of doing a good job. We have an absolute but nevertheless reasonable confidence in the talents of these people. The presence on the staff of so high caliber a newspaperwoman as Florence Murphy ensures The Guardsman success.

DELENDA EST CARTHAGO

Such was the incessant cry of a far sighted senator of ancient Rome. He knew that the only way to accomplish an objective was through the simple process of never allowing the people to forget it. Borrowing a bit of wisdom from this old Roman, The Guardsman will emulate him in its efforts to keep the no longer new, but still homeless junior college in the minds of all.

It is a fine tribute to the executive ability of President Cloud that he has been able to keep the college alive and thriving in the adverse condition which we continue to find ourselves. He has been a tireless worker in the fight for buildings, and The Guardsman intends to keep the spotlight focussed on his unceasing struggles for the benefit not only of the college, but of the people of San Francisco.

THANK YOU

While considering the present condition of the college, it becomes evident that we have been thrown completely on the hospitality of various institutions throughout the city. It must be remembered that we call our own not one of the buildings or fields on which the college classes and athletic activities are held. To all those upon whom we are now intruding we extend our sincere appreciation.

Furthermore, in our role of seemingly permanent guests we must not forget to treat with care the property of those who have been kind enough to house the orphan of the San Francisco School System. When you start to carve your initials in a chair at the Powell Street building or dump all your scrap paper in the hall at Galileo, pound viciously the laboratory equipment at Girls' High School, remember that you are just a guest—an uninvited one at that—and then don't.

Mental Mutterings

By FEM

Coming back to school reminds us
Of vacations left behind us.

Which is all the poetry that is in us right now what with thoughts of an 8 o'clock class three mornings a week staring us in the face, and memories of sleeping until all hours, floating out the window.

However, poetry or no poetry, we want to add our share of welcomes to those already heaped upon our little friend, the Freshman. We also want to wish each and every one of them (the males in particular) all sorts of good luck because, having heard some of yell leader Allen Williams' plans, we're sure they're going to need it! Boo-OO! Aint you scared?

* * * *

While a good many of youse people were gadding about this summer, several of our more industrious ladies got themselves busy and transformed the little court-yard in back of the women's lounge at Powell Street into a very attractive patio. The walls have been whitewashed a creamy white, and a center-piece of vari-colored bricks will soon be surrounded by the super-snazzy garden furniture purchased by the Associated Women Students last semester.

A great deal of credit for this transformation goes to Norma Parent, AWS president, Kay Evelitch and Gerry Roberts. These girls spent several afternoons planning, painting bricks, and growing plants for the soon-to-be Patio garden.

Plans are now afoot for an "open-house", to be held soon in the patio and we hope you'll all be there, to look the place over and that goes especially for you newies.

* * * *

Funny, isn't it the way things happen sometimes? We have in mind the case of [illegible]

ceived a letter informing him that he was the lucky winner. When we last heard, Deanie was in quandry as to whether he should sell the boat up there, or follow the suggestion of his small sons and have it shipped down here so that they might sail it around Stow Lake.

If we may be so bold, we'd like to suggest that he have the boat shipped down and donate it to Admiral Jack Gaddy for next year's crew practice.

A recent editorial in a San Francisco daily insists that the United States "can't be neutral". (The improper verb was used. It should have been "won't be neutral.) The article then goes on to explain how, under the present Neutrality Law, a warring nation wishing our products, must visit our shores with her own ships, garner the goods she desires, pay cash for [illegible]

Pay Dirt

By Jack Campbell

this mean that the United States CAN'T be neutral?

Why should ships of ANY nation engaged in war be allowed to enter our ports, let alone be granted permission to buy our products?

As soon as a traitor is discovered he is outlawed, that is, by a decent-minded community. The people of America have found a "traitor law", in that this law does not provide neutrality, as was intended(?), but the exact opposite. Let the American public point out the flaw to an unseeing (?) Congress, and then judge for themselves whether the Washington moguls constitute a fair-minded community.

Repeal the Neutrality Law. Let's have a prejudiced against any and all warring nations.

Bing Crosby has been asked to revive old songs of the air . . . After listening to some of the new ones, it might not be out of place to revive some of [illegible]

Traffic Manager, Captain Goff, "and it's all the fault of pedestrians. They're too slow boarding street cars."

Obviously Captain Goff is opening himself for suggestions so here goes. Plan No. 1 for speeding up street car riders: Detail more polite police officers (one for each pedestrian). Each cheerful little bundle from Erin would single out a pedestrian to hasten along. He would courteously tip his blue cap to his charge and gently add "Jump laddie, the stew is getting cold on the table," or "Faith and it's a quick step that makes a man fit."

Of course, different types of officers will be needed for the various kinds of pedestrians; spry young nippers for youthful and still eager clerks, etc. Plan No. 2: Force the street car companies to hire more (and muscular) conductors, say twenty to each car (nineteen "grabbers" and one to collect fares). The "grabbers" would lean out and pick up the pedestrians as the car sped by. After passing five or so zones the "grabbers" would get off and board inbound cars to the ferry whence they would prepare for a new onslaught on pedestrians.

(The suggestions herein contained are made that progress in San Francisco may not cease. The writer claims no glory or fat fee, as was filched from San Francisco's dwindling coffers recently by a self-styled Traffic Expert", but is ontent to know that his ife has not been spent in ain.)

SOLILOQUY OF A FROSH

"Say, who do they think they are?
These upper classmen guys,
They act so high and mighty,
So wonderful and wise."

"I wish I had one here right now
I bet I'd tell him things,
I'd throw this 'dink' right on the ground
And run 'im 'round in rings."

"Here comes one now, the homely stiff!
Just watch me call his bluff!
We-ell, he does look pretty big for me,
And say, does he look tough!"

"Oh heck! I guess I'll kinda wait
Until I get a chance,
To be an upper classman guy
Huh! I'll make those freshmen dance!"

After Dark

Unfortunately, local art critics seem to be suffering from an inadequate sympathy for Dada and Surrealist Art. And, consequently, those guided by critical appraisals are led into erroneous channels. The tendency to dismiss instead of consider dominates. A short survey of the historical and emotional background of this current art movement makes for a logical approach and a sensitive appraisal.

Space does not permit any long discussion of the history of this movement. Let it suffice to give the principal causes for it. Surrealism is the result, directly and indirectly, of the economic, emotional, social and moral changes this present civilization has undergone since the gas-light era, and even earlier. War, revolution, and dictatorship have had outstanding effects. Degenerance, especially in Europe, and privation have added their impetus.

Consequently, the more sensitive artists, living in Europe during and after the war, sought some "escape" from these chaotic conditions. One "escape" was into the sub-conscious haven, "discovered" more or less by Dr. Sigmund Freud of Vienna, and with this subsurface world came the artistic "birth" of reality-plus-unreality as the accepted credo of surrealism.

One finds a variety in the works of Salvador Dali that places him among the consummate craftsmen of art. And, coupled with this, a fantasy of great delicacy and enchantment. Again, there is a sudden poetry in the work of G. de Chirico that is impossible to express in words, but which takes on an air of tangibility when seen.

A FACULTY BED-TIME STORY

By Glenn A. Noble

Once upon a time Little Red Riding Hood, who was a great GADDY bout, went to the house of the three Bears. As she approached the door AGOSTI wind blew it open and in she walked. Poppa Bear was pacing the floor. Little Red Riding Hood saw a HUGHES pile of NICHOLS on the table. Poppa Bear muttered, "The POLISSAR after me. I robbed the coin box on a street car. Shall I do the NOBLE thing and give myself up, or shall I escape to the NOURSE pole, or some place?" Momma Bear quickly put the BOLTON the door. Poppa Bear glowered at Little Red Riding Hood and cried, "What'll we do with her? Shall we KELLER by roasting 'till she's BROWNE?" Little Red Riding Hood called loudly for help. A CLOUD passed over Momma Bear's brow and she said, "Don't be a BOOHER, Poppa! Such talk will TURNER stomach. The SWEET little girl won't REVEAL your secret, but WEBER she will or not makes no difference; we can't PARKER here." "Wait," said Poppa Bear, "Let's COOPER up and hold her for ransom and then we needn't bother with small change but will get GOLDSHUR. If she tries to escape or COLLIGAN for help, the WELLS a good place to throw her. I'll take care of her after supper." Poppa Bear liked fish best of all foods. "I sure love FINNEY BASS," he cried. "The MOHR I eat the better." Said Momma Bear with a sneer, "AMORI eats the more GOSS on his stomach, and then he has to go to bed with EISAN his head."

In the meantime the police captain, who frequently DELFS into the archives, found out that Poppa Bear was wanted for robbery so he got on his bicycle and rode for Poppa Bear's home. Poppa saw him coming. He grabbed Little Red Riding Hood and fled through the MARSH to the other side. There he said, "This is a PERRY good place to CAMP." When the captain got to the house and found Poppa was gone, he got as mad as HOBBS. Since it had started to rain, he couldn't wade across the bog but had to take a boat. He felt as if he were in Noah ZARCHIN the flood. Finally he got to a place as SANDYS the beach. He got out of the boat, and reached Little Red Riding Hood just as she SPENCER last ounce of energy struggling to free herself from Poppa Bear. The captain slipped handcuffs on Poppa and had to STOUPE to pick up Little Red Riding Hood who had fallen in UTTER exhaustion. He put Poppa Bear in prison and gave Little Red Riding Hood a BADGER medal or something.

News on the executive side of the fence . . . ! ? ? ? , ; ; ! ? . . . Just another way of saying that once again classes are in session and we are all on the merry-go-round for another six months.

The executive council, which last semester threatened to become the standard joke on the various campi distributed throughout the city, has already held several meetings and, guess what? . . . but first, grab a chair, no, better sit down, count to three and hold your breath! In our candid opinion we think that we have accomplished something, and that's something, yeah man! The social and rally committees are going at full blast with plans for the coming semester. The WAA, the AWS and the Men's Club groups already have something to do. Even the secretary has minutes to keep and letters to write. But there is a grave oversight on somebody's part, for while the college will continue to function, successfully, the tasks of administering student affairs have been distributed too widely. The situation has become so acute that the president can no longer appoint members of his personal family on ex-council committees. This Gene-ial person has been decidedly perplexed and disappointed with the political setup. So, what to do?

HELLO, GANG, AND WELCOME BACK AGAIN!

Rolling in at the last minute to save us from the deadline, a light morning fog provided the inspiration for this attempted revival of last year's misty column. Perhaps it would have been better for college readers, if the fog had failed. Keen savvy?, as we Spanish say.

We have often wondered about the origin of surnames, for some of the monickers gracing store-fronts, driver's licenses, hotel registers, etc. would lead one to believe that some of our citizens names were bestowed on them by a dope-crazed madman. With all due respect to the Italian people, we still cannot understand a person willingly assuming or keeping a handle like Bacigalupi. The Poles, and other Scandinavians are noted for such unpronounciables as these, Zbikowski, Zboyovsky, Yttrup, etc.

Some of those with innocent appearing American names would look very foolish, if every one were suddenly called upon to assume whatever shape, color, or condition was described by his last name. For instance, Pres. CLOUD would be forced to float serenely about the campus in a rather diaphanous form, Dean BROWN would suddenly acquire a deep tan while George GREEN'S countenance would take the color of grass. One has but to picture others, in order to see what a chaotic condition would result, CAIN, MARSH, HOUSE, MILLS, BROOKS, BRICK, and MOON, are but a few which may be found in any 'phone book.

As a last group of names, one may pick all those which sound like baby talk. The following are all actual surnames: Nock, Zak, Zingg, Luff, Kivi, Pfister, Pezzy. Whoever said, "What's in a name?"

Around the town . . . watching the squadron of giant bombing planes roar over the Bay Bridge . . . climbing 229 steps to the top of Coit Tower . . . admiring the deftness of our inimitable street car conductors as they exact fares, make change, answer questions, watch traffic, help nice old ladies on and off the car, and perform a host of other duties.

Until the fog comes in again, so long.

RAMBLINGS . . . SPORTS . . .

By ED FREDIANI

That season of madness is upon us once again. That time of the year when the Rah Rah Boys dust off their Racoon coats, when the Monday morning quarter-backs hold their post-mortems, when loyal alumni find the excuse to be young once again and yell themselves hoarse for dear old Harvard, and last but not least it's the time when the bone-bruisers and muscle men over the entire country do or die for alma mammy.

A LONG WINTER

It looks like it will be a long winter for the Rambling Rams of San Francisco Junior College. Early season "dope" on football teams generally offers our noble profession a chance to show just how wrong one can be, and still keep his job, but in this particular instance, it appears that nothing short of a slight miracle will produce a team that stands a chance of copping the coveted pennant.

With only five lettermen returning to the fold, Coach Russ Sweet has to start from scratch once again, as he was compelled to do just two years ago, when the first San Francisco Junior College Cleatsters were tearing up the turf.

ALL CONFERENCE

Contradicting ourselves already, we wish to nominate for all-conference consideration, Duke Worsham, Ram pivot man, whose return to our college was a pleasant surprise, as the rumors had it that the "Duke" would transfer his activities to other fields.

Duke's play in the last two conference games of the '36 season establish him as one of the cleverest centers in the conference.

VERSATILE

Charlie Brickley, former gridder and heavyweight wrestler, under the banner of the Junior College, now cavorts for Southern California's LaVerne College. Charlie proved his versatility by donning the scanties and playing first string guard on the LaVerne Casaba Quintet.

We understand that the red headed lad also is a wicked willow wielder in our so-called national pastime. I wonder if he can cook.

MEET THE COACHES

Russel Sweet—Head Football Coach—All-Ameracin half-back from Montana—Tied the world record for the 100 yd. dash when a senior in college. Golf is big weakness.

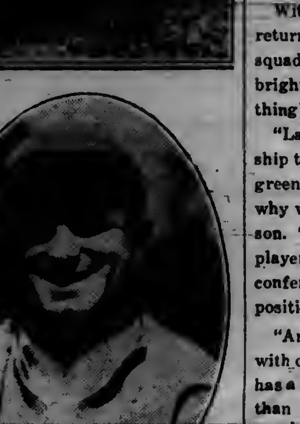
Jack Gaddy—Head Crew Coach, also Asst. Football Coach—Played a lot of end for U. S. F.—Made all-coast team two years running. He has the golf bug too, but not quite as bad as Sweet.



Dutch Conlan—Head Basketball Coach, also Asst. Football Coach—Cavorted on the gridiron for St. Mary's—Best golf player on the Coaching staff, in fact one of the better golfers of our fair city.

Tom Wilson—Head Soccer and Tennis Coach—Has already coached two championship teams for our college—Played half-back for the College of Pacific—Heralded as one of the best pigskin chuckers ever to don the moleskins on a pacific coast team. Tries to be different by not playing golf.

(*Denotes Night Game)

By DICK SIMPERS

Well, there it is, and it's not what you'd call a soft set-up, is it? And it entails plenty of traveling for the boys and the coaches, as four out of the nine games are to be played away from home, Pasadena being the most distant point to which the team must travel. By the way, whatever became of that game in Salt Lake City that we heard so much about last spring? It was a great idea, but seems to have died a natural death.

* * * *

Coaches Sweet, Eisan and Gaddy are getting plenty of assistance these days in their task of drilling grid hopefuls. Several former Ram stars have been lurking about the practice field aiding in the education of new-comers to the squad. Among them was observed the one and only Tony Scafani, who, with Jack Telesmanic, another former Ram (also a volunteer coach), is planning to leave next month of LaVerne, where his talents as a gridder are expected to be put to good use.

* * * *

If you should drop around to watch practice some noon, you'll have no difficulty in spotting Messrs. Eisan and Gaddy. They are the only ones on the field sporting red panties—and are they natty! Incidentally, Lee is showing the boys some of the stuff he used to flash when he and Benny Lom were the terrors of the coast. Just in case you don't remember, Lee was about the best quarteback developed by Nibs Price during the latter's regime as football coach at California. We remember when we first saw him, playing freshman football against Stanford about 1927 (Cal. won, forty-something to twenty), and he hasn't changed much since that time.

Tryouts For Rifle Team To Be Held Next Week

"Shooting up the College" will soon be under way in full blast when tryouts are held for the rifle teams to represent the Junior College in leagues sponsored by the San Francisco Rifle Association, according to George Dieser, President of the Rifle & Pistol Club, in a statement made to a Guardsman reporter early this week. Last year the teams from the college won first place in the Golden Gate Bridge League and took second in the Bay Bridge League, Dieser added. This year three teams will be entered in different leagues, and we hope to equal or improve our last year's average. One team will be composed entirely of women, and if witnesses can go by past performance, their scores will be better than those of most of the men's teams they will meet.

Tryouts will start next week and last for a month, Dieser revealed. As the candidates shoot their regular class targets, the scores will be recorded and tabulated to determine the team compositions. Each team will be composed of eight shooters, thus providing an opportunity for sixteen men and eight women to represent the College in outside competition and become eligible for Student Body Awards such as were given last year to the members of both the first and second teams.

Members of the last year's teams who have already signed up for the tryouts include Dieser, Don Smith, Frank Doupnik, Max Brewen, John Benton, Virginia Kwiatt, and Fred Wright. Gail Hanna and Helen Eltoft, who represented the Junior College in the Examiner matches last spring, have also signified their intention of trying out for the women's team this year. Each of the three teams will have a manager, appointed by the Faculty sponsor, and these managers need not be marksmen, Dieser also stated. He emphasized that many places are open on all three teams and urged those students interested, even if without previous experience, to try out. Many of the teams' high scorers of last year had no previous experience, but they learned fast, he said. We have the facilities and the coaching talent, so why not come down and see us some time, Dieser added. Tryouts are being held at the Galileo Range on Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday afternoons from 4:30 on and all students are welcome.

Archery, Tennis, Now Offered In Ph. Ed. Courses

Beginning this semester, archery will be among the sports in which instruction is offered by the men's physical education department. The institution of this class raises to seven the number of sports for which physical education students may enroll.

There are two classes in golf, one under the supervision of Russ Sweet and the other under "Dutch" Conlan. Both are held in the mornings at Funston Field, where a putting green and driving range are available for the use of aspiring mashie-wielders.

Four classes are offered in tennis, taught by Tom Wilson, coach of the team which last year won the conference championship. Tennis classes are held at the courts of the Palace of Fine Arts, all in the mornings.

Football and soccer adherents practice at Funston daily, while swimming, in which Sweet is again the instructor (versatile, isn't he?), is taught Monday and Wednesday afternoons at the North Beach Pool.

Fencing classes, presided over by Jack Gaddy, are offered at the Funston gymnasium on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Gaddy also has charge of instruction in the manly art of boxing.

WAA Sign-Ups To Be Sept. 6 to 8

Marking the beginning of WAA activities for this semester, sign-ups for all WAA sports will be held from September 6 to 10 at Powell Street and the Women's gymnasium at Galileo. The time selected for WAA activities will differ from the regular classes when possible and all women are urged to sign for as many sports as they can.

Student managers for sports will be nominated in the clubs on September 13 and 14, with the election of managers on September 15 and 16. WAA members will give demonstrations of the various sports in physical education classes from September 23 to 27.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

With women's sports occupying an increasingly important position at the junior college, through the efforts of the WAA and physical education instructors, the semester begins with emphasis upon fall sports. Four coeducational activities are offered: rifle, riding, badminton, and archery. Equipment is provided in the majority of classes. For the first time the necessary clubs for golf will be furnished by the college.

In order to relieve the anxiety of freshmen co-eds, who blithely signed for Freshmen Activities and then began to wonder just what freshmen activities was, let it be known that this sport consists of a games unit with badminton and volleyball, and a rhythms unit with modern creative, tap, and social dance techniques. Freshmen Activities is a new sport offered to aid new women in becoming acquainted with their classmates.

Redecoration of the Y.W.C.A. pool and building will delay swimming classes until September 13. Meanwhile the classes are meeting at room 102, Powell Street building, and at the college bookstore.

After an intensive season of exercise and instruction it would seem that the physical education instructors would be content to settle down with a good book and rest, but on the contrary all took postman's holidays. Bertha Keller, tennis instructor, mountain-climbed and yodeled in the Glacier National Park. Vera Spencer, swimming instructor, is touring Europe until September 1, her place being filled by Dorothy Bartels. Archery Instructor, Verrel Weber, toured southern California with her family and placed near the top in both the Western Archery Association and the Pacific Archery Association meets. But first place in summer activities goes to the former Laurine Kuhn, dancing instructor, who was married in June to Hans Bergin.

Congratulations to WAA council for the splendid handbook it prepared to explain the purpose, formation, and award system of the WAA to entering students.

Lambs Will Clash With Galileo Grid Team On Friday

As a prologue to the coming grid season, Coach Jack Gaddy's Flying Lamb squad will ring up the curtain on pigskin festivities when they meet Galileo High School next Friday afternoon at 3:30 p. m. The prepsters are rated one of the chief contenders for the A. A. A. championship and should provide the junior collegians with some interesting competition.

The Flying Lamb team is composed of newcomers to varsity football and will serve as a testing ground for the novices. Head Coach Russ Sweet will watch this game with interest because from Friday's performers he will select another complete squad for the varsity.

Eventually the Lambs and the varsity will be definitely separated and the junior squad will play its own separate schedule among local high school and reserve teams. The Ramblers at the University of California, the Grays of Stanford, and the Spartans of U. S. C. are parallels of the junior college Lamb team.

Among the performers who will bear watching in the struggle are George Boltano, track star, who can do the century in ten flat and is being seriously considered for the left half-back spot, which is the key position in the Ram backfield. Frank Veruducci who was a star on Mission's championship team last year will probably open the game at the signal calling position and if he performs as expected he will be slated to fill the bill as understudy to the varsity quarterback, Ray Eglehofer. A leading candidate for the blocking back post is Art Nelson, who gained experience on last year's Lamb outfit.

All sports are still open for late registrants. Hockey, a new activity, is conveniently scheduled at 11 on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Dancing offers opportunities for those interested in self-expression.

The only department to flourish a symbolic banner during registration was the women's sport department which wisely tacked a gym suit on the wall as a model for incoming co-eds.

LARGE TURNOUT GREETS SWEET IN INITIAL PRACTICE

Moleskins, helmets and jersies were dragged out of the mothballs last Thursday and issued to some fifty-four would-be grid stars as the first practice of the season got under way at Funston field.

Several veterans of last year's squad have returned to gladden the heart of Coach Russ Sweet, and these are augmented by a good number of new-comers, among them several who were star performers in high school.

With no prospect of an important game before the Marin encounter on September 24, Coach Sweet has elected to rush matters, and no hard workouts have been held at yet, practice being confined to light drills, with Lee Eisan and Jack Gaddy coaching the line while Sweet puts the backfield through its paces.

No definite selection has been made yet as to which player will hold which position; although in several instances the field can be narrowed down to two or three candidates whose work has been particularly outstanding.

Merv Weiner, battle-scarred veteran of the football and boxing wars, is making a strong bid for the full-back post, where his beef and experience give him an advantage over the other aspirants.

BACKFIELD STRONG

The former Balboa star and veteran of last season, Ray "Bubble-nose" Eglehofer is the current choice of the "wise guys" to hold down the job of quarter-back, where his experience will be put to good use. There is also a possibility that he will be called upon to perform the place-kicking chores. If your scribe's memory serves him right, Eglehofer, although not called upon last year, swung quite a mean foot while in high school.

Art Nelson and George Boitano are leading candidates for the halfback spots, fighting it out with Peterson and Verducci. The latter, spark-plug of last year's championship Mission High team, is showing plenty of "stuff" and is not to be overlooked. Another promising member of the backfield is Wes Olson.

In the line, a battle is waging over nearly every position. So many capable and experienced men have turned out that any definite prediction at this date would be premature.

Another ex-Balboa star and veteran of last year's junior college team, Duke Worsham, appears to be leading in the duel for the pivot position, but is finding himself hard-pressed by Carl Brogger, another last year's man who once snapped 'em back of Lowell High.

OSBORNE RETURNS

In the guard spots, attention is focused on Randy Osborne, colored star who turned in some good performances last season, and a new-comer, "Moon" Burke, who not so long ago was making football history at Saint Ignatius High. Another new-comer, General, is also putting up a battle for a regular berth.

Outstanding tackles are the elongated Jerry "Flash" Flamm, Willy Dolman, and Tip Hamilton, all with considerable previous experience. The tackle positions appear to be among the best fortified on the team at the present moment.

At the ends are Elwood Pierce and Joe Gudet, two capable pass-snatchers from last year who seem to be fairly well entrenched in their positions.

This is only a brief summary of the prospects as they appear now. There may, and undoubtedly will, be numerous changes between now and time of the first league encounter, as the material is checked over and weeded out by the coaches. Coach Sweet intends to retain about thirty men, or two and a half full teams on the official squad, and relegate the remainder to the "Lambs", or to put it more bluntly, the goofs.

Of course, it's too early now to venture a prediction, but the general trend is decidedly encouraging. More so than it was at the same time last year—and last year's team turned out to be a good deal better than fair, if you'll remember.

Enough of the old guard remain to form the nucleus for a team which, when filled out by new arrivals and graduates of the Lambs, should make itself a power to be respected in the conference this fall.

SOCCERITES' PROSPECTS POOR

Faced by a very gloomy situation, Coach Tom Wilson has a tough job ahead of him, if he intends to have his shin-diggers go down in the books as the first team in the history of our college to win a second conference championship.

With only three or four lettermen returning from last year's title holders squad, the outlook is anything but bright, but Wilson seems to be anything but downcast over the situation.

"Last season we built a championship team out of a bunch of willing but green players, and there's no reason why we can't do it again," stated Wilson. "We only have one first string player returning, Mike Klebanoff, all-conference forward, and that leaves ten positions wide open.

"Any male student of the college, with or without soccer experience, who has a lot of fighting spirit, will be more than welcome on the squad." Last year's champions out fought and out gamed every team they played, from the University of San Francisco down.

All men students interested in playing on the Junior College Varsity Soccer Team report for try outs Monday at 1:00 o'clock at Funston Playground. Practice will be held daily, but students whose classes conflict with the practice time may report two or three days a week and still be eligible for conference play.

The tentative schedule for the coming season includes games with the following teams: California Frosh, Stanford Frosh, San Jose State, San Benito Junior College, U. S. F., San Mateo Junior College, Marin Junior College, Menlo Junior College, and practice games with all San Francisco high schools.

Last year's crown wearers won 13 straight games, only to drop their last game to Menlo Junior College, by the narrow margin of two to one, after cinching the championship the previous week.

Their greatest achievement was an early season contest with the U. S. F. Varsity, in which the Hilltoppers trailed the Red and White Varsity, until within one minute of the end of the game, when they tied the score, the final count being one to one.

NYA Fund Cut For Semester

Word has been received from Washington, D. C. by Helene Turner, NYA director, that the government has not as yet appropriated funds for the NYA. As a result, no immediate information has been given, but Miss Turner was informed officially that the money has been reduced 50 per cent from last year's appropriation. Those students unable to sign for NYA work as a result of the lists being closed are instructed to watch The Guardsman for possible vacancies that might appear in the future.

Acting as a relief agency for high school and college students between the ages of 16 to 24 years, the NYA was formed three years ago by the federal government.

RAMS' HORN

Editor, The Guardsman:

In my first term of junior college I do not particularly relish making a complaint. However, I think that a situation exists in junior college that demands immediate remedy and I am writing at least to expose this situation to as many people as possible.

We come to junior college to study. But in studying, it is necessary to buy textbooks. The average price of these books is very near twelve dollars. It is my contention that the student body need not spend more than eight dollars for books if the situation were properly handled. Let me give an example: A person buys a textbook. At the end of the term he resells his book to the bookstore for 50 per cent of its value. The bookstore then sells the book at about 90 per cent of its original value. By doing business with the store the student loses 40 per cent of the value of the book. This profit, a stupendous one for a middle-man, can easily be done away with.

We need only to establish an exchange agency (details to be worked out later. I have a plan now), providing for direct exchange of books among students, which would automatically abolish the profit of the middle-man. The justification of this idea lies in its simplicity. Grammar school children may well use it, let alone junior college students. An item involving $4.00 of a student's precious money is surely vital enough to print.

BROWNE OFFICE OPEN HOUSE TO ALL PERPLEXED

TO THE STUDENT BODY OF SAN FRANCISCO JUNIOR COLLEGE SINCERE GREETINGS!

The fifth semester of the San Francisco Junior College points to a happy and successful experience for faculty grams, there is no reason why the San Francisco Junior College should not maintain the splendid reputation it has already earned, not only in our local community, but throughout the country, in Junior College Circles. I personally urge you to turn out for assemblies and rallies and to participate in student body activities to the extent that you will be one of us in a big way.

Never hesitate to call on me if my office can be of any service to you.

Physical Ed. Department Credits Potential Shooters

Building on their success of last semester, Physical Education classes in Rifle Marksmanship have enrolled 57 students for this term of shooting activities. Believed to be the only marksmanship classes in California Junior Colleges offering physical education credit, the local elementary and advanced sections have increased one third in number of students receiving instruction in how to shoot at the target and not at each other.

These classes are sponsored by the Junior College Rifle & Pistol Club, which, through the cooperation of the United States Government, furnishes rifles, equipment, and instruction for the college "shooters". Both men and women are eligible for enrollment, according to James S. Hughes, instructor in charge, and there are still places open in either the elementary or advanced section. The elementary section, designed primarily for students without previous marksmanship experience meets in the Galileo Range at 4:30 P.M. on Tuesdays and Thursdays. The advanced section, specializing in the kneeling and offhand positions, fires on Monday afternoons from 3:30 on. Enrollment in the latter section is limited to students who have completed the last semester's work or who have special permission.

Members of the Junior College Rifle Teams are selected from the class members. Much competition is promised for this and next semester, stated George Dieser, club president, who added that three teams are to be entered in leagues sponsored by the San Francisco Rifle Association, one of them a team composed entirely of girls. Dieser urged that all interested students sign up for these classes to receive the instruction necessary for team try outs.

REGISTRAR'S OFFICE AIDS NEW STUDENT

On my own behalf and that of all the members of the Registrar's office, may I extend you a most cordial welcome to the San Francisco Junior College. You have thus far established a hurried acquaintanceship with some of us. We hope that in the future when you have more leisure, we may become better acquainted in your community responsibilities. To achieve these objectives, we would like to urge that you emphasize first, scholarship, secondly, participation in all forms of campus activities, thirdly, an understanding of and a cooperation with college regulations necessary for the orderly conduct of the institution.

We of the Registrar's office, are looking forward to the adventure of living and exploring with you the great unknown which lies ahead of us during the next two years.

J. Paul Mohr, Registrar

Gompers School Courses Open To College

Introduction of a new course in radio engineering to the college curriculum has made it necessary for classes to be held in the Samuel Gompers Trade School at twenty-second and Bartlett Streets.

Radio Engineering 51A, as the course is designated in the junior college catalog, is designed to acquaint the student with certain electrical principles essential to the understanding of radio.

Aside from several lectures weekly, there will be a certain amount of shop work involving the assembling or wiring of receivers and amplifiers and a study will be made of the use of the method and tools of the radio repair man.

Instructing the course will be Lowell M. Hollingsworth who is said to have had a great deal of experience in the radio world. Hollingsworth received his Bachelor of Science degree at Oregon State College and later studied sound for two years at the Bell Laboratories in New York. He also obtained a degree in Mechanical Engineering at Stanford University.

RIFLE MEMBERS ENTER NATION-WIDE MATCHES

which is stationed at the Presidio of San Francisco. Garr is a member of the Infantry Team, representing all the Regular Army Infantry regiments.

The best marksmen in the United States are competing at Camp Perry. Teams representing the branches of the Army, the Marine Corps, National Guard Units of all states, as well as civilian and C.M.T.C. teams will fire a series of matches extending over a period of two weeks. The annual event is sponsored by the National Rifle Association, to which the Junior College Rifle & Pistol Club belongs.

Hardy, Hancock and Garr are expected to return to San Francisco September 15th, when Hancock will resume his duties as Coach of the College Rifle Teams who are preparing for their second year of competition in the Leagues sponsored by the San Francisco Rifle Association.

AWS Patio Seen As Desert Oasis

Termed by those who have seen it as "a colorful oasis in the bleak desert of Powell Street," the newly-decorated patio of the Women's Lounge is fast becoming the central gathering place for the women of the college, according to Associated Women Student officers.

With creamy white walls and gay potted plants as a background, the patio is filled with the colorful garden furniture purchased by the AWS last semester.

Bright canvas chairs, a porch swing and a large umbrella-topped table vie for attention with the novel mountain of vari-colored bricks which occupies the center of the court yard.

"Certain changes and repairs are necessary in the lounge itself before it is ready for use," Norma Parent, AWS president, said yesterday. "In the meantime we urge all women students, especially the new students, to use the patio whenever they wish to relax between classes."

Located in the basement of the Powell Street book store, the lounge proper contains comfortable chairs, couches and a radio. While it is designed chiefly as a place for social gatherings, women may study there if they wish.

HELL WEEK

The unfortunate members of the low freshman class are now going through their period of initiation, which members of the rally committee have seen fit to term Hell Week. The groveling frosh have submitted rather meekly to the hazing administered by their upper class brethren. Some students look with disdain upon such activities, terming them prepish and unoriginal.

These objectors must admit, however, that activities of this kind are the basis of a quality that this college, with but two years of history behind it, sadily needs, namely, tradition. The college student is, after all, a mere youth and therefore it is only normal that he should occasionally enjoy reverting to the adolescent impulses that demand activities of the nature that are semi-annually staged in the Frosh-Soph Brawl.

At eighteen or nineteen years of age you cannot expect the average boy to be a creature of austere dignity, whose every waking thought is concerned with the advancement of his education. We earnestly believe there is no harm in a little old fashioned rough house, and if the participants enjoy themselves—well, then they have gained something.

SPEED AND EFFICIENCY

A word of commendation is certainly deserved by the administration for the speed and efficiency with which its members disposed of the formerly lengthy process of registration. Under the effective guidance of Registrar J. Paul Mohr, the entire student body was arranged in its classes in the space of three days, where in past registration the same operation took a week or more. Things were simplified greatly, this time, by having all the advisers in the gymnasium, instead of spread throughout the building. All the tests taken by the freshmen were swiftly corrected by Harold W. Leuenberger and his staff.

WRITERS SEARCH IN VAIN FOR SHELTER

Whoever it was that originated the expression "Buffeted about from pillar to post" must have looked far into the future and scared up a vision of the poor, long-suffering journalism classes of the San Francisco Junior College.

Long the target of the choicest "dirty looks" and the most bitter "out-of-the-corner-of-the-mouth" slurs, we journalists, the noble, brilliant, tender-hearted girls and boys who wear their pencils to the wood writing news for you, you, and you, have finally reached the point where we have not even a roof with which to cover our weary, brain-laden heads.

No sooner do we get seated and prepare to answer roll-call, than up will pop an important looking person with a long list in his hand and the regretful announcement that "this-particular-room-is-needed-for-Mister-Gilhooley's-sewing-circle-would-you-please-move-to-20009?"

Alright, we move! So what? So, in comes our friend again, still regretful, but still firm in his decision that we must fold our something like somebody and silently steal somewhere.

Oh, well, they do say that travel broadens one and then, one must have been around a bit before one can really write, so maybe it would be better to call the whole thing off!

Service Group Proves Value

Founded primarily as a service organization, the Women's Service Society of the college began this semester's activities last week by assisting with the regular registration procedure, according to Florence Murphy, newly-elected WSS president.

"The first important WSS matter to be settled this semester," Miss Murphy said, "is the awarding of the WSS scholarship. Because of unforseen circumstances, this scholarship was not presented at the scheduled time but we are working out certain details and as soon as these are completed an announcement of the winner

1450 Register In 3 Days; 700 New Enrollments

Registration reached a total of 1450 students in three days, a speed record for the college. In previous semesters it has taken a week or more to register the great majority of students.

"I am gratified with the registration this year," said J. Paul Mohr, registrar. "It has been marked by the speed and smoothness with which it has been conducted. Although the major portion of registration is completed, we will accept enrollees until September third, when registration officially closes. This semester will be shorter than previous ones, therefore all prospective pupils should register immediately in order to get full benefit of the courses offered."

Harold W. Leunberger, psychology instructor, was responsible for the fast registration of freshmen. He supervised the examinations which were given to them.

Of the 1450 students thus far registered, 700 are new to the college. Men comprise 60 per cent of the total registration.

Several changes in the length of the semesters have been made. The fall semester will end on December 17 and will be separated from the spring semester by two weeks of Christmas vacation. Ending a month earlier than usual, the spring semester will close May 20.

Holidays will make the fall semester five days shorter. One day each for Labor Day, Admission Day, Columbus Day, and Armistice Day and two days to eat Thanksgiving turkey will give students brief respites from their studies.

NO NAPOLEON AT FROSH WATERLOO

Many entering freshmen met their "Waterloos" on Wednesday, August 18, when they fought to the last man to successfully complete their first registration.

The casualties of this heated fray were anywhere from mussed hair, and bitten fingernails, to a complete loss of equilibrium, and the d.t's.

According to actual participants in the battle of admittance to the junior college portals and its many privileges, the encounter wasn't so tough as they'd been made to believe by bogiemen sophomores.

Arline Vincent, and Norm Gray, distinctly didn't like registration. Just to be a little different Lillian Ziliotto, and Jean G. Kruger, thought signing up for

Paul Pitman Sees Challenge Of New Year

To freshmen and sophomores alike, to faculty as well as students, this third year offers a new hope and a new challenge.

To some of us, there comes opportunity for a new beginning. Others of us will continue building on the foundation we have already laid. To all of us, there is presented opportunity to join in a creative enterprise of individual enrichment and institutional growth.

San Francisco Junior College may be scattered all over the city by virtue of its temporary housing problem, but it has the strength and vigor of youth. The ability and devotion of a strong and enthusiastic faculty combine with the ambition and faith of an eager and loyal student body to bind us all together in a common purpose and a mutual and legitimate pride.

Paul M. Pitman,
Assistant to President.

Wilde Class

Members of Ruth Jensen's speech and drama classes both new and old, are planning a series of get-together meetings at local theatres.

For their first meeting the classes attended the reading and pantomime of Oscar Wilde's "The Ballad of Reading Gaol" at the Wayfarer's Theatre.

FACULTY ON TOUR TELLS OF TRAVELS

Many members of the faculty were back from their summer vacations with some very interesting travels to relate. At this writing, two instructors who went abroad, have not returned. M. Evans Ecke, who was sojourning in Paris, and Claire Cuneo, who globe-trotted to Japan, were the lucky travelers. They are expected back in about two weeks.

Joseph Amori spent the summer touring Mexico, as also did John E. Ross, Gertrude Bolton, Helen Kelley, Helene Turner and Franklin Sewell, who had spent part of a leave of absence in the country below the Rio Grande, is now back ready for the new semester. Among those who were in the East, either on business, or to study, were Francis J. Colligan, college librarian, and Dr. Alice C. Cooper, who was conferring with publishers on her English books.

Those who married during the past summer were Lowell M. Hollingsworth, Thomas J. Bass Jr., Russell J. Sweet, and Sue Waller, who became the bride of John P. Menke, a medical student at Johns Hopkins Memorial Hospital. The new Mrs. Menke is doing graduate work at Carnegie Institute.

Augmenting an already large group of professors, nine new instructors were added to the faculty of the college this semester, while two, who had been here in a substitute position, were appointed to continue in a full time capacity. The newcomers came from widely divergent parts of the country, among whom were Leo F. Cain, Presidio Jr. High School; Chester W. Clark, University of California; Margaret Brennan, San Francisco College for Women; John R. Herman, University of Washington; Charles H. McKiernan, Moran Junior College; Edward H. Redford, Stanford; Stephen J. Tomer, St. Mary's College, where he was the head of the Chemistry Department, and Nelson H. Wells, University of California.

PRESIDENT GREETS ASSEMBLY

STUDENTS OF THE ENTERING CLASS: You are now enrolled and registered at the San Francisco Junior College. For several days past, you have been attending classes—absorbing instruction, getting acquainted among yourselves and with your instructors, and getting used to the ways of college life. On behalf of the faculty, when we meet on this earliest occasion, I extend to you a most hearty welcome.

We are interested in you. Your welfare and success are matters of vital concern to us. It is our desire and our business to aid you in all directions within our power. We trust that you will come to rely on us as good friends.

Not only will the instructors in general be ready and willing to advise with you, but, wherever special personal problems arise, we would ask that the young women consult with Miss Dougherty and the young men with Dean Browne. I am sure that you will gain much help from them. In matters relating to your program of studies, if you have questions to discuss, lay your case before Registrar Mohr. He will give you all that is coming to you, and a little bit beside (I almost said "a little bit more).

I would have you understand, as well, that you are free to come, and invited to come, to the President's office at any time to see Mr. Pitman or me upon any matters of consequence to you. The door to the President's office is not even ajar; it stands wide open.

These remarks are made in order that you may know that you are being surrounded by a friendly and a helpful atmosphere at this College. We wish you to be cognizant of that fact.

You, on your side, must do your part. You are no longer children, but men and women. You must set a high resolve, and stick to it; must not fritter away your time; must work hard, and work intelligently under good guidance.

The people of the State of California and the City of San Francisco have set up this institution for your benefit. It is the uppermost level of the public school system. It is operated and maintained out of moneys supplied by public taxation. The people are making an investment of no mean proportions in a human product. They are glad to give this generous endowment, but they look forward to large returns, not in money but in the service which you will be prepared to render to nation, state, and local community. By taking full advantage of the rich opportunity now offered, you will be able to repay your debt to society in the days ahead.

I am confident that you will measure up to all that is expected of you. You are a fine lot of young Americans. With pluck, determination, energy, industry, you will go far. Again we greet and salute you and wish you all things good.

Amateur Photos To Be Printed By Guardsman

S. Galstaun Announces Contest For Usable Candid Camera Shots

Candid camera enthusiasts are at last to have the opportunity of seeing their work in print through the medium of The Guardsman and its new contest to make the campus camera conscious.

Striving towards the formation of a Camera Club in the college, The Guardsman is sponsoring a weekly competition in which pictures of college interest, taken by students officially registered in the college, may be submitted.

BEST PICTURE OF WEEK

Each week The Guardsman staff will select what they believe to be the best picture of the week and this picture will be featured in the following issue of the paper.

Students may submit as many pictures as they wish and these pictures may be of any size as they will be enlarged to suit the purpose for which they are to be used. All pictures submitted automatically become the property of The Guardsman and none will be returned.

This contest will be under the direction of Sam Galstaun, staff photographer, and the deadline for the first contest is Friday, September 17. All pictures should be given to Galstaun who may be found in The Guardsman office, WJ, on Thursday and Friday afternoons between the hours of 1:00 and 2:30.

HUMAN INTEREST SOUGHT

Contestants are urged by Galstaun to be on the lookout for unusual pictures. They should keep in mind some of the pictures featured in former issues of The Guardsman, especially those with human interest value, like the one of Snoopy the cat and that of Joe Arnold perched atop the Galileo flag pole.

Star-Gazers Plan Monday Meetings

Meeting Monday evenings at the Galileo Observatory, the Astronomy Society, under Louis Berman, will welcome all students interested in "star-gazing."

Last semester, refreshments were served to members of the society and Berman hopes to continue this practice lure.

Rumors Indicate First Unit To Be Occupied Early In 1938 Term

Reports from a reliable source state that the junior college plant should be ready for occupation by next fall at the latest, but as The Guardsman goes to press it is not possible to reach President Cloud for confirmation of the statement. In view of recent developments, however, such a surmise is by no means improbable.

Action on the acquisition of the additional land called for in the revamped plan recently submitted by Architect Timothy Pflueger is imminent, and actual construction will be rushed ahead as soon as the word is received that the land has been made available.

SCIENCE LAB OUTSTANDING

The building will be constructed to accommodate approximately 2,500 students, with adequate facilities for all athletic activities, and with a generous allotment of space made for science laboratories, club rooms, an auditorium and lecture halls.

One of the most outstanding structures will be the science building, which will be patterned somewhat after the Life Science Building at the University of California, and will be absolutely the latest word in architectural development. Present indications point to construction of the laboratories in such a way that light will be allowed to enter from two sides, making the building more compact and allowing for a larger number of laboratories than would ordinarily be possible. This will also render unnecessary the use of artificial lighting during the day.

Plans have been laid for a cafeteria in one of the new buildings, which will be operated by the classes in Hotel and Restaurant management, affording them experience in their courses and at the same time supplying the students with meals at a small cost.

MOHR SUGGESTIONS

Several members of the faculty, notably J. Paul Mohr, registrar, have interested themselves in the plans for the buildings to the extent of making suggestions for the improvement of several departments, many of their suggestions being adopted by the architects.

General plans for the buildings are completed, and attention now is focussed on the minor details, such as wiring, construction of doors and windows, which must be attended to before actual construction can start.

BADGER SAYS STUDENTS SHOULD DEVELOP MUSIC APPRECIATION

"Many people think there is some mystery about music," said Flossita Badger, energetic head of the music department of the college. "They would like to sing and play, perhaps, but the matter of notes on staves looks baffling and strange. Or they decide that they can't 'understand' fine music and omit it from their diversions, an omission later regretfully conceded to be a loss not only of fine entertainment value, but of an essential part of a really full life.

"Yes, the Music Department is here to overcome these obstacles and to introduce the student to understanding and appreciation; its purpose and reason for being is to teach music. The curriculum is designed for everyone who wants to learn music, who wants to sing, who wants the cultural background that history and knowledge of music give, or who is a more advanced student in the intricacies of harmony and counterpoint."

Miss Badger, director of the Junior College A Capella Choir, and under whom the choir has blossomed into distinction and renown, receiving much acclaim for its public appearances, stressed the need for additional sopranos and altos in the choir but declared that the bass section was filled to capacity.

When asked what courses she would advise those interested in music to take, Miss Badger listed musicianship, in which the student learns to read and write music; history of music, a general study of the origin and development of the art and the composers who furthered it; harmony; voice, which gives instruction in, and opportunity for, solo singing, the Men's and Women's Choruses, which are open to acceptable voices, and finally the newest additions to the Music Department, the junior college band and orchestra.

"I would be glad to help plan a course to include music and am always available to answer any question," declared the busy Miss Badger who yet has time to help individuals as well as groups in music.

U. S. F. Scholarship Award Winners Announced

Charles O'Gara and Bradley Schwartz, former junior college students, are now attending the University of San Francisco as winners of the scholarship contest conducted jointly by the University and the junior college, it was announced this week by President Archibald J. Cloud.

O'Gara won the two-year scholarship and Schwartz won a year's free tuition. The latter was a member of the college debating team. O'Gara's record of student activities was quite extensive; he was a leader in the college peace movement, active in the Forum club, and one of the editors of "Forum," the student literary publication.

The scholarship examination included English, philosophy, hygiene, economics, public speaking, sociology, and current events. Entrants for the examination needed a "B" average or better to qualify.

"It is hoped that the University will continue the junior college scholarships," said John M. Selig, chairman of the college scholarship committee, "and that an increasing number of students will be eligible to compete for the award. The examination, through its comprehensiveness," he added, "showed unmistakably the splendid preparation of our students."

College Forum To Meet Friday

With surrealism the topic of discussion, John Ward upholding the movement and Roger Ranck opposing it, the college Forum will meet this Friday evening at 1856 Franklin Street.

John Healy, Forum secretary-treasurer, said that "The Guardsman was not correct in its description of the Forum club. We are principally a discussion group, not a literary organization," he emphasized, "but we do issue a publication each semester called 'Forum' which we think is the pick of student literature. Everyone is invited to contribute. I would like to see as many people as can make it, present at our meeting Friday night. There is room for everybody whether he is interested in writing, surrealism, or some other subject."

Entrance Exams Set For Sept. 4

Entrance examinations for late registrants will be held as follows:

Saturday, September 4, 1937, 9:00 A. M. Room 458, Galileo.

Subject A (Reading and Composition) and vocal interest tests.

Saturday, September 11, 1937, 9:00 A. M., Room 458, Galileo. College Aptitude tests and pictures.

According to the registrar's office no student will be considered officially registered until he has completed these examinations and September 3 is positively the last day of registration.

SOPHS CRUSH FROSH HOPES AT BRAWLING

A half-hour before deadline, the Editor doing and dying for dear old Rugby, the Sports Editor gone with the now famous wind, and no one to cover the brawl. What a situation!

Always on the alert to step in and do our bit (ahem!) we tucked the Women's Editor under our arm for moral support, grabbed somebody's pencil and notebook and trucked on over to the men's gym to see what there was to be seen.

Having missed the first event, which we later heard was a tie-up won by the Sophomores, we arrived just in time to see these same Sophomores win a short and snappy tug-of-war and another event which looked like it should have been called "break-the-other-fellow's back."

Bowing down to defeat in the tire relay race, the Frosh came back with a vengeance and won a free-for-all basketball game which was played with boxing gloves and which involved all the finer points of football, wrestling and plain ordinary warfare.

Glancing about the gym between events in an attempt to garner a bit of local color, we saw any number of our more prominent allumni (Hi ya, Deming!), practically the complete administration staff and what looked like the entire male portion of the faculty. Also, cowering against the walls and emitting from time to time, mingled shrieks of horror and delight, were any number of our fellow femmes, casting admiring glances at Hughie Waite, who was leading the fearless Freshies and gazing enviously at the beautifully bronzed back of Sophomore Bob Neal.

WILLIAMS TELLS OF NEW PLANS FOR PUBLICITY

Planning to extend the activities of his Rally Committee, Yell Leader Alan Williams has announced his hopes of going into new fields in an effort to serve the college. Although lacking what he deems unnecessary sanction by the Executive Council, Williams has proceeded to create a position of press agent which he says will be a major factor in getting increased attendance at college affairs.

A meeting of the Rally Committee was held last Wednesday, August 25, in the office of Dean Edwin C. Browne, at which some fifteen members of the organization were present. Williams explained to his group their duties for the coming semester and intimated his plans for increased activity.

"All members of the rally committee are obligated to serve as ushers at college athletic contests and rallies," Williams announced, "and will strive, mainly by example, to keep law and order at all student functions."

Williams offered A M S president, Don Mills, the service of the group for last Friday's brawl and the Men's Club put them to good use by having them keep the crowd from swarming on the floor during the running off of events.

In keeping with his policy of extended activity Williams has tentatively appointed Hugh Waite to the aforementioned post of press agent, possibly subject to the ratifification of the Executive Council. The duty of this office is to publicize all student activities within the college.

Williams further stated that another objective of the group is the production of some sort of a college show late in December. It has not been decided whether the production will be presented by the student body by itself or with the aid of outside entertainment.

The Rally Committee, also known as the Cap and Meg, was originated last spring by the bombastic Deming Smith and has as its purpose service to college. Members are selected for their ability to serve their college and for their talents as organizers and leaders. There is no immediate opening for new members, but Williams is allowed to bring anyone into the organization any time that he so desires.

Blanks Ready For NYA Jobs

If students wish to receive any pay for NYA jobs during the month of September, they must report to Helene Turner, college NYA director, immediately and obtain a blank form issued by the National Committee of the NYA.

This blank is to be filled out by both the student and his parents and returned to Miss Turner in order that he may be placed on the current payroll.

This is a new regulation which has just gone into effect, and failure to fill out the form will result in the loss of one month's time and pay.

EX COUNCIL BEGINS WEEKLY SESSION WITH USUAL BEEFS

President Blumenthal Conducts Regular Business As Yell Leader Williams Rows Over Post Of College Publicity Hounding Jurisdiction

Discussing the accomplishments of various committees and disputing the rights of certain members, the college executive council held its first official meeting last Wednesday, August 24.

With such routine matters as social and rally committee reports out of the way, President Gene Blumenthal called for a financial report from Ward Nichols, college comptroller. Nichols announced that the budget for this semester had not yet been developed, as most organizations had not turned in their bids for appropriations. He also informed the president that he would appoint a student from his office to present financial reports at each executive council meeting or, if the president preferred, he would deliver such reports himself.

Don Mills, president of the Men's Club, outlined the then tentative plans for the Freshman Brawl and in the course of his report asked the aid of the rally committee in keeping non-participants off the gymnasium floor during the time in which the brawl was going on.

PUBLICITY PUBLICIZED

The major portion of the meeting was devoted to a discussion of the right of Allen Williams, head yell leader and rally committee chairman, to appoint Hugh Waite as chairman of a committee to publicize college events.

Williams asked that Waite be made an ex-officio member of the council, without vote, which brought an immediate onslaught from council members who felt that the executive council and not the chairman of the rally committee should appoint said publicity chairman in event that such an appointment was found necessary.

JURISDICTION DISPUTED

Williams protested that it was within his jurisdiction to appoint such committees as he saw fit since the rally committee was a separate organization from the executive council. It was pointed out that he was not asking confirmation of the appointment of Waite but merely requesting that Waite be made an ex-officio member of the council, without vote, so that he would be in a position to obtain first hand information necessary to publicize affairs planned by the college.

After many harsh words on both sides, it was decided to postpone the discussion until the next meeting of the council which will be held at a time to be stipulated by President Blumenthal.

Assembly To Hear Of Mexican Travel

Featuring a discussion by Helene Turner, "Doc" Sewell, Joe Amori, Alden Smith and John Ross of their travels through Mexico during the past summer, an assembly will be held in the Lecture Hall of the Powell Street Building at 12:00 o'clock noon, Thursday, September 2, announced Paul Pitman.

The meeting will be held in the nature of a symposium, touching on the various phases of Mexican life as observed by the instructors. Each of the travelers took a different tack on his jaunt through the land of the "leaping legumes," and the opinion, observations and orations of each should prove very interesting.

"Furthermore," opined Pitman, "with such notable orators as Joe Amori and "Doc" Sewell holding forth, the affair will really be too good to miss."

All of the speakers are well known to the college. Helene Turner is the Assistant Director of N. Y. A. "Doc" Sewell lectures in Political Science, Amori needs no introduction, as most everyone has heard of his bicycle tours of Europe. Alden Smith is also of the Political Science Department, and John Ross is noted for his travels in Russia.

Open-House Held By AWS Officers

All freshman women are invited to an open-house reception celebrating the completion of the new patio decorated by the Associated Women Students, Norma Parent, AWS president, has announced. The opening will be held this morning from ten to twelve at the patio, located in back of the college book store on Powell Street. Refreshments will be served.

"I hope that all freshmen women will attend our open-house," commented Miss Parent, "because the AWS officers are anxious to meet them. We hope that they will come to the party as their first step towards a semester of active participation in AWS affairs."

Cool white walls the patio, which is provided with gay green-and-yellow garden furniture, two avocado plants, blooming potted flowers, and a window box. The court was decorated during the summer vacation by Kay Evelitch, Marion Yager, Barbara Randall, Isabelle Sherratt, Florence Murphy and Geraldine Roberts. The potted plants were donated by the AWS officers.

Miss Parent said that the AWS lounge, as well as the patio, is now open, and urged all women students to use it as a convenient study and social hall. Among her plans for the semester is an informal dance to be held at the Century Club in September.

John Gifford, head of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division and Botany instructor, has been awarded a leave of absence from the college, and a position at the University of California at Los Angeles, for his excellent organization ability as demonstrated by his work in the hotel division.

Paul M. Pitman, assistant to President Cloud, announced that this recognition has been accorded Gifford by the University of California. At the southern branch his duties will consist of vocational training of aspiring teachers. His place as head of the Hotel Division has been taken by J. Graham Sullivan, former manager steward of the cafeteria and former manager of the Stanford Cellar. Sullivan has been succeeded by Hilda Watson.

HAA ELECTIONS TO BE THURS.

All past members and new students taking household arts and home economics courses are asked to attend a meeting of the Household Arts Association tomorrow afternoon at 2:15 o'clock in room 317 at Galileo, according to Caroline Originos, president of the organization. The meeting has been called to present nominations for the posts of secretary and treasurer, which became vacant at the end of last semester. Miss Originos and Cecil Thompson, vice-president, said that the following meeting would be an election meeting when the two officers will be chosen.

"I would like to urge all freshman women students studying household arts or home economics to come to this meeting," Miss Originos said. "We are planning a number of social events for the semester and we hope they will join the organization so that they can take part in our activities."

In the past the HAA has been one of the most active organizations in the college, giving several fashion shows, teas and other affairs for women students, officers said.

AWS Adviser Lists New Office Hours

Women students of the college are urged to meet Margaret Dougherty, home economics and household arts instructor, who is organizing a tentative women's guidance bureau, the administration has announced. In order to meet as many women students as possible, Miss Dougherty will hold office hours on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday afternoons from two to five o'clock at Galileo High School, in the administrative offices, and on Tuesday and Thursday mornings at nine o'clock in the staff room at the Extension Building.

SPIRIT

In listing the essential factors of a winning football team the quality of team spirit would of necessity rank near the top. This one ingredient is often the difference between a merely good team and a great one.

Last year's college grid squad was a good team. It has been said that a lack of true team spirit was all that prevented last season's aggregation from achieving greatness.

Such, however, will not be the case this year. Ten days of practice have adequately demonstrated that there is none of the strained feeling formerly produced by many individual stars, who, though sincere in their efforts for the team's welfare, were worried over the security of their personal reputations.

In the coming season we will be represented by a team that is undeniably strong yet is strangely devoid of any individual stars.

It is entirely possible that the Ram football team of 1937 will go far beyond the bond of mediocrity and assume a genuine greatness by winning the college's first conference grid championship.

PROOF OF THE PUDDING

One of the oft quoted maxims of the nursery rhymes concerns the fact that the proof of the pudding is in the eating. A present day version of the same thing would probably say that "they pay off on results".

Such being the case the leaders and conceivers of Hell Week can feel a justifiable pride. The results of their planning produced just the effect for which they admittedly aimed. Everyone who so wished was able to indulge in the lighter phase of college life to the ultimate. Everyone worked hard trying to have a good time, and the majority felt that they were successful.

The Rally Committee handled the welcoming duties in a manner that left their activities will be productive of much action only the long test of time can prove.

MENS SANA IN CORPORE SANO

The ideal objective of every college student is found in this Latin quotation, "a healthy mind in a healthy body". To seek mental development at the sacrifice of physical well being is sheer stupidity.

No matter in what field ambition lies a strong body will be a distinct asset. All know enough about the "mechanics" of the human body to understand that it is impossible to do good work when struggling under physical handicaps.

A word to the wise is said to be sufficient, and if most of you are just half as wise as you think you are you will realize the foolishness of continually punishing your body by late hours, indigestible food and indolent habits of exercise. It takes but little effort to keep your body functioning properly and it is quite evident that you will be well repaid for your troubles.

IMAGINATION

There is a real need of imagination in scientific scholarship to keep it from becoming dusty and foolish. For instance, in historical studies it is admitted by authorities that imaginative reconstruction and dramatic sympathy, provided that they be plain and not illusory, will help a great deal in keeping the mind from wandering into labyrinths of speculation. Our imagination is in a sense our strongest force in keeping in touch with reality.

The object of imaginative study is the most worthwhile of all because it is the study of man, his world and his environment. This is inevitably united in the study of human nature, because man and his world are what we meet with, and this is the sole object of our search for knowledge. The imaginative study of men in order to be imaginative must be, not of human nature in the abstract such as we study in philosophy, but of men, of individuals. This imaginative quality in our studying allows us to see man as he really is, as he gazes at a sunset or burrows into his cities, or as he talks and deals with other men. Don't waste your education by letting the things you learn in college have no significance beyond the mere passing of a course. By mixing a little imagination into your school work all things that you learn can become living vital factors in your own life.

FUN'S OVER

Now that the freshman class has been welcomed in a fitting manner via rallies, dances and innumerable impromptu paddling sessions, the college can again settle back into its normal course of activities. It is sincerely hoped that those first two weeks crammed with nonsense did not give the newcomers a distorted sense of values in regard to higher education. They will find that there is considerably more to being a successful college student than hanging a dink at a fetching angle over a left eyebrow,

After Dark

By John Ward

Since there is little else of importance in San Francisco this week, today's column will again be devoted to the Surrealistic Show which closed last night at the San Francisco Art Gallery.

The exteme comments heard on both sides have formed a large part of the interest aroused by the exhibition. And few art movements have called forth such resolute and wholesale condemnation. It is the brave man who dares say much in favor of Surrealism in the presence of real "art lovers". Yet, most people, on entering the galleries, are puzzled with the technical perfection and the fantastic inspirations of Dali, Ernst, Arp, etc.

Seldom do the denouncers (or above the real) elements in everyday existence. One dreams in unreal terms, reads poetry that practically depends on surrealism for its images, and sees such mimics as the Marx Brothers, the Ritz Brothers or the Silly Symphonies of Walt Disney without consciously realizing that all the while they are raising havoc with what we call the real.

The moment you say "she walks like a cat" or "he's an old bear" or "she looks like a dream (or a horse or a flower or any other simile you choose)" you are making use of Surrealism. Just picture in your mind's eye a human face that looks like a horse or a person who walks like a cat and you have something above the real.

Perhaps you remember the surrealistic poetry of Harpo Marx in a cinema called "Animal Crackers" when he stole the birthmark from the art dealer, or the surrealistic violence when he kicked the hostess. More recently, you may remember one of the song - dance - nonsense routines of the Ritz Brothers. Practical, commercial, amusing, hilarious—surrealism—nothing more nor less.

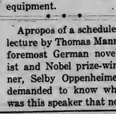
Girligigs

By Ardell White

Another semester whirls off to a dizzy start, brightened by another crop of "fresh faces"—and, speaking of freshness, greetings to the frosh co-eds. Wonder how many of you realize how lucky you are to be entering in the Fall? Fall is, you know, the traditional college season of football and fur coats, dances, rallies and rampant school spirit, and a goodly part of this rah-rah atmosphere penetrates even to the inner confines of Powell Street, Galileo, Girls High, yea, even to the Gompers Trade School that can be reached by pack horse and the one-man car.



Starting off a college career in the midst of an exciting social and athletic program is apt to imbue the whole picture with a glamour that you will remember a few years from now as the best part of your freshman year. Rose-colored glasses are pretty nice sometimes.

Coming out of the abstract and into the more practical side of things, word on the AWS patio is coming along and you can expect to be invited to an official opening or patio-warming very soon. What with garden furniture and summery white walls, it should be a miniature Palm Springs on Powell Street, a restful spot in which to talk or study or even knit, and if the fog holds off for a while everyone ought to be able to enjoy it.

Dark tales are being told of the injustice done to women in various unenlightened parts of the country, but it took our own little institution to turn the table and work a hardship on the men. At the beginning of the semester college students attending nine o'clock classes at Girls High School were instructed to enter by the Geary Street door only, but the management neglected to unlock said door. Co-eds desiring to enter rattled the metal portals and passing high school students let them in, but when a bunch of men students banged on the door and yelled for help, the girls passed them by without a glance. Unwilling to break rules and go around to the front Scott Street entrance, the hapless males shivered and waited, and waited and shivered while classes went on without them. A pretty kettle of mackeral!

P. S. The high school announces that from now on everyone can enter by way of Scott Street, thereby removing a blot from the now spotless escutcheon of the college.

365 Days Ago Today

Our "Rambling Rams" prepared to invade the corral of the Salinas Cowboys. The game was subsequently postponed because of a lettuce strike. Lettuce play, lettuce play.

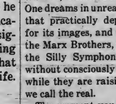
Late enrollments brought the total number of students in the college up to 1,635.



Freshmen met to discuss a plan of battle for the coming brawl with the Sophomores. They might just as well have played cards or read a good book, for all the good it did them.

Hazards of a fire in the Powell Street building were shown to be nil, when two fire drills emptied the structure in exactly four minutes.

The Flying Lambs, second string football squad, scored two touchdowns to beat Watsonville High School in a hard fought game.

Junior Colleges were revealed by a governmental survey, to be a growing means of public education in this country. The survey showed that this type of school had grown from a national total of 84 in 1918, to 190 institutions at the present time.

By Gene Blumenthal

Finding himself with his most sincere ambition somewhat stymied from week to week has been the experience to date of one who seems to remember having been elected president of the Associated Students. The most recent was one of those unfortunate but apparently ever-present conflicts of a purely technical nature between administrative compulsory courses and university regulations.

It used to seem, in the second grade, that those people so fortunate as to be given an opportunity to pound gavel were immune from program difficulties. Maybe the idea was that we thought that anyone who reached that point did it by virtue of serene and easily regulated steps of progression. Now we are allowed to handle the gavel, and find that a certain course designed for Associated Students offices, and in fact required of them, is absolutely alien to our program as required for future learning at the university. So alien is it, in truth, that it simply won't fit, and we are beginning to understand Hamlet—poor guy.

We did, you see, at one time want to feel that Fall, 1937, would mark a definite step in accomplishment of student government. We thought that certain things should be done, now that the first cycle in the college's existence has been completed. Some of them we hoped to see effected during this present "regime." What student does not hope that in some way he can leave his mark on his college—other than in initials?

Possibly, and very probably, optimism is just another term for stubbornness, bull-dog die-hardedness. We, however, having gained a second wind after the stress of the first two weeks, are still optimistic. One thing we are going to see done this semester! Anything else will be just so much more than we can hope for at this writing. Who knows? Maybe it's a building?

And may we extend our deepest sympathies to Preston "Duke" Worsham, whose promising football career came crashing, when he incurred a painful neck injury in scrimmage recently. Always playing a hard, steady, game, Duke reached the heights last November 11, at Sacramento, where his brilliant line backing made him easily the outstanding quarter in the conference. Considerably shaken and subdued, we'll never let Preston forget that to us, he's still the Duke!

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

Judging from the letter which we found in this morning's mail, it would seem that our column of last week stirred up a hornet's nest in North Beach. The epistle is from a Mr. Guisseppi Angelino Baccigalupi and states in no uncertain terms, just what the writer thinks of this columnist's opinion of curious cognomens. We should like our readers to peruse Mr. Bacigalupi's letter in its entirety.

San Francisco, Calif.
August 25, 1937

Dear Misters MacArter:

These letter ees to ceenform you that I have binna reada your column in the colleges papier, and I theenk sheesa no good for something, or something. You have givna me a very definite ennsult and Ima to havea the laws on you for the label soots. It appears that the B's (our typewriter absolutely refuses to have anything more to do with that name) are massing toward a united front in order to smash this business of making "somethings foolishness" out of their illustrious name.

Seriously though, Mr. B, there was no intent to ridicule anyone's name, and we merely tried to show the curious combinations of letters which follow some of our given names. Please reconsider your "soots" and let us see if this matter may not be settled outside of court to the satisfaction of all concerned. If you so desire, we might do a column eulogizing the proud name which you bear so vehemently, but in any case, please do not force us to subject our sensitive nature to the stares of a curious courtroom crowd, besides, we couldn't cut class to go to court unless you promised to serve raviolis and beer.

For our thought from the fog this week, we cite the case of a blind man whom we noticed on a streetcar the other night. He was sitting near the front of one of those one man cars, and when the motorman stopped the car, and walked to the back to get his satchel, the blind man, thinking that he had gone to turn the lights on, said, "It looks brighter in here now." The motorman replied, "But I didn't turn them on yet." The blind passenger only laughed, "Well I guess its joke's on me." And everyone laughed. It's rather encouraging to encounter someone in this hurrying life, who can throw back his head and give a lusty laugh at his own expense, let alone at his own misfortune. Isn't it?

RAMBLINGS

By ED FREDIANI

Not satisfied with the college's shaky football setup, old man fate had one of his colleagues "early season injuries," step in and deal out the already staggering Ram two well-aimed rabbit punches.

Duke Worsham, who we had tabbed for an all-conference berth, and Jerry Flamm, giant tackle, are both out for the remainder of the season. Worsham received a cracked vertabrae, and Flamm an injured shoulder, the injuries occurring before one week had elapsed in the current season.

NO MORE GREY HAIR

Tom Wilson, Soccer Coach, heaved a sigh of relief, when he heard that Leo Johnson, star of last year's championship outfit, is returning to the college. Johnson missed three conference games last year while battling a case of pneumonia, and even then he came within one goal of leading the league in scoring.

THE BRAWL

Joe Amori stopped the final event in the Frosh-Soph brawl before the time limit was up and we can't blame him a bit for it would have been a lot harder to stop the free-for-all that seemed on the verge of commencing.

Brother Bob Neal said he hasn't had so much fun in a brawl since he was a freshman, and that's a long, long time ago. This is the first term that the two classes were represented by teams of fairly equal brawn, and it made the affair more interesting from the spectators' standpoint, as every event was closely contested.

THE GALILEO GAME

Incidentally Galileo has a splendid chance to upset the old dope-bucket in the local high school league, as they have improved greatly since last year. An end by the name of Cochrane is one of the best punters the triple A league has seen in many a moon, and should be a deciding factor in the Lions' chances this fall.

WATER-BOY

The Red and White gridders will have one of the fastest, if not the fastest water-boy in the country, in Joe "Mousey" Garcia. Garcia was the Ram's star sprinter last spring, and he is playing valet to the gridsters. Joe almost quit his job when they told him he couldn't use "Lily Cups" to carry the water in.

SOCCER

Things seemed to be brightening up for Coach Tom Wilson. The soccer mentor who still is crying for more material to work with is working feverishly with the remnants of his 1937 championship team.

Defense la Wilson's big headache, as only one man remains from the title-holder's impenetratable backfield, Ellard Taylor who played left-halfback, is the returning veteran. Taylor is the type of player who likes the rough going, and because of his past experience, he will probably hold down the all-important center half position.

One fullback only is returning to the wars under the Red and White banner. Vince Zuardo, utility man on the title holders squad, stands a good chance crashing the starting lineup as first string full back. Walt Leporsky, husky forward, is the only other veteran returning.

Among the newcomers to the squad, Jimmy Mull and Elmer Hubacher are standouts. Mull has a good chance to assist Taylor in one of the halfback spots.

"Our team is looking better and better every day," declared Coach Tom Wilson. "At the rate we are going it's possible that we might be out there battling for the championship once more."

"But," continued Wilson, "we are still short of new recruits. Our backfield is now our weakest link and we haven't enough material to work with. It's not too late to come out for the team and we could certainly use a few more men."

GRIDIRON GRUMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

A glance at the roster of the University of San Francisco football squad this year gives one the impression that a general get-together of ex-Rams gridders is being staged up on the hill. Among those now cavorting for the Dons are George Clark, colored halfback who bore the brunt of the attack for Russ Sweet's squad last year, and Charlie Kremcsec, laughingly known as "the Killer," who also flung his weight about for the Ram cause last football season. Another now disporting himself at the hill is Johnny Fitzgerald, that inimitable sometime catcher on last spring's baseball team; probably received a scholarship on the strength of his sensational batting average (.076, wasn't it, Johnny?) But, of course, that doesn't prove anything—much.

Also adorning the football roster we find the name of George Pedrin of Galileo, Lowell, S. F. J. C., and points west. Seriously, though, George has plenty of "what it takes," and should make his mark in the ranks of the "big-time" players, judging from the way he handled the guard chores for the Rams last season.

A word of warning to the footballers before they meet Marin on September 24th: Look out for a certain Bill Adams, a dark horse who is reported to be playing quite a bit of halfback for the Mariners. A southpaw of deadly passing ability, and a dangerous runner, this lad will bear watching.

We know you'll all join us in extending sympathy to Duke Worsham, victim of the toughest break that could have befallen him. Apparently a cinch for all-conference honors as center, he is out of football for the season, perhaps forever, with a fractured vertebra. We're sorry, Duke.

Little Frank Verducci, one of the leaders in the dual for the quarterback position on the Ram varsity, turns out to be the brother of one Joe Verducci, whom you may remember as having barked the signals for the Golden Bears not so long ago. Aptitude with the pigskin seems to run in the family.

We understand that Russ Sweet is toying with the idea of shoving Merv Weiner in at center to fill the hole left by the loss of Duke Worsham. He might do a lot worse in his selection of a man to fill the position, as Weiner is by no means what would be called a puny little tyke, and beef counts in the center of the line

LAMBS SCORE IN CLOSING MOMENTS, FLEECE LIONS

It was supposed to be feeding time at 100 last Friday afternoon and Coach Ras Johnson's Lions were scheduled to fatten themselves up on a little snack of Lamb meat provided by Coach Jack Geddy. The junior college coach proved himself a distinct failure as butcher, however, and his Lamb meat was so tough that it caused the North Beach kitties to have a bad case of indigestion to the tune of a 12 to 6 licking administered in a thoroughly convincing fashion.

Although their scoring was all accounted for in the final period, the college reserves were masters of the play throughout the contest. The Lamb line proved itself vastly superior to the Galileo forward wall and never allowed the Johnson ground attack to function at any time during the game.

The first half was played without either team being able to dent the scoring column although the Red and White gridders lost several possible chances because of a shaky early season ball handling.

Galileo scored first by the flawless execution of a pass from Bill Russo, halfback, to Jack Cochrane, end, that saw the flankman snag the fifteen yard aerial close to the Lamb goal and then scurry unmolested in to the end zone for the touchdown. They failed to convert.

The locals got their break in the final period when Bill Tessier, Lamb end, broke through to pick up a Lion fumble on the three yard line. After two attempts at the line had failed to produce a touchdown, they handed the ball to Art (Piggy) Nelson, who pulled his knees up to his chin and drove through for the score.

After a penalty for interfering with the receiver had put the ball on the one yard line, Charley Swanson pounded over the goal for the winning tally.

Coach Gaddy announced that his Lambs would try to continue their winning ways against the local high schools when they meet Commerce next Saturday morning on the Bulldog field.

The high school lads are expected to provide some stiff competition for Gaddy's boys, most of whom are still a long way from being seasoned veterans.

A complete lineup of both squads which competed last Friday will be formed on page four.

Duke Worsham Hit By Injury; Out Of Grid Competition

Lending a severe blow to the college's hopes for a football championship and blasting a great many of his own personal hopes as well, Preston Worsham, all-conference center, received an injury last week which resulted in a broken vertebrae in his neck and strict orders from the doctor to lay off football for some time to come.

Classed by those who know him best as "a swell guy," Duke's entire life centered around the gridiron and his happiest moments were spent clad in cleats and helmet. Ironically, shortly after receiving his injury, the Ram center was offered a football scholarship at the University of Arizona which, naturally enough, he had to refuse.

With the aid of an iron neck brace, Duke is keeping his chin up and showing everyone a fine sample of the sportsmanship that has made him one of the brilliant athlete that he is.

Date Changed For WAA Nominations

To hasten the beginning of WAA activities, sign-up dates have been changed from September 6 and 10 to August 30 through September 1, to be held in the Galileo gymnasium and at the Extension building. The dates for the nomination of club managers have been moved ahead a week and are now scheduled as September 7 and 8. Participation in WAA sports begins on September 13 and elections are also held on this date. There will be demonstrations of the various sports in all physical education classes from September 23 to September 27.

Margaret Wormell, vice-president of the council, declared, "Twelve sports are offered this year. Through the publication of our handbook we hope we have aroused the interest in WAA activities to a greater extent than ever before. We hope our efforts will be rewarded by a big turn-out in all WAA activities."

The archery, dancing, riding, and golf classes have already posted bulletin boards in the Galileo gym with cartoons and time schedules of their respective classes.

To explain the merits and activities of the various WAA sports, the WAA and physical education instructors have asked that the following information be printed about each of the sports.

Tennis:

Tennis is held at the Palace of Fine Arts. Either novices or experienced players may sign for tennis. Club meetings and practice will be held Fridays from 10 to 12 o'clock. Tournaments and play days will provide plenty of competition and good fun. There will also be mixed doubles this fall. Rackets and balls must be provided by the individual players. Tennis managers will be nominated at the club meeting at Powell St. at 10 o'clock and practice begins Friday, September 17, at 10 o'clock.

Volleyball:

Volleyball meets in gym A. It is a team sport which all women will enjoy. The practice periods will be from 4:05 to 5:35 o'clock on Tuesday and Thursday. September 8 is the date set for nomination of a club manager. Practice starts on September 14. Inter-class games, playdays and invitational mixed games with college men will be part of the program.

Fencing:

Eight fencers are needed. Practice is at 4:30 o'clock on Tuesday and Thursday. Some tournaments have been planned for near the end of the semester. The class will attend fencing bouts held in the Bay region. There is a possibility of informal bouts with other school groups.

Archery:

Archery is scheduled for 12:30 o'clock on Monday and Wednesday. There are to be many tournaments with target and novelty shooting. An archery-golf match with the WAA golfers may be arranged.

Dancing:

Grid Outlook Promising In Spite of Injuries To Two First String Line Veterans

Swinging into its second week of practice, Coach Russ Sweet's football machine has begun to assume imposing proportions. Despite the grim spectre of injury that cut down Duke Worsham, all conference center, Jerry Flamm, huge tackle, and Bud Wickers, an impressive looking freshman flankman, the scrimmages that were the major part of the week's drilling have disclosed a potentially powerful Ram team.

Returning veterans of proven reputation or capable newcomers have stepped into all the varsity positions. With the first game still weeks away, Sweet expects to add a lot of polish to his attack for the opener with Marin on September 24.

For a few days at least the line positions are rather definite, according to Sweet.

The two regulars from last year, Joe Guedet and El Pearce, have acquired a strangle hold on the starting end jobs and give the team powerful blocking on plays moving over the wing spots.

VETS SECURE

Both Guedet, a slender blonde lad, and Pearce, rugged workhorse, are able exponents of the Warner style of crashing-end play. Both men are fast in getting down the field under punts while the sticky fingered Guedet is especially noted for his pass catching ability. He leaped up into heaven to pull down two scores in the Sacramento mutilation last fall.

The alternates at the end position are still undecided upon, but Bob Lee and the aforementioned Bud Wickers have the inside track at the present writing. The bruising style of crashing your ends is a gruelling workout for the starters and the coaching staff is anxious to uncover a pair of able substitutes.

The shoulder injury of Jerry Flamm left the Sweetmen without experienced replacements at the all-important tackle positions. Willie Dolman, fast charging alternate the last year's Ram production, is slated to hold down the regular spot along with Sims "Tip" Hamilton, bulky graduate of the Flying Lambs. Although Hamilton lacks experience, he has demonstrated in the practice sessions that he is a powerful offensive blocker while his defensive work leaves little to be desired.

WEINER A TACKLE

There is an old adage in the grid game that states, "When you need a tackle shoot the brains out of your fullback and stick him in the line." The varsity was in a bad way for reserve tackles, so Coach Sweet, being well versed in the lore of the profession, has placed Merv Weiner, early season hope for the fullback job, at tackle. Weiner is a big, tough, fast-moving gridder, and which he has gained a little experience in his new position he should prove an asset to the squad. The only other tackle with varsity possibilities is Ed Swanson, pudgy freshman find.

The guard slot is one of the few spots where it is possible for the coaches to substituto without greatly weakening the team. A letterman from last fall's outfit, Randy Osborne, is a tower of strength in the middle of the line. Osborne is capable of sensational football when inspired. His running mate will probably be tow-headed Andy Oddstead, another Lamb graduate, and an unbelievably strong defensive worker. These two regulars are backed up by a brace of efficient assistants in "Major" General and Tom "Moon" Burke. Mel Pederson is another possibility at guard.

DUKE MISSED

The unfortunate injury to Duke Worsham at center has put the coaching staff in a quandry trying to develop a useful pivot man. Worsham was one of the standouts of last year's number. Steady and sure on offensive and a deadly pass interrepter on the defense, Worsham can never really be replaced, but Sweet is working on several men to use at this position because it is very doubtful if the Duke will see any action this fall.

It appears that Tom De Forest of Berkeley will be the regular at center, at least at this time. Carl Brogger will probably supply the reserve talent.

The backfield presents a real problem. A bevy of real back men have been listed and they all given a good account of themselves in the scrimmages. The problem is how to place them.

Two men are almost insured of regular jobs, these fortunates being the hard-hitting Wes Olson and Ray Egelhofer. Both men have been used at every position in the backfield and no one seems to know just where they will wind up finally.

The key position in the backfield is wide open with Woody Lenis, George McDonald, Ed Canepa and "Bullet Bob" Fez all seeming to fulfill the requirements of good left halfbacks. John Verducci, small but potent quarter, Frank Knowlton, a demon blocker, and Walt Boitano, fleet fullback, are the other men who will be hard to keep off the first string.

RAMS' HORN

Editor, The Guardsman:

In the last issue of The Guardsman in the article on school organizations you did not present a true picture of the Forum Club. These are your words: "Those whose interests follow the line of literature and poetry can affiliate themselves with the Forum Club by seeing either student Fred Vast or instructor Dorothy Mercer."

The student to see is John Healy, secretary-treasurer of the organization. However, this is not to be interpreted that no other student is to be seen.

As you had it the average person (who hadn't heard of the group before) got the impression that the Forum is purely a literary club. This is not so, the name implies exactly what our purpose is, principally a discussion group. We also issue a literary publication every semester; last year the magazine met with tremendous success. Our discussions are not confined to literature. We discuss various subjects of interest both current and lasting, the discussions are thorough and bring out many interesting viewpoints.

The members themselves decide what subject they want to discuss for the next time at the end of the evening's discussion.

The Forum sponsored several interesting assemblies last semester including the local counterpart of the nation wide peace demonstration, April 22. The action was endorsed by the administration and student body council. Anyone interested in writing or discussing some subject is invited to attend the meeting this Friday night at 1856 Franklin St.

An enjoyable time is assured to all who attend. This time the subject up for discussion is the dada and surrealist movement.—"FORUMER."

Dear Editor:

Those who attended the semi-formal at the Women's City Club on Friday night would undoubtedly agree that the social affair was very well handled and greatly enjoyed by all present. In these days when the young people are fre- ... of unmerited public ... raging to be present ... d dance and witness ... some four hundred ... ents can enjoy themselves in a most exemplary manner. The administration has always felt that students appreciate the responsibility placed upon them by the confidence of the faculty and it was a sincere pleasure to witness our students so conduct their semi-formal as to receive repeated and unsolicited praise and commendation from the management of the club. It pleased everyone to know that S. F. J. C. students know how. May I wish many happy returns of such affairs?

Catholic Group To Hold First Meet Next Monday

Proposing to unite all the Catholic students of the college, the Newman Club has tentatively set Monday, September 6, as the date for its first meeting. A location has not yet been decided upon but when it has been definitely selected posters will announce the time and place, according to Bob Fex, president of the organization.

The semester's program as outlined by President Fex shows that the Newman Club will be a very active group. Besides the weekly meetings devoted to discussion and social purposes, Fex plans to stage a series of whist parties for charitable organizations.

It is also hoped that the club can sponsor a bazaar toward the end of the semester, Fex said. Present plans call for a winding up of all activities at a dance to be staged a few days previous to the Christmas holidays.

"Our organization was one of the largest in the college last fall," Fex said, "but we are still anxious to receive new members. We are particularly interested in obtaining as members all the Catholic students in the Low Freshman Class but, naturally, all students who are interested in this type of organization will be welcome."

It is hoped by organization leaders that permanent club rooms can be established as was the case last semester when they were located in a basement section of St. Mary's Cathedral. Father Scanlon, assistant pastor of this church, is chaplain of the group and Jack Gaddy, college football coach, and Claire Cuneo, Home Economics instructor, are the faculty sponsors.

College Teams Win Numerous Trophies

Unnoticed perhaps by the majority of the student body, eight trophies which Ram teams have won in the last two semesters now repose in the office of J. Paul Mohr, registrar.

There is the soccer trophy won in the fall of '36, and the tennis trophy which was won by an outstanding team last fall.

Chandler Ennis, brought the college the Intro-mural perpetual trophy by winning the '37 tennis singles championship. Ennis also teamed up with Al Alffield to win the Lewis Inc. perpetual doubles trophy. Betty Phillips played with Milton Durfee to win the mixed doubles championship and the last of the four tennis trophies all won last spring.

Switching to basketball we find the conference trophy for the year 1936. In football we have in our possession the coveted Roos Brothers perpetual trophy won last year, which is presented annually to the winner of the Big Game with Los Angeles Junior College.

Last on the list is the George Washington perpetual trophy for the Collegiate Sea Scouts Pulling Race won by the crew last spring.

Music Club Opens Programs Tonight

Inaugurating a new type of musical activity in the college, the Music Club will hold its first meeting of the season tonight. Sponsored by Flossita Badger, this social and musical group meets twice a month at the homes of various members. Interesting programs are presented by visiting artists as well as solos and vocal selections by the members themselves. All music lovers are urged by Miss Badger to attend these informal gatherings.

Berman's Research Now In Book Form

Two years of research, beginning at Harvard during the summer of 1935 and terminating at Lick Observatory during the past summer, by Louis Berman, instructor of astronomy at the college, has resulted in the publication of Lick Obervatory Bulletin No. 486, written by Berman under the auspices of the University of California School of Astronomy.

The book is a study of the galactic rotation from the data of the planetary nebulae. It is found, the book says, that the sun is placed two-thirds of the diameter of the Galactic System from the center, so that the sun is near the edge of the system rather than the center.

You have all enjoyed yourself during this period of welcome, but now the fun is over and you must get yourself acquainted with the business of serious study. With all its tensel trapping of rah rah removed, the college stands defiantly before you, offering you knowledge not as a gift but as a prize for your earnest application to scholastic endeavors.

Memories of bull sessions and delightful hours spent loafing soon fade into dim oblivion, but the grades acquired during the coming semester will remain as consant reminders of success or failure. You can't do anything about poor marks the night before finals but you can do something now. So let's tuck our paddles and dinks away in the closet for another six months and start getting familiar with text books and class assignments.

WHISTLEPOUSE'S ZIP UP CLASS

Preliminary roll call of the college instructors has yielded such names as Dagmar Zillovich, and Lochinvar Whistlepouse. Such a roster as this speeds up roll call from three minutes allotted to forty-nine minutes and sixty seconds. It very definitely gives the class an attention span of one-half a split infinitive.

A graphic example of the obstacles in the way of efficient delivery of the roll call is the way college students insist on keeping that pin drop silence. Three "never talkers," Isobel Scherrett, Jean Lonkey, and Dorothy Canavon, were discussing silently flounced buttonholes. The instructor called softly and sibilantly through his molars for the third time "Miss I-S-O-B-E-L Scher-rat." At this juncture Ia Canovon interrupted Isobel's complicated discussion of the jay walk stitch (criss cross) to shout, "Izzy, you dope!" No one dreamt of hearing such a remark and it was ascertained by this, that Miss Scherrett was physically present.

RADIO CLASSES VISIT STATIONS

To gain first hand knowledge in the actual mechanical workings of radio stations, the Radio 51A class, under the supervision of Lowell M. Hollingsworth, visited two San Francisco radio stations last week.

"As this course is to be more ad... able to the practical side of radio, ... dents will gain valuable informatio... to the actual set up of a broadcas... station and its transmitter." Holli... worth said. Tuesday, they vis... KFRC, local Don Lee Mutual netw... outlet, and witnessed a broadcas... The Morning Merrymakers, a nov... program. Later in the week, the c... inspected station KJBS.

Radio 51A is described by Holli... worth as emphasizing the handlin... radio in three ways, radio repair line, that is ability to build sets, automobile radios and public address work, which would pertain to sound apparatus in moving picture houses, and public address systems. "There is a wide field in the manufacturing, installation and maintenance of public address systems," Hollingsworth said.

RIFLE CLUB TO BE ENTERTAINED

Skating, dancing, and a wienie roast are ahead for members of the college Rifle and Pistol Club, Gail Hanna, club vice-president, said last Thursday at the first general business meeting of the club. She stated that on September 17 the group will go to the Peninsula Beach Skating Rink and skate until 10:30 when the rink closes. After the skating, a wienie roast and dance will be enjoyed by all present.

Miss Hanna urged all those interested to sign up as soon as possible at the Galileo High School range, as the first to sign up will be sure of transportation. The dead line for signing is September 15th, she added.

She also emphasized the need for cars to supply transportation. Car owners will be reimbursed by the club and it is requested that they also sign up soon. Miss Hanna added that the cost at the skating rink is 25c with student body card. Transportation and food will also cost 25c.

Members, prospective members, and friends are all invited, but members will be given preference if there is a lack of transportation facilities, she remarked. All who attend may expect to have an enjoyable evening.

The Rifle and Pistol Club is one of the oldest organizations in the college and has for some time been one of the most active. Started soon after the beginning of the Fall Semester in 1935 under the leadership of T. Gordon Sollman, who was elected President and later, by unanimous vote, an honorary member, the club consisted of a few men and women who were interested in shooting. Application was made for membership in the National Rifle Association, and through the recommendation of that organization, the local club was put on the list for issue of rifles by the United States Government. After about a year the rifles arrived, and the members began preliminary instruction in marksmanship under the direction of William A. Hancock, 250th Coast Artillery, four times a member of the National Guard teams at the National Rifle matches.

OMICRON GROUP TO OPEN FIELD TO CALIFORNIA

Starting its second year, Omicron Phi Pi, Economics Honor Society, will again be prominent in economics circles of the college. Formed in 1936 by Michael M. Zarchin, instructor in Economics, the organization now will attempt to expand into a larger organization by issuing charters to other junior colleges throughout California. Letters will be sent to the different schools in the interests of establishing branch societies. I. Zangor, president of Omicron Phi Pi said that San Francisco Junior College will be the headquarters, and will furnish the new chapter with a ritual and keys.

Omicron Phi Pi is open to those students who have distinguished themselves in at least six units of Economics with a scholastic average of B plus or better. Meetings are held twice a semester, and, following initiation of new members, there is an annual dinner. Papers are prepared by members on current economic topics and are discussed at each meeting. A number of instructors as well as students are members of Omicron Phi Pi. All students interested in joining Omicron Phi Pi who have a sufficient scholastic requirement, may apply to Zangor. Zarchin is the adviser and other officers are Charles H. Vaughn, vice-president, and Eugene Cramer, secretary and treasurer.

Rifle and Pistol Club Plans To Open Semester With Bang

Opening the semester "with a bang," the college Rifle and Pistol Club held its first general business meeting at 5:30 o'clock Thursday, August 26, at the Galileo High School rifle range. Explaining the idea of a manager for each team, James S. Hughes, faculty sponsor of the club, stated that these managers would have charge of equipment and targets, and that there would be three—two men and one woman—one for each team. He added that preferably these three would be non-shooting members of the club in order that they might devote their whole time to managing their respective teams, allowing team members to concentrate on their firing.

Manager's awards will be given on the same basis as those given team members, Hughes explained. "We have increased facilities, many opportunities, and are planning many social events this semester, so why not come and join us?" he urged.

Hughes also revealed that all club members are eligible for the teams or for manager's positions and that new members will have just as much chance as the old ones, as the best will be decided upon from the targets which are submitted.

Places are still open for women on the women's team, announced club treasurer, Fred Wright. Here is a good chance to take an active part in one of the largest and liveliest clubs of the college, he said.

George Dieser, club president, again emphasized that positions are still open on all three teams and urged all interested to try out.

Reporting on plans for the club's first social of this semester which is to be held at Peninsula Beach Skating Rink on September 17th, Gail Hanna, vice-president of the club, suggested an early sign-up as the first to sign up will be sure of transportation.

Proud of its record as one of the oldest and most active Junior College student organizations, the Rifle and Pistol Club plans an expanded program for this semester. Under the leadership of George Dieser, President, the Club Board of Control held its first meeting last week to approve a schedule of shooting and social events. Firing activities for Club members start this week at the Galileo Rifle Range, with the first general Club meeting scheduled for tomorrow afternoon at 5:30 at the same place.

The first social event recommended by Vice-President Gail Hanna, Chairman of the Social Committee, is to be a skating party on September 17. Final action on the recommendation will be taken at the general meeting tomorrow. A total membership of seventy-five is expected for this semester, according to Virginia Kwiatt, Secretary of the Club. The Club had sixty-six members last semester, Miss Kwiatt added, and with fifty students already members for this term and enrolled in the Rifle Marksmanship classes, we ought to reach this total easily. All men and women are welcome to join as soon as possible and thus become eligible for instruction in small and large bore marksmanship as well as participation in our social activities, she stated.

EXTENSIONS BUILDING FACILITIES OUTLINED FOR BEWILDERED FROSH

Stating that many Freshmen are not acquainted with the facilities of the extension building, Paul Pitman, assistant to the president, listed the following facts for the information of new students so that they can "learn the ropes".

"First of all," Pitman said, "any student who has any question or needs aid should consult the junior college office on the first floor at the head of the stairs across the hall from the elevator. Faculty members can usually be found between classes at the instructors table in the lobby and at all ... nes they may be located by the schedule in the lobby.

... uld be well for everyone," Pit... ntinued, "to make a habit of ... the bulletin board on the mez... loor near the checking booth. ... en will one know what is hap... around the college (aside from The Guardsman)."

The college library is located on the lower floor of the extension building and on the mezzanine floor of 518 Powell Street. Francis J. Colligan is the librarian and maintains his office on the mezzanine floor. The size of the library has been increased this semester and magazines, fiction and reference books are available.

For the women there is a modern lounge located in the basement of the book store. This lounge has lately been augmented by a newly decorated patio behind the book store and women students are urged to use the facilities of both places at all times.

Pitman added that the study hall is on the lower floor of the extension building and that students should take advantage of it. He appealed to everyone to be quiet in the study hall and consider students who earnestly wish to study.

POSITIONS OPEN FOR WOMEN

Several positions in private homes are open to women students in the college according to Margaret Dougherty, household arts instructor and organizer of a tentative women's guidance bureau in the college.

Women interested in employment are requested to see Miss Dougherty as soon as possible, she said.

SURVEY REVEALS CLASSES DOUBLE AT GIRLS' HIGH

Coupled with the college's growth has been the growth of the secretarial course which has doubled in size over last year. The classes meet at Girls' High School daily; F. Grant Marsh is director of the course.

New subjects in the course this year are machine calculation which includes instruction in the comptometer and the Burroughs, Marchant, and Monroe calculating machines, dictating machines including dictaphone and ediphone transcribers; and classes in duplicating machines.

Classes at Girls' High start at 8:25 in the morning and continue until two o'clock in the afternoon. The daily classes are a new feature this year. Elementary stenography classes are in session for two periods. There are 125 students attending the classes at the girls' institution.

Marsh said that Business English classes meet daily and that eventually all Business classes would also. "The object of the secretarial course," he stated, "is to train students for positions in the business world and to place them in positions when qualified. We are reorganizing in the direction of shorter and more concentrated units of instruction."

ORCHESTRA TO BE ORGANIZED

Plans for the organization of a junior college orchestra and dance band, each of which will win one credit a semester towards a Junior Certificate, have recently been completed, according to an announcement by the registrar's office.

Thomas Kennedy, leader of the ROTC bands at Mission and Galileo high schools, will act as organizer for the courses and practice will be held at 3:30 o'clock in the Galileo auditorium, on Tuesday and Thursday for the band and on Monday and Friday for the orchestra.

Kennedy has announced that he will furnish bass, baritone, and percussion instruments but said that trombones, clarinets, trumpets, saxophones and piccolos must be furnished by students enrolling in the courses.

WE GOT PLENTY OF NOTHIN'

While other college songs hramonize touching lines of shady lanes and ivy covered buildings, San Francisco Junior College might well adopt that old favorite, "East side, West side, all around the town". From Powell Street 8 o'clocks, students journey North, South and West to the three G's, Galileo, Gompers and Girls'. In the center of the above cut is that now famous piece of ground which might well be called the land of lost illusions.

AWS SPONSORS COLLEGE DANCE FRIDAY EVENING

Registration Cards Open Century Club Doors To Couples At 9 o'Clock

Presented as the second dance of the semester, the Associated Women Students will sponsor an informal affair Friday evening from 9 to 12 o'clock at the Century Club, 1355 Franklin Street, AWS officers have announced. Music will be provided by the Billop-Luman orchestra, formerly known as Billop-Richards.

Informal

Norma Parent, AWS president, said that admission will be by registration certificate only, with one registration card serving to admit a couple. Miss Parent stressed, however, "that men attending the dance ... not wear sweaters, and that only those wearing suits of some kind would be admitted." She also asked women planning to attend to wear street dresses, and emphasized the fact that the evening is to be known as an informal, not a sport dance.

"We are expecting a large crowd," Miss Parent said, "and I hope it will become even larger than we expect on Friday. We can guarantee everyone a good time, and all we ask in return is that all those attending conform to a few lenient rules."

The event will mark the second occasion on which the college has given a dance this semester. The first, a semiformal given at the Women's City Club, was designed as a gala opening of the fall semester, and honored the new students.

AMS Cooperates

Don Mills, president of the Associated Men Students, commented, "I would like to express the attitude of the AMS as being wholeheartedly behind this, the first informal of the season. We are asking our members to turn out for the affair en masse, and with everyone in the college cooperating to put it over, it should be a great success. Remember, it is an informal dance, and all you need for admission is one registration card for each couple."

This dance is the second entertainment given by the AWS during this semester. The first was an open-house reception given to celebrate the opening of the newly-decorated AWS patio in the rear of the college bookstore on Powell Street.

Announcing that college picture snatchers still have another week in which to enter The Guardsman's contest to make the campus camera conscious, Sam Galstaun, staff photographer and contest director, urged that those who have not entered, do so at once.

Repeating an announcement made in last issue of The Guardsman, Galstaun said that the contest is open to any student officially registered in the college. Each student may submit as many pictures, of college interest, as he wishes and these pictures may be of any size, as they will be enlarged to suit the purpose for which they are to be used. All pictures submitted automatically become the property of The Guardsman, and will not be returned.

Each week The Guardsman staff will select what they believe to be the best picture of the week and this picture will be featured in the following issue of the paper. The deadline for the first contest is Friday, September 17, and all pictures should be given to Galstaun who may be found in The Guardsman office, WJ, on Thursday and Friday afternoons between the hours of 1:00 and 2:30.

"A great many students have already submitted pictures," Galstaun said, "but we hope to have many more entries before the end of the competition. I hope everyone who is at all interested in camera work will be on the lookout for the unusual around the campus and that we will have lots of interesting human interest shots as well as a great deal of really 'candid' camera work. Catch your favorite prof with his mouth open or some campus queen applying the war paint and you really have something!"

The Guardsman is striving towards the formation of a Camera Club on the campus and feels that through this contest those interested in camera work may be discovered and brought together. For this reason it is important that every student interested in such an organization submit at least one picture in order that he may be recognized and introduced to his fellow camera enthusiasts.

PURCHASE PLAN TOLD BY BANK

Faculty sponsors of student organizations and all others who use the banking facilities offered by the college are advised that no order for purchased goods may be placed until an approved purchase order has been secured. Purchases made without this approval must be paid for by the purchaser.

The order should be prepared in duplicate by the faculty sponsor and should show the name of the vendor, the items to be purchased and their approximate cost, the fund to be charged, and the sponsor's signature. Both copies should be left on the pad for the comptroller's signature. After approval by the comptroller, the original of the order will be placed in the sponsor's post office box for delivery to the vendor. Sponsors should allow one day between date of preparing purchase orders and date on which it is desired to make the purchase. Those requesting checks should allow slightly longer.

The payment of purchases of two dollars or less is slightly different in procedure, as the purchase may be made in cash without purchase order. The purchaser will secure a receipt for the money spent by him and have this receipt approved by the faculty member in charge of the fund to be charged. The receipt will be presented to John Selig, newly-appointed faculty treasurer, who will then reimburse the purchaser.

Selig maintains the following office hours: 2:15 to 4:30 o'clock daily except Thursday.

Nichols, Comptroller, is on hand Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 11 and Tuesday and Thursday at 10 o'clock. He may be found at Galileo on Tuesday and Thursday afternoons.

Parade Of Progress Impaired By Sands

San Francisco's "Parade of Progress Exposition," got stuck in the sands of time last week down on the Marina near Fort Mason, much to the chagrin of the parade managers.

The trucks that made up the parade are veritable halls of science with their folding roofs, thick walls, and scientific equipment, but this couldn't help the unfortunate driver who got stuck in the mud. A small decrepit laundry truck wheezed and puffed to a stop beside the modern omnibus with its brawny driver and a little wizened old man got out and proceeded to direct the truckman how to manipulate the machinery he had never seen the likes of.

Besides presenting many research laboratories to the public, one can see interesting exhibits and performances by Dr. Jarvis C. McElhany, the company's noted scientist. He will "fry a journalistic egg on page 1," according to a local paper, showing the layman a new way to digest the news.

Helene Turner To Hold Office Hours

Office hours will be held by Helene Turner, assistant NYA director, at the Extension Building and at Galileo, in order to receive applications from students and faculty to discuss matters pertaining to NYA.

The schedules for meetings is as follows:

Galileo High School, Monday-Wednesday, 2:15-5:00.

All NYA students are again reminded to call at Miss Turner's office immediately to obtain the new government blanks.

Students who do not have blanks will not be entered on the pay-roll.

ALAN WILLIAMS FRAMES RALLY CONSTITUTION

Plans for a huge outdoor rally and the approval of the Constitution were the results of the semi-monthly meeting of the Cap and Meg Society held last Thursday night, September 9.

Although definite plans have not as yet been made, Alan Williams, head yell leader and president of the group, announced that he was quite positive that present plans would be facilitated. The arrangements made so far include a bonfire rally and barbecue to be held at the new college site at Balboa Park on October 13, several days previous to the football team's departure south to play Pasadena Junior College.

The constitution for the Cap and Meg was drafted by Williams and Deming Smith, former junior college yell leader, and was unanimously approved by the gathering after several minor changes had been effected.

An innovation in Rally Committee activities was created by the constitutional provision which calls for the formation of publicity and peace subcommittees.

The publicity committee will be directed by Hughie Waite and will endeavor to publicize all junior college activities within the campus.

Policing all student body assemblies and rallies will be the duty of the peace committee whose chairman is Ed Frediani. This group will be empowered to evict all rowdy elements during student functions.

Other important points in the constitution is the setting of the membership list at thirty-five to include twenty-five men and ten women and the provision requiring all members to wear the organization's official hat in the performance of all Cap and Meg Services.

Officers were also elected at this meeting and include, besides President Allan Williams, Bruce Bolton as vice-president, Caroline Orginos as recording secretary and Fern Mulheim as corresponding secretary.

Guiding Lights Of College Deliberate Vital Issues

Coming to order at the crack of President Gene Blumenthal's official sounding gavel, the great executive minds of the college convened in their weekly talkfest, sometimes designated as the Ex Council meeting, last Wednesday morning, September 8.

Having had considerable experience with the playful antics of his charges, Chairman Blumenthal opened the meeting with a request that the more bumbtious members of the gathering refrain from any unrecognized outburst in moments of great stress and that they confine themselves to shining the row of fraternity pins that adorn their chests or biting their finger nails when they felt that self control was becoming difficult.

After the minutes of the preceding meeting had been dispensed with, reports from the several leading college organizations were presented.

COMMENT

Caroline Orginos, representating the Social Committee, gave the initial report, thanking the members for aiding in making the first college dance such a huge success and outlining the plans for the next gathering which will be held on Friday evening. Her concluding remark to the effect that present plans call for some sort of an affair at least once every two weeks provoked loud outbursts of approval from the more demonstrative members present who were heard to comment with such statements as "hot dog, lots of free jigs" and "don't forget the punch, Gerry".

Next Norma Parent, president of the Associated Women Students, reported on her recent freshman reception and announced that everything had been very satisfactory but that she wondered if the dimpled darlings who had run off with several gallons of the punch would mind returning the empty bottles.

SLEUTH MILLS

With the speedy action so characteristic of Executive Council proceedings, Don Mills announced that he would lay his hands on the culprits that very day and see that the bottles were returned at once. Upon making this bold promise Mills was noted to look inquiringly at one Bob Neal, president of the High Sophs, who after a few moments of seemingly deep concentration suddenly brightened and pointed at Hugh Waite, high frosh leader, and then both Neal and Mills shook their heads in common agreement.

The chairman then called upon Alan Williams, mild mannered yell leader, to speak his piece. This report consisted of announcing the tentative dates for the many rallies planned during the semester with particular emphasis on the huge barbecue that is being arranged at the new college site prior to the football team's departure south to play Pasadena J. C. Everyone seemed to think it was a lovely idea until Williams incidentally added that he would need two hundred dollars to complete arrangements at which time the entire assemblage was suddenly overcome by a grave doubt as to the worth of the project.

The council's two most able wits, Don Mills and Bob Neal, provided the gathering with many choice bits of humor when they closed the show with announcements regarding the AMS fights and the Soph formal.

NYA Deadline Set For September 20

ASSEMBLY TO COMMEMORATE 150 YEARS OF AMERICAN DEMOCRACY

Constitution Day Friday Inspires Nationwide Observance; Hughes Plans College Program At Powell Street Lecture Hall 11 o'Clock

By BOB MacARTHUR

Commemoration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the ratification of the Constitution of the United States will be widely observed throughout the nation, particularly in the schools and colleges. The schools of San Francisco, under the direction of a School Committee, headed by Commissioner of the Board of Education Charles A. Derry, will join with the rest of the country in this celebration, in which the college will participate Friday, at 11 o'clock, in the Lecture Hall.

President A. J. Cloud, who is on the San Francisco Citizen's Committee, which is headed by Supervisor James B. McSheehy, for the observation of Constitution Day, will preside at an all-college assembly, which will be held in the Powell Street building in the Lecture Hall, Friday, September 17, announced Paul Pitman, President Cloud's assistant.

Seven score and ten years ago the moulders of these United States met to revise the make-shift document under which the Revolutionary War was fought and won. This faulty paper, the historic Articles of Confederation, had served its purpose, and was no longer practical. At the Constitutional Convention in 1787, the present foundation of the American Government was drafted, and submitted to the thirteen colonies for approval on September 17, 1787. By August, 1788 the necessary majority had ratified the constitution and it went into effect as the fundamental law of the country. In its original form there was no Bill of Rights and much controversy raged over this aspect of the Constitution until such an addition was made.

VOTE NOT POPULAR

There were many objections to the Constitution at the time of its birth, and it has been said that if it had been put to a popular vote, it probably would not have been ratified. The principle dissenters to ratification were the debtor class, those who said that the method of ratification was unfair (it was ratified by State Conventions) and those who saw in it too many checks on the legislative body it provided for, and finally it was denounced as being "undemocratic."

Many of the colonies protested bitterly that the convention had been called merely to revise the Articles of Confederation, and not to draft an entirely new document, for under the Articles of Confederation, the colonies retained all of their individual sovereignity, while in the new constitution, the government would be much more centralized.

FUNDAMENTALS REMAIN

Public opinion changed considerably in the ensuing century and a half, until today, when the Constitution is considered to be the very heart's blood of the United States Government, and although it has been amended a number of times, most of the amendments have taken the form of additions, rather than actual changes in the fundamental construction of the document.

James S. Hughes, instructor in political science at the college, is in charge of the arrangements for the college assembly, and has not, as yet, revealed the final program of events. Tentative plans call for three student speakers to discuss the birth and growth of the Constitution, and its relation to the economic life and private rights of the to speak are William Simonds, Charles to speak, are William Simonds, Charles Vaughn, and Morris Rabinowitch.

"Music," added Pitman, "will be furnished by a mixed chorus of male and female voices under the direction of Flossita Badger and Charles McKiernan, instructors of music at the college."

APATHY SHOWN IN ELECTIONS OF OFFICIALS

Bob Neal and Charlotte Zier were chosen to lead the High Sophomores during the fall semester, according to a report received last week from the office of Edwin C. Browne, Dean of Men and Activities Director in the college.

Together with Isabelle Sherratt, secretary-treasurer of the class, Neal and Miss Zier are already hard at work on plans for the Sophomore Formal. An attempt is being made to secure the California Country Club for the dance and with such an early beginning, Neal feels that the success of the affair may almost be guaranteed.

Dean Browne also reported that the Low Sophomores are to be led by Jim Preovolos with Fern Muheim as vice-president, Marion Androvitch as secretary and Alan Benbow as treasurer. Preovolos is making his first attempt at class politics this semester but has had a great deal of experience in fraternal circles during the past year. Miss Muhiem has held various class offices ever since her entry into the college and was recently elected to the position of corresponding secretary of the Cap and Meg Society.

The post of High Freshman president will be filled by Hugh Waite who was Low Freshman president last semester. Murial Mills holds the position of vice-president with Sylvester McAtee and Bruce Bolton taking over the duties of secretary and treasurer.

Joe Kelly, Low Freshman from Commerce High School, has been chosen to lead his class and Betty Morand and Orcallia Orsland, both from Lowell, have been selected to fill the positions of vice-president and secretary-treasurer. All three held responsible positions at the high schools which they attended and are looking forward to a successful term of office in the junior college.

Elections this semester were marked by an obvious lack of interest on the part of the students whom they are to lead.

Three Instructors Swell Hotel Staff

Three new instructors have been added to the faculty to teach new courses under the Hotel and Restaurant Division, and J. Graham Sullivan, head of the division, urges all students interested to take advantage of the program.

The new members of the faculty are Charles R. Strandberg, chef patissier at the Hotel St. Francis, whose course in baking and cake decorating began yesterday in the cafeteria, Herbert Blunck, manager of the El Cortez Hotel, and Hugh McKevitt, legal adviser for the Northern California Hotel Association. Blunck will open his course in Hotel Administration today in Room 151, Galileo. McKevitt will teach hotel law in the same room.

Strandberg brings to the college an envious reputation as a pastry sculptor, his sugar pieces bringing back shades of Michael Angelo in his prime. He recently won nation-wide publicity in Time Magazine for his masterpieces of dough and sugar concoctions, which take on any and all shapes, including San Francisco's bridgework.

The French government thought so highly of Strandberg's work with French pastry that, on August 9, they presented him with a medal in recognition of his skill, along with the title of "Chevalier du Merite Agricole." Roughly translated as "Knight of Agricultural Merit," for Strandberg uses French agricultural products in his French pastry.

Assistant Added To Library Staff

All students wishing guidance in the use of the library should report to Marion Turner, newly appointed assistant librarian of the college.

She will help students prepare book lists and instruct them in proper use of the library filing system.

Miss Turner will hold office hours at Powell Street on Monday, Wednesday and Friday between 9 and 12 in the reserve book room.

CONSTITUTION DAY

On next Friday, September 17, the people of our country will celebrate the 150th anniversary of the Constitution of the United States.

It was on this day a century and a half ago that the Founders of our great nation created the document which has become the embodiment of the glory and majesty of the American people.

For fifteen decades the Constitution has served as a guiding light to the leaders of our people. It has led us safely through the early years of the development of our commonwealth when internal pressure and strife threatened to upset the frail ship of state. Later when our nation grew and developed into a majestic empire spreading from Ocean to Ocean the principles of Liberty and Union continued to serve as the beacon light in our struggles to keep our government on the path of righteousness.

In this modern day when the wisdom of the great fundamental truths of the Constitution are being debated we must remember that Right has no time element. What was acknowledged as Right in 1787 is still Right in 1937. The passage of years can never dull the Truth or corrode the Wisdom of the great document of Right, the Constitution of the United States of America.

HO-HUM

Through the medium of a news story in The Guardsman the student body is made aware of the fact that they have elected class officers for the coming semester. Despite the fact that the elections were held a week or two ago the article is by no means lacking in news value. The great bulk of the students who did not trouble themselves to attend the elections or make inquiries as to their outcome will probably note the names of the new class leaders and then promptly forget them.

The apathy of the general student body toward class elections has become a standard joke on the campus. One able wit, while consoling a defeated candidate, remarked, "Why didn't you tell me there was going to be an election? I could have brought up my two brothers and swung the vote your way."

Your first inclination upon the realization of this problem of lack of interest is naturally to seek a solution of some sort. But upon closer observation it becomes evident that it is rather a waste of time to seek a remedy for something that is not worth saving.

Class officers, despite any personal sincerity, serve no particular purpose or perform any perceivable good. All social activities of the classes are handled by the Social Committee and though class presidents are on the Executive Council of the college their functions are purely formal and seem entirely superfluous.

But it is highly possible that class officers derive some satisfaction out of their office and so as long as they do not annoy anyone we may as well let them be happy.

WAR?

The young men of this nation should be very grateful for the expert handling of our foreign affairs by President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull in this dangerous time.

The past few months have seen the destruction of the last vestiges of international law, disregard of treaties and wholesale brigandage by great nations on land and sea. Relationships between the large countries of the world become more strained daily and war scares fill our newspapers. Diplomatic protests are flung back and forth and those who survey the international scene with authority shake their heads in despair as they watch the dove of peace sink nearer to the clutches of the bloodthirsty Mars.

Every citizen of our country is naturally interested in the efforts of our government to stay out of war, but more especially is the youth of today anxiously watching the progress of foreign affairs. Youth has a vital and personal interest. It is youth which will sacrifice its life blood if it is decided that we must uphold our national honor by warfare.

Our fathers fought to make the world safe for democracy. Now it has become common knowledge that unwittingly they made the supreme sacrifice to protect the investments of the wealthy and were merely dupes to the wiles of clever propaganda. We admire their courage but certainly not their wisdom.

The Youth of today is just as brave and just as patriotic as were their fathers. American Youth would never hesitate to lay down its life to protect our borders from invasion. But, Mr. President, I think you realize that youth will refuse to fight to save oil for lamps this side of China, or to save shipping interests in Oriental waters.

Never being quite at home without a feud or two on our hands, (and it fills up columns too) we have gone and got ourselves involved in a fancy one between the Scotch and the Irish generally and the MacArthurs and the Murphys in particular.

It all began when The Guardsman masthead called Bob Mick-Arthur instead of Mac-Arthur and the straw that broke the Campbells back, (you know, "The Campbells are coming, ta da, ta da," an old Scotch ballad) was when, quite accidentally, Mister Mac's name was omitted from his poem about Chinatown and said poem appeared in the paper looking as if it were part of our column

Immediately the Scotch blood began to berl! "So you Irish think you're quite the stuff, well let me tell you, etc., furthermore, and so forth, and stuff and things!!" Finally it was decided that the only way to judge the superiority of the two races (represented by Mac and Murphy) was to give each a task to perform and see which of the two were best. Inasmuch as both combatants were somewhat rhyme-minded (synonym for punch drunk) each was asked to write a six line poem, containing three two line couplets. This poetic masterpiece was to uphold one side or the other, and though it was quite a job boiling down our thoughts so that they would fit into six short lines here's our contribution:

We called him Mc instead of Mac
And he insists on hitting back
He says the Scotchmen are the best
But that, we know, is just a jest.
We think the Irish best by far,
'Cause is'nt Irish what we are?
Your move, Mac!

Hats off! Just when we were recovering from the halo craze that swept the college during the spring, the co-eds broke out in a rash of new and insane headpieces they call "calots" or "beanies," and which lend a grammar-school atmosphere to the classrooms, resembling, as they do, so many small boys' caps. Some fortunate few wear theirs with verve and nonchalance, but most of the calot-wearers look pretty (pretty funny).

The beanies come in all colors and materials, but the suede ones seem to blend in best with fall sweaters and skirts. Of course, they don't have the smartness and flattery of brimmed felt sports hats, but then they're cheaper. But we still sigh for the halo. Now, there was a style! If you didn't buy one, you could always make one out of anything from an odd scarf to a hank of grocery string.

As we mentioned before, it's all in how you wear a thing that determines whether you can get away with it. Norma Parent, for instance, wears her rust suede beanie with an aplomb that makes it attractive. On the other hand, one unidentified woman student wore hers (of gray belting ribbon) bunched over one eye, with the crown bulging up over her head. And when it comes to black velvet, with rhinestone clips, the whole worn with a sports suit—well, please, when can we go bareheaded again?

AWS members are expected to turn out en masse for the AWS informal dance to be held on the seventeenth of this month at the Century Club. PAY DIRT

By Jack Campbell

The Scotchman approached his friend. He had an excited gleam in his eye, and his hand trembling in his evident agitation.

"Hoot mon! I sure had a close call in my nightmare last night. I dreamt I was miles away from home with three armed madmen chasing me, and the last street car just passing. I ran and ran but I couldn't catch it. What an ordeal!"

The friend was sympathetic.

"How unfortunate," he said consolingly.

An angry expression leapt to the Scotchman's face.

"Whaddya mean unfortunate," he shouted, "I saved myself a nickel, didn't I."

Louder even than the shells bursting over Shanghai are the squawks being made by controllers of American interests in China, since President Roosevelt announced that those reaching for the gold ring on the Oriental Merry-go-round do so at their own risk. Many self-styled "true red-blooded Americans" vow that they would prefer to give up their nationality rather than liquidate their Shanghai interests.

It is quite evident that these noble followers of "e pluribus unum" (the one that's on the dollar) have made their choice before Roosevelt's edict was issued.

One noble patriot, whose name leads all the rest, peremptorily scores our Chief Executive with the following epoch-making oration:

"Tell Roosevelt to get off his yacht, put his feet on the ground and get some guts above them. Keep the American flag flying. We Americans are not quitters."

It is unfortunate, my dear compatriot, that Mr. Roosevelt has not "got off his yacht" to protect you so that you can buy yourself a few new yachts.

Believing that Mr. President has not the time to answer your well-planned missive, and knowing that he lacks the inclination to so do, we take it upon ourself to make reply.

We advise you to get ON your yacht, put your feet OFF Chinese ground and get rid of some of the GALL above them. Wrap up your American flag; it won't do you any good over there. Lastly, but most important of all, let us agree with you that "Americans are not quitters," but mainly because the majority of them don't intend to START anything.

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

Your foggy columnist was considerably irked by the very evident dearth of mist during the past few days and, therefore, decided to inflict upon the readers of this column a piece, a la Hellinger. In the following bit, the writer is being interviewed:

Q. How do you like writing a column for The Guardsman, Mr. MacArthur?

A. Swell, if I could find someone willing to give me an idea a week.

Q. Oh, but surely it is easy to write a column of this type?

A. Did you say write?

Q. Wait a minute, I'm supposed to ask the questions. What do you think of students who sleep in class?

A. I envy them!

Q. What's the matter? Do you suffer from insomnia?

A. No, but the voice of the professor annoys me so, I can't sleep.

Q. I see, well tell me Mac, what do you think of the political situation in China?

A. Is it?

Q. Now see here, Mr. MacArthur, that answer is not an answer, and anyway, it doesn't make sense.

A. Neither does this column.

Q. Why are you deliberately trying to heckle me?

A. I've got to fill this space somehow.

Q. Oh, all right, one more question, if you were coach of a football team, and Jimmy Durante were on it, what position would you put him in?

A. That's easy, Fullbeak.

Q. O-o-o-oh!

A. So long.

Our hat is off to President Cloud, a grand gentleman, a swell guy, who never gets in anyone's way, who never steps on anyone's toes, but who always seems to get things accomplished in a most satisfactory manner. To us, his outstanding characteristic is his patience in waiting erection of college buildings and facilities.

Such patience is by no means reflected by this writer nor by the other seventeen hundred and ninety-nine college men and women, who themselves have lost all hope of ever attending classes at the site so ceremoniously dedicated. We, for one, tired of this delay when action has been needed most, have turned a completely deaf ear upon all pleas of patience. We know and feel, as do all those concerned, that after two years of political stagnation, we are more than justified in our stand, more than justified to seek and know the answer to THOSE EMPTY, UNOCCUPIED ACRES AT BALBOA PARK.

We are informed that everything is being done to speed plans for college buildings with adequate facilities for all. We are further told that the college has been built politically, that the building plans are completely drawn, and that the political machinery is in order, ready to function when given the green light. The signal has been so long overdue in being flashed, that it becomes obvious to all that the previous statements are simply subtle ways of saying "Be Patient," to persons who no longer or refuse to understand the meaning of that word.

Can it be that petty bickering, red tape, and political maneuvering is restraining us in our bid for action? Can it be that the administration is biding its time, or that there has been a breach of trust, a lack of sincerity on the part of the city fathers?

We do not pretend to know the politics of the situation. We do know, however, that these questions must be answered . . . for our hopes are beginning to wane. As for our patience . . . we no longer have any. As to our faith . . . our castles in the air have crumbled, and with them have resounded the echoes of those many unfulfilled promises.

To those persons concerned, we issue a challenge, and being not the least bit subtle, we suggest that they visit us, and review our facilities. Should this be done, and should anyone of them find cause for further delay, then they have excellent reasons for discontinuing that which promises to be one of San Francisco's best.

After Dark

By John Ward

With the early hints of winter in the weather and the sudden spurts of theatre fare hereabouts recently, the winter season seems nearly full sprung. There are wondrous things to be, strange sounds to hear, strange sights to see: a well-promised season.

Walter Huston and his wife Nan Sunderland opened last Monday at the Curran Theatre in a play by David Hertz called "The Miles of Heaven." Mr. Huston is far too well known to need much note. You will probably remember his cinema appearances, especially the recent "Dodsworth." The present play is based on the life of the noted eighteenth century astronomer William Herschel.

* * * *

The Federal Theatre Project, now doing a series of plays at the Alcazar, present as their next offering one of Eugene O'Neill's early melodramas, his first three-act play "Beyond the Horizon." Written in 1920, it won the Pulitzer prize for that year. But, when remembered from a previous reading, the play is a pretty feeble and certainly a mellow affair.

* * * *

One of the finest of the concert series of the winter has been announced by a new-comer to the ranks of San Francisco managers, Paul Posz. Harold Kreutzberg, famed modern dancer and a group known as the Wagnerian Singers are scheduled for November. Among the Wagnerian Singers is found the name of Alexander Kipnis, probably the greatest of living basses. In December Walter Gieseking, fine pianist, and in January of next year the play "Lady Precious Stream," a charming bit from the Chinese, is to play for a week. This will be followed by the late George Gershwin's folk opera "Porgy and Bess." The young composer was to have directed the opening performance but his unfortunate death ended the happy prospect. The concluding event will be the appearance of Moriz Rosenthal, last of the Franz Liszt school of piano, in March.

Blanche Yurka, the Madam La Farge of the motion picture "Tale of Two Cities," will give one performance of Sophocles' tragedy "Electra" this Saturday in the Greek Theatre of the University of California. During this month a magnificent show of the work of Paul Cezanne, famous French Impressionist painter, is on display at the San Francisco Museum of Art, Civic Center. Also, there is an exhibition of the work of a modern American painter, Lyonel Feininger, in an adjoining gallery. Both exhibits are of extraordinary interest.

And of course, there is the impending opera season which begins October 15 with a performance of Verdi's "Aida," Gina Cigna and Giovanni Martinelli singing. Perhaps, as the last and best remembered, there should be mentioned the first concert of Yehudi Menuhin's world tour. This will take place in the War Memorial Opera House Thursday,

Sept. 30.

Thus: a tremendous number of interesting events all tempting. The only advice to you who are going is get tickets immediately. Opera tickets are pretty expensive at the moment, but there will probably be standing room. The season ticket to the Posz season is extremely cheap and, well within the limits of any music students' pocket book. Of course, the exhibitions at the S. F. Museum of Art are free and the admission to the Federal Theatre Project plays is next to nothing.

At the ground breaking ceremonies, great things were promised, and in the many speeches made, high hopes were held for our future. We suspect now that of the many talks delivered, almost all were perfunctory and meaningless. One person, however, in behalf of the Associated Students, spoke with his heart.

Cannot those persons, in whose hands lie the fate of the college realize that we are desperately in need of facilities, NOW! . . . That our life blood may be draining from us, NOW! . . . That our morale may be breaking, NOW! . . . AND IF WE WISH TO CONTINUE OUR EXISTENCE, WE MUST ACT! NOW!

GRIDIRON GRUMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

It looks as though another "Charles Atlas" has made his appearance at this institution, in the person of Andy Oddstead, candidate for guard on the grid squad and erstwhile wrestler. A team-mate of Andy's experienced severe discomfiture last week at Funston Field when he found himself unable to open the locker which contained his street clothes, due to the fact that he had lost the key. Just when it looked as though recourse would have to be made to the fire department, who should step to the fore but the great Oddstead; steadfastly binding his hand with a towel, he seized the handle of the offending locker and, with a single terrific wrench, tore it wide open, thereby solving the whole problem in the twinkling of an eye, and allowing one and all to depart with light hearts.

Coaches Dutch Conlan and Lee Eisan have once more taken over the officiating at the prep contests at Kezar, and, so far, have turned in a couple of neat pieces of work. Incidentally, it wouldn't be surprising to see Conlan performing the chores in some of the larger contests this season, after the swell job he turned in last New Year's Day at the Sugar Bowl, when Santa Clara polished off the "Bayou Tigers" (Louisiana State), beneath his watchful eye.

A regular, dyed-in-the-wool prophet is Joe Garcia, water-boy (Manager to you) of the football squad. Encountered just before the recent Balboa-Mission prep game, Joe predicted a scoreless tie, and, sure enough, the boys obliged by coming out 0-0. Joe is a man of many parts, as aside from being a water ———uh, manager and a prognosticator, he was the star sprinter on last spring's track squad, until laid low by injury. Versatile is, undoubtedly, the word for Garcia.

It begins to look as though the lads from Marin may not provide much of a tussle when they meet the Rams next week, as two of their star backfield performers, Bill Adams and Ken Hildebrand, have been forced to drop out of competition with almost identical leg injuries, suffered while playing baseball. Counted upon for most of the Mariner's offensive drive, their loss leaves the Kentfield squad in a hole.

Perhaps we've been underestimating the strength of the Ram footballers, as they appear to be highly regarded by all of their prospective opponents. Indeed, it is practically impossible to find any anti-Ram money in the vicinity of San Francisco. The sports editor at the rival local institution requires a concession of no less than eight points before consenting to a wager, while a certain writer at San Mateo refuses to back the Bulldogs under any conditions. Perhaps we're going to do all right after all. Here's hoping, anyhow.

Condolences, sympathy, etc., to our brother journalist, Ed Frediani, who has been limping about the corridors with a badly battered shin, received during the recent soccer game with Galileo high school. It seems that Eddie managed to get in the way of a cleated brogan being flung promiscuously about by one of the Lion players; hence his present sorrowful plight. Despite the injury, Ed lasted out the entire game, turning in a swell performance. Nice work, young man!

The Bearded One

Elmer Hubacher, of crew fame, and now cavorting for the soccer squad, has turned out to be one of those athletic vow men. Hubacher threw away his razor and claims he won't touch a blade to his face until the soccer team wins a game!

The way the soccer team is going now, Hubacher should look like Man Mountain Dean in a short time, but at the rate Elmer's beard is growing, even if the team loses every game it will take a magnifying glass in the strong sunlight to bring his beard in view.

Unfair

With the Associated Men Students boxing and wrestling show once more upon us, we would like once more to put in our cry for fair play. In the past many matches have been made in which one of the contestants has had no experience and should not have entered the ring. Nevertheless the people who ran the show were perfectly aware of the onesidedness, and even went so far as to urge these fellows to fight.

For those desirous of entering in either the boxing or grunt and groan contests, Joe Amori, former boxing instructor at San Mateo Jr. College, is only too glad to offer his services, and help train contestants, and he will be available from now to the time of the fights, nearly every afternoon at the Galileo Gym. Contestants are urged to start training as soon as possible.

Champs, Maybe?

The boys in the local high school football association decided to have some fun with the conference standings by playing two ties to start the season off. This put four teams in a tie for first place. Let's hope they don't carry this thing too far.

Those of you who hail from Polytechnic will probably have something to cheer about by the end of the season, for although the Parrots looked ragged in their 6 to 6 tie with Commerce last week, they have a line that is probably the most powerful in local high school circles, and if little Al Darien flashes some of the form that made him an all-city half-back last year, the Red and Black aggregation should march on to a city championship.

Naughty

Last term, a football feature appeared in The Guardsman, whereby it was proved by comparative scores that San Francisco Junior College was 12 points better than Minnesota, the team that was considered to be national champs by most authorities.

Many weeks after the feature appeared in The Guardsman, it was said to have been printed in an East Bay newspaper with the little word "copyrighted" nestling at the bottom of the column. In our estimation it should have been read "copied right," instead of copyrighted. Is nothing sacred anymore?

INSIGHT INTO PRIVATE LIFE OF GRIDDERS

Manager Aspires To Fame As Halfback; Is Disappointed

By JERRY FLAMM

Youth has had its fling! A sensation was caused out at Funston Field when Milton Berman, assistant varsity football manager, came out to practice in a football suit. Refusing to tape up wrists, procure wet towels, or chase balls, Berman coolly explained to amazed team members that he was a candidate for left-halfback. Berman, who formerly played center for Lowell High School, was firm in his stand. Joe Garcia, seeing his work and duties pile up, was shouting and raving. His former assistant, with an outfit consisting of odds and ends from the equipment room plus a brilliant pair of red stockings, casually caught punts, dodged imaginary tacklers, and threw touchdown passes. Ah, this was the stuff! To further irritate Garcia, the new touchdown twin declared that he would fill two posts simultaneously. He would play and be assistant manager at the same time. Garcia laid down his ultimatum. Either be a manager or a player. The "Mouse" refused to be duped by the crafty Berman. Coach Russ Sweet finally furnished Berman with an answer, "I'd rather have a good manager than a bum halfback," said Sweet. Berman, after exactly two hours as a halfback hope, is now changing the water in the little red bucket again, his dreams of fame blasted. The "Mouse" smiles contentedly.

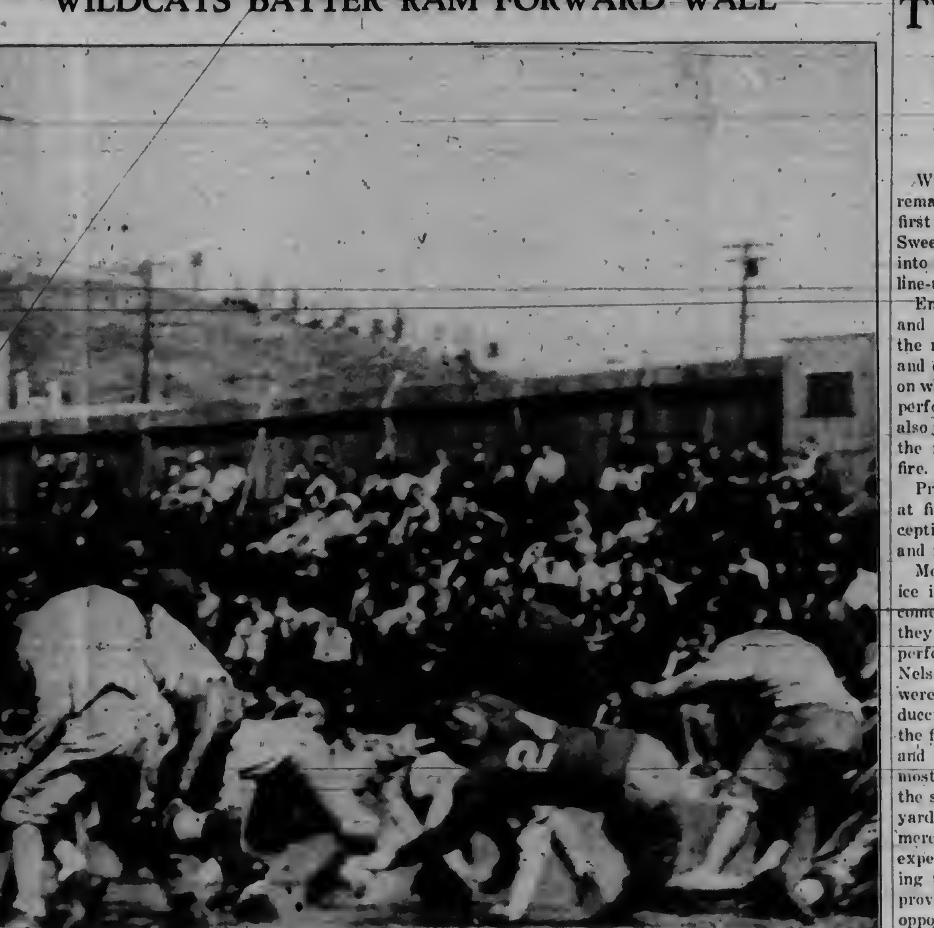
Gaddy's Face Red

Jack Gaddy, Lamb mentor, started out on the field, very hot under the collar, several times during the Galileo game in protest of official decisions. However, he quite embarrassingly and very reluctantly stopped short, when he realized that the referee was Lee Eisan, brother mentor.

Bill Sinclair and Bill Braun, ex-S. F. prepsters, were observed outside Galileo on forlough from their "cells" at Santa Clara. The Bronco hopefuls were "just looking around." According to Sinclair, the women in Santa Clara flee in terror when they discover that the handsome young fellows they have been conversing with, are really a few of the Santa Clara hermits.

"The Guardsman" is proud to announce that with this issue it is giving exclusive voice to the predictions, observations, and conclusions of that famed Sunday morning quarterback, "Moleskin Moe." Every week, watch for:

"Moleskin Moe" says: The Lamb victories over Galileo and Commerce were accomplished with a repertoire of but seven plays . . . if love of football for the game itself can make a ball player, this boy Pasquallette will be a star. The chunky guard is a refreshing character at all means . . . the chief worry of the end situation on the team at the present moment is a "deviated septum." This medical term describes the situation of Joe Guedet's respiratory system. A bone obstruction in his nose is causing the varsity end a good deal of inconvenience . . . the reason that Bob Lee "passed out" during the second quarter of the Commerce game shortly after catching a touchdown pass, was an over-abundant supply of milk with his breakfast wheaties . . . the Rams looked in a bad way at the beginning of the season. There was a scarcity of seasoned material, and while some of the newcomers looked promising, they lacked experience and confidence. Things are looking much brighter now. The few replacements that Coach Sweet will have are going to be very good and it appears that quality might make up for the dearth of quantity. The new boys are coming around splendidly, while some of the reserves of last year seem determined to find a spot in the varsity ranks and are playing with a fervor that they lacked last year . . . "Chubby" Kotta, varsity basketballer, with no previous football experience, is improving every day and is going to make the sledding hard for some of the other backfield candidates . . . and it appears that George Boitano, Ram weightman on the track squad, also without previous grid seasoning, is No. 1 man for the fullback berth. He handles himself easily and has shown himself adaptable to the style of play his position calls for.



Eric The Red

Eric the Red, intrepid explorer of Greenland, was driven to his trade if the Iceland sagas are to be believed. The tales state that during the course of a riotous evening in a home-town alehouse, Eric entered into an argument with an acquaintance. Not believing the tongue to be mightier than the sword, the red one carved his opponent in twain, and was forced to do a "fadeout".

The entire population of Philadelphia, Pa.—and Boston, Mass., could be accommodated in the 32 largest college football stadiums in the United States.

. . . SPORTS . . .

WILDCATS BATTER RAM FORWARD WALL

The action pictured above took place in the last minute of play in the game between the Flying Lambs and St. Ignatius High School last Saturday at U. S. F. Field. The Wildcats are shown in a last desperate effort to break the tie, but Coach Jack Gaddy's men staved them off and the contest ended in a 0-0 deadlock.

Lambs Victorious Over Commerce; Tie St. Ignatians

After upsetting the favored Commerce High Bulldogs by displaying a flashy offense the junior college Flying Lambs allowed themselves to be held to a scoreless tie by a mediocre St. Ignatius eleven in football games held on successive Saturdays, September 5 and 11.

The junior college footballers cleanly outplayed the bulky Bulldogs and finished on the long end of an 18 to 6 score in a game filled with action, featuring long runs, reckless passes and brilliant defense. The following Saturday the Gaddymen slowed down considerably and struggled within the thirty yard lines with the dogged Hilltoppers in what can mildly be described as a dull contest.

Little John Verducci opened up the scoring for the locals in the tussle with the potent Bulldogs when he took a punt at the opening of the second quarter and proceeded to ramble 84 yards to a touchdown by the dint of some spectacular open field running and effective blocking by his mates. Later in the period the Lamb's passing ace, "Bullet Bob" Fex, faded back and tossed a perfect pass into the arms of End Bob Lee who pulled the pigskin from the grasp of Olsen, the Commerce quarter, and galloped to the second score.

Fex's passes netted the third tally also when he flipped the oval to Art Nelson, Lamb half, who was standing in the end zone all alone.

Commerce displayed some offensive power in the final stanza when they marched seventy yards to a touchdown, the drive being featured by the passing combination of Olsen and Nate Howard, the Bulldog All-City flankman.

Chief among the talent unveiled in the contest was Merv Weiner, former reserve fullback, whose work at the tackle spot stamped him as certain varsity material. Also brilliant in the Lamb forward wall were Mel Peterson, center, Bob Lee, end, and Andy Oddstead, guard. John Verducci was the best of a good bunch of junior college backs who included Gus Kotta, Art Nelson, Walt Boitano, and Woody Lennes.

In the game with the Hilltoppers on last Saturday morning Gaddy started the third string squad who battled on even terms with the light but scrappy Wildcats for the first half. The action was strictly defensive with neither team able to function with any offensive power although the Red and White clad gridders pushed through for four first downs in the opening quarter, their attack was stopped cold when they reached the Ignatian 30 yard stripe.

The second squad was inserted into the fray in the third period but proved no more effective than their predecessors as they struggled without avail against the desperately fighting high school team. A belated passing attack

By JEAN PAGE

WAA sign-ups officially closed on September 10. Despite the fact that for the first time it was impossible to take the same sport for both credit and WAA activity, the list of those signed for WAA work is long. Sign-ups were heaviest in volley-ball and badminton. Women may still enroll in WAA classes however, and all are urged to watch the classes and select those in which they would like to try for an award.

Those enrolled in the advanced class in riding will turn amateur cowgirls Friday when they ride for the first time, a group of new and quite wild horses. According to reports, the boys who have signed for the beginning riding class are "bouncing beautifully."

To clear away the fog in Freshman minds concerning the WAA award system we give the following information:

The highest award that the WAA presents is membership in the Block Society and the white flannel jacket and circular emblem which denote that membership.

The points considered in grading a possible candidate for the Block Society are: good sportsmanship, first team nominations, interest in the WAA, neatness, scholastic standing (at least a C average), and sociability with other women students.

There is also a first team award. The first semester that a participant in WAA is named on a first team, and providing that her scholastic average is a C or better, she is eligible to receive a first team block and the small triangular "chenille" which represents the sport in which she received the first team nomination.

Eligibility for a first team is determined by excellence of technique in the sport, attendance of all the required class meetings (two unexcused absences are allowed), as well as genuine interest in, and pleasure from the sport.

This award system differs from the usual high school system in that the point system has been abolished in accordance with the standard adopted by colleges.

There are still some WAA handbooks available in the Galileo gym for co-eds who have not yet obtained one. A handbook will also be tacked on the bulletin board.

More women are urged to sign for the WAA club in tumbling, held on Monday and Wednesday at 3:30. All are invited to come and develop the dexterity needed in dodging Powell Street traffic. The course includes work on the mats and work with the diving board, ropes, and the "horse."

The swimming classes have decided to stress diving this semester. All that is required for those who wish to enroll is to be able to land head first, quite an accomplishment in itself.

An increasingly large percentage of students have adopted the standard gym suit. Vera Spencer's 2:30 Freshman Activities class, in which nearly every student wears the standard gym suit, rates first place as the best-looking gym class.

After several vain attempts, the dancing classes have finally secured an excellent pianist. She is Fay Hewith, who formerly was a pianist at the University of California.

Vera Spencer, WAA head, returned September 1 from a safari through the northern countries of Europe. "Sweden was my favorite country, and Stockholm my favorite city," Miss Spencer declared. "With the aid of a Swedish-English guide book I fared quite well. However, don't believe it if someone tells you that everyone in Sweden speaks English. That's what someone told me!"

The day Miss Spencer hit London the temperature soared to the highest peak in four years, she says.

Those gaily-turbaned damsels who haunt Fort Mason Range with bow and arrows are not wandering nomads or gypsies, but junior college archers who wear the bright handkerchiefs to prevent the nasty wind from "spoiling my new wave."

Incidentally it was not until two weeks after we had enrolled in archery that we heard Verrel Weber ominously whispering about, "there is a saying that all archers are crazy." Why doesn't somebody tell us those things?

To afford new WAA members an opportunity to become acquainted with other members, an initiation luncheon has been tentatively scheduled in the week of October 4. Team managers, elected on September 13, will be present and all WAA members will be invited, according to Gloria Swicegood, president of the WAA council.

Vera Spencer, faculty sponsor of the WAA declared: "We wish that those who are interested in serving on a committee would sign up for WAA committee work. Those who sign up should give us their phone number and address so that they may be notified when they have been selected for a committee. Committee work serves as a splendid opportunity for entering women to begin taking an active part in college affairs."

Issuing a call for more players, co-eds in the badminton classes announce that badminton classes are still open and there is room for several additional men players. Classes are held on Tuesday and Thursday at 4:30 or on Friday from 2:30 to 4:30 o'clock.

FOOTBALLERS IMPROVE; WIN TWO TUSSLES

Practice Tilts Provide Seasoning For New Squad Members

With only a little more than a week remaining before they encounter their first league opponents, Coach Russ Sweet's gridders have begun to round into form, and a tentative first string line-up has been assembled.

Encounters with Galileo, St. Ignatius and Commerce high schools provided the needed competition for the Rams and enabled Coach Sweet to get a line on what he may expect from the various performers during the season. They also provided an opportunity to observe the ability of the new-comers under fire.

Prospects, which were rather gloomy at first glance, have brightened perceptibly as workouts have progressed, and new "finds" have been discovered.

Most of the veterans did not see service in the Commerce game, the newcomers being allowed to show what they could do—which was plenty. The performances of Johnny Verducci, Art Nelson, Bob Fex and Woody Lennes were particularly encouraging. Verducci bids fair to call the signals on the first team this season, as his speed and elusiveness make him one of the most dangerous offensive players on the squad, as evidenced by his eighty-yard touchdown dash against Commerce. He showed himself to be an expert at dodging tacklers and following the interference, and promises to provide plenty of trouble for the Rams' opponents.

FEX PROMISING

Bob Fex, who has proven about the best passer on the team, will probably hold down one of the half-back spots, with Ray Egelhofer at the other. Woody Lennes, another deadly passer and a fast running hack, is by no means to be counted out of the struggle for backfield positions.

In the line, El Pearce, Randy Osborne, Willy Dolman, Andy Oddstead, Merv Weiner and "Moon" Burke appear to be slated for future service. Burke, a newcomer, has lived up to every bit of the reputation he brought from high school, and seems to be virtually a cinch for one of the guard berths. Another freshman, Bob Lee, has been turning in some good performances at end, showing himself to be a pass-catcher of the first order.

The veteran Joe Guedet looks like a permanent fixture at end, where his experience, speed and pass-catching ability should be turned to good account.

Russ Sweet seems to have finally struck upon a smooth-working, practical combination which looks, at present, quite capable of holding its own against any junior college on the coast.

MEN'S CLUB TO PRESENT SHOW IN TWO WEEKS

"Our boxing and wrestling show will be greater than ever, this term," stated Don Mills, dark-haired prexy of the Associated Men Students. "The show," he continued, "will be held Sept. 29, at the Verdi Athletic Club."

"This will be the fifth such show, and because of the advance interest already shown by many of the men students, it promises to be the biggest and best event of its type yet held in the college."

Among the many features that Mills has rounded up, the exhibition wrestling bout between Maury Schwarz, who was the second student body president of the college, and "Sad Sam" Goldstein, professional grunt and groaner, should be one of the best. Schwarz, who has fought and wrestled considerably in local circles, and Goldstein put on an act that keeps the ringsiders jumping, to save their skin. The last match the two put on ended in a free-for-all, between spectators, the referee, and the two muscle-bound heroes.

This year the boxing and wrestling will be limited to the following divisions: 118 lbs., 129 lbs., 139 lbs., 149 lbs., 159 lbs., 169 lbs., and heavyweight.

All men students are eligible for the contests, and if they are interested in participating they should sign up at once with Don Mills, or else put their name on the entry list posted on the Powell St. bulletin board. This year following the precedent of past fights, the winners in each division of boxing and wrestling will receive gold medals for their efforts.

Besides viewing an interesting show of boxing and wrestling skill, the spectators will probably be awarded with refreshments in the form of punch and cigarettes. Admission will be by student body card.

For the benefit of those who are planning to enter in either the leather swinging, or bone crunching events, the Galileo Gym will be open every day from 2:30 to 5:00 o'clock. The boxing room and boxing gloves may be used by any contestant desirous of working out.

Joe Amori, faculty adviser to the Men's Club, and former boxing instructor at San Mateo Jr. College, will be glad to help any of the entrants.

RAMS HORN

DIRT COLUMN BLASTED

Dear Editor:

I have been a student at this fair Junior College off and on for the past two years, and every so often a great hue and cry for a "dirt column", has arisen. No one seems to know exactly who starts the agitation for the publication of such drivel, but it appears to "just grow." There was a piece of this sort appearing in The Guardsman about a year ago, and everyone connected with the staff of the paper tried to think of various ways of getting rid of the offensive tripe. Please allow me to state just a few of the objections, which I have heard voiced against a "dirt column."

In the first place it is not news; secondly, it invariably becomes "cliquey," that is to say, the "dirt" deals week after week, with a certain small coterie of students. Of course it affords these individuals a chance to see their names in print, and the value of this angle must not be overlooked, for if you print people's names they are sure to read the paper.

Furthermore, no one is courageous enough to write such a column, and sign his name to it. Why? Well, they might have to mooch a cigarette sometime, and the only persons nearby might be the ones whose names have been "trampled in the dirt" column. That would be most embarrassing for the aspiring moocher.

There are those admirable persons who have even gone so far as to doubt the Constitutionality of a "dirt column." This may be a little radical, and I feel that it is sufficient to doubt the "rationality" of such delightful plats and tush.

All in all, Mr. Editor, there is really no harm in printing a "dirt column," but why(n)ot waste good space?

"SO THERE!"

Eds. Note: Well said, come again!

Dear Editor:

I am writing this letter to the Ram's Horn to voice my opinion on the activities of the Executive Council of the Associated Students of San Francisco Junior College and those who compose the body. It is by way of not only my opinion but the opinion of many others.

First of all I can't understand how these executives can be called same. What do they do anyway? A visit to a meeting of the Ex Council will net an answer to the above question which can only be a mighty "NOTHING!" Pardon me, after all they do something because the meetings take an hour's time, so what?

A stenographic report of a meeting of the aforementioned body will net a lot of quibbling and giggling about nothing. I guess something must be done at a meeting so why not fool around? One would think that there would be something constructive and of value to be accomplished at a confab of the students' leading body. But this isn't the first time I have been disgusted or disappointed with people or things and I guess it won't be the last.

But all kidding aside, this is really a serious problem, aren't there any other problems to be considered, or more mature or serious people to act upon these questions?

The students that we do have can really do things and do them correctly and capably if they would only think about some of the things I have mentioned in this letter and really try to make a change.

Portions of this letter do not apply to all our executives but to certain ones. I hope that if nothing else this letter will provoke some thought amongst the people it has been directed at, and also members of the student body. In some places this letter has been rather strong but I think that you, Mr. Editor, understand the object in mind. I am certain, although you are a member of the council, you are open minded enough to print this little piece.

SO WHAT?

Organization of College's Band, Orchestra Progresses

Organization of a college orchestra, dance and military bands is moving along rapidly, and these groups should soon be playing at college affairs, according to Ildhurn Erb, active member of all three groups.

"We do not have enough students in the orchestra and military, dance bands yet," Erb said. "However, if a few would sign up, we could really go to town on this thing. We will really be of service to the college; a service that I am sure will be appreciated and that has been needed for a long time."

"Think," Erb declared, "how much more colorful and enjoyable the football games will be with a band in the stands and on the gridiron between halves. The band will help to bring school spirit to its proper level." He also emphasized the value of a college dance orchestra and symphony orchestra.

Credit towards a junior certificate will be given to students participating in any of the three groups. The orchestra meets on Mondays and Fridays in the Galileo auditorium at 2:30 o'clock P. M. Both bands meet on Tuesday and Thursday, same place and same time.

Hancock Victorious In National Matches

Continuing his excellent marksmanship, Lieutenant William A. Hancock, coach of the college rifle team and range officer of the Rifle and Pistol Club, won the coveted Du Pont trophy at the National Rifle Matches, Camp Perry, Ohio.

The Du Pont trophy is a beautiful bronze bowman, awarded after open competition to the participant registering the highest in all-round excellence.

Hancock took the award after having shot an aggregate of 1050 points to defeat Henry Adams of San Diego, last year's champion, who made 1047 points for second place.

Competition is run through six matches which includes four matches with the .30 caliber, one with the revolver and one with the .22 caliber.

The rest of the California National Guard rifle team, of which Hancock is a member, is also doing its share. The team, with a score of 4536, won the infantry match, a musketry problem in which seventy-one eight-man teams competed.

Practice Stressed In Gompers Classes

Samuel Gompers Trade School, the latest addition to temporary housing of the ever-growing enrollment of San Francisco Junior College, is one of the finest equipped schools of its kind in Northern California. Located at 22nd and Bartlett Streets, it was designed to afford those wishing it an opportunity to pursue a practical knowledge.

Practice as well as theory is stressed, for all floors house class rooms as well as equipment spaces. Each floor is devoted primarily to space for equipment while the class rooms are located at the end of each floor.

Workmen are still applying the finishing touches to the different floors and all equipment has not as yet been installed.

File Petitions

Students are advised that Wednesday, September 22, is the last day for filing petitions for graduation. Checking up on units and college entrance requirements now may save a lot of grief later.

The first mid-term period ends Friday, September 24.

Glenn Noble Pre-Views Volume Of Zarchin Research

By GLENN NOBLE

A tribute to the industry and leadership of any individual is the publication of an authoritative book by him. Dr. Michael Zarchin, besides being an economics instructor in the college, takes his place as an author by completing the manuscript for his second book, soon to be published by Dropsie College, Philadelphia, "Social and Economic Life of the Jews in the Province of Posen During the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries". This work, two hundred and fifty pages in length comprising fifteen chapters and two appendices, is based on a careful study of sixty manuscripts dating back to the fourteenth century. Written in German, Polish and Hebrew they deal with forty-five communities. Dr. Zarchin ably discusses labor guilds, philanthropy, church life, community organization and economic occupation. Chapter six entitled, "Tailor's Guild" has already been published as a separate pamphlet in the Quarterly Review of Dropsie College. Part of the original manuscript is owned by Columbia University and part by the Jewish Theological Seminary.

Hughes Describes U. S. Constitution

In an interview with a Guardsman reporter, James S. Hughes, faculty member, gave the importance of the observance of Constitution Day to the United States as a whole and to Junior College students in particular.

"As you know, September 17th marks the 150th anniversary of the Constitution of the United States," he remarked. "This constitution is the supreme law of the land; the foundation and instrument of all political and civil liberties, and the basis of federal organization. The government of the United States, under the Constitution, is one of the longest in existence of any country.

"Outwardly, there have been few changes in the Constitution," Hughes continued, "but actually, the Constitution has kept pace with the progress of the nation. This has been done by legislation, custom, and amendment, but primarily by judicial interpretation. The people are today realizing the importance of the Supreme Court and its function of judicial review. Much popular interest was aroused by the recent proposition to change the composition of the Court. This proposition was defeated during the last session of Congress, but it is probable that a similar proposal will be advanced in the near future.

"If the Supreme Court is the interpreter of the Constitution, the matter is of vital importance to all citizens of the United States. Junior College students should be especially interested," he emphasized, "because they will soon find it necessary to vote for a candidate who is playing a part in deciding the importance of constitutional questions.

"Perhaps the most important function of the Junior College is to promote good citizenship," Hughes added, "therefore, every student should learn as much as possible of the Constitution, which is the basic charter of our government. On Friday, the opportunity will be given to hear a program of student speakers on the Constitution and its effect on American life. Every student should strive to attend.

Student Dramatizes Present Spanish War

Youth's attitude toward war was the theme stressed by Lloyd Denfeld, member of Ruth Jensen's group in dramatic reading, in his conversion of a Spanish War story into an experimental play.

The class recently gave an imaginary radio dramatization of the Wreck of the Titanic. The script was based on an essay from a recent periodical.

Miss Jensen's class in acting has begun work on Andre Obay's "Noah," which has been played with success by colleges and universities since its original showing by professionals in London and New York. Though using the ancient story of the ark, the deluge, and the rescue of Noah and his family, the drama, nevertheless, touches upon many modern economic and social problems. Throughout the play the unfailing faith and courage of Noah brings about the successful launching of a new social order.

Forum Club To Hold Meet For Debate On War

Discussing whether the United States should intervene in the Sino-Japanese war in the interests of peace, the Forum Club will meet Friday night, September 24, at the home of Mary Ann Woody, 1875 California Street, near Gough.

Roger Ranch will argue for the action, while Louis Garcia opposes it. Observers say, it is really a question of isolation versus cooperation. In addition the merits of both sides of the conflict are expected to be brought into the discussion.

A surprise visitor at last Friday's meeting was Archibald J. Cloud, president of the college. "We hope that Mr. Cloud enjoyed the discussion and that he comes back again," said Dorothy Mercer and William Goss, faculty sponsors, "we would also like to see all the faculty members and alumni back. It is needless to say that the students will be at the next meeting 'en masse' with such a 'hot' issue in the offing."

John Healy, chairman of the group, in dispensing with the business, said that hereafter the business session will start at the beginning of the organization's instead of at the end. The Forum, literary publication of the club, will make its appearance once a year, in the spring. However, contributions for the magazine will be accepted in the fall, as well as in the spring.

Omicron Group Seeks Members

First scheduled meeting of officers of Omicron Phi Pi, Economics honor society, was held Thursday, Admission Day, at the residence of Dr. Michael Zarchin, adviser. Plans were discussed as to the method of procedure for accepting new members into the society. It was decided by Zarchin and officers to appoint a committee of admission with the express purpose of checking on the eligibility of applicants. Committee members selected were I. Zangor, Charles H. Vaughn, and Eugene Cramer.

The organization will undoubtedly increase in membership rapidly, and already several applications for admission have been received by the board. Tentative plans call for initiation ceremonies on October 1. At present 26 formal letters of invitation have been sent to various junior colleges throughout the state in regards to receiving new charters.

"Any student who is interested in affiliating with Omicron Phi Pi, please get in touch with us immediately," stated I. Zangor, club president. "Qualifications for admission require that the individual has received an average of B plus in at least six units of Economic Principles, Economic History, or Business Economics. Anyone meeting these qualifications who wish to join the organization, please contact either Adviser Zarchin or myself."

Rifle Classes Show Progress

Physical education classes in rifle marksmanship are progressing rapidly, according to witnesses. Tests in nomenclature, and sighting and aiming have been completed, instruction has been given in the prone position, and this week range rules and regulations and the trigger squeeze are being studied.

"It will not be long before these potential shooters have a chance to practice their theory on the firing line," remarked James S. Hughes, instructor in charge.

A meeting of the Board of Control of the Rifle and Pistol Club is to be held this afternoon. Plans for the future will be discussed. Members of the Board of Control are George Dieser, Gail Hanna, Virginia Kwiatt, Fred Wright, Bill Carroll, and Ronald Smith.

Today is the last chance to sign up for the skate, dance, and wienie roast, to be held at Peninsula Beach Skating Rink this Friday evening, according to Gail Hanna, vice-president of the college Rifle and Pistol Club which is sponsoring this event.

Miss Hanna added that about forty have signed up at the Galileo range. She pointed out that there is still need for cars to supply transportation and again said that car owners would be reimbursed by the club.

The total cost of skating, transportation and food will be 50c and an enjoyable evening is assured all who attend.

Last semester's members of the club will be glad to see John Stewart back from his vacation in the East. Stewart was president of the Rifle and Pistol Club for the past two semesters. He will remain in the city for a few weeks before he enrolls for the Fall Semester at Stanford.

Musicians Plan Informal Meet

Welcomed by the senior members of the Music Club, newcomers were heartily greeted by President Robert Lawe when they attended the first meeting of the season on September 1.

"As this was merely a get-together," Lawe said, "no official business was transacted, but plans were discussed for a large gathering scheduled for September 16 at the home of Flossita Badger. At this meeting alumni and newcomers will have the opportunity to meet and become acquainted. The group promises a very enjoyable program and for an informal evening of fun do not miss September 16."

On the list of special events mapped out for this fall are concerts, symphonies, and operas which the Music Club plan to attend en masse. Eminent music critics agree that the winter of 1937 will be an exceptionally brilliant season with Yehudi Menuhin, Marian Anderson, and Lawrence Tibbett among the many artists appearing.

Interested students who wish to join may see the sponsor, Flossita Badger, or any officer of the club.

Reception Set By Newmaneers

Plans for the formal reception of new members in the near future were discussed at an informal meeting of the college Newman Club at a gathering held on Tuesday, September 7.

It was finally decided that all Catholic students would be contacted by post card and invited to attend the reception which will be held within the next few weeks. President Bob Fex also outlined the group's plans for the semester which include the engaging of several guest speakers, a benefit card party, and a dance.

Membership cards were voted upon and several of the group were requested to obtain bids from various printers.

MARIN PEP FEST AT GALILEO FRIDAY

EDITORIAL

"THE PRACTICE OF PARKING DIAGONALLY IS IN VIOLATION OF OUR LOCAL ORDINANCE AND I REQUEST THAT YOU INSTRUCT THE STUDENTS TO PARK THEIR CARS PARALLEL WITH THE CURB."

The above excerpt from a letter from Chief of Police William J. Quinn to President Cloud drove last week another blow at San Francisco's homeless junior college. Francisco Street, since 1923 the haven of diagonal parking by which accommodation was meted to the drivers of all sorts of cars, suddenly became a restricted area wherein less than half the present number of cars can be parked.

That there has been a serious traffic tieup, in which only luck prevented a larger number of bumped fenders, since the junior college first moved into the Galileo High School building, is no news to anyone in any way connected with either institution. That the problem was created solely by the college occupation of the high school buildings is also not news. As early as last fall, The Guardsman published pictures showing the gravity of the problem on Francisco Street.

With some embarrassment, the college now sees itself as the unwilling creator of further inconvenience not only to the high school but to the residents of the area in question. Parallel parking will (possibly) alleviate the congestion on Francisco Street, but will increase the neighborhood problem, preventing residents from parking their cars in front of their homes—unless they get there first.

The problem, furthermore, is one which exists between 2 and 2:30 o'clock, or the exact interval during which the high school students leave their building, and the college assumes its long term lease. Earlier, and later, there is not a problem, but for one half hour of nerve racking hornblowing and congestion, both the hospitable high school and the homeless college must suffer inconvenience and spread it throughout the neighborhood. Adding to the difficulty, is of course, the complete tieup on Bay Street where a subway originally designed as a safety measure, is, in the laxity of its direction, become a threat to any safety that once may have existed on Bay Street.

of last semester, and serves to illustrate graphically the trying traffic situation that arises every afternoon when the junior college students arrive. The photograph was taken on the hill just above Polk and Francisco Streets during the rush period when collegian and prepsters start a miniature war as they battle up the narrow lane with shrieking auto horns and loud yells to add to the utter confusion.

The Guardsman, having long recognized the seriousness of the traffic problem, and sought to remedy it, having also recognized the responsibility innocently thrust upon the college, heartily supports the Police Department in its enforcement of its ordinance. The Guardsman, however, offers a solution far more satisfactory to the college, as well as to the students of Galileo High school. The Guardsman wearily suggests the immediate erection of buildings on that large plot of ground with its enticing parking space, namely, Balboa Park, whereon, it has sometimes been rumored San Francisco Junior College is supposed to be located.

Scheuch Wins 1st Guardsman Photo Contest

News Value Nominates Picture; Soph Bid Is Final Prize

Selected primarily on a basis of news value, the photograph submitted by Don Scheuch was judged the best entered in this week's Guardsman candid camera contest, according to Sam Galstaun, staff photographer and contest director.

"Scheuch's entry," Galstaun said, "may be found on page one in this issue of The Guardsman. It was snapped on the day that diagonal parking on Francisco Street was banned, and several college cut-ups found that the only place for the little red and white automobile owned by Lee Balestreri and Bob Kantner was in the Galileo court."

NEAL OFFERS PRIZE

By winning this week's contest, Scheuch has put himself in line for the grand prize which will be given at the end of the semester to the cameraman who has taken the best picture among the weekly prize winners.

Through the cooperation of Bob Neal, High Sophomore president, The Guardsman is able to offer as a grand prize a bid to the Sophomore Formal which will probably be held at the beautiful California Country Club. Neal expressed his interest in the contest and suggested that as many students as possible enter in order that the proper spirit of competition may be obtained.

"I may even enter the contest myself," he said, "and win that bid to the Soph Formal. It's really going to be something and no one can afford to miss an opportunity to win a free bid."

RULES REPEATED

That interested students might learn the rules of the contest, Galstaun repeated an announcement appearing in previous issues of The Guardsman, and said that the contest is open to any student officially registered in the college.

"Each student may submit as many pictures of college interest as he wishes," he said. "These pictures may be of any size as they will be enlarged to suit the purpose for which they are to be used. All pictures submitted automatically become the property of The Guardsman and none will be returned."

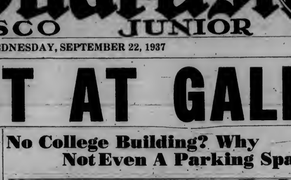
Galstaun will once again hold office hours in The Guardsman office, WJ, on Thursday and Friday afternoons between the hours of 1:00 and 2:30. Pictures may be given to him at this time or left with any member of The Guardsman staff.

Silly Statistics On Classes Noted

From a woman's point of view this college is simply overrun with 1119 of those sweet young things that clear men's petite white sandled feet and who slap you silly in the slats (ribs) to congratulate you.

On the other hand the men insist that 520 simply silly slushers are entirely too numerous even if there is only about one-half a skirt to a pair of pants.

There are 713 men and women students digesting books in their first semester, 286 certificate hog in their second semester. The third semester has a crop of Phi Beta's, and last but not least the tell worn old students who have tread the corridors for four weary long drawn out semesters, according to present registration figures.



Newman Club Holds Initial Reception

Welcoming a large group of new members, the Newman Club of the college held its reception for freshmen last Monday evening in its club rooms at St. Mary's Cathedral.

The affair was well attended and a variety of entertainment was provided, including a bit of crooning by Student Body President Gene Blumenthal.

Bob Fex, president of the organization, announced that he was pleased with the turnout but that he hoped that many of last years' active members who are still in the college will come to the next meeting, at a date to be announced later.

No College Building? Why Not Even A Parking Space

Picture of the week neatly coincided with news of the week. Don Scheuch snapped a college vehicle whose driver was caught in the act of finding a spot to park his car while he pursued his education. Graphically illustrative of impositions the lack of college buildings places on others, Scheuch's picture is the first published in The Guardsman's current camera contest.

Same Old Promises About Building Are Given Again

With the land on which the central building of the proposed junior college is to stand now entirely the property of the Board of Education, nearly completed plans are in the hands of President Archibald J. Cloud. Except for a few minor details such as wiring, plumbing and tiling still to be attended to, these plans are completely finished.

According to these plans, the main building will be a little more than 550 feet long and about 100 feet wide. It will face east and west from the hilltop site at Ocean and Phelan avenues. It will have three complete stories and a basement addition which will house the cafeteria and study hall.

This building is designed to accommodate 2,500 students, and will cost between $700,000 and $800,000. It has been planned so that every room will get light from at least one side; there will be no inside rooms.

If the rapid transit issue carries in the coming municipal election, the college will be served by subway as well as by surface cars, as the proposed plan would run a subway line directly past the site.

The lower floor of the new structure will be devoted principally to rooms for physics and engineering classes, the second floor to chemistry, and the third to biological sciences and the library. There will be two large lecture halls and a number of smaller ones throughout the building. The administrative offices will be on the first floor.

The problem of securing sufficient land has prevented procedure with the plans for the other buildings, but this is expected to be disposed of before very long.

The main building, however, is definitely assured; the land has been secured and the money has been appropriated by the Board of Education. Actual construction will begin as soon as the numerous small items attendant upon the erection of a building have been disposed of.

BLUMENTHAL IN TECHNICAL WIN OVER WILLIAMS

Deliberation of the rules of parliamentary procedure and protests of too strict supervision enlivened the weekly Executive Council meeting, held last Wednesday, September 15.

The minutes of the last momentous gathering were read by Lorraine Haffmeyer, Secretary of the Associated Students. The group then listened to a plea by Fred Vast for the establishment of a Peace Committee. It was decided by Dean Edwin C. Brown that the peace organization would have to be chartered and have a list of members before they could apply for any recognition by the Executive Council.

When Norma Parent, AWS president, requested the aid of some men to handle the door at her dance, President Eugene Blumenthal and Yell Leader Allen Williams had an opportunity to engage in a delightful bit of personal banter, regarding the power of the Council to regulate the action of the Social Committee.

After Williams had heckled the chairmen at great length, Blumenthal requested the yell leader to be seated, and allow the less demonstrative members of the Council to air their views on the engrossing subject of hiring men to punch tickets at the door.

Williams promptly refused and announced "I can keep the floor until I'm finished with what I have to say."

Blumenthal then exercised the prerogative of the chair, and with a disdainful glance that was a masterpiece of its kind, proceeded to ask for others to speak.

The infuriated Mr. Williams seated himself and went into a whispered conference with that able parliamentarian, Donald Mills. After a conversation, that was accomplished with many quaint gestures, Mr. Mills demanded recognition by the chair and then proceeded to deliver a stroke of dramatic genius, by requesting to see the constitutional provision giving Blumenthal supreme power in such matters.

Not to be outdone in the matter of histrionics, Mr. Blumenthal tilted his aristocratic nose toward the ceiling and instructed Mills that he was out of order, in a manner that would have done credit to John Barrymore.

The council continued to wade through official business in this expert fashion, until Mills, making a last desperate try for glory, moved that the meeting be adjourned

College Peace Council To Be Organized

Club Representatives, Interested Students To Comprise Group

Organization of a college peace council will be effected next Wednesday, September 29, when the first meeting of the group is held at one o'clock in Room 101 in the Extension Building, 540 Powell Street.

The council has long been the dream of peace minded members of the college. Organization of the council is based on a resolution passed unanimously at the college peace rally which was held on April 22, 1937, in conjunction with the annual nation-wide student anti-war demonstrations.

Faculty sponsors of the peace council are Gertrude Bolton, William Goss and John Ross. They are history, economic, and political science instructors respectively.

The text of the resolution reads:

"WHEREAS, an effective student movement for peace should be conducted by a group officially designated for that purpose by the students themselves, and,

"WHEREAS, the student peace campaign should be a continuous one, therefore be it

"RESOLVED, that the student executive council establish and sponsor a peace council, comprised of representatives from every college organization and interested individuals, whose chief purpose will be the education of the students of this college in the methods of establishing peace and carry on activity for peace."

Claiming that they had no jurisdiction in the matter, the executive council told a committee from the Forum Club composed of Ray Valdez and Fred Vast to go ahead and organize the peace body themselves. Valdez and Vast feeling that it would be too long to wait until the next meeting of the Forum, went to work immediately on the question.

Having obtained sponsors, the two students met with said sponsors and decided on further action.

"The first meeting of the peace council," the provisional committee said, "will be a very important one because this will be an organizing meeting. Foundations for the future will be laid, a constitution will be adopted and future plans outlined. We urge all organizations whether social minded or not to be present, because we feel that peace is something that concerns all of us. We would also like to see present individuals not associated with organizations. This is one thing that the whole college should support; it is something that vitally concerns us all."

Organizations are asked to send two representatives, if they do not meet before the council convenes, officers of the clubs should be present or send some one in their place.

Household Arts To Honor New Members

To honor incoming members, the Household Arts Association will sponsor a formal Japanese tea Thursday afternoon, September 30, at the home of Claire Cuneo, faculty adviser, at 3:30 o'clock, according to Carolino Orginos, HAA president. Both former and new members who have received their membership cards for the semester will be invited to attend, Miss Orginos said. Miss Cuneo, who visited the Orient during the summer, will display textiles, costumes, and curios that she collected while in the Far East.

Gwendolyn Imo and Wada Miyoshi, Japanese HAA members, dressed in native costumes, will serve tea and rice cakes and cookies to the guests.

"We are looking forward to the tea and know that the colorful Japanese atmosphere will be enjoyed by all our members," said Miss Orginos, who added that all members and prospective members must pay their dues for the semester, 25 cents, to Meadus Regul on or before Tuesday, September 26, to receive membership cards.

Women's Lounge To Be Used For Study

For the convenience of members, studying facilities have been added to the Associated Women Students' social hall in the rear of the Powell Street bookstore, Norma Parent, president of the organization, has announced. The equipment, which includes several study desks and chairs, and an indirect lighting lamp, was obtained for the AWS by Paul Pitman, assistant to President Cloud.

"I would like to express the appreciation of the AWS officers and members to Mr. Pittman for his help in increasing the usefulness of our lounge," Miss Parent said, "and also to invite any women students who may not be acquainted with our social hall to visit it at their convenience."

The lounge has been divided into two sections; a social hall, equipped with a radio, and a study hall with the new desks, chairs, and lamp.

INITIAL PIGSKIN CLASH INSPIRES EXCHANGE RALLY

To open the coming grid season with fitting fanfare and trumpetry, the initial football rally of the season will be held on Friday afternoon, September 24, in the Galileo Auditorium from 2 to 2:45 o'clock, according to Allen Williams, college yell leader.

A variety entertainment is promised at the gathering by Williams, who has made arrangements for a courtesy rally with Marin Junior College whereby San Francisco's student officers and entertainers will journey across the bay to be present at the Marin rally on Thursday afternoon. The following day the Kentfield institution will return the favor by sending its student leaders and star athletes over to this college's pep meeting.

PRESIDENT TO SING

The students will hear short talks by Head Coach Rose Sweet, the football captain who will be appointed for the game, and Associated Student President Eugene Blumenthal, who will also sing through one of his inimitable vocals. Marin's Headman, Coach "Tex" Carleton, will be there to give his side of the story as will the Marin Student President Tom Hughes, and football Captain Bill Allen, the Mariner All-Conference end.

Williams has also made tentative arrangements to have Sterling Young send some of his featured entertainers for the occasion, but it is not certain that they will be able to appear in an afternoon performance.

TURNOUT URGED

"This is the first football rally of the season," Williams said, "and we've got to have a big turnout on next Friday to show the boys that we are really behind them. We have lined up a supercolossal program, and made arrangements with the administration to allow you to be fifteen minutes late for your 2:30 class, so you have no legitimate excuse for not coming. We want the Galileo Auditorium to be jammed, so that when we give our footballers that 'big six' they will know we really mean it . . . Be there!"

SURPRISE RUMORED

Seating arrangements and ushering at the rally will be handled by William's Cap and Mug Society, and order will be 'kept' by Ed Frediani's Peace Committee.

An unverified rumor has it that Deming Smith, fiery yell leader of last semester, will return for the afternoon to stir his former classmates to a fever pitch for the evening's warfare.

GOOD LUCK BOYS

Next Friday night the junior college football team will open its strenuous nine week campaign for fame and glory. A month of intensive practice has put the squad in fine condition for its test against a rival that traditionally puts up a dogged struggle.

Despite the protestations of the academician, it remains a fact that a football team is the college's strongest representative to the general public. A winning grid machine could be a potent factor in making the city conscious of the fact that the junior college exists.

This year the college will be represented by a team that is as yet an undetermined quantity. Many of the man who will wear the red and white jerseys in the contest against Marin are inexperienced and, although possibly capable, have nothing more to recommend them than a superabundance of fight and determination to win.

As the official organ of the Associated Students, The Guardsman offers a trite but nevertheless sincere "Good Luck" to the men who will struggle for the honor of the Ram in the coming football wars. And so to the Guedets and the Pearces, the Dolmans and the Weiners, the Egelhofers and the Olsons, the college serves notice that whether the gridiron gods make them champs or chumps we will still be with them.

NEUTRALITY AND MUNITIONS

In these days of international complications the foreign policy of our country becomes increasingly interesting to its people. President Roosevelt, besides announcing a policy of neutrality, has also been using his influence to prevent the building up of a commerce which by aiding belligerent nations might precipitate another world war.

The President makes no secret of his convictions that any form of commerce with certain foreign powers is a violation of our policy of neutrality. Commerce need not be restricted to cannon and gunpowder before it becomes dangerous. Meat may be needed more sorely than munitions, and cotton originally exported for medical uses has been known to reappear in the form of high explosives.

Unfortunately the term "munitions" is one to which innumerable meanings may be attached. A finished product, like guns, constitute munitions, but what of steel? Explosives are certainly munitions but do chemicals fall under this definition? The congressional definition of "munitions" is that any object which may enter into the manufacture of implements of war, or which may be used to prolong a war are definitely fixed in our neutrality program but shipping interests must be trusted not to override the bonds of discretion in keeping within the legal implications of this statement.

Our generation is soon to take its place in wielding the omnipotent force of public opinion and we must demand a peace program that is vigorous, inclusive and effective. It is too easy to slip in the horrors of war on the paths opened by commerce. Our government must not repeat the mistakes begun in 1914 which finally brought us into the war.

QUIBBLERS

An essential quality in any man who hopes to fulfill an executive position is, that he be able to distinguish between the important and the unimportant. In any position of authority one must be able to see through the mass superfluities and devote his real attention to the things that matter.

It is unfortunate but nevertheless true that the Executive Council of the college has in its composition several elements which are unable to comprehend that the purpose of the group is not to offer them a setting for the display of their histrionic activity, but rather to further the all important business of developing a greater junior college. They feel that they are making themselves very important when they harrangue endlessly for some irrelevant detail that obviously has only a personal interest.

The men and women on the Executive Council have been elected by the students because it was supposed that they possessed some capacity for executive action, but one is sorely tempted to doubt the wisdom of the electorate when he sees the supposed leaders constantly quibbling about things that don't matter anyway.

CRITICISM

All are familiar with the story of the man, the boy, and donkey. All realize the wisdom of its moral that it is quite impossible to please everybody. With this knowledge being a common possession it is hoped that all can understand the position of a student newspaper.

The Guardsman would like to satisfy each and every student but the futility of such an accomplishment is evident. With this fact in mind it is hoped that readers will be able to

When Summer has faded
And Spring's far behind
And Winter is still yet to be,
Along comes the Fall,
And the best time of all,
At least that's the way it strikes me.

A snap in the air
And the wind in your hair,
And leaves turning crimson and brown.
The gridirons a-glow,
Teams ready to go
In the fight for the football crown.

With chrysanthemums blooming
My spirit goes zooming,
Although I don't have any reason,
The best times of all
Seem to come in the Fall,
For Fall is the very best season.

We know that we resigned our position as staff poet in favor of one MacArthur (gosh, we give that guy more darn free publicity!) but with the old debbil deadline sitting on our doorstep and nothing in particular to write about, we have to exercise that old women's prerogative and change our mind. Hence the above which is our very latest contribution to the muse (or are we musing that word wrong?).

When, and if, the college moves to its own building, we wonder how many broken and battered feminine hearts will be left behind at Galileo and Girls'. When the high school lassies catch a glimpse of the junior college men—well, that cute basketball player in second-period English is somehow forgotten and thoughts turn to more adult fields. Yes, even the greenest college freshman, himself gracing high school halls but a few months before, takes on an undeserved glamour when identified as a "college man". As for the gilded youth who possesses a block sweater, a fraternity pin, and a car, well girls, isn't he too divine? Oboy!

Kay Evelich and Mildred Farquhar are being called the "Gone With the Wind Twins" since they went shopping together and bought identical full-skirted dresses. Mildred's is blue, and Kay's is brown, and both are printed with gay yellow-and-red designs. The print isn't as red, however, as Kay's face was when some humorous soul telephoned a downtown fruit juice firm last Wednesday and ordered 20 gallons of punch "for the San Francisco Junior College AWS dance", to be delivered to Miss Evelich at Powell Street. Kay having charge of the punch for the affair, found herself with 20 extra gallons of rapidly spoiling refreshment and nowhere to keep it. When last contacted, the AWS was debating whether to give a party or water the plants in the patio with the stuff.

President Roosevelt has committed the final error of his unfortunate administration. His entire program, insufficiently planned and inefficiently executed, will collapse because of this, his supreme blunder. (Reference is to the Black case.)

It is reported that both Roosevelt and Senator C. are in quest of "The Other Man". Roosevelt searches for a new justice to replace Black; Copeland is on the lookout for a man who agrees with Copeland.

The puerile contention that Roosevelt has doomed to oblivion his liberal policies by his apparent error in the Black case needs no lengthy rebuttal. It is too obvious that a program approved of overwhelmingly after four years of trial (and that by the people it was tried on) will neither rise nor fall by one success or one failure.

However, an object lesson can be learned from the Black issue. Up to and not excluding this time, a Supreme Court ruling was usually final.

Nine men overruled some six hundred odd Congressmen. In many cases where there was a split vote, one man made the final decision. Accepting at its face value the evidence that Justice Black is a member of a sect with violent racial and religious prejudices, we turn to the other eight justices. Many will consider as sacrilegious the barest hint that prejudices exist among the remaining justices. Fault in one man does not condemn the group, but neither does this same fault in one man presuppose the innocence of the group. Some check of the court power should be made, especially where the vote of the justices is split, five to four.

By Gene Blumenthal

Are we still in high school? We wonder . . . We seek an answer . . . We form some conclusions.

It is true that the gap between high school and college is physically not a great one, but to the mind's eye, it is a veritable chasm. We are no longer dependents, looking to home and college for aid in formulating decisions, and, for guidance in our daily conduct. We are thrust upon ourselves, and henceforth it remains with us to be our own counsel and guides. It behooves us then, to recognize the situation; that we are rapidly attaining our seniority, and must, therefore, act accordingly.

Apparently, the gap is not as great as we thought, the aspect, perhaps, is not as formidable as previously imagined, for many of our so-called college men and women have overburdened themselves, and have persisted in pursuing superfluous and ill-formed ideas as to what constitutes adult conduct.

It is well and good to carry over with one, a feeling of respect, pride and admiration for the high school formerly attended, but all those hasty, and even crude concepts previously formed, should most certainly be left behind! They only serve as added impediments and tend to vitiate the mind, leaving it in part, closed to the reception of more noteworthy ideas, and to the founding of a more beneficial philosophy. These cancerous growths exhibit themselves in what is supposedly real college spirit, real college enthusiasm. In reality, they are nothing more than over-indulgent expressions of petty high school tactics.

College spirit manifests itself in many ways, but most certainly not in the manner of the unheeding, callow persons of the college, who make no effort, whatsoever, to be differentiated from the high schools from which they were graduated.

To the perspicacious individual, it is evident that the fault lies either with our system of developing erudite men and women, or with the aforementioned type of student.

To us, it easily discernible, and self-evident, that the fault lies, not with the system, not with the method, as evolved, and practiced by the administration, but with the students themselves. Fortunately, it is our contention that these characteristics, which have such a deleterious effect on our standing as mature men and women in the eyes of all, are not very deeply ingrained.

Consequently, it is our duty as representative members of the Associated Students, and with pride in our already enviable record, to do all in our power to eradicate these symptoms, which threaten to undermine our morale.

The college was never intended as a place to take post-graduate high school courses. Our constant objective has been to seek spirit and enthusiasm, to found true, lasting, college traditions. To those persons who must inevitably follow and succeed us, we trust that their heritage will be just that!

After Dark

By John Ward

A detailed history of war through the recorded years would offer the student little variety save in the methods of killing, the manner of destruction, and the various results. Genghis Khan is more or less famous for his barbaric methods of slaughtering a town's populace and thus destroying the town. One ancient general was responsible for the burning of the great library of the pre-Christian world centered about the city of Alexandria. Ugly details distant enough to be acceptable today without avid hate or disgust for the perpetrators.

* * * *

But when one is told of the unnecessary bombing of Rheims Cathedral during the recent world war it is not as simple to accept and be silent. Of what value is art when, at the first clash in a war, discrimination becomes a blind-spot and wholesale blundering on a terrifying scale is the heroism and patriotism of the hour? What price culture as well as glory? In the barbarian it is understood that all walls must be demolished, but, to the psuedo-civilized man, walls should stand for a heritage, a contribution to the future and a culture whether that man is a soldier or a civilian and even if the drums are roaring.

* * * *

Today in Spain, men are wantonly despoiling some of the finest religious art in the world. It would be simple to excuse or condemn them for what they do, and let it rest there, yet a great problem has arisen and if it is to be answered at any time it should be tentatively answered now while there is still time to seek preventional measures.

* * * *

In the past art has not been threatened as it is certainly threatened today by the spirit of war. It is not the present purpose of this column to suggest means of averting destruction but merely to bring to the fore a terrible possibility. The world would be a sorrowful place if, as Spain will witness in a hundred years, the great monuments and paintings of civilized man were no more than shambles and some historian of 2500 B. C. could only refer to a suggestion of great culture in man of 193.........

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

At last, at long last, as Davy Windsor would say, we have encountered a fellow being, who is a kindred soul. That is to say, she, for happily enough it is a woman, likes the fog and its myriad, hiding thoughts. Therefore, it is indeed with a great deal of pleasure that we bring out this bit of logic, gleaned from a cloud of early morning mist, and which we discussed with this newly discovered companion in spirit, along with other potent bits of philosophy.

Time, and the measurement thereof, has long held a subtle fascination to mankind. Musing, with this intellectual lady on the hopelessness of a past, the dubious quality of the present, and the wretched uncertainty of the future, we came to the following conclusions: Yesterday, today was tomorrow; today, will be yesterday, tomorrow; now if the reader has followed to this point, he is qualified to go ahead. Many people have said that "tomorrow never comes". Fine, that leaves us just today and yesterday, and we can rule out yesterday, on the assumption, that: "the past is gone, and you can't bring it back", thus leaving us with only today. You may readily see that this is going to cause endless confusion, for if one can't revive yesterday, or conjecture on tomorrow, these not existing, then he is going to have to decide everything today. It is quite a problem, and if any of our readers would like to help us out of this quandary, simply write your solution and turn it in to The Guardsman. We won't understand it any better than we do this column.

It seems that the verse writing ability of this columnist has been questioned by an Irishman, who also dabbles with words. In the following bit of raving, we accept the challenge, and attempt to retaliate.

Murphy, we'll excuse your "Irishness"
And, we also must the truth confess.
Half Scotch we are, the rest we're fearin'
Belongs to the folk of "Dear Old Erin".
This, you see would make us neither,
So, we'll just claim we're better than either.

Once again our faith in the inherent intelligence of our fellow beings is sadly strained. This time, by those nit-wits who take an unholy glee in blowing the horns of their cars, and adding to a most un-musical uproar outside of Galileo of an afternoon. Ah well, somebody once said, "What fools these mortals be!"

Around and around . . . admiring the Shakespearian aroma of a tavern at Front and Jackson Sts., called "The Falstaff", and sporting on its side, a painting of that worthy . . . roaming the Mills College campus with the "Duke of Worcestershire", our pet Spitz pup, and having the little devil cop all the tumbles.

Almost Fog-got to say, see you next week.

"ISMS"

By Bob MacArthur

Facism and Communism
Have 'roused no end of criticism,
But aren't we forgetting astigmatism,
And that silly thing called hypnotism?
We've heard too much of heroism
And also, over-optimism,
Egotism and pessimism,
And other forms of idiotism.
You'll even find our journalism,
Has faults within its mechanism.
Folks with all their vocalism,
On Unionism and Socialism,
Are overlooking alcoholism,
As a target of their witticism
I'd like to see "allkindsavism",
Including puny punsterism,
Buried in a deep abysm.
The moral of this verbalism
Might be: "Try more rationalism".

365 Days Ago Today

Indications were, that all Ram rooters journeying southward to the Los Angeles game would be tendered a "royal reception," and entertained in grand style. In spite of much ballyhoo, very few students from the college made the trip.

San Francisco's Board of Education announced that slightly over half a million dollars had been set aside for the construction of "absolutely necessary units" of the new San Francisco Junior College. We're still waiting, hopefully.

Rams, Mariners, to Clash Friday Night

DIRECTOR OF RAM GRID DESTINIES

Judging from the expression on the face of Lee Eisan, assistant football coach, the prospects of his charges in their forthcoming season-opener can't be particularly discouraging. Lee is shown above as he casts an appraising eye upon them during a recent workout at Funston Field.

Kentfield Scene of Battle; Sweetmen Slight Favorites To Down Trans-Bay Rivals

By DON MIX

Maestro Russell Sweet gives the downbeat to the season's grid festivities when he sends his high geared Ram machine into action against a band of Tex Carleton's blood thirsty Mariners from Marin Junior College next Friday evening, September 24, at the Kentfield Stadium.

The battle will serve as a testing ground for two teams of uncertain quality, and although both teams will present many inexperienced men in their lineups, a torrid struggle is certain between two rivals that traditionally put up a classic battle. The meager early season dope available on both squads seems to give the heavier locals a slight edge, but anything can, and probably will, happen when the teams face each other.

SWEET SAYINGS

Headman Sweet refused to wax eloquent in praise of his 1937 model, but reluctantly admitted, after much heckling, that "the boys have possibilities".

"The lads are very green and our offense is sadly in need of smoothness," Sweet declared, "but we've got lots of potentialities and scads of the old moxie, and if Lady Luck does not treat us too harshly we are liable to finish on top of the heap.

"How do I think the Marin game will come out? That's very simple. If we can score the most touchdowns we are pretty certain of winning but if they happen to push the 'rock' into paydirt more than we do nothing can stop them from hanging up a victory."

ENDS EVEN

Despite the fact that Sweet will start two of last year's first string wingmen, Marin will be able to meet the Rams on very even terms in the flank positions when they rely on the proven potency of Bill Allen, All Conference last year, and Joe Ratke, 1936 regular.

At the all important tackle positions it seems that the Sweetmen have a slight edge because the San Franciscans can offer four capable men while Marin will have to depend almost entirely on her starters. Will Dolman and Merv Weiner are capable of sensational football if they happen to feel right, and they are backed up by a rugged pair of two hundred pound bruisers, Sims "Tip" Hamilton and Neil Swanson. Marin's offering in this spot are Frank Sipan and Bob Hughes, consistent but not outstanding.

The two second string guards on the Mariner aggregation of last year have moved up to the first position, and according to Line Coach Doug Clymen they "make the goin' tough through the middle". These two men, Oscar Hoberg and Phil Barry, and the two Ram middlemen, who may be either Randy Osborne and "Moon" Burke or Andy Oddstead and Walt Peterson, seem to be about on a par.

CENTER WEAK

The injury to Duke Worsham left an irreplaceable hole in the pivot position in the local line. Mel Peterson, scrappy but rather light, and Jack De Fosse, from Technical High across the bay, are being used alternately in this position, but both men are very green and need lots of work before becoming fully effective. Marin's rugged Joe McDonough seems to have the advantage of either of the San Franciscans.

The backfield setup at both colleges is strangely alike. Both outfits have two proven veterans but are depending on a new man to provide the main scoring punch. The Rams have Ray Egelhofer at fullback and Wes Olson at right half to give seasoning in the back positions, but are putting all their hopes on Al McDonald, Johnnie Verducci, Bob Fex and Woody Lennis to make the touchdowns. Marin has Johnson and Barbour from last year but expects to see Garbe and Elskien clipping off the yardage.

The Ram offense will feature both single and double wing attack and the team has been working on a series of intricate reverses and spinners that should prove effective. McDonald will run from the tailback position, and although this is his first game in junior college competition, he has demonstrated plenty of speed and power in the varsity scrimmages.

When the coaching staff inserts "Bullet Bob" Fex into the fray the fans can expect to see passes thrown far and often because the baby faced exbaseball player can hurl the pigskin with the best of them. Marin has no passer than can come close to matching the classy slants of Fex.

There you have it. Two teams apparently evenly matched with the all important factor of the "breaks" probably deciding the issue.

The probable starting lineups subject to changes by the coaches:

SOCCERMEN WIN ONCE, LOSE TWICE

After dropping their first two games, the Red and White shin-maulers came back with a vengeance and trounced Commerce High by a 6 to 0 score. They lost the first game of the current season to Lowell High in a nip and tuck affair that ended 5 to 4, with the Cardinals on the long end of the score.

In the second encounter, The Rams were badly off form and dropped another close one, this time to their friendly enemies, Galileo High. The Lions scored the only tally of the entire game in the closing minutes on a concentrated rush by the entire forward wall.

The Lowell game found a fairly strong forward line and a willing but green backfield carrying the colors of the college. The fact that the Junior College team scored four goals testifies to the strength of the forward line, and the fact that they had five goals scored against them indicates the greenness of the backfield. Milton Latz, who formerly cavorted for the Galileo shin diggers, scored the first Ram goal of the season after taking a pass from the veteran left-half, Ellard Taylor. Ed Frediani, another veteran from last year's championship squad, set up two of the tallies. One was made by "Sandy" Lim, clever forward, and the other was "boomed" through the uprights by Leo Johnson, husky center forward, who also pushed through another tally in the closing minutes of the contest.

The Commerce game found the Ram sharpening his horns to razer edge and looking for a victim on which to take out his vengeance, after dropping his first two battles, and the Bulldogs proved to be very able victims. For the first time this season the forward line clicked, as it is capable of clicking, and the result was a barrage of 6 goals.

Evidently suffering from an inferiority complex, the Commerce lads were outplayed and outfought at every turn, in fact, the carnage was so great that Coach Prinz, Bulldog mentor, called his team off the field before the contest was officially closed.

Rising to new heights, Leo Johnson again proved the strongest link in the opponents' machine by chalking up three goals to lead the Ram scoring attack. Lucca, playing his first year for the junior college, tried to take some of Johnson's honors by shoving through two scores and with a little luck he would have had another to his credit.

Jimmie Mull, who showed some of the form he used while a member of one of Polytechnic High School's great soccer teams, accounted for the only other tally of the day.

In the backfield for the junior college Bill Flynn and Bob Campbell are improving with leaps and bounds, and Flynn is developing into a very able kicker with a boot that is the envy of his defensive colleagues. Elmer Hubacher and John Pritchard are "battling it out" for one of the half-back spots, while "Cupie" Zuardo, chunky guard, is a veritable "rock of Gibraltar" on defense.

Men's Club Boxing Bouts Postponed Until November 3

Because the date set for the Associated Men Students' Boxing and Wrestling show did not allow enough time for the entrants to prepare for the encounters, the time was set forward from September 29 to November 3.

"We decided to give all the contestants plenty of time to attain the physical condition that is essential to fighters," stated Joe Amori, adviser to the Men's group. "In the past many of the fights were very poor because of the poor physical condition of the last minute entries and this year we hope to eradicate this bad feature by offering this longer training period."

Don Mills, president of the Men's Club, promises an evening of entertainment, that will top any yet offered in the college.

"However," said Amori, "he did let us into the secret that Maury Schwarz, former junior college student body president, and Sad Sam Goldstein, professional wrestler, will put on an exhibition wrestling match, that should furnish the audience plenty of laughs."

GRIDIRON GRUMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

Personal nomination for the silliest, most inane trick of the year: the scheduling of the California-St. Mary's and the Stanford-Santa Clara games on the same day. Not only will the box-office receipts of both these contests be far below what they would have been had the games been scheduled separately, but a great many fans who had counted on seeing both will be bitterly disappointed. A stupider move on the part of the "powers that be" cannot be conceived of.

* * * *

Chunky little Glen Wunderling, first string back on last year's Ram eleven, seems to be doing all right for himself up at U. S. F., where he now has the inside track on the quarterback job. An all-city end at Polytechnic High, in 1935, Wunderling switched to the backfield upon arriving at J. C., and showed such aptitude that he was assigned a permanent berth.

* * * *

Injuries have struck hard at the football squad's reserves during the past week. Bill Tessier and "Chubby" Kotta, halfback prospects, both have injured legs, and Carl Brogger, second string pivot man, has been the victim of a similar mishap. The old bugaboo of misfortune has certainly dogged the Rams relentlessly so far this season.

* * * *

Those of you, who saw last year's Men's Club boxing show, will remember Dave Smith, former Ram footballer, who donned the gloves that night. Since then, Dave has entered the ranks of the professional leather slingers. He made has debut in Oakland recently, polishing off some Indian or sumpn' called Chief White in two rounds.

* * * *

At this writing, the local preps have played four consecutive tie games, and the situation is really becoming interesting. We await further developments with bated breath.

* * * *

There is a possibility that Duke Worsham, believed permanently out of football with a cracked vertebra, may recover in time to resume his duties at the pivot position before the season is over. The injury has been mending much more rapidly than was expected, and the Duke is once more rarin' to go. "I'll be in there against State," he optimistically announces, and we certainly hope he's right.

RAMBLINGS

By ED FREDIANI

After listening to Clem McCarthy's screech by screech broadcast of the recent heavyweight tussle between Tommy Farr and the Detroit Destroyer, we were greatly surprised to find out that the motion pictures of the affair played a dirty trick on Mr. McCarthy by showing John Q. Public that it was just another fight with not too much action or excitement.

According to our intrepid announcer, the battle was a thriller from start to finish. Perhaps the real cause of his excitement was the Tonypands boxers unexpected showing, but in any case it wouldn't do Mr. McCarthy any harm to listen to Ted Husing's authentic announcing. If the boys fought as McCarthy announced it, we would be more than satisfied, but as they didn't he should learn to report what actually happens in a sane manner.

Just the other day in one of the college's Public Speaking courses a freshman student was exhorting on the subject of artificial respiration. During the speech a discussion evolved over one method employed in restoring normal breathing after an accident, and after a short controversy, our young hero burst forth with the following: "Well all that I know is that Doctor Gaddy told me it was a safe method."

It seems that the genial instructor can't get enough titles. He already possesses the title of Admiral bestowed upon him by the members of last semester's crew, and now the title of Doctor in exchange for some information on the respiratory system.

If he continues at this rate he'll soon rival Major Bowes in honorary titles.

THE TOPS

Looking over the records of the 1936 football season, we find the following marks for the boys to shoot at this fall:

Longest:
Scoring Run—Clarence Parker (Duke)—105 yds.
Runback of Punt—William Buckley (Montana Mines)—97 yds.
Run from Scrimmage—Nelson Peterson (West Virginia Wesleyan)—97 yds.
Run with an Intercepted Pass—Bernard Marcus (Bates)—102 yds.
Longest Punt Without Roll—Sam Francis (Nebraska)—84 yds.

Let's hope that some of the boys on Russ Sweet's squad try to emulate these Herculean efforts, but at the same time let us hope with all our heart that they don't try to break the record of little Piedmont College (Georgia) which dropped a game by the largest margin of the season, the score reading at the end of four hectic quarters against Appalachian College (North Carolina)—Appalachian, 105; Piedmont, 0.

* * * *

GOOD START

Leo Johnson, ace scorer of the Red and White Soccer outfit, is off to a flying start again this season. In the first tussle of the season against Lowell, Johnson banged through two tallies. He was held scoreless by the Galileo backfield in the second game, but to even matters he pushed three goals past the Commerce goalie in the recent tussle with the Bulldogs.

A goal in soccer is just about as hard to make as a touchdown in our sport of madness, so with five goals in only three games it looks as though he is well on his way to lead the league in scoring for the second successive year.

FLASHES

By JERRY FLAMM

With the semi-annual Men's Club boxing matches scheduled for next Wednesday night at the Verdi Club, we are glad to announce that the famous "Flamm-Mix Stables" will again be available for lads with lots of promise. This famous piloting organization, which has a record in local fistic circles, offers all its facilities to fellows hoping to win the coveted medals in the tournaments. Also, if victorious, this marvelous boon to the boxing game, will see that the lucky lads are given an opportunity in the professional game. The purses, which are considered very important, are split even-steven with the contestants, sixty-forty. Sign up, men! Maybe you are another Jack Dempsey or Barney Ross. Dempsey owns restaurants and hotels, besides having his picture on whiskey labels. Gene Tunney is a country squire. Jimmy Braddock endorses health foods. You too can be a champion. If you are not going to be a champion you will soon find out. Even then, we will still handle you. After all, champions are common. Be different! Don't be a champion. Be a bum! We are sure that we can make you a bum! Just look at our record. Last year one of our boys almost won a championship. That's what the "Flamm-Mix Stables" can do for you. Hurry, hurry, hurry! We will not go over our quota of two hundred.

The Sacred Heart High School football eleven usually does not finish very high in the local high school league; they are the perpetual cellar champs. The team is known as the "Fighting Irish" and they really live up to this colorful subtitle. Before a game with Sacred Heart, the high school coaches always warn their teams to "be ready for anything." If they are behind near the end of the game, and they usually are, the Sacred Heart "tough babies" go to work. Outweighed on an average of from twenty to thirty pounds per man, these little guys spit on their hands, wind up while the signals are being called, and give the husky lads on the other side of the line who have been taught the dogmaa of fair play, a nice going-over. It is very colorful.

"Moleskin Moe" says: Art Nelson almost massacred himself in taking off his sweatshirt. He tore a gash in his schozzle with his fingernail and a gory scene resulted . . . the secret is out. Bud Wickers, varsity end, was a nightly caroler at the Guernewood Bowl at the Russian River this summer. His specialties included, "I'se a Muggin" and "The Martins and the Coys" . . . "Moon" Burke, varsity guard, is from a football family. "Half-Moon" Burke, a brother, was a star fullback for St. Ignatius two years ago. . . . Concerning that tackle problem: Jack Haezlett, sub end, was an all-city tackle at Berkeley High two years ago. . . . Leo Balstracci almost took that red and white vehicle of his apart the other day to see what was wrong when someone tied a rubber band on the hand throttle.

By JEAN PAGE

Semester managers for WAA sports were elected Friday, September 17. Women elected were Virginia Lum, tennis; Ellen Cumming, volleyball; Norma Gattavera, swimming; Esther Tani, dancing; Virginia Kwiatt, rifle; Dorothy Holcomb, tumbling, and Margaret Parks, archery. No managers were elected for golf, badminton, or riding.

After the nominations had been approved by the WAA council, managers were elected by all WAA members of this semester or last. Duties of the managers are to attend all council meetings, to keep the attendance record of their sport, to plan tournaments, and social activities for their club, to keep account of the club's budget, and to aid in selecting the women chosen for the first team in their respective sports.

Nominees for the managerial positions were:

Tennis—Lily Phillips and Virginia Lum.

Volleyball—Ellen Cumming and Mildred Farquhar.

Archery—Margaret Parks and Stephanie Star.

Swimming—Norma Gattavera and Ruthleora Hall.

Rifle—Virginia Kwiatt.

Dancing—Camille Condrotte and Esther Tani.

Tumbling—Dorothy Holcomb.

May we extend our heartiest congratulation to the winners and our appreciation to Gloria Swiecgood who made it possible to obtain the election results before the "deadline."

Hockey classes began last Thursday with enough girls signed up to make two complete teams. Our worthy football heroes would quail at the wildly-swinging clubs and the raging fervor with which the girls pursue the little white pellet known as the "puck."

Heartened by the five new golf sets purchased by the college, golf classes are larger this semester than they have ever been before. Particularly outstanding in her magnanimous efforts to surpass Babe Dedrikson is Gloria Swiecgood, president of the WAA council, who attacks golfing with as much enthusiasm as she shows in her WAA work, but we regret to say, not as much success.

It is impossible, says Parmenides the Greek philosopher, for an arrow to travel through the air to a target since there are an infinity of points between the starting point of the arrow and the target, and therefore it would take an infinity of time for the arrow to reach the target. . . . And think of the number of junior college co-eds who have been duped into taking archery. We know now why we never seem to be able to hit the target.

The WAA council is completing plans for the initiation luncheon to which all WAA members will be invited and which is to be held during the week of October 4. The newly-elected team managers will be present at the luncheon.

All women who have not yet learned to swim are urged to take advantage of the present opportunity. There is no charge for swimming as the WAA pays all fees out of the student body funds. Elementary swimming is scheduled on Monday and Wednesday from 12 to 1 o'clock. For those who are particularly interested in diving, a class meets on Tuesdays and Thursdays at 1 o'clock. Anyone who just wants to come out once in a while may do so.

Ten dozen new arrows and new and heavier bows for men were purchased for the archery classes last week. The first scores tabulated show that the past records of Edith Rand and Junerose Bellew who made six consecutive bull's eyes and won a matched set of tournament arrows, may be equaled or even beaten by this season's archers.

And with the graduation of Junerose Bellew last semester, the college lost a co-ed who was, in our opinion, one of the best of women athletes. Junerose used to be active in as many as seven sports, besides carrying on her regular scholastic work.

Because of overcrowding in freshman activities classes, several enrollees were asked to transfer to either hockey or elementary or intermediate tap last week.

Although a number of students have enrolled, there is still room for more in the riding classes. Men as well as women may sign up. The riding season is climaxed by a horse show in which Sacramento Junior College will also participate. Several evening rides are scheduled during the semester.

The WAA rifle classes have been organized and practice has begun. Rifle is the only sport in which a woman is eligible for an award in competition with men. There are twenty women enrolled and classes are held on Monday and Wednesday at 4:30 o'clock.

The time for WAA tennis classes has been changed. Tennis is now held from 10:30 to 1 o'clock on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and from 11:30 to 1 o'clock on Mondays and Wednesdays. These hours will make it very convenient to arrange playdays and tournaments. There will also be mixed doubles this fall.

Newcomers Shine As Lambs Beaten By Petaluma High

Coach Jack Gaddy's "Flying Lambs" powered by some fine performances on the part of a few hitherto unknowns, lost to a potent Petaluma High School eleven last Friday, 13 to 6. The Lambs played a good brand of ball and showed periods of exceptional smoothness, but overeagerness in the pinches and the fact that they were up against a very good prep team cost them the game.

The Egg-Center boys started the scoring early in the first quarter, when, after a sustained march following an exchange of punts, Carondy went twenty yards on an end sweep to score standing up. Beirwidth, Lamb tackle, broke through to block the attempted conversion. Despite some good offensive drives led by Boitano, Nelson and Fassler in the Lamb backfield, the Gaddymen were unable to score and the half ended without a further tally.

On a determined drive, climaxed by a long forward pass from Bill Fassler to Tony Manuel, the Lambs advanced the ball to the Petaluma eight yard line in the third quarter, but four downs produced a minus three yards and the Petaluma boys took over the ball on the eleven. In the final period Snodgrass, Petaluma safety man, returned a punt forty yards for the second score. This time the conversion was good.

Despite the one-sided score, with Walt Boitano powerhousing the club from the fullback post, the Lambs came back near the end of the game and, not to be denied this time, finally hit the scoring column with a beautifully executed pass from Fassler to Jack Kraege.

OARSMEN WANTED

All last year's crewmen or any new students with competitive rowing experience who want to row in the Columbus Day Regatta, should see Coach Jack Gaddy or Art Nelson over in the gymnasium next Friday afternoon, Gaddy announced.

FENCING

Progress in fencing instruction is continuing rapidly, according to witnesses. There are many new students this term and several good prospects can already be seen. Several of the more advanced students are practicing after school, preparing for future matches. Anyone interested in this sport, see Coach Jack Gaddy for details.

RAMS' HORN

EX-COUNCIL AGAIN!

Dear Ed:

Just read some comment about the ex council meetings. The letter summed up meant that the members do "nothing".

I should like to ask this question: what is there for them to do?

Everything that comes before the group is just "stuff" that needs an official OK to make it legal by the constitution.

The executives need not be blamed, they are merely puppets. They do what they're told—usually.

Until the group has real problems they will probably continue as they have for the past two years, quibbling, giggling, and enjoying the farce.

Dear Editor:

As a dancer, I have much to be desired. Fortunately, however, my enjoyment is not limited by my ability. Through your columns I desire to tell Miss Norma Parent and her associates in A.W.S. how very much Mrs. Pitman and I enjoyed the dance at the Century Club last Friday night.

I wish it were possible for every one in this city to become aware of the wholesomeness and wholeheartedness of this student body as exemplified each day on our various campuses and again last Friday night. At work and at play you deserve the confidence and goodwill of us all.

Sincerely, yours,
PAUL PITMAN

NEUTRALITY TO BE PANEL TOPIC

Sponsoring its first assembly of the semester, the social science department will present a panel discussion on "The United States and Neutrality" some time next week as part of a program to inform students on pertinent questions of the day and to promote thought among the students on these problems.

The assembly will last fifty minutes and will take place in the lecture hall at the Extension Building. Social science classes in particular, and students in general are invited to attend.

The chairman will be Mr. Hughes. The following topics and speakers will be heard: "The Policy of the United States, Historically," Dr. Parker; "The European Viewpoint Toward Neutrality," Mr. Ross; "Neutrality From An Economic Standpoint," Dr. Zarchin; "The Viewpoints of China and Japan," Miss Bolton, and "International Law and Neutrality," Dr. Sewell and Mr. McKiernan. These topics should be of particular interest at this time of international unrest.

AWS Officers Thank Committee

Associated Women Students officers wish to thank the members of the committee having charge of the informal dance held last Friday evening at the Century Club. The committee is as follows: Marion Yager, Barbara Randall, Kay Evulich, Isabelle Sherratt, Betty Nelson. Caroline Origines and Sylvester McAtee, although not members of the committee, helped with arrangements.

The Social Committee and the following faculty members acted as patrons: Alden Smith, Mary Jane Learnard, Jennet Henderson, Joseph Amori, Patricia Ricciardi, Mr. and Mrs. Paul Pitman, Mr. and Mrs. Grant F. Marsh, Helene Turner, and Franklin Sewell.

Dr. Clara Kohls, instructor of anatomy at the University of California Medical School, yesterday gave a lecture for Dr. Nelson A. Wells in Anatomy 2a. Dr. Kohls discussed the early stages in the development of the human embryo.

To make possible a new election of officers, the Society for Hotel and Restaurant Management met last Friday to draw up a resolution for this purpose. The move was necessitated by the fact that the previously elected officers were unable to put in an appearance.

Elaborate Model Of Fair Exhibited In Union Square

By ART SKOONBERG

A spectacular scale model of the 1939 Worlds Fair, in its entirety, is now installed in the Exposition Pavilion, Union Square, and is open to the public for inspection free of charge. Constructed on a scale of one sixteenth of an inch to a foot, the model, seventeen feet by thirty-four feet, was made in thirty sections and dovetailed together on a three-ply wood base weighing one ton. A staff of six to twelve experts was employed more than a year in building the model in the art department of the Golden Gate International Exposition Building, 585 Bush Street.

All buildings are of moulded plastic wood material and the Exposition palaces combine the beauty and spectcular phases of Oriental and Occidental architecture. Tiny lifelike trees made from rubber and sprayed their natural color. Palm trees were formed from buckram, a porous flexible material which is used in stuffing hats and might be compared to cheese cloth with starch added. Fifteen hundred lifelike forms of people were accomplished by pins with modeling wax and clay. Two thousand miniature metal automobiles are included to make the model a realistic replica of the fair.

Color as well as perfect construction is emphasized in the exhibit and buildings will appear the same color in reality as depicted by the shades exemplified in the model buildings. Architectural designs are along civilization lines of Inca, Cambodian and Mayan Indians, and consequently, buildings adhere more toward the pastel shades.

Each wall of the octagon shaped pavilian is devoted to different phases of the veritable treasure island. Paintings by Chesley Bonestell are displayed along one panel, with another being devoted to architectural drawings of the site and buildings. A map including the various participating nations is displayed on the east panel.

More than 400 acres are included in the world's largest man made island, located halfway between San Francisco and Oakland off Yerba Buena Isle, and is over a mile long and two-thirds of a mile wide.

A forty million dollar project, the Worlds Fair will consist of twenty-seven main exhibit palaces and artificially illuminated buildings given to dramatize phases of business progress, electricity and communications, foods and beverages, homes and gardens, mines and machinery, health and vacationland. East of the Temple of Music, plans call for a five acre Lake of All Nations and the Spire of The Sun will be the loftiest tower on the grounds, more than four houndred feet high. An elaborate lighting system costing five hundred thousand dollars will be installed making the island a jewelled city afloat on a sea of light, thus bringing out its beauty at night.

Color effects will be stressed in the planting of flower masses of different colors occupying various sections of the grounds.

To alleviate congestion, influx of traffic will be all to right angle turns with no cross traffic resulting. Four ferry slips, three for San Francisco and one for Oakland will be built to facilitate the handling of ferry crowds. After the close of the fair, all buildings with the exception of three hangars will be cleared from the site, and it will be made into one of the most modern airports in America.

Exposition officials announced that the model of the Worlds Fair would remain on exhibit in Union Square over a period of two years. Visiting hours are on week days from ten o'clock in the morning to eight at night.

College Profs To Barbecue Beeves

Men of the college faculty will join with San Mateo Junior College faculty members in a stag barbecue at Oak Cove, San Mateo, off Crystal Springs Road, next Wednesday, September 29, at 4 o'clock, Joe Amori announced yesterday.

The program will consist of games and he-man entertainment, with the barbecue set for 6 o'clock. Tickets for the occasion must be purchased in advance that Amori can obtain an estimate of the number to attend. Tickets are being sold at the faculty table, Powell Street, and the cashier's window at Galileo.

The main purpose of the barbecue is that of reunion. Before the college in San Francisco was established, San Francisco students comprised about one-half of the enrollment at San Mateo. In addition, six members of the college faculty formerly taught at the peninsula school. They include John Ross, economics; Louis Berman, astronomy; Paul McKelvey, commerce; Joe Amori, hygiene, commerce, math; Dorothy Mercer, English, and Margaret Flourney, commerce.

Best Of New Films Selected For Fans

Francis Colligan, instructor-in-charge of the Library, announces that he has received, what he considers a valuable, new references periodical, the Motion Picture Digest.

This publication will be of special interest to all drama and literature students. In each issue, outstanding newspaper criticism of current motion pictures is summarized and the reader gains the benefit of the views of all the critics in the nation.

The magazine is published semi-monthly, and is to be used as a reference guide and not circulated.

"We all feel that those interested in the cinema will be better able to decide which films are outstanding and worthy of attendance," said Colligan. "This is only one of the many new services being added to our Library, making it something to use and to be proud of."

NYA Demands Proof Of Gainful Labor

Introducing a new plan of work projects for colleges this year the government asks that all men students having NYA positions show that they are gainfully employed in worth while work projects.

The federal inspector for this district was impressed last year by the work the college NYA men were doing in the cafeteria under the Hotel and Restaurant management course. The inspector felt that it was one of the most worth while projects being performed on the coast.

Chef Joseph Ahl was given personal commendation for his fine work as supervisor of this project. Duties of the boys consisted of: setting tables, acting as waiters, and preparing much of the food for banquets. This project will be used again this semester.

Rifle Club Outing Dubbed Colossal!!

"When will be go again?" "Where is the Rifle Club's next event to be held?" Questions such as these testify to the success of the College Rifle Club's skate and wienie roast, held last Friday evening, September 17, at Peninsula Beach Skating Rink.

About forty members and guests of the Rifle Club assembled at Potrero Avenue and Army Street at about 7:30. From there the cars proceeded "en convoy" to Peninsula Beach.

Some of the more "dignified" members of the club lost their equilibrium, as well as their dignity, several times, while on the ice. It was quite evident from the expressions of the group, however, that everyone was having a great time.

Skating continued until 10:30, when the rink closed. From the rink the party proceeded to the beach, where they found a warm fire and perfect weather for an evening of this type. Wienies, buns, cheese, marshmallows, coffee, apples and ice cream were enjoyed by all. Songs, sung around thefire, brought to a close a very successful and enjoyable evening.

All essays submitted are to be limited to 100 words with the time limit extended to October 15. All entries should be addressed in care of Dr. Michael Zarchin, Omicron Phi Pi faculty adviser.

Block Show

Another effort to stage a Block "S" variety show will be attempted by some of the society's leading lights, Merv Weiner, Art Nelson and Ray Egelhofer, who have requested all actors, playwrites and songsters to contact them immediately.

ASSEMBLY FETES CONSTITUTION ADOPTION

Commemorating the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the United States Constitution, the college held a patriotic assembly in the Lecture Hall last Friday morning.

John F. Brady, chief deputy superintendent of the city's public schools, was the guest of the day. He praised the assembly program, its content and how it was presented. Brady affirmed his support of the Supreme Court and its right to interpret the constitutionality of laws passed by Congress. Quoting Chief Justice Charles Evans Hughes, Brady said "the Constitution is what the Supreme Court says it is." He stated that in the near future students will be voting on important questions relative to the nation's foremost document. He added that students will not actually vote on measures, but they will vote indirectly by electing congressmen.

President Archibald J. Cloud opened the meeting and introduced James Hughes, political science instructor, who presided at the assembly. Flossita Badger, music instructor, led the group in the singing of "America" and "America, the Beautiful."

Chairman Hughes then introduced the first of three student speakers, Charles Vaughn, who spoke on the birth and growth of the Constitution. Vaughn delved into the past, tracing the events of the document's history to the present time.

A selection by Miss Badger's voice class, "Home On The Range," followed Vaughn's speech and won tremendous applause from the audience. Members of the double quartet were Bob Scott, soloist, and Marjorie Maynard, Greta Holliger, Mary Doren, Oreallia Orsland, Alexander Ross, Wesley Pomeroy, and Richard Nichols.

William Simonds, the second speaker of the day, dealt with the Constitution and American life. Simonds declared that the Constitution reflects both good and bad aspects as do all "things in which humans play a part." He pointed out how the basic law of the land aided in the development of the country.

Morris Rabinowitch was the last student speaker. He spoke about the Constitution and human liberties. He pointed to the civil liberties of freedom of speech, press, and religion, and inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

After Cloud introduced Brady, Hughes, who not only acted as chairman but arranged the program, closed the assembly.

La Verne College Ideal, Says Scafani

Lazy days in the sun. A beautiful campus laid in the paradise of the sunny south. Thirty minutes from Hollywood and the luscious movie queens. No homework. A cinch job after graduation. Three girls to every fellow on the campus. Cool, fragrant southern nights. Such was the rosy picture painted by Tony Scafani, late of this institution, and now chief Northern California representative of La Verne College. After almost two weeks of beautiful elocution in the Ram dressing room, Scafani left empty-handed for the Southland last week. However, accompanying him were Charlie Brickley, George Pedrin, Jack Telesmaniac and Tom Mauer of last year's team.

. . . CLUBS . . .

Student Prexy Given Rush By Music Society

That haste makes waste seems to be an old adage but with the Music Club this saying has been changed to haste makes new members.

Eugene Blumenthal, popular and versatile president, having no intention in the world of joining was given that rush act last Thursday evening, September 16 when he stepped within the portals of Flossita Badger's home where the meeting was being held.

Gene, going for the sole purpose of obtaining a representative from the Music Club for the executive council, was initiated, voted in, and elected secretary in the short time of a half hour. Despite the fact that he didn't have a chance to breathe, Gene proclaims it was one of the most enjoyable evenings he has ever spent.

Community singing always creates a pleasant atmosphere and this was no exception. Thirty-five lusty voices joined in on the good old songs, while the music went round and round. Assisting in the night's entertainment were Rosella Retallic who rendered two selections and Jane Knight who sang a solo number. Both girls were accompanied by that popular alumna Annabelle Tyler. Robert Vincent and Robert Law also shared honors on singing, after which the famous Double Quartet gave forth on "Home on the Range".

Because of the resignation of Robert Law who is leaving college for future fields, members elected the following students as their new leaders: president, Kay Warner; vice-president, Robert Scott; secretary, Gene Blumenthal, and treasurer, George Hoffman.

Omicron Phis To Invite New Honor Students

Plans for initiation of new members into Omicron Phi Pi, economical honor society, are progressing rapidly, and will take place in the near future in one of the down town hotels or leading restaurants.

Applications for membership are being received at the present time, according to reports from the Committee on Acceptance, composed of I. Zangor, Charles Vaughn and Eugene Cramer.

"Again, may I stress the qualifications for membership into Omicron Phi Pi," said President Zangor, "that a B plus average at least is necessary in five units of Economics, and those possessing the requirements are urged to get in touch with Adviser Zarchon or myself."

In regard to inviting other junior colleges throughout the state to organize a charter membership into Omicron Phi Pi, many favorable answers to the letters sent out by the San Francisco Junior College chapter have already been received. Letters sent out to the different schools were worded in the following manner:

San Francisco Junior College undertook to reward students receiving a B plus average in six or more units in Economics. It was decided to organize an economic honor society, Omicron Phi Pi. One of the functions of this recently established order is to hold open discussions on the vital economic problems and issues.

It is for this reason that we are writing you today. We believe that your Honor Society has a place in your excellent school and we are therefore taking the liberty of asking your support in this important matter.

Headquarters for this organization will remain in San Francisco, and we will supply you with the ritual and add the key which is to be kept by the members of this organization, these and other necessary elements, which you will need will be supplied upon receipt of r request from you.

Yours respectfully.
(Signed) I. Zangor, President

Military-Navy Group Meets

Opening this semester's activities with a business meeting the college Army-Navy Club met last Wednesday evening at the home of T. Gordon Sollman, club president. "We are planning an active semester," said Sollman, "and will welcome into our group any students who are eligible. Applicants must have had some ROTC, military, or naval experience, and must secure two sponsors for admittance," he continued. "Those who are interested and think they are eligible see Mr. Marsh or Mr. Hughes, faculty sponsors, or any of the members of the club. Plans were discussed in regard to our initiation ceremonies to be held Wednesday, October 6th," he concluded, "and those entering the club now will soon become full-fledged members."

Some of the events lined up already for this semester, as announced by F. Grant Marsh, are attendance at the launching of a destroyer on Thursday, October 21st, and an assembly, observing Navy Day, that will have a very interesting and entertaining program.

Walter Thompson was elected club secretary to fill the vacancy left by Nick Sutzeff who has gone to school in the East this semester. The other officers are Sollman, president; John Benton, vice president, and George Dieser, treasurer. Thompson, Dieser and Ronald Smith were appointed to the membership investigation committee.

The next meeting of the group will be held at the home of James S. Hughes, 711 19th Avenue, Wednesday evening, September 29th.

Forum To Meet Next Friday

With the United States' peace policy in the Sino-Japanese conflict chosen for discussion, the Forum will meet this Friday night, September 24, at the home of Mary Ann Woody, 1875 California Street, near Gough Street.

John Healy, chairman of the club, declared that all students are welcome, and that anyone interested in the subject should be sure to be present. He added that he thought that the question to be discussed is one of vital concern to all.

Louis Garcia will speak for isolation, Roger Ranck will advocate that the United States take an active part to put an end to the war.

German Society In First Meet

This semester's first meeting of the college German Club was held at the home of Walter Thompson, Monday evening, September 13th. Henry Soule and Annemarie Delfs, faculty sponsors attended, with all of last semester's members.

It was decided to keep the present officers through this semester. They are B. Ostensky, president; Marie Bode, vice president, and Helen Nast, secretary-treasurer.

"We plan to have a general business meeting once a month, and some form of entertainment every two weeks," said Ostensky. "Already, we have planned to see German pictures, have speakers and illustrated lectures on Germany, and have dinners this semester," he continued.

The object of the club is to learn something of the cultural life of Germany. Those who are interested are requested to see Walter Thompson, Marie Bode, or Evelyn Tennis.

Beta Phi Plans To Enlarge

Plans for enlargement and reorganization were discussed at the meeting of the college's Beta Phi fraternity held last Monday evening, according to an announcement by the group's president, Alfred Coffman.

"The new pledges who were selected from among the outstanding members of the entering freshmen class have not been voted upon as yet," Coffman said, "but we will be able to announce their names after our next meeting."

The fraternity is making plans for numerous social events to be held during the coming semester, chief of which is the semi-annual dance to be held late in October.

Several officers from the Alpha chapter of the fraternity from Compton Junior College are visiting the fraternity house on Jackson Street and have expressed complete satisfaction with the local branch.

Recently the organization held its election and besides Coffman as president, chose Bruce Bolton as vice-president, Hugh Waite as secretary and Sylvester McAtee as treasurer.

Iota Chi Gives Welcome Dinner

To acquaint prospective pledges with their organization, Iota Chi, social fraternity, held its welcome dinner last Friday evening. Those present who might become pledges were Norma Grey, Floyd Lawrence, and Charles Bowman.

A short meeting preceding the dinner was presided over by the new mentor of the group, Russ Turber, who is a high sophomore in the college. Jimmy Préovolos is the Secretary-Treasurer of the fraternity.

Turber announced that Iota Chi would hold its initiation for pledges who joined the organization at the last part of the Spring semester, in the near future. He also stated that they are now working on several social events, that will take place later on in the semester.

understand The Editor's apparent lack of interest in criticism. To clarify our position it is necessary to resort to bluntness and say that most condemnation of the paper is ignored because the person who criticizes is usually entirely uninformed as to the true facts of the situation upon which he is passing judgment.

Constructive criticism from an authority will be appreciated and considered, but when the source is merely some chronic moaner it will be completely overlooked.

MASKS UNMASKED

College

Members of Speech 21C group, ably directed by Ruth Jensen of the college drama department, clarify the basic lessons in dramatic art. Above: Lloyd Denfield reveals the contrast between arrogance and humility as outstandingly marked by the head position. Center: Eyes determine the difference, as portrayed by Richard Nichols, between deep exaltation and rigid agony, while they again, with narrowed vision, express scorn in all the churlishness of its mood. Right: Sherman Grant emphasizes mouth and eyes as they combine to separate irrevocably, reverence from contempt. Note the hands and the part they play in the mask.

Speech 21C is listed in the college catalogue as a course in Acting. The course gives training in making characters and plays come to life through a study of complete roles from modern plays. It also consists of lessons in the use of pantomime, voice and diction to depict characters giving inspiration in the use of the imagination, craftsmanship, costuming and make-up.

. . . THE GAMUT OF EMOTIONS . . .

In terms of the theater, college drama students know, the expression of the face is known as The Mask. A responsive mask is essential to a good actor. A face which immediately reflects the mood, and which varies its expression with the changes of idea, emotion, and atmosphere, is, so to speak, a book in which one may read much that cannot be heard. It is possible, with practice and study, to express the whole gamut of emotions by the face alone.

As in portraying ideas and emotions by bodily movement, some semblance of the emotion, at least, must be experienced. This means that the imagination must create a condition of situation so vividly that there will be a stimulus for the reflexes that draw the muscles of the face into the proper posiions to portray whatever emotion is desired. This is preliminary to the actual assumption of the mask for any part an actor plays.

With foundations solidly built, study of the mask soon develops to the ability for dramatic art of a college level. Possibility of the "play being the thing" at San Francisco's round-the-town college looms, as Ruth Jensen works with eager students who help make her classes an integral part of the college.

HOUSEHOLD ARTS GROUP STAGES JAPANESE TEA

Guests To Remove Shoes, Sit On Floor in True Far Eastern Tradition

First in a series of world household studies, a Japanese Tea will be given by HAA members at Adviser Clare Cuneo's home tomorrow. A display of Oriental costumes, textiles and curios will be the initial event. The foreign atmosphere will be further expressed by Gwendolyn Imo and Wada Miyoshi, Japanese students of the college, who will be clad in be-dragoned kimonos of the Far East.

The members will remove their shoes at the door, sit on the floor Japanese fashion, and learn the correct Japanese bow. Tea and rice, cookies and cakes will be served by Gwendolyn and Wada. Some may wonder if the old custom of eating dessert and the main meal afterward will be liked by the young American ladies.

FOOD TALK

"The cooking classes, soon to be admitted to the Association, will like the talk on Japanese food preparations," assures Miss Cuneo.

Following the Japanese event in the series will be a Chinese tiffin. Lillian Anyong, Louise Lym, Lucille Jung and Florence Leung, daughters of China, will be hostesses at this affair. It is undecided as yet whether the tiffin will be held in Chinatown or not.

Plans for a study of European countries have not been completed yet.

TO BE HES

The association will change its name to The Home Economics Society with the admittance of cooking classes. Margaret Dougherty, also of the department, has been invited to share advisership with Miss Cuneo.

"We are looking forward to the tea and know that the colorful Japanese atmosphere will be enjoyed by all our members, especially the new ones," said Miss Orinos, president.

With the approach of the third week in The Guardsman candid camera contest, Sam Gaulstaun, staff photographer and contest director, has announced that students who wish to enter pictures that are of general interest rather than strictly college interest, may do so.

OFFICE HOURS GIVEN

"During the past week," Gaulstaun said, "I have been approached by several students who have asked if they might hand in pictures they have taken of the two bridges and other spots of interest around the city. Because of the proximity of the anniversary of the Bay Bridge, and the great interest in both bridges in connection with the 1939 Exposition, I feel that such pictures would be quite appropriate."

Gaulstaun, whose office hours are from 1:00 to 2:30 on Thursday and Friday in WJ at Galileo, said that students may hand their pictures to him at that time or give them to any member of The Guardsman staff. Because of the importance of printing "news" pictures, it will be impossible to print one of the contest entries every week. However, all those worth printing will appear in the paper.

BID STILL OFFERED

As announced last week, the grand prize in the contest will be a bid to the Sophomore Formal, to be held at the end of the semester. Bob Neal, High Sophomore president, who has made it possible for The Guardsman to offer this prize, has once again stressed the importance of lots of entries.

"A contest doesn't mean a thing," Neal said, "unless there is a great deal of competition. The prize is really worth while trying for and though it may be impossible for us to hold our dance at the California Country Club as originally planned, it is almost certain to be lots of fun no matter where we hold it."

Once more Gaulstaun outlined the rules of the contest and said that each student may submit as many pictures as he wishes.

"Pictures may be of any size," he said, "for they will be enlarged to suit the purpose for which they are to be used. All pictures submitted automatically become the property of The Guardsman and none will be returned."

CAL PROF WILL SPEAK THURS.

To discuss the opportunities open to women in the field of dental hygiene, Harriet Fitzgerald, Berkeley dental hygienist and instructor at the University of California, will speak at the Galileo Little Theater tomorrow. All college women are invited to attend the lecture. Dental hygiene is a comparatively recent profession, the field is not over-crowded, and it offers a good opportunity for a career. It requires a junior college course of two years and when completed equips the student for work in a dental office, school clinics, or private practice.

"We are fortunate indeed in securing Miss Fitzgerald to speak to us," declared Laurine Bergin, junior college hygiene instructor. "She is young and successful and I especially urge women who have not yet chosen their profession to come as I know they will enjoy her talk."

Woe Is You; The Cinches Are Out

Students poor in academic work will be reminded of the fact at approximately six weeks intervals. The first notice is sent to the parent of all entering students. The subsequent notices will be sent directly to the student, the registrar's office announced.

D grades, which indicate poor work, Inc. grades, which show that work has not been finished, and F grade, which is failure, will all promote written reminders.

Mid-term reports will leave the Registrar's office tomorrow and Friday.

Student Leaders Journey To Promote Friendship

Journeying north to Marin Junior College, as messengers of good will, a small band of hearty souls invaded the Mariner's campus to attend their pre-game rally last Thursday, September 23. The group, composed of Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, Gene Blumenthal, president of the Associated Students, Allen Williams, head yell leader, Stan Adams, assistant yell leader, Lorraine Hoffmeyer, secretary of the Associated Students, "Duke" Worsham, honorary captain of the football team for the Marin game, Don Mills, president of the AMS, and Bob MacArthur, representative of The Guardsman, was greeted by Tom Barbour, Marin's student president, and escorted to the rally.

The first speaker, "Scoop" Carlson, head football coach at Marin, bewailed the loss of some of his stalwarts, who, becoming embroiled in an altercation with Santa Rosa's raiders, ended up either in jail or in the hospital. He hoped, however, for a victory by Marin, but added that in the event they lost, he wouldn't be surprised if Joe Guedet, star end for the Rams, whom he described as a "bundle of dynamite," had considerable to do with the defeat.

Marin's cheer leader then turned the rally over to Allen Williams, who said that he was sorry that Marin had lost some of its players. Williams led the audience in a few yells, and then introduced Gene Blumenthal.

Blumenthal lauded the Mariners for their spirit, and hoped for a close game. He outlined some of the difficulties with which the San Francisco team had to cope in its practice sessions, drawing quite a laugh in describing the distance the team had to go to its practice field. Blumenthal then called on Dean Browne to say a few words.

Browne, noted for his dry wit, sent the audience into gales of laughter with his poker-faced description of the San Francisco football team's indirect method of practice. "Yes, Gene's right," said Browne, "we have to go about seven miles to our practice field, we coach by telephone, and we mail our signals. Our boys have to raise money to buy their uniforms, and we just hope they come on the field with a homogeneous collection of football attire. Seriously, however, although I have a warm spot in my heart for Marin, having got my first teaching job under your president, Mr. Olney, I look for a good game tomorrow night, and I hope we win."

Lorraine Hoffmeyer, who invited all the Marin students to attend the San Francisco rally the following afternoon, and "Duke" Worsham, who praised the Ram varsity and hoped for a close game, were the next speakers. Worsham was tendered a nice ovation, as Williams led the assembly in a "big six" for the Duke.

Blumenthal reappeared in the role of a crooner, and came in for his share of the applause, with a fine rendition of "Stardust," coming back with "Where or When" as an encore.

The San Franciscans' part in the rally was brought to a close by Williams, who again urged all the Mariners to attend the San Francisco rally.

FACULTY GROUP PLAN MEETING

Featuring social and educational business, the first fall meeting of the Faculty Association will be held in the New Marina Junior High School Cafeteria, which is under the direction of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division of the college, Tuesday, October 5, at 6 o'clock.

President A. J. Cloud will give an address on the subject of "The Faculty and the Curriculum." Harold Leuenberger, instructor of psychology, will follow with a summary of his two years of research concerning the college student body. The executive committee is planning to organize a long range program of curriculum development. This plan is based on a thorough study of the student body and a survey of the vocational opportunities and life interests existing around the college. The curriculum problem will be suggested in President Cloud's address.

Seventeen new instructors who have recently joined the college faculty are to be welcomed by the Faculty Association. They are: William R. Adams, Herbert Blunck, Margaret Brennan, Leo Cain, Minna Day, Chester W. Clark, Henry Doble, John R. Herman, Hugh K. McKevitt, Charles H. McKiernan, Edward H. Redford, Charles Strandberg, Stephen Tomer, Marion E. Turner, Mrs. H. L. Watson, Nelson A. Wells, and Thomas F. O'Neill.

Possibility Of Game In Idaho November 25

Financial Problem Is Chief Obstacle To Proposed Trip

Possibility that the college football team will go north next Thanksgiving Day to play Ricks College of Idaho was voiced by Head Football Coach Russ Sweet in an interview with a Guardsman reporter last Friday. Definite arrangements have not been made as yet, but Sweet said that he was quite sure that plans for the trip could be facilitated.

The authorities of the Idaho institution contacted the local administration on the possibility of the inter-sectional contest and guaranteed to pay partial expenses for the San Francisco squad if an agreement for a series of home and home games could be arranged.

"The contest would come a week and a half after the close of our regular conference season, and would be a fitting reward for the players," Sweet said. "I feel positive that the boys will come through the season in fine style, and a game with one of the leading northwest junior colleges would be certainly worthwhile."

Both the football team and student body showed enthusiasm over the possibility of the game, and the college executive council voted approval of the idea.

The only apparent hitch in the arrangements is the problem of financing the trip. It is impossible to set any exact amount as to the total expenses of the Idaho jaunt, but the most optimistic estimates place the cost close to a thousand dollars.

"Definite announcement of the plans will be made next week," Sweet said, "but if we find that we cannot finance this trip we will try to arrange a game nearer home for Thanksgiving Day."

Modern Opinions Of Japanese Discussed

"The Younger Japanese generation is definitely moving toward the modern trend in abolishing age-old customs," was the opinion of Dr. Hubert Philips, world traveler and instructor in history at Fresno State College. Speaking before an assembled group of students and instructors in the Lecture Hall at Powell Street, Friday morning, Dr. Philips said that the younger generation is becoming more westernized and that it is actually alarming the older generation of Japanese. Dr. Philips was a delegate to a world peace conference, held at Imperial University, Tokyo.

An example of the new western attitude of the younger generation was cited by the speaker, as the case of the Premier's son, a student at Princeton University, who had arrived in Japan for a summer vacation. Queried by newspapermen regarding his father's opening speech before the Diet, he replied that he did not particularly like the speech, but it was probably as good as he could have done.

"The Japanese are attempting to improve in stature by adhering to three principles," stated Philips, "plenty of milk, a well balanced diet and participation in calisthenics. Especially is the latter emphasized, and it is a common sight to see school children, and grown ups as well, up early in the mornings going through calisthentic drills."

Concerning the present war, Philips pointed simply to the wiseness of the Japanese in certain respects. "The government was very clever in that it is drafting men differently than that of the World War. Instead of taking younger men first, ten per cent of each age group was drafted. The second point is in the method of financing. When the family provider is called to war, his employer is forced to keep on paying his wages to his family."

Ex-Guardsman Head Employed By 'News'

William Rawson, former editor of The Guardsman, is now employed by the San Francisco News. Graduated from the college last fall, Rawson was editor of the college paper for one year, Spring-Fall, 1936. He was also head of the staff which published the first San Francisco Junior College annual.

FIRST MEET OF PEACE COUNCIL SET FOR TODAY

Official Representatives of College Groups Urged To Aid in Organization

Meeting in Room 301 in the Extension Building, 540 Powell Street, club delegates and interested individuals will organize a college peace council at 1 o'clock today.

Official representatives of college organizations will be excused from their one o'clock classes in order to attend the confab. Judging by responses from college groups and from the student body as a whole today's gathering should be a great success, according to Ray Valdez and Fred Vast, organizers of the council.

BUSINESS OF MEETING

Gertrude Bolton, William Goss and John Ross, social science department instructors, are the faculty sponsors for the organization. Setting up of the council has been urged ever since last semester's peace rally, when a resolution to that effect was passed unanimously by the assembled students.

The meeting today is the first one of the council and will be occupied with organization problems. Officers are to be elected and a proposed constitution and by-laws adopted. Object, membership qualifications, plan of work and matters of similar nature will be discussed.

COMMITTEE'S STATEMENT

"We are happy to see such an enthusiastic response from the student body," the provisional committee composed of Miss Bolton, Goss, Ross, Valdez, and Vast, declared, "and are certain that the peace council will become one of the most active and important organizations in the college. Peace is something that concerns all of us and should find the college united in activity for peace. The peace council is the embodiment of all this."

The committee urged all students, not representing a group but interested, to attend this afternoon's meeting.

RESOLUTIONS REPEATED

The following resolutions are reprinted from last week's issue of The Guardsman:

"WHEREAS, an effective student movement for peace should be conducted by a group officially designated for that purpose by the students themselves, and,

"WHEREAS, the student peace campaign should be a continuous one, therefore be it

"RESOLVED, that the student executive council establish and sponsor a peace council, comprised of representatives from every college organization and interested individuals, whose chief purpose will be the education of the students of this college in the methods of establishing peace and carry on activity for peace."

Radio Course 51A Now At Gompers

Radio 51A, the latest addition to the courses given at the college, is one of the most interesting and valuable courses of that line to be introduced, its enrollees believe. Heretofore courses of that type were specifically taught in theoretical form, and not enough of the practical knowledge was gained, thus, the student had to gain the actual knowledge in radio engineering schools. Because of the expense involved in attending these technical schools, many were financially unable to bear the cost, and consequently could not make provisions for that type of career.

As a result of their foresight, school authorities were able to alleviate such conditions by introducing a radio course in the college, enabling the student to study the real inside workings of radio, without having to acquire that knowledge elsewhere. It is possible in Radio 51A, under the supervision of Lowell M. Hollingsworth, to learn both sides of radio, for one hour of theory is given daily in the class room, and the remainder of the time left to radio construction.

Class instructions are held at Samuel Gompers Trade School, located at 22nd and Bartlet Streets. Operated as a night school as well as day, it has a large enrollment, and as a result no expense has been spared in the purchase of equipment. All radio equip-

IT'S NO CINCH

The first mid-term period is over, and soon those obnoxious notes of despair, the "cinch notices" will be disturbing the tranquility of our home life. All are aware of the implication of the term "Cinch," it implies that you are a cinch to fail. But it is wise to warn new students of the fallacy of accepting too literal a translation of this bit of collegiate vernacular.

Upon receipt of one of these warnings, there is no point in tearing out your hair and bemoaning that the inevitable spectre of an "F" is dogging your heels. In nine cases out of ten, freshmen receiving "cinches" do so because they have not yet completely orientated themselves with the strict application to study that is necessary in college work. By applying more time and effort to the books, you will find that it's not really so difficult to make a fine finish despite a somewhat dubious start.

To those students who have achieved the distinction of being styled as Old Timers, cinch notices do not usually have the effect of causing any great mental anguish. They accept the warning with a philosophical calmness, and if they are inclined toward the scholarly nature they will resolve to get back to the ranks of safety at once. There are always a few who will try to laugh off the seriousness of the "cinches" and continue on the paths of indolence . . . but these people don't really make much difference.

THREE'S A CROWD

In the recent mid-term examinations, most of the students of the college experienced the uncomfortable situation of having to take as many as three and four tests in one day. One student reports that he started taking the mid-term quizzes at eight o'clock one morning and worked through until one o'clock in the afternoon without a respite.

A situation of this nature offers a legitimate ground for discontent on the part of the student, because it is certainly true that it is impossible for him to do his best work when he is examined concerning several widely diversified subjects within the space of a few hours. It would be silly for the instructors to offer the objection that if you have studied diligently all semester you need make no special preparations for the mid-term examination. This is obviously not so, because the very nature of a test entails a review of material covered in the weeks of lecture, and to be adequately prepared, it is essential to go over all the salient points in notes and text book a day or so before taking the examination. When one is forced to take three and four examinations in the same day it requires the capacity of a mental Atlas to be able to carry facts concerning English Literature, Latin, Biology and Philosophy, and to be able to do his ultimate best with each subject. The present arrangement robs the college student of his maximum efficiency, and since the mid-term marks are so vital a factor in the determination of final grades, the grade that he does receive is not representative of his true ability.

The complex arrangement of classes makes it practically impossible to prevent this doubling up process from constantly occurring, but the application of a little leniency could rectify extreme cases. The average student can handle two examinations comfortably in the same day, but three are definitely a crowd. It seems that it would be possible to make arrangements whereby a student could be able to take an examination on the following day, in the manner of the present "make-up" quizzes, if he could show that he already was scheduled to take two tests on the same day. Such action would have to originate with the administration but it seems that they would offer no objection to a plan that would help the student to get more out of his education.

INTELLIGENSIA

In our magazines and newspapers one is constantly reading about the opinions of the intelligensia. To most of us this word conjures a mind-picture of a bespectacled old gent, seated in a huge library and poring over impressive looking volumes, and occasionally calling together several other of this same tribe to give a momentous verdict on one of mankind's activities. With a little consideration, you are able to arrive at a more accurate description of those who go by that name. You might generalize and say that it includes all those people who are—or who have pretentions to being—intellectual, and further, who hate the class which includes all those, intellectual or otherwise, who by their own brains and brawn have succeeded in obtaining wealth and position for themselves.

Or you might think intellectuals are those with a complex in the form of a morbid dread of going down into the competitive arena of life and fighting it out with their fellow men. These people would naturally seek the sheltered points of vantage such as the rostrum, the pulpit, the editorial

The accepted pattern for the college date
Demands that the lad be just a little late.
The girl, of course, is just a little later,
Which trains the boy to be a first class wait-er.
He treats her to a show and a coke or two
And then, perhaps, they pitch a little woo.
He gets her home early (if he's got enough gas)
And studies all night for an eight o'clock class.
Such is life and love on the old campi,
Where guy meets girl and girl meets guy,
The whole darn business may only be a rumor,
We only know what we've read in College Humor.

That blissful look on the faces of members of The Guardsman Editorial Staff does not signify that all goes well in the copy department. It does, however, denote the removal from WJ of one batch of hockey sticks, one set of A Capella Choir robes, and one very messy mimeograph machine, which means that our office is practically our own. Alas, even the very best soup must sometimes have a fly in it and our "fly" is the group of "pals" who clutter up the office during our busiest moments, destroying all possible concentration. Darn it, we all like them but business is business, and fun or no fun the paper must come out. Consequently, on behalf of the entire staff, we'd like to make this appeal:

WJ is primarily a newspaper office. It is the only place in the college where The Guardsman staff can do its work. We are only too happy to have visitors on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, but, please, for the good of the paper, the college, the United States, Canada, Alaska and Way Points, stay as far away as you can on Thursdays and Fridays. We hate to get tough and start locking the door, but from now on, Thursday and Friday are "Keep Out" days, and the office will be open to Guardsman staff members only.

We always get a bang out of seeing recent Rams come back and visit and somehow or other most of them manage to find their way to The Guardsman office. Lamby Meyer, last semester's Sports Editor stops in about once a week on his trek from noosepaper office to noosepaper office so he might be a step or two out of the visitor's class but not so Bill "Blubber-Something" Schoenfeld who breezed in one day between classes at Cal. And the other day we really hit a jack-pot with Hoiman Hextrum, Ernie Antrobus and Monte Mordecai all dropping at the same time. Talk about old home week!

Freshmen gleefully battled the reticent sophomores to a standstill in the annual brawl and were awarded a tie. The miserable turn-out of sophs, caused that class to recruit women students to win a six-legged race. The female of the specie is more dead. (ly)

The first rally of the semester was held in honor of the Ram's victory over the St. Mary's College Frosh.

A monster sale of a variety of unclaimed articles from the Lost and Found Office, was held in front of the book store. Women's possessions proved to be the most humerous. Proving what?

Do you wonder what's become of prominent women students who have graduated or left school? About everyone does, so here are a few facts about the well-known co-eds of past terms: Ruth Johnson, who used to be perennial WAA president and Service Society officer, is attending Cal. . . . Helen Davis, last semester's Associated Students vice-president, is visiting in Connecticut . . . the famous Mimi Colton, now almost a campus legend, is assistant registrar at San Mateo Junior College. . . . Pat Madden is attending State. . . . Elaine Dominguez, last semester's AWS president, is a state civil service employee in Sacramento. . . . So now you know.

Have you noticed how everyone has deserted tight, rolled-up hairstyle, for loose, fluffy curls, and finds the latter much more becoming . . . that breezy-looking co-ed who rolls up a lock of her hair into a single small, tight roll smack in the middle of her forehead, and pins a large white pique bow behind it? Looks like something out of a Silly Symphony. . . . the number of leisurely students who have just decided to enter college, and who look bewildered in class . . . and the swell sun-tan sported by Gerry Orignos, among others . . . she goes in for dusty-pink linen these warm September days.

This week being unexpectedly dull, we can only remind you to visit the swank AWS social and study hall and adjacent patio, which hall was recently equipped with a brace of book lockers. Seems as if the busy officers of the organization are always doing something to improve their little retreat, and incidentally to help all the co-eds who go to classes at Powell Street. Cheers for their consideration.

If you are a member of the Household Arts Association (pardon, the Home Economics Society), don't forget the formal Japanese tea on September 30. HES officers are planning to make it one of the major events on anybody's social calendar, so plan to attend.

Since Maestro Leopold Stokowski traveled west to Hollywood in seemingly artistic and financial success, his art has taken on a rougher nature and a more popular guise. All of which shows that success may sometimes go to the heart as well as the head, and we feel that Mr. Stokowski has gone the "way of all flesh." In his latest cinema, "One Hundred Men and a Girl," one sensed that the great American art center, that was Philadelphia with Mr. Stokowski, has moved, in his company, to the picture colony and been glorified.

Ten years ago, Leopold Stokowski was one of the most advanced conductors in the United States, and a man of inestimable genius as, witness, his wonderful transcriptions of the music of Bach for modern symphony orchestra. Two years ago, Mr. Stokowski conducted the famed Philadelphia orchestra and gave three of the most remarkable concerts ever heard in San Francisco. He then proceeded south with his orchestra and participated in a picture titled "The Big Broadcast of 1937" which, incidentally, pseudo-starred Martha Raye and Jack Benny in the company of some amazing wits.

In such company and atmosphere, is it any wonder that Mr. Stokowski's art has taken a nose-dive into the sands of Malibu Beach and adjoining vicinity. In this present picture in which he co-stars with Deanna Durbin, it is quite evident that he is the fair-haired boy of Hollywood — and the prodigal son of Philadelphia, we hope. It is regrettable that one's hearing could be attuned to the rattle of silver as well as the sound of music.

The College Players open their fall season at the University of San Francisco Little Theater, when James J. Gill directs the group in the recent Broadway battle-saga, "Men Must Fight," October 13, 14 and 15.

The play, to quote a letter received from the College Players of the University of San Francisco, is "authored by Reginald Lawrence and S. K. Laurens, depicts the division of a family when the son jeopardizes the position of his father by refusing to fight in what he considers a useless war. The scene, set in 1940, includes war-fevered rabble coming to grips with fanatical peace propagandists in what New York critics considered one of the most stirring problem plays of recent years.

"Virginia Kelly, who appeared with Marjorie Rambeau's 'Story To Be Whispered' company here recently, enacts the difficult role of Manaa, of the famous political Seward family. Al. Maggini, Louis B. Peradetto, Geraldine Amos, Jack Hargan, and N. Anthony Hammersly are the returning veterans. Alma Hightman, who starred in a San Francisco production of 'Ladies of the Jury' is cast in a prominent role.

"Unusual lighting and sound effects feature the second act, in which war fever reaches its peak, and the turbulent course of Robert Seward's hectic romance with charming Peggy Chase comes to its surprising climax."

Rebuttal:

With the setting in of autumn, and the arrival of the cool, brisk, windy days, so characteristic of San Francisco weather, we always find ourself going off the deep end into a reverie, concerning the nation's greatest pastime and madness. When the insanity that is football sweeps the country, and fleet-footed, fancy stepping halfbacks steal the headlines from such auspicious personages as European dictators, and supreme court justices, we grin inwardly at the vision of everything being serene, and to our liking. We find, as we suddenly awaken from our introspections concerning our favorite sport, that we're forced to delve into something relatively unpalatable, but which cannot be passed over unanswered.

For once again, those college students who have too much reserve ever really to enjoy watching a football game, who probably never support student activities, and who refuse to enthuse over anyone but themselves, have returned to offer their criticisms and insults about the executive council and its method of procedure.

This is the vicious practice inaugurated in the earliest days of the college's existence, and which has managed to be sustained throughout the years. Definitely, a malignant growth, the baiting of the executive council by means of adverse, destructive criticism, is something we hadn't entirely anticipated. And, as in debating, we'll do our share to refute some of the aspersions cast upon us.

Much of the criticism heaped on us is not without foundation, or entirely unjustified. We, as a group, undoubtedly have faults, and we recognize many of them. On the other hand, however, it is easily perceived that the present council is a decided improvement over previous councils. Things have moved with quickness and precision, and decidedly more smoothly than ever before.

We do not resent constructive criticism; rather we welcome it. As for criticism of a destructive nature, it is definitely out!

If those persons who criticize us were really cogent observers, they would point out that while progress has and is being made, further councils should seek even further to build upon the groundwork already laid.

Answering to the charges of bickering over matters unimportant, is not easy. In this respect, we are forced to admit that procrastinating, dilatory tactics have been used freely. Some of us, as yet, have not gained the proper perspective. Recently we were severely, and yet intelligently, criticized for our handling of a petty argument in the council, undoubtedly because of that which we have just mentioned.

As a general rule we endeavor at all times to promote a free and full discussion. And rightly so, for the executive council handles all affairs of the college, whether important or otherwise.

With the passing of time, all petty difficulties will be settled. More than ever we'll find that all of the members comprising the council have been working for the benefit of the college first of all. Most certainly, this semester will mark a definite step in achievement.

To those persons who persist in criticising, we point out that talk flows easily. The thing for them to remember is . . . we always pay off on results.

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

It is always interesting to us to contemplate the differences which exist between human beings; the physical characteristics, the mental variances, in short, everything which tends to raise men to the status of individuals. Differences of opinion between men have very likely been largely responsible for some of the greatest achievements of the human race. If Columbus had not doubted the, at that time, general contention that the world was flat he probably would not have been so eager to sail across an uncharted sea and, subsequently, discover a new continent. If Brutus and Cassius had seen eye to eye with Julius Caesar, it is probable that the history of the world and of the Roman Empire, in particular, would read considerably different.

Coupled with, and relative to, this ability or capacity for differing with his fellows is another privilege man has enjoyed, namely, that of doubting anything and everything, either in relation to its importance or as to its very existence in the world about him. It is one of the birthrights of mankind, this ability to question, doubt, or voice a dissenting opinion on a hypothesis, advanced by someone else.

One man in the history of philosophic thought even carried scepticism so far as to doubt his own existence, only to end up by having to admit that by his very ability to doubt his own existence, was he proving that same existence. (Rene Descartes, 1596-1650.)

There is no reason to suppose, on the basis of what has been said, that merely doubting or questioning the veracity of a thing will establish an irrefutable proof, either of its truth or falsity, for on the very definition of the word proof hangs a question. Is it possible to prove ANYTHING, to everyone's satisfaction? There we must end, for we are at loggerheads with ourselves. By asking if doubt will bring out a proof and then, doubting the possibility of proving, we have come to a blank wall. Well, we're glad that we settled that.

Dropping our role of amateur philosopher, and allowing our thoughts to take a more pleasant turn, we wish to present, in response to many requests for a "dirt column," a sample of such. If this bit meets with your approval, write a letter to the Ram's Horn, enclosing sixty-six cents' worth of Muny car tickets, and we'll write a whole column of it next week.

Joe Glumpf and Josie Blumpf, it is rumored, have pf-ft. We hope they didn't hurt themselves.

Word is going around that Abigail M—— is too, too swooningly that-a-way about somebody, or somethin'. I betcha!

Moe Pesquat and Tooty Snooty, it is rumored, have pf-ft. Say that must be fun, everybody's doing it.

It is whispered that, that large athletic looking darling, who is squring Helen Droopsy around, likes pick-ups. He probably smokes them too.

"Fat" Bhoy and his latest heart throb were seen dancing at the Palace the other night. Wonder where he got the dough? He's a heel, I mean, he must be heeled.

Charley Horss and Jane De Vorss, it is rumored, have pf-ft. Migawd, them too. Tsk, tsk!

Wasn't that swell? Didn't you like it? Neither do we.

GRIDIRON GRUMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

At least one distinctive feature is possessed by the Ram grid squad: that is its coach. At a time when the air is filled with moans and groans and the stricken wails of mournful mentors resound throughout the land, Russ Sweet quietly proceeds about his task of building up a football team. Never once has he given voice to the dire predictions of disaster which it is the wont of so many coaches to spread abroad in September. If the squad comes through, well and good; if not, well, as the ditty has it, "Tomorrow Is Another Day." In a world which seems full of chronic pessimists, it is refreshing to discover someone who is not doing his best to alibi in advance.

* * * * *

Jerry Flamm seems finally to have discovered the position on the football field to which he is best adapted. His brilliant work as umpire (or was it time-keeper?) during last week's game between the "goofs" of Lowell and Galileo high schools has caused much discussion of him as a possible successor to Herb Dana. Despite the fact that he had no watch and had to keep running to the sidelines to find out the time, Jerry managed to do nothing more gracefully than any official we have seen this season.

* * * * *

Perhaps Dave Smith, ex-Ram boxer, isn't going to become a world's champion after all. Immediately after our mention last week of his victory, he proceeded to receipt for a pasting from some fourth-rate preliminary fighter in Oakland. The professional prize-fight game is far from an easy road to health, wealth, and happiness, as some of the slap-happy old-timers on Howard Street will bear witness.

* * * * *

Despite the fact that Duke Worsham is supposed to be well on the road to complete recovery, it gives us the willies to see him working out in a football suit and still wearing a brace on his neck. All the luck in the world, Duke, but don't take any chances.

* * * * *

The switching of Merv Weiner from the backfield to a tackle position proved to be a veritable stroke of genius on the part of Russ Sweet. Weiner has more than come up to expectations in his new position, where he has been turning in some really smashing performances.

* * * * *

It was just a year ago at this time, if memory serves us correctly, that Ken Pasqualette, candidate for guard on this year's Ram grid squad, was sporting a full-fledged beaver (beard to the uninitiated). The virile Pasqualette has but to go without shaving for three days in a row, and his visage becomes completely obscured behind a bush of foliage.

FLASHES

By JERRY FLAMM

Every football season is replete with "blarney" stories that a good percentage of the periodical readers eat up. You read about Joe Snodgrass playing an amazing game for good ol' Sandusky Tech despite the handicap of five crushed ribs, two broken arms, and corns. Or about "Speed" Schmaltz, the All-American half at Spring Valley U., who just loves the little kiddies in his block. These tear-jerking accounts do no particular harm, satisfy the grid addicts who add up columns of dull figures all week, and help fill scrap-books which can later be displayed to show how Uncle Louie used to boom through eight-man lines.

Personally, we do not like to add fuel to this fire, but there is one fellow on the Ram football squad who has yet to receive his just due. He was a regular last year and would have been in the ball game Friday night if it were not for an injury which occurred in the first week of practice. He is, of course, Duke Worsham, varsity center. Duke would rather play football than eat. He is a coach's player. He talks, walks, and sleeps football. You probably have seen him about school. He is the pleasant-looking, affable kid with the steel-hoop about his neck who has to do a ninety-degree turn to see who is tapping him on the shoulder. Duke cracked a vertebrae in his neck at the top of the spinal column, an injury that could have been fatal if chance had decreed so. Well, Coach Russ Sweet's hardest job this term has been to keep the Duke out of scrimmage. He is not supposed to even have a suit on, but you have to see the crazy Duke out there in Funston Field with full uniform running around with his chin-elevator, to believe it. He fervidly declares that he is going to play in the State game, Oct. 8. The medical men say two weeks more, so perhaps Duke is right. However, we hope that these same medical men are sure of their ground before they give the "go" signal. Duke is too good a guy to risk.

Some discussion has been heard concerning the merits of little Johnny Verducci, varsity quarterback. That "Verdooch" is the shiftiest ball carrier on the club is a known fact. You have only to see him zip through a small hole in the center of the line, and then go to town "right up the alley" cutting figure-eights around the secondary, to realize that. However, some have expressed doubt as to his other capacities, citing his size as a basis. Let it here be said idiomatically, that "they are all wet." Johnny can quarterback for our money any day. He is a cool, heady leader. He packs a solid, well-knit structure on his small frame, much like Lee Eisan. Because of his speed and elusiveness, he is a threat every minute he is in the ball game. He is a marvelous punt returner. As for his blocking, he is a "definite blocker." He doesn't fall down and expect somebody to trip over him. When he is sure of his contact object, "Verdooch" goes out to meet it—hard! Watch him!

SWEET'S PAST

The other day there was a discussion overheard at a downtown club about the 1928 East-West game. That year the East was supposed to have some of the fastest men to ever put on football suits.

"Well, this guy Sweet just ran away from them," said the speaker. "He made them look foolish. I'll bet that he is just about the fastest man that ever put cleats on." To this some of the wiser grid followers nodded assent. "This Sweet guy" is the same fellow now coaching the Rams.

Russ, running on the American 440 yard relay team in the British-American Meet at Chicago in 1930 in company with George Simpson, "Texas" Leland, and Eddie Tolan, broke the world record for that event. In 1928 at Kezar Stadium, running for the local Olympic Club in the P.A.A. Championships, he won the 100 yard dash in the world record time of 9.5 seconds, upsetting the famed "Hec" Dyer of Stanford. Yes, Russ was quite a boy.

The local talent on the football squad have been gnashing their teeth and joining secret terrorist societies since the season began. The cause, of course, is the handsome, manly group of young lads that have come here from the East Bay. With this posse of beautiful young manhood about, the hard-looking locals cannot get to first base with the femmes. Elwood Pearce, Wes Olsen, Woody Lennes, Stan Beirwidth, Jack Heaslett, Simms Hamilton, Jack De Fosse, and Al McDonald are the nucleus of the group which draws the glances of the fair sex. Mutiny is afoot, comrades!

Moleskin Moe Says:

Coach Russ Sweet wants to avenge that 2-0 defeat by State last season more than anything else. Every time he rides by Roberts Stadium, he gets sick . . . The Ram coaching staff represents a reversion of football systems. . . . Russ Sweet uses the Warner System mainly with a touch of Notre Dame and Slippery Rock. . . . "Dutch" Conlan is a Notre Dame system pupil. . . . Lee Eisan learned his football from Nibs Price, who used the Michigan punt, pass, and prayer system at California . . . and Jack Gaddy learned his formations from Jimmy Needles at U. S. F. . . . San Mateo, from all reports, is going to be one big headache to our boys . . . some guys never learn. They insist on starring in "dummy" scrimmage at practice. These "cream-puff All-Americans" usually have to deposit a nickel to pay for the ride they get, when the scrimmage actually starts . . . a local daily recently mentioned the names of true football immortals of St. Mary's College. Placed in front of the very few names such as Franklin, Strader and Bettencourt, was "Conlan." Yep, that's our quiet professor of Jurisprudence who quarterbacked some of the greatest Madigan teams in the late '20's. . . . Bill Phelan, pivot-man on last term's basketball five and counted upon for next term's team by Coach Conlan, has dropped out of school. . . . "Truck-On-Down" Fassler of the football men, was an All-City basketball player at Mission High in 1935 . . . that tackle problem on the varsity has been considerably improved by the come-through performance of Merv Weiner to team up with Will Dolman, and the prospects of a new comer, Stan Beirwidth. . . . Joe Guedet thought he was on a merry-go-round at practice, when on an end run someone thought a ball was loose and kicked it. It turned out to be Joe's head. . . . Ed Canepa returned to the squad in the game against Mission, wary of an injured knee. However, he did not injure it again. This time the other one was wrecked.

Members of the soccer team, shown in a work-out just before their sensational defeat of San Mateo last Saturday. Maxie Lim, halfback, is shown giving the ball a clout with his noggin while, above, Mike Klebanoff makes use of a more conventional means of propulsion. U. S. F. Frosh Clash With Rams; Exact Date Uncertain

FLASH! The U. S. F.-S. F. J. C. game will be played Friday night at Seals' Stadium.

In their second major battle of the season, Coach Russ Sweet's Rambling Rams collide with the University of San Francisco Frosh next Saturday afternoon at the Hilltoppers' field. The Donlets are reported to boast an exceptionally strong squad, one which threatens seriously the unbeaten record of the Powell Streeters.

There is, as The Guardsman goes to press, a report that the game may be switched to Friday night, to prevent it from conflicting with the U. S. F.-Daniel Baker game on Saturday afternoon. However, there has been no definite change as yet, and Saturday stands as the official date.

Reputed to possess a dazzling array of gridiron talent, the Don freshmen will also be striving to preserve a clean slate. No defeats have been registered against them so far this season, and they hold a 7-0 victory over a supposedly strong eleven from Santa Rosa Junior College, scored last Friday night at the latter's field.

Johnstone Threat

Expected to be one of the big guns in the Frosh attack is Sammy Johnstone, who last year was a unanimous selection for the mythical "all-city" team, while playing quarterback for Polytechnic High. Possessed of blazing speed, Johnstone will probably perform as safety man for the Donlets. A shifty runner, he is likely to break away at any moment, and will bear plenty of watching.

Others likely to cause considerable trouble for Russ Sweet's aggregation are Atwill and Hanrahan, halfbacks, who have been shining both on offense and defense for the Green and Gold squad. The former is a line-plunger of no mean ability, and was responsible for the only tally in the Santa Rosa game. Hanrahan, besides being a deadly tackler, is depended upon to fulfill the place-kicking assignment, being especially adept at booting the oval between the uprights. His aptitude at this task gives the Hilltoppers an edge over the Rams, who can boast of no dependable booter to make good conversions or field goals.

Three deep in most positions, with a fairly heavy and fast-charging line, the team from the fog belt may well prove a stumbling block to the Red and White gridders, although, after what transpired at Kentfield last Friday night, the latter must be conceded a slight edge.

The starting line-up for the Jaysees will, in all likelihood, be the same as it was for the Marin game. It is not believed that Duke Worsham, pivot man who, has been out with an injured vertebrae, will be in shape for the fray, although it is predicted that he will see action later in the season. Johnny Verducci, after his sparkling performance at Marin, is more firmly entrenched than ever in the quarterback spot, and the rest of the team will probably remain intact; Pearce, Guedet, Dolman, Weiner, Osborne, Burke, and DeFosse in the line, and Egelhofer, Verducci, Olson, and McDonald in the backfield. There is a possibility that Bob Fex may start the contest.

Ram Soccermen Nip Favored San Mateo Team By 2 to 1 Win

Getting a flying start on the rest of the league, the Rambunctious Ram Shin Scarers upset the old dope bucket by winning an uphill battle from the highly favored San Mateo eleven, last Saturday at San Mateo. The boys carrying the Red and White colors downed their tough rivals by the score of 2 to 1 under a burning sun. But the sun wasn't the only thing that was burning, because before the game everybody conceded the Bulldogs the victory, that is everybody but the Ram team.

Trailing one to nothing at the half, the Wilsonmen hadn't given up the fight yet. With 7 minutes to go the score was still the same and the situation began to look pretty hopeless, but the boys from Powell Street suddenly decided that they hadn't gone all the way down to San Mateo, to play under a blistering sun for nothing so they proceeded to bank through two tallies in just that many minutes.

Leo Johnson bagged the brace of goals in quick order, and the poor Bulldog was so shocked that he remained tame in the closing minutes. The night before the game, an unexpected ruling made Lucca, first string Ram forward, ineligible. Lucca had transferred from San Mateo Junior College, and according to the league regulations, he must remain in the school to which he transfers six months before he can compete on a varsity team. His loss was quite a blow to the team, but instead of lowering their spirits, it only served to make them fight harder.

In scoring the two tallies, the whole forward line virtually swarmed over the Bulldog defense, with Klebanoff and Fahn getting the assists. "Sandy" Lim, who had been playing in the forward line at the start of the current season, was switched to center-half, the key defensive position on the team, and proved his versatility by staving off the San Mateo attack time and time again.

In the backfield, Vince Zuardo and Bill Flynn, a couple of rugged fullbacks, played a knock down and drag out type of game to hold the Bulldogs at bay. Fisher, one of the newest members of Wilson's squad, turned in the best bit of goal guarding shown by the Ram aggregation this season.

The victory over the strong San Mateo outfit, establishes the Rams as a definite threat in the conference race, and if their luck holds out, perhaps they will be the first team in the history of the institution to annex a title two years running.

Coach Tom Wilson was more than pleased with the victory, but he isn't completely satisfied with the boys' playing yet, and has several new plans that he hopes will improve the attack of the forward wall, and bring it up to the standard of the sharp thrusting line of the 1936 champs.

The loss of the veteran Ed Frediani was keenly felt throughout the contest. Frediani, a veteran of last year's championship squad and counted upon to carry a large part of the burden of attack this year for the Ram eleven, was forced to withdraw from competition because he found that the exceptionally heavy program he is carrying left him no time to participate in the sport.

Leo Johnson, Jimmy Fahn and Mike Klebanoff were outstanding on offense, while Ellard Taylor, Bob Campbell and Vince Zuardo stood out in the backfield.

The Ram Starting Lineup

Klebanoff	Right Wing
Stokes	Inside Right
Johnson	Center Forward
Campbell	Right Half
Lim	Center Half
Taylor	Left Half
Flynn	Right Full

Lambs Score 15-0 Win Over Mission; Preserve Record

Coach Jack Gaddy's Flying Lambs kept their unbeaten record against local high schools clean last Thursday by a convincing 15-0 victory over the Mission High School eleven.

The game saw the jaysee boys on the offensive most of the time, with the props threatening periodically with a passing attack. The Lambs scored in the first quarter when forced to punt deep in the shadow of their own goal; Mission fumbled on a bad pass from center, and Don Mix, Lamb tackle, recovered on the one-yard line. Art Nelson bucked over into pay dirt on the first play, and Bill Fassler converted to send the Lambs into a 7-0 lead. The rest of the first half was scoreless, with Art Nelson piling up yardage for the Lambs, and Bill Fassler keeping the Mission team back in their own territory with nice runbacks of the punts. Balastracci and Hamilton also proved troublesome on defense.

In the third quarter, Fassler returned a punt to the Mission 15-yard line, and then after two line plays proved ineffectual, threw a forward pass to Ed Canepa for the second touchdown. This time the conversion failed. Late in the same quarter, Franchesci, Mission half, attempting to run a fumbled ball from behind his goal, was tackled in the end zone by the entire Lamb line, producing a safety for the Gaddymen. The last half was featured by the work of Landis at the back spot and Mix, Pasquallette, and General in the line.

Men's Group Rides Friday Afternoon

That classes may start immediately, all men who are interested in the newly formed men's riding group are urged to see Dean Edwin C. Browne, according to an announcement by Riding Instructor Lurine Kuhn Bergin.

The course includes ten lessons for a fee of ten dollars, which is payable at the first lesson. The schedule, as announced by Mrs. Bergin, is as follows: 1:00 o'clock, beginners class; 2:30 o'clock, intermediate; 4:00 o'clock, advanced class. All classes will be held on Friday.

Riding habits are not essential but are advised for all those intending to continue in the course, as they are more comfortable and durable, Mrs. Bergin said.

RAMS SCORE DECISIVE VICTORY OVER MARIN; McDONALD, FEX, TALLY

By DON MIX

After being held scoreless for three quarters, Russ Sweet's rambling Ram gridders ran wild in the final period to score two touchdowns and emerge on the long end of a 12 to 0 score in the season's opening battle against the Marin Mariners at Kentfield last Friday night.

The first three stanzas saw the Red Rams threaten time and time again, but they found the going too tough within the ten-yard line of the scrappy Mariners, and the teams were in a scoreless deadlock as the fourth quarter opened.

Sparked by the spectacular offensive thrusts of little John Verducci, the locals begin to move early in the final period. A sustained drive from the Marin 40-yard line culminated when Bob Fex, Ram half, hoisted his frame over the goal line from one yard out for the initial score. The second score came when Verducci and Allen McDonald pushed the ball deep into the Mariners' territory and McDonald made it good from the 2-yard line. With thirteen seconds left to go in the ball game, the locals just missed another score when Art Nelson, sub fullback, was stopped one foot from the goal line. Before another play could be called, the final gun was sounded.

The Rams held the upper hand throughout most of the game, but the doggedly determined Marin outfit fought them to a standstill in the first quarter. Soon after the kickoff Ram drive went deep into enemy territory but the defence of the opposition tightened, and the locals were held on the Marin 10-yard line. This was the lone threat in that first quarter and the teams played in the middle of the field in an even punting duel. Allen McDonald, left half, was booting them out for San Francisco.

First Drive Stopped

The Ram offense began to click as the second period got under way. McDonald picked up four yards at right tackle and then the sensational little Verducci carried the ball over the short side with a fine demonstration of straight ahead power for nine yards to put the oval on the Marin 47. The drive was short lived because after another first down had been made through the combined efforts of Verducci and McDonald, the Mariners held and the Red men were forced to kick over the goal line.

The Ram line was putting on too much pressure for the Mariners, and they started passing after Merv Weiner, Ram tackle, had knifed through the Mariner interference to throw Johnson, Marin half, for a five-yard loss. Johnnie Allen, the Mariners' brilliant colored end, almost got away on one of these lofty aerials, but the elusive pigskin bounced off his usually capable mitts.

"Bub" Egelhofer, the hard blocking local quarterback, gave his team a break when he dived underneath a surging mass of bodies to pick up a Marin fumble on the 25-yard line. His efforts were in vain, however, when his mates failed to move out the Marin defenders.

Marin used some very poor football strategy when they started passing deep in their own territory, and little Verducci took advantage of the mental lapse to intercept one of Johnson's tosses and proceed to run through half of the Marin team before he was pulled down on the 25-yard line. Wes Olson slammed through the tackle spot for five yards and then the Red men decided to take to the air. Bob Fex hurled one pass right in the arms of a Ram over the goal line but the oval popped off his grasp. Two more aerials fell incomplete and another local drive was cut short.

Marin tossed several completed passes in the closing seconds of the half but the gun stopped them when they got to the Ram 40.

The Rams received the kickoff as the second half opened and McDonald took it over the goal line and returned it to the twenty-yard line. Speed and some effective down field blocking by the Ram guards allowed McDonald to clip off ten yards on a sweep around the Mariners' left end. After Olson had added three in a smash over tackle the offense lost its momentum when Randy Osborne, powerful guard, was laid low in a pile up in the middle of the line.

Verducci Paves Way

As the fourth quarter opened, the Rams began to drive for the pay dirt in a desperate effort that couldn't be denied. Taking the ball on their own 25-yard line after an exchange of kicks the Sweetmen began the drive that produced the score. Verducci drove down the field for 37 yards in returning the kick and put his squad in Mariner territory. Running from the fullback spot in a single wing formation, Verducci jammed through the tired Mariner forward wall in a series of running thrusts that put the ball on the one-yard line. Bob Fex then took the ball and leaped over the line for six points. Bud Wieckers came in to make the conversion, but his try was wide.

Three minutes later the Sweetmen took the ball and went on the march that gave them their second touchdown. McDonald made four yards in two attempts and then went back in a fake punt formation that ended with a sweep of the Marin end, producing thirteen yards. Verducci was held for two yards and then he reversed the ball to McDonald, who went for twelve yards behind the potent blocking of "Moon" Burke and Willie Dolman. The short side of the Mariners line was getting pushed around and little Verducci shoved his one hundred and fifty pounds of dynamite for eleven yards. McDonald made it a first down on the two and then banged over for the score. The conversion was no good.

Coach Sweet put in his second team at this time with only about four minutes to go. The reserves proved just as capable as their predecessors and ran the weary Marin team dizzy. Fighting against time they drove deep into scoring territory but were stopped by the gun with only a foot to go for a touchdown.

Sweet expressed his satisfaction with the team's performance but he said that he thought they were capable of impovement. Sweet praised all his men, and said that he felt the prospects for a conference championship were very bright.

Unofficial Guardsman statistics compiled by Bob MacArthur show evidence of the Ram's superiority. Sweet's men made twelve first downs to five for Marin, gained 166 yards from scrimmage to 75 for Marin, and had a decided edge in the kicking department, averaging 39.7 to 33.2 for the Mariners. Passing figures give Marin an advantage when they completed 4 out of 6, while the Rams connected for 2 out of five.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

Newly elected managers of WAA sports attended their first council meeting September 21. The duties of the managers were reviewed and it was decided that managers for tumbling, hockey, and fencing would not be appointed because of lack of members interested in these sports.

The council appointed Charlotte Zier manager for riding, Claire Mason manager for golf, and Ethel Vizzard manager for badminton.

Last Saturday morning the golf enrolees journeyed out to the driving range at Ingleside Gold Course and watched professionals swing, then determinedly vowing that they "would do it just like that next time."

The volleyball club has formed two teams, and a captain has been elected for each team. Marie Rossi is captain of the white team and Anita Washington captains the "reds." Rivalry runs high as the two teams are evenly matched and each eager to win.

The Palace of Fine Arts will be over-run with junior college tennis players next Saturday, for all the classes are meeting. WAA classes are held every Saturday morning as well as from 10:30 to 1 o'clock on Tuesdays and Thursdays, and from 11:30 to 1 o'clock on Mondays and Wednesdays. The fact that the men's tennis classes are scheduled at approximately the same time as the women's classes will make it convenient for the mixed doubles to be held this fall.

To those girls recently enrolled in rifle and now faithfully attending the required lecture periods before being permitted to shoot, Virginia Kwiatt, rifle manager, offers the promise of some interesting matches later in the season, when they have learned to handle "those guns." Last semester four women were awarded medals for outstanding scores in the final matches. They were Esther Lestchfield, Betty Hyde, Virginia Kwiatt and Jean Kidwell. So cheer up, girls, all the preliminary instruction is essential for a thorough understanding of the gun and it will help you get those high scores later on.

Arrangements have been completed for the WAA initiation luncheon to be held in the faculty cafeteria at Galileo on Thursday, October 7. The charge is 40c and all WAA members are invited.

Margaret Park, archery manager, is the general chairman of the committees. Any girl who is interested in serving on a committee should see her immediately. Betty McKinsey is in charge of the arrangements, Dorothy Sanderson, assisted by Annabelle Benson, is in charge of the decorations and the re-arrangements are being handled by Mary Fraites.

RAMS' HORN

INK SPLASH INSPIRES!

Dear Editor:

As one of the seventeen hundred and ninety-nine college students mentioned by our president in his "Presidential Ink Splashes," I'd like to ask if there is ANY good reason why we aren't getting a building.

Are they (I'm sure I don't know who the mysterious "they" is) waiting for us to get tired of rehashing the old subject and just forget all about a college?

When we entered as Freshmen we felt just a little sad for the departing Sophomores who would never enjoy the buildings with us. Now the Freshmen are feeling sorry for us, and even they deserve sympathy:

We really need some place to call our own, because a buildingless college lacks prestige. It does not seem to impress future employers, when they hear we have graduated from a school that has no particular location. They hear of our limited facilities, and they must surmise we could not have learned much.

People are going to come to San Francisco for our Fair. Many will want to stay here. Those with children nearing college age probably won't even hear of our wandering school.

Don't the city "fathers" desire the city to grow — to become larger — famous—to stand equal with Los Angeles. We have our bridges, but Los Angeles has a college, and educational opportunities surpass transportational facilities.

When San Francisco faced another problem, that of rebuilding her city after the destructive earthquake and fire, she did not hesitate. Has something happened to our expanding spirit? We have everything right at our finger-tips; all we need is action. Who's going to give it to us?

ANNE RABINOWITZ.

Eds. note: You're "building" spirit anyway!

Dear Editor:

It was always my impression that a junior college had as much spirit as a college, and much more spirit than a high school. To me, junior college symbolized the next step from high school spirit to college. I have been disappointed no end at the spirit displayed at San Francisco Junior College. The spirit, if any, is displayed by a small minority of students; the other students seem to care nothing for the school.

The only time we ever have a "little" crowd at our assemblies is when we feature some important personage in the entertainment field. The students seem to care nothing for the small offerings of their fellow students, they want the best for nothing, or they want nothing.

In fact they do not care!

If they were not required to possess student-body cards, I doubt if more than three hundred students would possess student body cards.

What we need is more and more school spirit. Not the type that sits out in front of school and talks big, but the type that goes out and does things.

MERV. WEINER.

Victoria 4:30 By Cecil Roberts

One of the most popular books of the new season, "Victoria 4:30", is another of those novels written in the popular tradition of Vicki Baum's "Grand Hotel." Since the beginning of our literature, stories of this so-called "frame" construction have appeared frequently and with great success. In a few instances they have attained the height of great art; we can hardly call this great art, but in all events it is highly entertaining. Mr. Roberts has scored a success of definite appeal that should entrench him firmly in the public favor.

The story concerns itself with the lives of the many passengers on a continental boat-train that is to leave from the Victoria Station, London, at 4:30 Wednesday afternoon. They include representatives of almost every sphere of life, from the opening character, a Victoria baggage porter who dreams of going abroad on his honeymoon, to the world's greatest symphony conductor, bound for Salzburg to participate in the opera festival.

With remarkable variety, the story includes people and incidents that should satisfy everyone. Some, the sketch of Herr Emil Gerhardt, a non-Aryan, who was reduced from his position as Berlin's most popular film star to a penniless outcast, are melancholy, tragic; others, such as the whimsical tale of a hen-packed bachelor, running away from his designing relatives only to find romance with a wealthy Hungarian widow, are gay and ever amusing. Throughout, it is interesting to note how he has connected so many completely different persons.

A number of his plots are intriguing, and his clever, resourceful denouement gives promise of a brilliant talent. A few of his compositions, the story of the author, Henry Fanning, and the wronged Austrian servant girl, who boarded the express at Paris, are waste, but this is more than outbalanced by the German actor, Emil Gerhardt, Nicholas Metaxa, a Greek waiter returning to Athens to claim a fiance whom he has not seen for five years, and the seventy-five-year-old English woman, Sister Teresa, who became a nun in Transylvania at fifty, after rearing a family and outliving a husband. They will linger long in our memory.

From all points of view, though, "Victoria 4:30" is decidedly worth reading. Everyone should be satisfied in one of its many moods. More important than this, it indicates an important writer. Mr. Cecil Roberts is coming into his right.

How to Lose Friends and Alienate People, By Irving Tessler.

If you, as we, were decidedly nauseated by the pseudo-psychology of one Dale Carnegie, this is your book. In his distinguished contemporary, Mr. Tessler has found a theme for many moments of rare humor. Of millions exposed to the infinite variety of these "success" publications that have constituted the bulk of the season's best-selling slop, he is one of the lamentably few that has done anything to relieve the extreme tedium of the situation.

Mr. Tessler has overlooked nothing. From the very end-papers, through each chapter, he attacks unmercifully the fallacy of numerous acquaintances. In the introduction, the publishers note a few of the honors that have been paid him. By a unanimous vote, it is claimed he was voted the biggest heel in his college class.

We're quite certain that everyone of you must know at least one person whom you take great pleasure in dropping from your register. Unfortunately, you can never be sure just when you will run into him next, or under what circumstances. For these millions we can think of no better author than Irving Tessler. With staggering completeness, he has covered every possible situation: the casual nod on the street and how to prevent its reoccurrence; the supper party and how to turn the tables and make the host really suffer; how to make a sea voyage and not include the entire passenger list, and on it goes.

In case you didn't know, Irving Tessler has also written another distinguished success, "Readers Digest Very Little".

We pause to pay tribute to the late Osgood Perkins, one of the American stage's finest actors. For years distinguished as the star of many of Broadway's greatest successes, Mr. Perkins, 45, died suddenly Tuesday, Sept. 21, the morning after the opening of his new show. This last play, "Susan and God," in which he was co-starred with the vivacious Gertrude Lawrence, opened the night before in Washington, and according to the critics was an overwhelming triumph.

The genius of Osgood Perkins was well known to San Francisco audiences for his lead in "Tovarich," which played an extended engagement at Curran some months ago. His outstanding performances won him a following that few actors can boast. We know him to be a fine actor and a true gentleman.

The actor is survived by his widow, the former Janet Rane of Boston, and their five-year-old son, Tony. The family lived in their Sixty-third street home in New York City, where the boy remained during the tour.

Meanwhile, however, following the age-old tradition of the theatre, the show will go on. Mr. Perkin's role has been filled by Paul McGrath, who previously had a minor part in the drama.

GERMAN SOCIETY TO GIVE DINNER

Announcing its first social event of this semester, the college German Club will have a dinner this Friday evening, October 1st. The restaurant has not been decided upon as yet, according to Club officers.

Following the dinner, Eric Moeller, German instructor who recently returned from a tour of Europe, will speak on Germany.

Students who are interested in attending this dinner should see Helen Nast, club secretary-treasurer, as soon as possible so that an estimate of the number planning to attend can be made. Further details as to the time and place of the dinner may be found on the bulletin board at the Extension Building.

The German Club announces that it will welcome as new members any students who are interested in Germany and its cultural life. Those who are interested may see Walter Thompson, Marie Bodie, Evelyn Tennis, or any of the German instructors.

Library To Enlarge; Adds Book Shelves

Twelve new cases of Library shelves are to be added to the Extension Building division of the Library for the convenience of students using the reading room. Reference cases are soon to be placed in the reading room for periodical guides, encyclopedias, yearbooks, etc.

Books are now being issued from the reserved book room in the lower floor of the Extension Building at the rate of more than one hundred daily, according to Francis Colligan, instructor-in-charge of the Library. This indicates that as fast as new books are being received, they are being used by students and that demand is constantly increasing.

Exposition Topic Of Speech Class

Students of the advanced extemporaneous speaking class are preparing to give talks on the Golden Gate International Exposition to various civic, service, fraternal, patriotic, religious, women's and other clubs of the city, according to James S. Hughes, instructor. All of the members have studied much material on the Exposition and have visited the display in Union Square, where they gained many ideas.

The object of this class is to speak to outside audiences on various subjects in order to gain experience of this type. Two semesters of speech are required before the course may be taken. Members of the class are John Healy, Dave Levy, Alfred Mainick, Joe Meeko, Morris Rabinowitch, William Simond, Charles Vaughn, and Bill Weinstock.

Vaughn, who spoke at the Constitution Day Assembly Friday morning, September 17th, addressed a group of the American Legion Women's Auxiliary that evening, on the Birth and Growth of the Constitution, as part of the work of this class.

Ex-Council Romps Through Meet 39 Min.

Holding its fourth official meeting of the semester, the Executive Council of the college convened last Friday morning, September 24, for 39 minutes with President Eugene Blumenthal presiding.

The president opened the meeting at 11:05 A. M. with a few remarks concerning the seriousness of the business of the day, and reminded all members of their duties as representatives of the student body. The Secretary of the Associated Students, Lorraine Hoffmeyer, then read the minutes of the last meeting.

At 11:10 A. M., Blumenthal called for committee reports, first naming Allen Williams to report the doings of the Rally Committee. Williams told of his arrangements for the Marin Rally and concluded his report by complimenting Blumenthal for his conduct at the Kentfield gathering.

"Gene deserves a lot of credit for his work at the rally," Williams was kind enough to remark.

Before he sat down, Williams cautioned those planning to attend the Marin game to "take it easy and avoid rat racing when you are driving over there."

LUNCH TIME

The chair then called upon Don Mills, president of the AMS, to find out if the Brawl Trophy was going to be presented that afternoon. Mills was incapacitated for a few seconds with his mouth full of food, but soon recovered his composure and announced that the presentation would be made that day.

Bob Neal, head of the high sophs, and in charge of arrangements for the formal, said that things looked rather dark for having the dance at the California Country Club, but that there was still a possibility that the difficulties could be overcome.

A slight disorder was heard over in the corner of the room and Blumenthal sounded a warning. "Hughie, please address your remarks to the chair."

"I have nothing to say," Daite responded.

Norma Parent then gave a complete financial report of the AWS dance of two weeks ago.

At 11:15 A. M. the dance report was finished, and President Blumenthal introduced the members to Kay Warren, newly-appointed representative of the music and drama council.

TRUTH

Seeking to discover the reason for reporting Ex Council meetings in The Guardsman, official student publication, Blumenthal called on Don Mix, editor of the paper, to give an explanation for his views. Mix held forth at great length but the main point in his remarks seemed to be that it is the duty of every newspaper to print the truth regardless of the embarrassment it may cause certain individuals.

Don Mills took the floor at 11:20 and announced that the date for the Men's Club Fights had again been changed.

Gene Blumenthal inquired as to the cause of not having cigarettes at the last fights and Mills answered by saying, "We made an error by putting them into a room that wasn't locked."

Blumenthal mentioned the prospect of having fights with State but no action was taken.

DIALOGUE

Florence Murphy, Associate Editor of The Guardsman, reported that the man who was contacted to design a college seal would be at the next meeting.

"We should have a small efficient committee to investigate the seal," Don Mills said.

"What possible advantage is there in having a committee," Bob Neal inquired.

"Things will go much faster," answered Mills.

"Oh," said Neal.

At 11:25 A. M. the president called for the discussion of new business.

Under this section the budget of the Associated Students was brought up and it was decided that it would not be necessary to read the entire statement.

"Not that I'm curious, but would you tell me how much the yell leader is going to get?" Williams inquired.

Williams was informed that he was allotted $125 for expenditures of the Rally Committee.

Caroline Orginos, vice-president of the associated student body and head of the Social Committee, declared that she was absent from the budget meeting and would like to know how much the Social Committee was to receive.

At 11:30 the meeting was informed that the football team had received an offer from Ricks College in Idaho, and the discussion of financing such a trip occupied the next fifteen minutes.

SECRETS

Allen Williams seemed to be on the verge of making a startling statement when he checked himself with a remark that "certain things hadn't got out yet and it is best to keep them quiet."

Caroline Orginos announced that the HAA was holding a formal tea on Thursday, September 30, and then Don Mills made his traditional move for adjournment at 11:44 A. M.

College Debate Society Seeks Battles (Verbal)

San Francisco Junior College's debating society is looking for a fight, that is, a verbal fight. Challenges have been sent to almost all the Northern California colleges for debates this semester, according to Lloyd Luckmann, director of college forensics.

San Mateo, Modesto, Coalinga, Menlo, and Marin compose the list of junior college challengees. Other institutions asked for debates are the University of San Francisco, College of the Pacific, San Jose and San Francisco State Colleges.

Neutrality, labor questions, the unicameral legislature, and the jury system are among the subjects suggested as a basis for argument.

"We extend an invitation," Luckmann said, "to all students interested in debating to become associate members of the society. We meet every Tuesday in Room 462, Galileo, from 2:30 to 4:30. There are no requirements for joining."

Isabelle Sherrat, veteran debater, is secretary and executive council representative of the group.

Frank Bosl, Robert Holmes, David Levy, Catherine Mountanos, Elizabeth Rehbock, James Scott, William Simonds, and George Woodland are the regular members of the organization. Eugene Blumethal, Morris Rabinowitch, Lorraine Johnson, Joseph Meeko, Charles Vaughn, Jerry Heilbron, and Herbert Magely are associate members.

The American Federation of Labor versus the Committee for Industrial Organization was the subject of a panel discussion held at yesterday's meeting of the society.

Hancock Returns From Camp Perry

Returning from Camp Perry with several new ideas and methods of improving marksmanship, William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college rifle teams, is again at work deciding on this semester's team members.

In a talk to the advanced rifle class, Hancock said he had no idea who will be on any of the teams this semester. "We are planning to enter four teams in the various leagues, and team positions, as well as managers' positions, are open to 211 students within the next few weeks."

Membership in the Rifle Club has now been boosted to more than 90 members who have paid their dues, a new high and another record for the club.

Gabbert Host To Spanish Students

Thomas Gabbert, Spanish instructor, was host last night to a group of Spanish students who met at his home for informal discussion. The group, which is not yet officially a college organization, meets for the purpose of conducting conversation entirely in Spanish, thereby making the language practical.

Omicrons Discuss Initiation Plans

A meeting of Omicron Phi Pi, Economics Honor Society, was held in the Extension Building Thursday, with the purpose of discussing initiation plans for newly-elected candidates into the society. Plans call for the initiation ceremonies Friday at Galileo High School, and at the present, those approved by the Committee on Acceptance, as to their eligibility requirements, were Edward Garrard, William Simonds, and Thomas Parkinson. Other candidates on the waiting list will be approved shortly by the committee, which is composed of I. Zangor, Charles Vaughn and Eugene Cramer.

Because of the inforesight of many students to join Omicron Phi Pi, William Goss, instructor in Economics, will assist in securing new candidates by seeking those students who have distinguished themselves in at least six units of Economics, and will submit those names to the committee on acceptance.

Plans as to the procedure of the essay contest sponsored by Omicron Phi Pi, and which were published in the last issue of The Guardsman, were also discussed at the meeting.

A first prize of two dollars cash and a surprise will be given the student submitting the best one hundred-word essay on the subject, "The Influence of Our New School Plan On Our Campus Societies." A theatre ticket will be awarded the second prize winner.

All students are qualified to enter the contest and must limit their essays to one hundred words, with the closing date for submitting entries October 15. Entries should be addressed to Dr. Michael Zarchin, Omicron Phi Pi faculty adviser.

Blessed Event In Nichols Household

Some day there may be two Nichols at the college bank to count nickels because Ward Nichols, college comptroller, became a father Saturday, September 18, 1937.

Richard Nichols, the newcomer, has already acquired an accent to his squalls while staying at the French hospital, according to Edwin C. Browne, Dean of Men. The youngster tipped the scales at six pounds, five and three-quarter ounces.

Goody! No School On Columbus Day

In memory of the great explorer's discovery of the New World, Columbus Day, Tuesday, October 12, will be an official College holiday.

Although not listed in this year's catalog as a holiday, the registrar's office announced that the day is of sufficient importance to net a twenty-four hour rest.

Program Planned By Music Club

Highlighting the program tomorrow evening at the third meeting of the Music Club, Robert Scott will offer as his solo selection Evening Star by Tannhauser. The meeting will be held at the home of Helene Nast, 4112 24th Street, and Kay Warner, newly elected president of the club, will preside. Members will participate in the remainder of the program with community singing and specialty numbers. As last week was Alumni Night, this week will be dedicated to the newcomers and all are urgently requested by Kay Warner to attend.

"The Music Club is fast becoming one of the most prominent organizations of the school," Miss Warner said. "It boasts a membership of 30 students and is rapidly increasing in size. Plans have been formulated to attend both the Peter Connolly and WPA symphony series. All students who are in any way interested in music should certainly take advantage of the many opportunities which this club has to offer."

Forum's Meet On Far-Eastern War Advanced to Fri.

Yielding to the first football game of the season, the Forum Club postponed last week's meeting to this Friday evening, October 1, at 7:45 o'clock, at the home of Mary Ann Woody, 1875 California Street, near Gough.

The group will discuss what the peace position of the United States should be in the Sino-Japanese war. Roger Ranck will argue for a policy of cooperation with other nations. Louis Garcia is scheduled to advocate neutrality. General discussion, which will follow the presentation of the two sides will give students an opportunity to give their views on the subject.

Appealing for new members, John Healy, chairman, declared that all students are welcome. "The Forum is an organization where everyone can express himself," he said, " and should be of interest to many students. Because so many people have been asking what the club does, I would like this opportunity to outline briefly of what our activities consist.

ACTIVITIES NAMED

"Primarily," he continued, "we are a discussion group. At every meeting we discuss some topic either of current or more lasting interest. The members decide themselves what subject they want to discuss. The discussions are led by two students, each presenting opposite sides of the question, after this the whole group participate in the debate.

"We publish a literary magazine every year which consists of contributions from the student body and is known as the pick of student literature. However," he added, "this is not to be misinterpreted as our main function. Briefly, our purpose is to promote student thought and discussion."

Dorothy Mercer and William Goss, faculty sponsors, also extended invitations to students to join the organization, stating that there is plenty of room and that they would like to see some new faces. Anyone interested in obtaining more information about the Forum should see Miss Mercer, Goss or Healy.

NEW NYA DEADLINE

chair and all other avocations offering opportunity for self expression without the risk of rough and tumble debate.

Again, singularity might be the aim of all members of this group. They might affect sophistication and abhor the herd, or rather that part of the herd which is healthily average. They might profess exotic enthusiasms and safe rebellions. They would be death on happy endings, anti-obscenity legislation, and the traditional decencies with them would be hatred of other people's visible success, and they would instinctively leap to the support of anything that might tear it down. This is compositely, then, a picture of the intelligensia that we might view with a mystical reverence. We don't. Instead, we feel happier being one of the Great American Public.

RAMS - STATE ON GRIDIRON FRIDAY 8:00

CREWMEN TO ROW SUNDAY IN REGATTA

WOMEN'S GROUP HOLDS INITIAL LUNCH TOMORROW AT GALILEO

Freshmen Orientation Inspires Early WAA Plan Led By President Swicegood; Team Managers Join Council Officers To Welcome Members

Marking the first WAA social function of the semester, an initiation, orientation luncheon will be held in the faculty cafeteria tomorrow, October 7 at 1 o'clock. All former and present WAA members are invited to attend the luncheon. The cost is 40 cents and tickets may be obtained from sport managers, at the gym office at Galileo or at the cafeteria on Thursday afternoon.

New members will be given the WAA pledge and will sign the ornate membership book. President Gloria Swicegood, the sole surviving member of the Block Society at the college, will give an introductory speech in which she will welcome new members and outline the purposes and aims of the WAA. The award system and the service card method will be explained by Dorothy Canavan, secretary of the WAA council. The newly-elected sport managers will be present at the luncheon and may make short introductory speeches. Students who have gym classes at 1 o'clock will be excused in order to attend the luncheon.

TICKETS GOING FAST

"As this is our first showing of a united front," declared Miss Swicegood, "we are very anxious that as many women as possible attend the luncheon. Advance ticket sales indicate that our wish will be gratified."

Since its formation during the first semester of the junior college, the WAA has been one of the most successful of college clubs and its membership has rapidly increased. Tourney week, held near the end of the semester and in which final contests in all WAA sports are staged, has become the most important week of the semester to college women interested in athletics.

COMMITTEES NAMED

General chairman of the committees which have been completing arrangements for the luncheon, is Margaret Park. Margaret Wormell is assistant chairman and publicity manager. Betty MacKenzie is in charge of arrangements and re-arrangements are by Mary Fraitas.

Vera Spencer, faculty sponsor of the WAA, in speaking of the luncheon said, "The committees have worked diligently to make this, our first WAA luncheon of the semester, a big success and I would say that it is well worth the 40 cents we are charging to cover expenses."

Anne Rabinowitz Awarded WSS Scholarship

Selected from a number of applicants because of her outstanding scholarship, character and worthiness, Anne Rabinowitz was awarded the Women's Service Society scholarship late last week, according to Florence Murphy, WSS president. Serving on the Scholarship Committee with Miss Murphy were Mary Jane Learnard, Assistant Registrar, Helene Turner, NYA Director in the college, and Norma Parent, AWS president, who acted as Member-At-Large from the Service Society.

Expressing the sentiments of the group, Miss Murphy said of Miss Rabinowitz, "Anne is a Low Sophomore student and is majoring in secretarial work. She is an earnest and industrious worker and is highly regarded by her instructors and her fellow students. She is vitally interested in furthering her education and if our scholarship will help her at all we will have achieved the goal which we set out for."

"The WSS Scholarship," Miss Murphy continued, "is a sum of fifty dollars raised each semester by Service Society members and awarded to some worthy student for use in completing his junior college work. This first award was secured by a motion picture and a rummage sale held the later part of last semester. Due to certain unavoidable circumstances, it was impossible to announce the actual awarding of the scholarship at the commencement exercises, as had been originally planned. However, now that it has been awarded, we are ready to begin work on plans for securing the money for next semester's award."

Speaking of the other activities of the WSS, Miss Murphy told of a formal tea held on Saturday, September 25, at the home of Verrel Weber, faculty sponsor of the society.

The six co-eds now belonging to the organization, in addition to Miss Murphy, are Norma Parent, AWS president, Gail Hanna, AWS vice-president, and treasurer of the Women's Athletic Association, Barbara Randall, AWS secretary, Marion Yaeger, AWS treasurer, Dorothy Canavan, WAA secretary, and Lily Phillips.

HANNA CHOSEN AWS VICE PRES.

To suceeed Geraldine Roberts, who has withdrawn from college, Gail Hanna was appointed vice-president of the Associated Women Students at a special AWS Executive Council meeting held last Tuesday. Miss Hanna, who will take office immediately, has been active in student affairs, holding the offices of vice-president of the Rifle and Pistol Club, treasurer of the Women's Athletic Association, and secretary of the Women's Physical Education Major Society. She is also a member of the Women's Service Society.

Norma Parent, AWS president, commented on the appointment, "I am very pleased with the Executive Council's choice of Gail Hanna as vice-president. Miss Hanna has shown through her able work in other student offices that she is fully capable of discharging her new duties exceptionally well. Though we were indeed sorry to lose Miss Roberts, we know that Miss Hanna will be one of the best vice-presidents we have ever had."

The appointment was made at a special meeting of the AWS Executive Council, held for that purpose last Tuesday. Present, and voting, were six of the eight members of the Council. After several ballots were taken, it was found that Miss Hanna received the appointment.

"We are planning to hold an open forum meeting soon," Miss Parent continued, "at which all women students of the college will be asked to make suggestions for the improvement of the AWS lounge and other matters relative to the AWS. Besides the forum, we are also planning a tea, but we cannot announce details as yet. However, I would like to urge all women students to watch for both these affairs and to plan to attend them.

"Please continue to use both the AWS social hall and the patio. Both facilities were placed there for your convenience, and we hope to improve them from time to time, by your suggestions."

NYA Readers Taken From Next Payroll

All students employed as readers for instructors, are no longer eligible for NYA pay beginning September 27, 1937, according to a special bulletin direct from government headquarters.

Instructors have all been notified of the government action and will act accordingly. This order throws nearly 60 students out of work, and other work projects must be found for them before the next pay day, which is October 18. Helene Turner, head of NYA organization in the college, will make every possible effort to place students immediately.

John Selig, treasurer of the college, will honor all NYA students' checks who are working off deferred tuition payments on October 18, the date of issuance of the checks.

College Business Women Hold Meet

Former co-eds of the college who have entered or contemplate entering the business world compose the membership of the newly organized Associated Business Women of San Francisco Junior College, according to Margaret Flournoy, business instructor and faculty adviser of the club.

Meetings of the club are held monthly, the last, an informal luncheon meeting, having been held, Saturday, September 25, at the Riviera Club. Officers are Ethel Flynn, president; Mildred Ross, secretary; and Dorothy Chase, treasurer.

Peace Council Plans Second Conclave Today

Organizational Problems To Be Settled At One O'clock In Room 301

With a constitution already adopted, the College Peace Council will hold its second meeting to complete organizational problems, such as all new groups must settle, in Room 301 of the Powell Street building at one o'clock today.

Adoption of by-laws and election of officers is the business slated for today's session. Practically all of the college organizations were represented at last week's meeting of the council, and many unaffiliated individuals were also present.

Expressing satisfaction with the progress in the organization of the peace body, the group's provisional committee composed of Gertrude Bolton, William Goss, and John Ross, faculty sponsors, and Ray Valdez and Fred Vast, issued a statement.

PEACE IMPORTANT

"The enthusiastic response of the student body shows definitely," the statement read, "that peace is of prime importance to the college. We are happy that a council has been established and a constitution adopted. Although there has been some comment as to the progress of the meeting, it must be remembered that in a group so heterogeneous as the council with varying viewpoints that progress is necessarily at a slower pace than one might wish.

"There has been some question," the statement continued, "as to what the status of an organization represented at the peace council is. Every group that continues to send representatives will have a vote in the council and subsequently will be signifying their desire for peace and their endorsement of the council's activities.

"We wish to urge everybody interested in peace to become members of the council, membership is not restricted to club representatives."

CONSTITUTION ADOPTED

The following articles are among those included in the constitution adopted at last week's meeting:

"The name of this organization shall be the San Francisco Junior College Peace Council.

"The object of this organization shall be the furtherance of peace, and a study of the method of maintaining and establishing peace and to carry on activity for peace.

"Membership in this council shall consist of two representatives from every organization interested in peace and similarly interested individuals.

"Officers of the council shall be a president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer, and corresponding secretary."

Fred Vast and Ray Valdez were elected temporary chairman and secretary respectively.

GROUPS REPRESENTED

Organizations represented at the first meeting of the Council were:

Guardsman Scribester Staggered

What? Someone refuses to be interviewed by a Guardsman reporter? Amazing, my dear Watson! We ladies and gentlemen of the press who haunt the sources of college news are so often the fair-haired children of the college, upon promise of a nice, long, praisoworthy story of this or that and a direct quotation which maybe you said and which probably you think we made up.

But comes additional proof of the old saying that there is an exception to all rules:

"Go out," says the Ed., "and get a personal interview from ———— ———— about her recent trip through Europe."

"Yeah," says the associate ed., "ask her about the hat she bought in Paris."

So off we set to give some lucky person a big break. Bouncing in upon the unsuspecting victim we state our business and wait for the look of pleased acceptance which we always got before.

"A Guardsman reporter?"

She slowly shakes her head. This must be impossible! Stunned, we proceed back to a staff meeting where we explode the bombshell among the unusual serenity of the staff gathering.

"Go back and ask her again. You must have made a mistake," says the ed. So drawing our jacket around us as a slight protection against the chilly breeze we repeat a vain attempt to get an interview.

Curses, foiled again! She won't talk.

HAA Plans Second Foreign Food Fest

Officials of the Home Economics Association are busy enrolling new members and changing their present charter, the result of a combined Japanese Tea and business meeting last Thursday. With the admittance of household science classes, the association, formerly called Household Arts Association, changed its name to Home Economics Association.

Next in the series of foreign luncheons will be a Chinese tiffin to be held about the middle of October. Barbara Allen, Cecile Hobro, and Marian Skattebol have been appointed by the president a committee of three to select a date. Meadus Rygel was elected secretary, and Alice Thompson, treasurer.

Margaret Dougherty, household science instructor, has been added to the list of advisors.

Three girls attended the tea in costume and Mitsue Kono, new member, prepared the tea in true Japanese style.

"A good time was had by all," says Caroline Orginos, president.

Idaho Contest Assured Ram Footballers

Ricks College Accepts Proposal Offered Local Leaders

Definite announcement that the college football team will go to Idaho to meet the Ricks College grid squad on next Thanksgiving Day, November 25, was made by the administration following a conference with officials of the northern school.

College authorities wired acceptance of the terms offered by the Twin Falls, Idaho, Chamber of Commerce, the group which is sponsoring the contest. The agreement calls for a home and home game agreement and guarantee of partial payment of transportation expenses by the host institution.

The announcement was greeted with much enthusiasm by the local coaching staff and players, all of whom seemed highly excited by the prospect of an out-of-state jaunt.

"The Idaho game will serve as an added incentive to make the boys win the conference title so that we will be traveling as champions and not as just another football team," Head Coach Russ Sweet said.

It is reported that Ricks College is located in Ricksville, Idaho, on the southern border of the state, in the center of the farm country. The game will be held in Twin Falls, the largest town of the district, situated about one hundred miles from the college.

Little is known as yet of the ability of the Idaho gridmen, but the meager information available shows that they compete with junior college and freshmen teams in the locality. Rumors have it that their reason for seeking an intersectional game this year was the prospect of an unusually capable squad which it is felt can give a good account of itself in any type of competition.

The game will come one week after the Rams have completed their regular schedule, the final contest being listed as against Modesto Junior College on November 19.

Final arrangements of plans for financing the trip have not been definitely completed but present arrangement call for cutting the cost of the Idaho sojourn to an absolute minimum. Administrative officials said that they would plan to send a party of twenty-five on the trip, which would include two grid teams, coaches, a manager, and a member of the faculty. The twenty-two players will be selected from those who are deemed the best athletic representatives of the college, considered on a basis of ability and value to the squad, Sweet said.

This is the college's first venture into the realm of inter-sectional football and both the administration and coaching staff have expressed their hopes that more contests of this type can be arranged every year. The games that allow the team to travel are always a big incentive to attract prospective grid talent and will aid in building up greater teams in the future, according to Sweet.

ANNUAL STATE GAME RALLY AT ROBERTS' FIELD TOMORROW EVE

Schools Will Furnish Student Entertainment At Gala Function; 'Jam Session', Skits, and Harmony Will Be Special Features

Promising to be the most spectacular event ever staged in the history of the college, a huge pre-game football rally will be held tomorrow night in conjunction with San Francisco State College at Roberts Field, 14th and Valencia Streets, at 7:30 in the evening according to Allen Williams, Head Yell Leader.

The rally will serve as a pepfest for the grid classic between the two colleges on the following evening and will feature many unusual and entertaining events. The activities will last approximately an hour and a half and Williams has disclosed that one-half hour of the proceedings, from 8 to 8:30, will be broadcast over radio station KGGC.

GALAXY OF TALENT

Williams has been working with working with Monk Delma, the State College Yell Leader, on arrangements and has announced that they have arranged for galaxy of student talent from both institutions.

The program as outlined by Williams includes many prominent college groups and personages. A rendition of college songs will be given by the A Capella Choir and spirited football music will be offered by the newly-organized junior college band. The Block "SF" Society has promised to put on several skits, one featuring the inimitable Ray "Bubbles" Egelhofer and the group's president, Duke Worsham. Gene Blumenthal, the college crooning executive, will do a bit of a vocal, also, Williams promised.

"JAM SESSION"

Another feature of the program will be a "Jam Session" offered by the State College orchestra. For the benefit of the uninitiated, a "Jam Session" is some unusual and often very amusing improvising by over-enthusiastic musicians.

"We want the entire student body out to Roberts Field tomorrow night to show those Staters some real college spirit," Williams said, "and to demonstrate for their benefit how a yell sounds with some real power behind it and not just the loud gurgles that they pass off as yells. The entertainment will be tops and everyone will have a swell time ribbing the poor 'Gater.' You will enjoy watching our Rams crush the futile Staters twice as much if you attend the rally and get into the real spirit of our 'Big Game'."

COACH TO TALK

Coach Russ Sweet, chief of the College grid legions, will give his views on the contest, as will Dan Farmer, luckless leader of the unfortunate State pseudo-football machine.

Williams will have his Cap and Meg Society handling the ushering and parking situations, and will inaugurate the Peace Committee, under the direction of Ed Frediani, to keep order during the proceedings.

"We want you all to have a good time," Williams concluded, "but please cooperate with us in keeping the gathering orderly and free from any unusual outbursts."

New Building Plans Delayed One Semester

Dealing a severe blow to recently-aroused hopes that the college plant would be ready for occupancy by next fall, City Architect Charles H. Sawyer last week informed the Board of Education that the plans for the building would not be completed before March 1, 1938. He stated that he had been told by Timothy Pflueger, architect, that the plans could not be finished before this date. No explanation was offered for the delay.

The announcement came as a keen disappointment to both the students and faculty of the college and the Board of Education. Regret was expressed by President Cloud and by members of the Board that the buildings would not be completed by the end of July, as had been anticipated.

Disappointed students may gain some consolation from the fact that the Empire State building was completed within ninety days after construction started. By this token, the new buildings should be finished easily in time for the spring semester, 1939, and possibly before that.

Architect Pflueger, aided by his staff of eight assistants, is now filling in the detailed inside plans of the building so that they will conform to the outside and general construction sketches completed last spring. The major problem facing the architects at present is the provision of adequate space for science laboratories, as it is planned to give the college the best equipment possible in this respect.

In the meantime, the Horticultural Division of the 1939 Exposition, is busily engaged in turning the Balboa Park site into a garden spot, on which to raise samples of Western flowers, plants, and herbiage for display at the Exposition. Under the supervision of Julius Sirod and John McLaren, twelve acres at Balboa Park have been planted.

Meggers Gathering Discusses Parking

Meeting to discuss plans for the big State rally tomorrow night, the Cap and Meg Society convened in its bi-monthly gathering last Monday evening, Allen Williams, head yell leader and president of the group, announced.

Williams instructed his organization in the various technicalities involved in handling the large crowd that is expected at the joint rally at Roberts Field. Members were assigned to their various posts and told of their duties in keeping order. Williams particularly stressed the necessity of regulating undue disturbances during the half hour that the program is to be broadcast.

"We want you all to have a good time tomorrow night over at Roberts Field," Williams said, "but please help us keep things running smoothly by cooperating with us and doing your noise making at the right time."

Jig Slated After Rams Crush State

Following the college State football game Friday night, Alpha Phi Gamma, national honorary journalism fraternity at State College, will sponsor a sport dance to be held in the State gym. Bill Rose, chairman of the affair, has extended an invitation to all Ram supporters to attend. Admission will be twenty-five cents per person.

The fraternity has secured Lee Scarlett's eight-piece orchestra to supply the music. This particular band is composed of State's leading musicians and is very popular around the campus.

The policy of holding post-game dances was inaugurated by the Block "S" Society, and met with great success among both Staters and outsiders.

DEBATERS MEET STATE OCT. 26

Answering a challenge of the junior college Debating Society, San Francisco State College has agreed to engage in verbal combat on Tuesday, October 26, and Thursday, October 28.

"This is the first reply," Isabelle Sherrat, society secretary, said, "that we have received to challenges for debates that we sent to almost all the Northern California colleges. We hope to receive many more replies of the favorable nature that State sent us."

The two colleges will argue three questions: That the jury system should be abolished; that the American Federation of Labor is superior to the Committee for Industrial Organization, and that the United States should adopt a policy of strict neutrality toward all foreign world conflict.

Lloyd Luckmann, college forensics instructor, has not chosen the teams that will represent the junior college but has indicated that he will make his selections in the very near future.

Discussing the merits of the strike as a labor weapon was the topic of a debate held at the weekly meeting of the society yesterday in Room 462 at 2:30 o'clock. Dave Levy and Frank Bosl favored the strike, George Woodland and Elizabeth Rehbock opposed it. Anyone interested in joining the group should see Luckmann, Miss Sherrat, or come to the meetings which are held at the aforementioned time and place.

EXCURSION SOUTH TO SEE BULLDOG BATTLE RAM IN FAMED ROSE BOWL

Accommodations for a limited number of interested students who wish to travel south to see the Pasadena game on October 15 will be available on the streamlined "Daylight Limited" for the special round trip rate of $10.75, according to Dean Edwin C. Browne.

Rooters taking advantage of this opportunity to see the Ram-Bulldog encounter will travel on the same train with the team, leaving San Francisco at 8:00 o'clock on Friday morning, October 15, and arriving in the southern metropolis at 6:00 o'clock that evening.

Approximately twelve students can be accommodated for this unusual excursion. The rate is exclusive of meals and hotel, but these items will not be high as the trip will last but two days, since it is planned to return on the morning following the game, to arrive in San Francisco on Saturday evening.

All those interested in making arrangements for this trip should see Dean Browne or John Selig to secure their railroad tickets by Friday, October 8.

The exodus of the Ram rooters to Pasadena is reminiscent of the first trip made to Los Angeles by Stanford's famed "vowing sophomores" when both football players and supporters traveled on the same train and combined their efforts to score a stunning upset win over the favored USC Trojans despite the handicap of a train wreck.

A WORD TO THE WISE

On next Friday night the football team meets our arch rivals, San Francisco State College, in the traditional "Big Game" of our grid season.

It is only natural to suppose that feeling will run high in these few days preceding the encounter. "School spirit" usually reaches its maximum peak during the period of football hysteria. There will be planned rallies and dances and innumerable unplanned bull sessions to help you work off your over abundance of animal spirits.

Go to the colossal night rally which will be staged at State College tomorrow evening and yell your lungs out. Argue yourself and your listeners dizzy trying to convince them of the power of the Sweetmen inside the tackles and the ineffectiveness of the 'Gators' passing attack. Go to the game and shriek yourself into a condition of nervous collapse as you watch our Rams annihilate the feeble Staters. But, let it stop there.

Don't allow the spirit of moment to cloud your judgment and make you act like an absolute adolescent in the guise of pre-game spirit, as some of the more stupid souls of our campus did last year when they indulged in the extremely childish practice of slapping paint all over the property of rival institutions. Such actions are purely vandalistic, and add nothing but ill feeling to the healthy rivalry between the two colleges. Everyone should take a full part in the pre-game excitment, but please refrain from any painting soiree to Roberts Field.

UNDER COVER POLITICS

Many of our better commentaries on national affairs have noted that in the combination of much of the recent proposed legislation there is a clear yet not fully expressed intent to change our form of government.

Broadly, such legislation seems to aim a death blow at the states, to imply the degradation of the judiciary, and the remaking of the great regulatory commissions from quasi-legislative and quasi-judicial to clearly executive. There have been hints of a transformation of our Congress from an independent legislative body to a so-called "sounding and signing" board. There is talk of legislative measures that would check the power of our courts, of Congress, and of the States and give them all to a Federal governor upon whose absolute authority there would be no check this side of God, and from whose decrees there would be no appeal on earth.

Such a situation is commonly discussed by those who take the trouble to keep abreast of national affairs, but it is sad, nevertheless true, that the great bulk of our people do not know, and what is more important, don't care about the existence of such a condition. Most of us note the actions of Congress but we never take the trouble to try to connect the various trends of legislation into a coherent and logical result.

We are going to be the citizens of the United States in a period that present conditions indicate will be one of the most perilous in our history. The only hope of our government in these times of need is that its citizenry will be intelligent and far-sighted enough to understand vital political problems, so that their vote will be one that comprehends real issues at stake, and is not confused by the adroit use of silence and slickness so common to American politics.

One of the chief benefits from the years that you spend in college should be to teach you how to evaluate and distinguish intelligently the affairs of your government. Your education should put you above the herd who are bamboozled and cheated by clever politicians and enable you and the rest of your well-schooled generation to bring about a new era of integrity in American politics.

REBUKE

At a recent football rally, one of the speakers made the announcement: "The results of this contest will appear in the next edition of The Guardsman." Such, you might say, was news to the Editor.

The Editor realizes that The Guardsman is the newspaper of the entire student body, and that its ultimate purpose should be service to the college. The Editor and his staff are always ready for and happy at an opportunity to be of service to any student enterprise. But perhaps The Guardsman is a bit old fashioned. It still likes to be tendered common courtesy, even though it realizes that the time of student officers is very valuable.

If the organization sponsoring the contest had taken a moment to ask someone connected with the paper for cooperation in publicizing the event, they would have received everything they desired. But, to ignore completely the paper and its staff by taking it upon themselves to announce

Every so often we become the victim of a "cleaning up" complex that has been dwelling within us ever since then. Our most recent "attack" came upon us one day last week while browsing about down at "The Printers." Out came the broom and dust pan and off we went on a tangent of dust spreading and paper gathering. Next we fell upon our so-called Guardsman Picture File, which is anything but, and proceeded to throw away piles of stuff which will probably be wanted any day now, taking everything we deemed worthy to decorate the long barren walls of W. J. All of which is to explain to any chance dropper-inner just why The Guardsman office has suddenly blossomed into a very high class Rogues' Gallery. (We mean that the rogues are high class, not the gallery.) Anyway, now you know, or didn't you care?

It's wonderful the things that go on that no one knows about, and don't we wish that the gal who recently won a roller pin throwing contest wasn't a friend of ours so we could tell you all about it. Don't worry, Annabelle, we won't breath a word! And then there is that little red headed Women's Editor who has started pinning the names of current motion pictures on to members of the staff. Our Editor is known as "[illegible]," the Copy Editor is "Kid Galahad" and there are several other names which aren't quite so complimentary!

Pay Dirt

It has long been the habit of San Franciscans to complain at slight inconveniences which they must undergo. They complain because the weather is bad or because the street-car service is worse. They heckle the city's directors because graft exists or because a fog-horn blows too loud. Moreover they act as if no other metropolis is so afflicted. The time is now proper to inform them of conditions existing in another great city of these states united. The revelation now pending should force even the unconvincible Atherton of G-man fame to blush in shame that ever he even intimated that the city by the Golden Gate Bridge is inhabited by beings other than angels. The city about to be revealed to the reader is a cosy little haven of about 500,000 people, known as Kansas City, and snuggling within Missouri's sunny borders.

When first Thomas Joseph Pendergast, now more properly termed as "Boss," arrived in Kansas City, he was innocent and filled with ambition. (He still is ambitious.) At that time (1892) the Pendergast "machine" was still raw material nestling in the mind of a conscienceless man. The material is still "raw," but the whole has been assembled into a streamlined, supercharged limousine.

Founded on inequality and fostered by political patronage, the Pendergast system according to his own life story, has made of Kansas City a compact empire closed to the democratic ideals for which our forefathers gave up their lives.

Pendergast, in his autobiography, tells how, through an extensive organization of "Precinct Captains" and "Ward Heelers," he "appointed" the governor of Missouri. None of Missouri's senators are "elected" without the "Boss's" sanction.

Not only, it appears, is this domination evident in political circles, but also in every day living conditions. To illustrate concretely: Local hearsay tells that a certain carbonated beverage, which assertedly gives the "Pause that refreshes," and of which more than nine million bottles are sold daily, has been banned from Kansas City. Why? Because a certain other cola company incorporated in that locality has won the favor of the Pendergast interests. No monarch of history, autobiographically built, honored by "divine right," has ever ruled so completely his subjects.

Caesar lives; but where does Brutus tarry?

NOTE: The material for this article did not originate from the imaginings of the writer, but from Mr. Pendergast's autobiography which appeared recently in a St. Louis paper. Anyone wishing to corroborate the utterances set forth here can do so by inquiring at The Guardsman office where the paper is on file.

As it shrieks down from the sky.

And I'd like the feel of a steady wheel,
On a starlit, tropic night,
With the moon aglow, on the sea below;
A shimmering, silver light.

But alas! fair dreams, for the nearest it seems,
To a sea voyage, I make take,
Is the daily trek on a ferryboat deck
Each morning, I must make.

Presidential Patter

Hardly suffering, at this writing at least, a headache, which could be in any way comparable to the one which "Slippery" Madigan undoubtedly endured after his overdue shellacking at the hands of the Golden Bear, we too, must confess our troubles.

Aside from trying to renovate this column, and present something new and interesting in a way whereby the average college student would be inclined to read beyond the first paragraph, our pride and feelings have been hurt and wounded no end.

Thinking that we were doing him a great favor by announcing to our football team at a rally, and thereby to the world at large, that "Bobby" Fex had a date after the Marin game with a Kentfield "honey," we find, after a slight reversal of form, that we had made him appear somewhat ludicrous in the eyes of the pigskin gladiators. His reaction was totally unlike anything ever before encountered, and his language in some places was quite unintelligible!

The upshot of it all was, that when his intended date arrived at the dance after the game, things began to happen. Our "Bobby," true gentleman that he is, espying her, approached and proceeded to ask for the first and last dances. Almost overcome, she tilted her pert little nose to the ceiling, and refused to acknowledge his presence.

It seems that "Bobby" broke her heart when he thundered, in a most convincing fashion, over her favorite Marin heartbeat for the first touchdown of the game. Reminds us of a song entitled "Betty Co-ed." "She may have eyes of blue for the Mariners, lips of red for the batting-Rams, but only the icy stare for Bobby!"

For a pleasant and indulgent pastime, spend an evening at a Newman Club meeting, where at no extra charge, one can hear Messrs. Verducci and a certain president, whose name has been already mentioned too often, murder parliamentary law. Most certainly one of the funniest spectacles we have ever witnessed, their last use of parliamentary procedure was so humorous, that if Mr. Roberts didn't turn over in his grave, he couldn't possibly have authored the renowned "Rules of Order." A similar situation was encountered, when a minor war ensued at the first Peace Council meeting over said use of the aforementioned procedure.

It appeared, during the first few weeks of the semester, that the task of being editor would prove almost too much for Don Mix, what with his running around talking to himself, and calling up wrong telephone numbers. As to the latter affliction, we think he's cured. But for the former, most everybody would have us believe that he's still talking to himself! Speak for yourself, Mr. Mix! Of one thing we are all certain, and that is, Don can not be touched when it comes to turning out a great paper.

A few weeks ago, printed, as a satire on how to get things expeditiously accomplished, was a story about the executive council, written so humorously, and with so deft a touch, the entire college for awhile threatened to become "ex" council conscious. That's progress! But, if somebody would only tell somebody who presides over the executive council, we would be satisfied.

Doubtless you have been annoyed, haven't you, by some individual, who, having passed through grammar school, thinks himself an expert on education and where one should go to acquire it? "Where are you going?" he asks critically, and at the answer mutters something about "a snap" and then demands "Why don't you go to regular college?" If you explain that you intend to finish at some university, he cannot understand why you didn't go there in the first place, and if you are taking some course that requires two years only, he wants to know why you didn't go to some business college.

This type of person may be dismissed as a nuisance to be avoided, with, however, the earnest hope that he may someday have to battle his way through a junior college mid-term or final, and then see just how much of a "snap" they are. But even more obnoxious are those people (including well-meaning relatives) who think that they are qualified to choose a career for dear Mary or Gwendolyn or Sylvia.

It used to be, you know, that marriage was the one and only road open to a girl graduating from high school. Then business opened its doors to women, and the secretarial career added another pathway to be followed; thus in the minds of many people there are now but two courses to be taken once a high school diploma is placed in a feminine hand: the girl graduate could get married, or she could take up typing and shorthand until she could achieve the wedded state.

All this seems almost medieval and very narrow-minded, but to many women students it is very real. "What are you going to be, dear?" inquires a relative or family friend. "Oh, I'm going to be a nurse." (or an actress, teacher, writer, chemist, doctor, lawyer; it doesn't matter because nothing would please.) The well-meaning intruder then says, or remarks to someone who will repeat it to the potential victim, "Well, good heavens, why can't the girl take up typing and shorthand like everyone else!"

The danger of dabbling in other people's lives and hopes has been pointed out so often that at this point it seems only necessary to ask any fond relative or friend who may read this that remarks of an opinionated sort incur only resentment, and when the person to whom they are addressed finally succeeds in her chosen field of endeavor.

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

Written by a supposedly intelligent American, an article in a recent issue of a national commentary magazine aroused the ire of this columnist to no small degree. This touching bit of tripe deals with the "prestige of the United States." We would be the last person in the world to criticize anyone for attempting to praise, glorify, symbolize, or teach the value of American ideals and national pride, but this is too much. In this article, the author would have us believe that the prestige of the country depends on our going to war every time a bit of American property in a foreign country is damaged.

He further says, that having fought the Revolutionary War and the World War, "to make the world safe for democracy," Americans cannot tolerate any foreign nation which, in a purely private war of its own, destroys or endangers American property and lives.

If he is speaking for himself, his article is very beautiful and no doubt shows patriotism. However, when he includes the American public as holding the same view, we can only say that we doubt it. Why should the youth of America, and they're the ones who have to fight the wars, be stupid enough to want to lead with their chins in a war to protect the property of some unpatriotic capitalist, who leaves the United States, takes a wad of dough with him, and sets up his business in a foreign country, where it does our country no good at all.

It is very doubtful if the youth of America can be hoodwinked into fighting another "war to end all wars," on foreign soil, and against a bunch of scared kids who don't want to fight any more than they do. It is also highly probable, Mr. Author, whom we won't name for obvious reasons, that if you had to crawl on your belly in the mud, stick a slimy bayonet into some fellow you had nothing against, and maybe live through it all, to come home with a leg or an arm missing, you might not care whether we lost our national prestige, if only you didn't have to face those awful guns.

Prestige is probably a very wonderful thing to have, and we guess it's also very desirable to keep it, but we're darned if we wouldn't rather lose ours by sitting in the house and letting some fellow across the street call us names, than to keep it by crossing the street and letting the guy punch us full of holes.

Note: This subject of United States' intervention in foreign wars, as a result of so-called "incidents" is a timely topic. Having given our own view on the issue, this column would like to hear some of the opinions of the students. If you have an argument, for or against the subject, "The United States Should Go To War On Foreign Soil To Preserve Our Prestige" please send it in; we'd like to print some of them in this column. Keep them short though, about one hundred to one hundred and fifty words.

Startlingly adept at adjusting themselves to any environment are our college women. They think nothing of dressing their hair on the street cars, tinting their nails on the steps at Powell Street, knitting articles of dubious form, while carrying on a running fire of conversation on a crowded ferry boat, and performing a host of other little tasks, so dear and necessary to the heart of a female. Scorn them not, however, self-satisfied males, for we of the "stronger" sex have no doubt been observed doing things in public, which to the feminine eye seem just as irrelevant. How about it, ladies?

GRIDIRON GRUMBLINGS

The prospect of a post-season game with Ricks College leads us to present a little information regarding that institution. It is located, strangely enough, at Ricksburg, Idaho. Does that mean anything to you? We didn't think so; neither did it to us, so we inquired whether it was near any large city. "Oh, yes," was the answer, "to be sure, it is not far from the metropolis of Twin Falls."

"Oh," said we.

It looks as though the boys are going to have quite a time when they journey down to engage the Pasadena Junior College eleven in the historic Rose Bowl on October 15. The southerners have a program on tap for the occasion which includes a giant parade and other features. It would be a shame to repay this hospitality by handing the football squad a beating, but, then, sentiment has no place on the gridiron.

Inspection brings to light the fact that the Ram grid squad contains no players from outside of California, while the Bulldogs of San Mateo have five out-of-state players on their roster. These are drawn from such far-away spots as New York, Nebraska and Iowa. Well, as the Chamber of Commerce always says, California products cannot be surpassed.

Snapshot: Duke Worsham dashing about in front of Galileo frantically inquiring, "Has anyone got a screw-driver?" It turned out that Duke's massive iron brace was becoming wobbly, and couldn't be fixed without the proper tools. If any squad in the country beats California this season, it will come as a distinct shock to your correspondent. The Golden Bears at present appear to be well-nigh invincible, capable of winning in a walk from any of the opposition offered hereabouts (and that includes U. S. C.). Just the same, the Rams will be in the Rose Bowl before they will.

Other teams to watch: Pittsburgh in the east, Minnesota in the mid-west, Tennessee in the south, and Baylor and Rice in the southwest. Don't forget we told you so!

And did you ever hear of Bob Jones College? It's in Tennessee, and the president's name is, by some strange coincidence, Bob Jones.

RAMBLINGS

By ED FREDIANI

We had a touch of winter sports on the brain last weekend, and as a result we clumped on our mental skiis, started gliding swiftly along on our imagination, and hardly before we knew it our fancy had left the months of October and November in the background, and we found ourselves in the realm of King Snow, with his loyal subjects the Snowshoe, Toboggan, Ice-Skate, and Ski in attendance.

Of course with all the pigskin flying through the air now, it is hard to concentrate on the dim future, two whole months away, but we conceived the bright idea that perhaps enough students in the college would be interested in the growing pastime of winter sports to organize a skiing club or some other type of Snow Sport organization.

If any one is interested please contact the author (a very dubious title) of this column.

In the comparatively short space of two years, Coach Louis "Dutch" Conlan has risen to the top of the heap as a grid referee. The latest results of "Dutch's" fine work in the white knickers comes to us from a well known local sport scribe who claims that Conlan is the second best football official in the United States, placing him behind Tom Loutit, veteran officiator, who is considered the tops among the whistle brigade.

Once more batting the moths away from our sacred book of football statistics, we dig deep into the past and find the following all-time marks:

Most Points In One Season—James C. Leech (Virginia Military Institute), 210 points (1920).

Most Field Goals In One Season—Forest Peters (Montana Freshmen), 17 (1924).

Longest Run From Scrimmage—Wyllys Terry (Yale) 115 yds. (1884).

Extra Points By Place Kicks (one game)—Arlo Davis (Oklahoma), 23.

We remember well the East vs. West annual New Year's Day tussle, when the above mentioned Forest "Frosty" Peters split the goal posts twice with perfect drop kicks, one from almost midfield, to chalk up six points for the Eastern aggregation.

In one of the local paper's sport page, several days after the St. Marys-California contest, one of our more prominent pen pushers stated that Cal hadn't outplayed St. Marys so badly. To offer proof to this silly remark he further stated that California didn't make one sustained drive during the entire contest, while on the other hand, the Galloping Gaels had made their only tally by a sustained drive.

Looking back over the Statistics, we find that the Blue and Gold first string rang up a total of 140 yds. from scrimmage in the second quarter alone, which netted them 17 big points.

But we shouldn't be too sarcastic, because sports writers have to earn their money some way.

STUFF

By JERRY FLAMM

One of the most beautiful and tender friendships in our institution has gone on the rocks. We speak of none other than that Damon and Pythias companionship of Bob Fex and "Sad Sam" Pasqualette, the bearded varmint. No more will fingers be pointed at them to indicate to strangers an example of the good will and cheer in existence at Essef Jaeie. No more will "Sad Sam" clap his hands in joy as Fex heaves a touchdown pass, nor will his face light up with smiles and his eyes sparkle as he sees his buddie Fex come down the steps from class on "Trolley Hill." Instead, "Sad Sam's" head is bent low in sorrow. He is, speaking in the vernacular, "down in the dumps." Bewilderment and a dazed, puzzled expression are on his countenance. He walks but he does not hear. He looks but he does not see. Friends observe him anxiously and then cluck their tongues in sympathy.

The reason for the split-up is quite vague. When backed up against a wall by four of us and forced to shake the cow webs out of his brain, Pasquallette weakly threw his hands out in despair and said: "I dunno! S'help me, I don't!" Fex, however, was certain of his ground. "We're all through. Washed up. I never want to see him again. I didn't mind when he carved his initials in the seat at the theatre, nor when he cracked Brazil nuts with his teeth as the heroine slowly died," said Fex, "but when he, in a loud voice, asked how my measles were getting along and someone sitting nearby went out and got the manager, that was too much!"

Marin Mementos: The Marin outfit's three standouts as far as the Rams are concerned, were: Harold Johnson, the fleet little halfback, Johnny Allen, the aggressive, smart colored end, and Corky Marshall, brilliant guard . . . whether you noticed it or not, the reason Johnson made some of those yard gaining sweeps around our flanks was not so much his blinding speed, as the change of pace he used with it. Seeming to be already running at top speed, he would suddenly step on the gas and just zoom out of somebody's reach . . . overheard on the bench near the irrepressible Bill Fassler: "Hey, lookout you guys, I want a good seat. I have to rest before they put me in, don't I? Ah-h-h, move over before I punch you in your —— mouth! Hey, look, there's my blonde baby just coming in. WHAT'S DOIN', BLONDIE? Ah-h-h, she doesn't see me. I wonder where those other babes are that came to see me play? Think I'll bum up the river after the game. (Lee Eisan passes by). Hey, Lee, c'mon put me in, I'm hot! Tell Russ I'm raring tuh go, etc. etc." . . . Ray "Fat" Eglehofer, reputedly the slowest back on the varsity, was the fellow who nailed Johnny Allen from behind when the latter was off to the races in the third quarter . . . Andy Oddstead, who doesn't know his own strength, almost killed a couple of teammates during the last touchdown drive which ended on the Marin one-yard line when the final gun popped. He would come running back to the huddle, crack one mate a supposedly encouraging, but actually devastating, clout on the back, punch someone in the stomach which would make the recipient gasp for air, and then say, "Let's go!" while the six or seven guys he had mauled were weakly signaling for time out. . . . Marin had four tackles on the squad. As a result of the Santa Rosa "Paint Party" or "Fuller Fiesta," in which a group of Marin football players painted up the Santa Rosa Junior College buildings, two of them wound up in jail and subsequently out of school, and when Marin came out on the field there were but two . . . incidentaly, the Marin fellows would never have been caught up in Santa Rosa if it were not for the fact that on the way out of town they got into an automobile accident and the John Laws found some buckets of paint in the back seat. . . . Marin's football turnout this season numbered twenty-seven. . . . Duke Worsham, our honorary captain, personally thanked each player after the game for their part in the victory.

DON FROSH HAND GRIDDERS INITIAL SETBACK, 6 TO 0

Only Score Comes On Pass From Johnstone Late In Second Period

"It will take a tough outfit to score on the Rams this season," prophesied that tan-faced gentleman, Coach Russel Sweet, and his words evidently rang with wisdom, for it was a very tough U. S. F. Freshman aggregation that eked out a 6 to 0 win over the Powell Street Urchins after four quarters of tight defensive football.

The break that spelled defeat for the junior college came just after the start of the second quarter. It was fourth down, with the ball in the Rams' possession on their own 45-yd. stripe. Al MacDonald, halfback, dropped back in punt formation, the ball was snapped. The Green and Gold forward line surged forward, and Taylor, U. S. F. left tackle, blocked the kick, scooped up the bounding pigskin and flanked by two teammates started his gallop for the Red and White goal, with MacDonald in hot pursuit. According to all the laws of natural science, with two Hilltoppers ready to mow him down, MacDonald would have never made the tackle, but make the tackle he did, in the proverbial shoestring manner, both boys rolling to a stop on the Ram 18-yd. line.

Led by Sammy Johnstone, former all-city half-back from Polytechnic High School, the Don yearlings hammered their way down to the junior college 2-yd. line, where the count was first and goal to go. Then the Rams rose to new heights, by putting on a goal-line stand, that would make Bob Herwig and Johnny Meek, those tough boys from Cal, blush with envy. "Tip" Hamilton, playing defensive fullback, was just too much in the way for the Dons, and as a result the Sweetsters took the ball on downs on their own 6¼-inch line.

TELESMANIC SCORES

On first down MacDonald kicked out to his own 30 and the ball was returned by Johnstone to the 26. After two slants off tackle, Johnstone faded back and tossed a perfect pass into the arms of Telesmanic, Don end, who had sneaked down the sideline and maneuvered behind the Ram halfback. The rest was simple, with Telesmanic trotting the remaining 5 yards over the last chalk line. The try for point was blocked, and so ended the scoring for the evening.

The outcome of the game shouldn't be considered a blot on the Ram escutcheon, for this season's freshman outfit is probably the best group of yearling cleatsters that ever tore up the turf for the Green and Gold. Visintan and Spearman, guards on the Hilltoppers' eleven, were outstanding in the Don's forward wall.

"Moon" Burke played sixty minutes of bang-up football for the junior college, and looked to be the best lineman in the Red and White forward wall. Bob Lee, freshman end, was covering punts beautifully, and cut down the safety man on several occasions with vicious tackles. Merv Weiner and Capt. Will Dolman held down the tackles berths in a creditable manner. Weiner's only bad point at the present is his inability to go the whole distance, but he will probably overcome this as the season progresses.

Joe Guedet, veteran end, played his usually stellar game, despite a cut over the eye, as a result of a play early in the first quarter.

In the backfield MacDonald, Fex, Fassler, and Verducci packed the mail for the junior college, with Olsen, Lennes, Boitano and "Bud" Eglehofer clearing the way for the ball-packers. "Bullet Bob" Fex lived up to his title by tossing the oval in his "Fireball" style, and connecting twice, once for 13 yards and the other for 5 yards.

Defensively, the Rams are playing a mid-season brand of football, and in all probability they won't be beaten very bad by any team on the schedule. If the kicking and offense can be smoothed out, the Urchins will have an outfit that will go a long way toward the league championship. Russ Sweet has done a fine job in whipping a bunch of green footballers into a strong defensive machine.

Soccer Team is Improved; Flynn Proves Wildman

By ED FREDIANI

It looks like the boys on the soccer outfit have taken a new lease on life. They started the season with a good offense, but their defense was as shaky as the grass skirt on a hula dancer. Tom "Smiling Boy" Wilson realizing that a team is as strong as its weakest part, began immediately after the first disastrous contest, to build a defense that would make the forward line of the team, the busiest gents on the field instead of the goal keeper. The Ram goalkeeper, who has been kept hopping like an Indian doing a war dance, was getting more business than a theatre cashier on Bank Nite, and as the law of averages hasn't been repealed yet, plenty of the chances were chalked up on the red side of the Rams' ledger. In other words, in the first contest of the year, against Lowell High, the Cardinals marked up five tallies.

But this is all different now, and the Ram goalie, heaves a sigh of relief, as he gazes on the rapidly improving fullbacks and halfbacks. Vincent "Kewpie Doll" Zuardo, he of the barrel like chassis, and "Wild Bill" Flynn, he of the tremendous boot, are developing into first class fullbacks, the "Kewpie", a veteran of last year's title holders, is finally rounding into the form that made him an outstanding fullback last season. Flynn, a newcomer to the squad, and playing his first season on an organized team, is probably the most improved player on the entire squad.

Three weeks ago Flynn was kicking as if he had a bad case of housemaid's knee, but today he has a boot that is the envy of even Tom Wilson himself. It has been rumored, although the whisperings were quickly and quietly hushed in order to keep the rest of the teams in the league, that Flynn, becoming angered in a practice session last week, took his vengeance out on the ball, with dire results. The ball was rolling along the ground toward the enraged Flynn, who rushed forward and took a super-tremendous kick at the ball. There was a smack of leather meeting leather, and everyone waited to see the ball come zooming into the ether, but the ball was incapable of any zooming, for "Wild Bill's" kick had been so terrific, that he had speared the ball on his foot like a marshmallow on a stick at the Boy Scout Campfire. The follow through had sent his entire foot through both sides of the ball, and there he stood with the ball encircling his ankle, and a sheepish grin on his face. If you don't believe this little episode, ask Walt "Prince Vodka" Leporsky, the squad's Russian ambassador, who swears by the Russian Crown Jewels, that the whole thing is true.

But to get away from all this dilly dallying, we stick our head out of the window take a deep breath of San Francisco's liquid air, shake our head vigorously, and then back to our "Tritewriter".

Coach Wilson, besides building a strong pair of fullbacks, has developed a group of halfbacks, that bolster the Rams' defense to such an extent, that already the boys are thinking of the championship, that was unthought of a month ago. Bob Campbell, Ellard Taylor, "Sandy" Lim, "Ole South" Pritchard, and the latest addition to the squad Jack Palsos, are all fighting for the three halfback spots, with the first three mentioned, holding down the first string berths at the time of this writing.

In the forward line fighting Jimmy Fahn, who returned to the college less than two weeks ago, and Leo Johnson are the two main scoring threats of the Rambunctious Rams. Mike Klebanoff, all-conference wing, and Milton Latz, smooth-playing forward, will hold down the flank positions. This leaves one position wide open with Jimmy Mull and "Tiger" Stokes, on the inside track for the job.

"The team", says Coach Tom, "is impoving by leaps and bounds, and we'll be in there fighting for that crown every inch of the way." When asked how he thought this squad stacked up with last year's title holders, a faraway look came into his eyes, and from the way he started out we thought he would talk all afternoon.

"Last season's champions," began Tom, "were one of the smoothest working aggregations that I have ever seen. Why, do you realize that those boys had an offense that rolled up an average of nearly five goals per game? If the team had been a football outfit, they would have been labeled a Wonder Team, and they certainly deserved that title. There were so many individual stars on the team, that no one was outstanding, that is, among his teammates. They had that spirit of confidence, that is so important. Best of all, they had the ability to play first class soccer for 90 minutes, and they could play just as easily or just as hard as the occasion demanded, always holding in reserve that extra ounce of energy that so often held them in good stead.

Flamm Competes In Regatta Next Sunday Afternoon

By JERRY FLAMM

With definite announcement made that a special crew race involving the junior college, U. S. F., the Wheel Club, and San Mateo Junior College will be held Columbus Day in connection with the annual water carnival at Aquatic Park, plans are being made to hold practices for the local crew before the holiday arrives. Anxious to avenge the close defeat they suffered last year when the Rams put on a "garrison finish" to come down in front and win the Championship Cup, the U. S. F. boat is reportedly engaged in early training for the event under their coach, Bill Lenhart. The Ram coach, Jack Gaddy, who guided the oarsmen to their first California Collegiate Oarsman's Association title last spring, is optimistic concerning the chances to repeat last year's victory.

"With many of the men from last term's championship twelve still in school, we should be able to seriously withstand any serious challenges next October 12th," Gaddy said. "With Jerry Flamm giving us the advantage of experienced power and a rhythmic stroke, I think that we can win. I only trust that he will be available, but of course I realize that most of his time is devoted to publishing the college paper, The Guardsman."

Other men available to support Flamm are Merv Weiner, Carl Brogger, Chris Buckley, Art Nelson, Tip Hamilton, Elmer Hubacher, Bob Carotto, Harold Wagstaff, Bill Schoenfeld, and Ty McHugh. Don Mix will also be there.

Block SF Society Chooses Officers

Holding its first meeting of the semester, the college Block "SF" Society convened last Tuesday afternoon, September 21, for the purpose of electing officers and outlining the year's program.

Election results show that Duke Worsham, injured football star, was chosen as president, Gus Kotta, basketball ace, was named as vice-president, and Willie Dolman, giant tackle, was selected for the treasurer's post. The group also elected Joe Guedet, all-conference end, as Executive Council representative and Raymond Egelhofer and Sims Hamilton as members of the athletic council.

President Preston Warren Worsham announced that the next meeting will be tomorrow at 2:00 in the afternoon in the Galileo cafeteria at which time plans for the long-promised Block show will be discussed.

Shin-Kickers Win Contest By Fluke

By virtue of a freakish accident, the Ram soccer team last week emerged from their contest with Mission High School with a 1-0 victory.

During a determined assault on the Mission goal, an unidentified Ram gave the ball a tremendous kick, with the intention of sending it between the goal-posts. Alas, he seemed destined to disappointment for the spheroid soared toward the sidelines. At this critical moment, one of the Missionites obligingly shoved his head into the path of the ball, deflecting it squarely between the posts.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

Renewing the feud between women and men volleyball players of the college, Ellen Cumming, volleyball manager, accepted a challenge from Don Mills, representing the men's team, and a game has been tentatively scheduled on October 21 at 4 o'clock. The men's team will again be fortified by Dean Browne of "I could have won but my team held me back," fame. The momentous contest will be open to spectators and men with enough fortitude to face the feminine team are requested to see either Don Mills or Dean Browne.

Members of the tennis club will have an opportunity to see stars in action on October 6 at the Palace of Fine Arts when Don Budge and Gottfried Von Cramm, recent Davis Cub finalists, will stage an exhibition match. Several other important matches are also scheduled.

* * * *

Our selection as to most strenuous, and one of the most exciting of women's sports is hockey which is held twice a week at Funston Field. After watching girls race madly down the field with hockey clubs in hand, we have come to the conclusion that we will stick to writing about hockey rather than participating in it.

A sports class in which the members have shown an amazing amount of improvement, is the beginning tap dancing class. From a pounding, awkward group of beginners, the class has been transformed into a rhythmical unit.

Becoming interested through practice in their Freshman Activities classes, enough Freshman co-eds have signed for WAA volleyball to form a complete Freshman team. This means, of course, that in the near future there will be some fast Freshman-Sophomore contests. According to Bertha Keller, volleyball instructor, the Freshmen have unusual skill and spirit and the Sophomores are warned to be careful or they may experience the ignominy of a defeat by Freshmen.

Upon observing the badminton class the other day we were impressed with the agility with which the contestants knocked the shuttlecocks back and forth. Those gals can have a job as fly-swatters extraordinary any day now.

And here is another reminder of the WAA initiation luncheon to be held at the Galileo faculty cafeteria at 1 o'clock October 7. The cost of attending is 40c and tickets may be purchased from WAA managers or at the gym office at Galileo. All WAA members are urged to attend the luncheon and those who have gym classes at this hour will be excused from their class.

The tennis team acquired a very diplomatic and competent person when they elected Virginia Lum as manager. She accosted us the other day with a mercenary look in her eye:

"You're coming to the WAA luncheon aren't you?"

"Well I . . ."

"You will have to attend the luncheon to write it up."

"Can't I . . ."

"Why, what would the luncheon be without the sports reporter?"

"Do you really think it's that vital?"

"Sure. I'm selling tickets. Forty cents please . . ."

A member of the most exclusive club at college is Gloria Swicegood, WAA president. She is the sole remaining member of the Block Society. No one disagrees with Gloria; she has all the say.

To spur her archers on to bigger and better efforts, Verrel Weber, archery instructor, has begun posting the scores of the four archers with the highest ratings.

RAMS TO CLASH WITH STATEMEN ON FRIDAY NIGHT

Redmen Given Pre-Game Advantage On Staters But Outcome Toss-Up

By DICK OXTOT

Eleven battering Rams charging into eleven snapping, snarling Alligators! Eleven men garbed in white and crimson doing their savage best to smash down eleven men clad in purple and gold so that an oval spheroid can be toted across a chalk line! This will be no ordinary football game. It will be a brawl between two teams which would rather win this one than any other on either's schedule. It is an engagement which has already become traditional, although one of the contestants is only three years old. The scuffle, of course, pits Russ Sweet's rampant Rams against those gridders from the institution on Buchanan Bluff, San Francisco State College, at Roberts Stadium Friday night at 8 o'clock.

The meeting will be the third grid battle between the feuding rivals, and the games are squared at the present time. The Rams took the 1935 tilt, 32 to 6, and the Gaters lifted last season's contest 2 to 0.

The Gaters, who sometimes refer to themselves as the Golden Tide, point with pride to last year's upset win and long for another victory over the Rams. Your correspondent watched the Gaters lose their first two contests this season, and arrived at the natural conclusion that they must raise their standard of play several notches if they hoped to turn the trick this time. This is apparently just what they have done, however, for, while the Rams were being stopped by U. S. F. Frosh last Friday night, the Gaters were scoring their first victory over Chico State, 13 to 12.

LACK LETTERMEN

The Gater team, originally slated to be the best in State's history, found itself, at the opening of the season, lacking numerous lettermen who had been counted on by co-coaches Hal Harden and Dan Farmer. For various reasons the following players were either unable to cavort on the gridiron or did not return to school: Bill Ferem, center; Bill Abbey, quarterback; Gordon Thomas, end; Hal Doell, guard; Gordon Bolander, half; Bill Plutte, tackle; Billy Hammond, half; Dick Quarg, end; Dave Schiller, half; Hank Summers, end; Milt Scharetg, guard; Pete Pedroni, half, and Harry Holloway, tackle.

Despite this unexpected shortage, State's lineup is formed from a nucleus of veterans, rounded out by a sprinkling of freshmen stars, the best of which appear to be Al Gomez, halfback and fullback, and Art Jarl, tackle.

GOMEZ GOOD

Stone is greatly improved at left end, but Jackson is not equal to Chet Phillips, who played the right flank last year. The tackle and guard positions lack the reserves of last season, while Ferem is missed at center. Al Thompson, who has stepped into the position left by Abbey, has done a creditable job of backing the line and barking signals. The scrappy red-head is also a nifty drop-kick artist. In Freshman Gomez State has finally found a player to spell Bill Harkness at the fullback post, and when he is placed at half, the Gaters present two capable triple-threats. Gomez looks particularly good tossing passes while running to his right, threatening an end sweep.

Harkness is a classy all-round back, but he may not look so good unless State's blockers display more potency than they have to date. Most of State's hopes rest on the passing of Gomez and Harkness, and the booting of Harkness. The latter should outkick Al McDonald of the Rams.

Staters certain to see action early in the contest are Bob Kelnhofer, quick-starting half; Claude Hanrahan, tackle, and Dick Osborne, rugged quarterback. Art "Scooter" Marden, a pint-sized speed burner, is held in reserve. Once past the line of scrimmage Marden is tough to bring down, but his lack of size is a handicap on pass defense. California Aggies' winning touchdown pass was completed over Marden.

SAME RAMS

Little need be said of the Rams themselves. An account of Friday night's game with U. S. F. freshmen appears in this issue of The Guardsman and the lineup is unlikely to undergo any important changes. The Ram line, composed of Bob Lee or Joe Guedet, and El Pierce, ends; Will Dolman and Merv Weiner, tackles; Randy Osborne and "Moon" Burke, guards, and Mel Peter-

PEACE COUNCIL STARTS STUDENT COMMENT

Dear Editor:

I was one of the students at the recent meeting, such as it was, of the San Francisco Junior College Peace Council. It was disappointing, to say the least, to attend such a publicized meeting and waste a perfectly good lunch hour listening to everybody orate on the Council's Constitution. In short, the meeting was a farce; the management was poor; it took an hour to approve the name, define the membership, and decide how many officers their Council should have. As the approved Constitution now stands, the Council can not even elect officers. Such a Constitution will certainly fail to be approved by the Executive Council; consequently, the same thing will have to be taken up at the next peace meeting with no prospect of any better results.

Evidently I am not the only one who was disgusted with the whole affair, for I have heard that the German Club, the Music Club, the Rifle and Pistol Club, and the Spanish Club intend to withdraw their representatives from the Peace Council.

All the "dickering" and lack of management makes me wonder if I want to belong to the Council or not. I am certainly in favor of peace, but I don't want to give my support or my club's support to an unworkable, pointless organization such as the Peace Council demonstrated itself to be at its last meeting.

"DISGUSTED"

Mr. Editor:

The Rifle and Pistol Club thought that you might be interested in publishing this open letter to the Peace Council.—G. D.

To the S. F. J. C. Peace Council:

Although the members of the Rifle and Pistol Club are vitally interested in world peace, we feel that as a recreational club we have no right to a representation in the Peace Council. We want to emphasize the fact that we are in sympathy with all authorized peace movements, but because of our club's nature and our limiting constitution, we cannot continue to send representatives to the meetings of the Peace Council. The interested members of the Rifle and Pistol Club, however, will undoubtedly continue to attend your meetings on their own initiative.

S. F. J. C. Rifle and Pistol Club.
(Signed)
George Dieser, President.

Dear Editor:

It is well to advise stud nts and faculty members alike that owners of automobiles are responsible for accidents occurring to the occupants of their cars. Car drivers or owners who transport students either voluntarily or otherwise immediately place themselves as defendants in the case of a law suit or claims for accidents or damages. Over-crowded cars are also increased risks and it might be well to check up on insurance policies to see if the policy is voided in the event the driver has overloaded his car or in any way has not complied with some technicality frequently overlooked by drivers and owners.

what will be contained in the next paper smacks of insolence.

It is quite possible that the matter was merely an oversight on the part of the group which was sponsoring the event, and in that case the trouble can be laid to incompetence rather than lack of respect.

These remarks are not intended as a vindictive tirade against the particular individuals who are guilty in this particular case, and it is firmly believed that they will be above taking offense at something that is said in the interest of gaining a fuller cooperation between The Guardsman and various student groups.

MARKSMEN VIE FOR PLACES ON TEAMS

Starting this Saturday morning, October 9th, and continuing for four Saturdays, the Galileo range will be open from 9:00 to 11:30 o'clock for team tryouts, according to William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college rifle teams. "The range will be open to all who care to try out for any of the teams," Hancock said. "Any and all persons making a 45 average at the prone position in the elementary class, will be considered as potential candidates for the Rifle squad," he continued.

Gail Hanna, Rifle Club vice-president, pointed out the advisability of joining the Rifle and Pistol Club. "Although team tryouts are open to anyone, members of the Rifle and Pistol Club receive their ammunition at a special rate, besides having an opportunity to take part in many social activities, and to become members of one of the college's most popular and active clubs," she said.

"The list of hours for firing on the range is now available, All firing will be done in the afternoon, except for Saturday morning team firing.

Monday—3:00 to 7:00—advanced class only.

Tuesday—3:00 to 4:00—anyone. 4:00 to 7:00—elementary class only.

Forum To Discuss Penal System Fri.

Choosing the penal system for its next subject of discussion, the College Forum will meet Friday night, October 22, at the home of Nancy Ross, 25 La Plazuela Street.

Doris Speroni will advocate a penal system of leniency and education as opposed to the present American method of treating criminals, hardened and otherwise, which William Brown will uphold. Interest in the topic is promoted by recent outbreaks in Folsom and Alcatraz prisons.

"We had a very interesting meeting last week," John Healy, Forum chairman, said, "discussing the United States peace policy in the Orient. Roger Ranck and Louis Garcia presented the argument for international cooperation and isolation, the discussion from the group was invigorating and informative. The next meeting should have a similar effect. Anyone interested in the topic or in the activities of the Forum club is invited to join, all that you have to do is to come up to a meeting, we would be delighted to have you."

Astronomers Trek To Mt. Hamilton

Under the auspices of the Astronomical Society of the college, a 75-mile excursion will be made to the Lick Observatory on Mount Hamilton, Saturday, October 9, according to Lloyd Berman, instructor of astronomy and faculty member in charge.

All astronomy students and their friends are invited to make the trip, which will be by means of automobiles, with students sharing the expenses of the car in which they ride. Persons making the trip will meet in front of the main branch of the public library, McAllister and Larkin Streets, at 2 o'clock. They will bring their own suppers, as no eating facilities are available on the mountain.

The group will arrive in time to view the extraordinary sunset from the summit. After dark, the guests will have an opportunity to observe celestial objects through the great 36-inch refracting telescope, and the 12-inch instrument. During the intervals in which members of the party are awaiting their turns to go into the dome, a member of the observatory staff will point out and describe, in the open air, the principal features of the evening sky and the particular objects that are being viewed through the telescopes.

Students desiring to make the trip should fill out a questionaire which may be secured from Dr. Berman.

son or Jack DuPosse, center, will outweigh the State forward wall. Position for position, the Rams appear to have a decided edge at one end and at both guards. State's only definite advantage is at center, with Duke Worsham still hors de combat.

The Rams have more backfield threats with Al McDonald, Johnnie Verducci, Bob Fex, Woody Lennes and Wes Olson carrying the mail behind the blocks of Ray Egelhofer—also greater reserve strength. The Rams in fact look to be two touchdowns better than the Gaters—on paper. But the speedy improvement of the Gaters was clearly proved in their Chico triumph, and, riding the crest of their victory wave, they are liable to be at the top of their momentum when they face Russ Sweet's lads.

College Dance Set; Honors High Frosh

With the entire student body invited to participate, the college Social Committee will sponsor a dance honoring the High Freshman Class on Saturday evening, October 16, according to Caroline Orginos, Associated Student vice-president and Social Committee head.

"The dance is to be held at the Women's City Club," Miss Orginos said, "and it will be an informal affair. Women are asked to wear street length dresses and the men to wear suits. No sports clothes will be allowed. We are holding the dance on a Saturday night for the special benefit of students who live across the bay and find it difficult to get home, dress and come back to the city after a hard day of classes."

Members of the social committee include Misa Orginos, Lorraine Haffmeyer, Norma Parent, Gene Blumenthal, Don Mills and Al Williams and the faculty advisors are Margaret Daugherty, Ruth Gavin, Alfred Agosti and Edwin C. Browne.

"For this particular dance," Miss Orginos added, "the main committee has been divided into several smaller committees. Gene Blumenthal and Don Mills are in charge of selecting an orchestra, Norma Parent in charge of the ballroom and the punch and I am attending to the bids for the affair."

Week Remaining In Omicron Contest

Little over a week remains for students to submit entries to the essay contest sponsored by Omicron Phi Pi, Economics Honor Society. All those who wish to enter the contest are urged to submit their papers as quickly as possible, and not to put it off until the last day. The latest possible date of acceptance has been set for October 15.

Qualifications for the contest are that the student must write one hundred words on the subject: The Influence of Our New School Plan On Our Campus Societies, with any one being eligible to try. First prize winner will be tendered a sum of two dollars cash and a surprise, and a theater ticket awarded to the second place winner. All entries are being handled By Dr. Michael Zarchin, Omicron Phi Pi faculty adviser.

Program Changes

All program changes must be made on or before Friday, October 8, urges Paul Mohr, Registrar. Students that drop courses after this date will receive a failure mark. Cinches will be sent out at mid-term periods and the student will receive an F for his final grade.

...CLUBS...

Omicron Phi Pi Gains Fame In College Circles

Omicron Phi Pi, the college's newest honor society, is rapidly taking its place prominently among club circles in the college, according to its leading members. Since the start of the school year, many applications have been forwarded to join, and last week three new candidates were checked as to their eligibility, by the Committee on Acceptance, and passed. Word has also been received that instructors, as well as students, are desirous of taking an active part in Omicron Phi Pi. Lloyd D. Luckmann, instructor in Jurisprudence, is the latest member of the faculty to signify his intention of joining the society.

In an effort to bring to the mind of those students the importance of such an organization, and all the benefits that will accrue to them, William Goss, Political Science instructor, has been checking on the eligibility of those who have majored in at least six units of Economics. As a result of his investigation, many new names have been submitted to the committee on acceptance, which is composed of I. Zangor, Charles Vaughn, and Eugene Cramer. The following students whose records in Economics are sufficiently high to qualify them for entrance into Omicron Phi Pi are, Fred Wright, Daniel Welchers, Joseph Tudor, William Switzer, Harry Leong, Harold Kreutz, Karnig Kenchelian, Fred Hornblower, Allen Baldwin, and Gus Boomer. Those approved last week by the committee were, Edward Gerrard, William Simonds, and Thomas Parkinson.

Original plans were for initiation ceremonies to be conducted last Friday, at Galileo High School, but because of all the extensive business at hand, that could not be delayed, the committee was unable to make the necessary preparations. Consequently, the initiation has been postponed, but it will be held at a very early date to be announced later. At the same time, the postponing of initiation ceremonies will enable a much larger group to be sworn in.

Plans for a ceremonial dinner for new members are making headway, but it has not been decided exactly where the dinner will be held. It is usually conducted about three weeks after initiation ceremonies and will take place in one of the city's leading down town restaurants.

Many favorable replies from different junior colleges throughout the state have been received by Omicron Phi Pi in response to formal letters of invitation to form such a society, which were sent out to three different institutions. It is expected that as soon as a few signify their intentions of installing an Omicron Phi Pi chapter, other schools will fall in line with the organization that San Francisco Junior College pioneered.

Catholic Group Planning Dance

Announcement of plans for a dance to be held on November 20 was the chief business of the third meeting of the college Newman Club, which was held last Monday evening at St. Mary's Cathedral, according to President Bob Fex.

Details as to the place and type of dance have not been fully worked out as yet, he said, but definite information would be available next week.

The Newman Club is one of the largest and most active organizations within the college and present plans indicate that the dance will be one of the semester's gala affairs.

Many famous athletes of the college are included in the club's roster such as John Verducci, Bob Lee, Bill Fenster, Bud Weikers, and Tom Burke and they have pledged themselves to work in the interests of the affair's success, Fex announced.

The next meeting of the Newman Club will be on Monday, October 18, in the Club rooms at the Cathedral.

Music Club Plans Hallowe'en Fete

Bobbing apples, slithering ghosts, witches riding on broomsticks, pumpkin faces glaring at you from unsuspected places, fantastic figures, all sound like a lot of fun, and they will be when the Music Club gives its annual Hallowe'en party. Plans for this gigantic event, which Bob Scott promises, is going to be one of the outstanding social highlights of the school term, were discussed by the club at its meeting last Thursday evening. Kay Warner, popular and versatile president of the organization, declares nothing definite as to date or place has yet been arranged but more will be heard about it in a later edition of The Guardsman.

Also on the calendar for fall activities are the concerts of Galla Curci and the Vienna Choir Boys, which the Music Club will attend as a group. With as interesting a program as this, Miss Warner feels that all music lovers will need no second urging to attend.

Bob Scott's vocalization of Tannhauser's "Evening Star" at the last get-together was creditably rendered, and as usual, community singing was an important feature in the evening's entertainment.

Scott's home at 2447 19th Avenue will be the scene of this bi-weekly gathering on Wednesday, October 13th, at 7:30 o'clock and Kay Warner promises an unusual as well as enjoyable session.

German Society Enjoys Dinner

"A very enjoyable evening." These words describe the feelings of the members of the college German Club, who attended a very successful dinner last Friday evening, October 1st. The dinner was held at The Three Musketeers Restaurant, and during the meal German was spoken.

The next meeting is to be held Friday evening, October 15th. The group will meet at the Residence Club for dinner, and then will go to the Clay Theater to see a German picture.

Students who are interested in the cultural life of Germany, are again invited to join the German Club. They are requested to see Marie Bode, Evelyn Tennis, or Walter Thompson for details.

Beta Phi Holds Dinner Tonight

Serving to introduce the new pledges to the regular members, the semi-annual banquet of Beta Phi will be held this evening at Veneto's Cafe, according to the group's president, Alfred Coffman.

Plans for the dinner have been handled by the fraternity officers who, besides Coffman, include Hugh Waite, Bruce Bolton and Sylvester MacAtee.

Faculty members who have been invited to attend are Franklin Sewell, Alden Smith, Edward Sandys and Lloyd Luckmann, it was announced.

The pledges who will be introduced at the banquet are Joe Meeko, Nick Markov, Bob Kantner and Bob Peterson.

Army-Navy Club Plans Assembly

Working on plans for an appropriate initiation ceremony, the college Army-Navy Club held its second meeting of this semester last Wednesday evening. Plans for the coming Navy Day Assembly, and for the acceptance of new members were discussed, but are not yet ready for publication, according to Walter Thompson, club secretary.

The rough-house initiation will take place during the daytime, Wednesday, October 20th, and will be followed by a formal ceremony and banquet that evening.

Membership is open to students who have been connected with some branch of the armed forces of the United States, including ROTC units, or who are enrolled in, or have successfully completed a course in naval or military science in an institution of collegiate grade. They must be sponsored by two active members of the Army-Navy Club. Candidates, who believe that they are eligible, are again requested to see Walter Thompson, George Dieser, or Ronald Smith.

Friday evening, October 15th, is the date set for the next meeting of the club, to be held at 2320 California St.

Members who were here last semester may be interested in knowing the present address of John Stewart, who is now enrolled at Stanford. He is staying at 263 Churchill in Palo Alto.

HIGH FRESHMEN DANCE SET FOR SATURDAY EVE.

Social Committee Plans Novelties for Gathering Slated at Women's Club

Featuring novel bids and the music of the Mad Hatter orchestra, plans for the Social Committee sponsored High Freshman Dance have now been completed, according to Caroline Orginos, vice president of the Associated Students and chairman of the college Social Committee.

Set for next Saturday evening, October 16, the dance is to be held at the Women's City Club and will be an informal affair. Miss Orginos stated that all women attending wear street length dresses and all men come in suits.

"As we are holding this dance on a Saturday night," Miss Orginos said, "we expect to have a larger crowd than at any other dance this semester. This Saturday night arrangement was planned especially for students who live across the bay and find it impossible to attend Friday night dances, so we expect to see all the commuters out in full force."

"We have planned something very novel in the way of bids," she continued, "and with our fine orchestra and the large crowd we are expecting, there is no reason why the dance should not be successful. Admission, as usual, will be by one student body card per couple and the dance will start at 9 o'clock. The Women's City Club is located at 465 Post Street and should not be confused with the Western Women's Club at 609 Sutter Street."

COMMITTEES NAMED

Heading committees for the affair, according to Miss Orginos, are Don Mills, AMS president, who had charge of selecting an orchestra, and Norma Parent, AWS president, who is in charge of the hall and the punch. Miss Orginos supervised the selection of the dance bids.

The Hostess Committee will be composed of Miss Orginos, Miss Parent, Mills, Gene Blumenthal, Associated Students president, Lorraine Haffmeyer, Associated Students secretary, and Al Williams, college yell leader, representing the Social Committee. The High Freshman class will be represented by Muriel Mills, who will act as High Freshman president in the absence of Hugh Waite who has left college, and Sylvester MacAtee and Bruce Bolton, secretary and treasurer, respectively of the High Freshmen.

FACULTY SPONSORS

Serving as faculty sponsors for the affair will be Annamarie Dolfs and George Green, High Freshman advisers, and Margaret Daugherty, Ruth Gavin, Alfred Agosti and Edwin C. Browne, adviser of the Social Committee.

"I hope to see every student of the college present at the dance," Miss Orginos said, "The fact that the dance is being given in honor of one particular class does not mean that students in all four classes at the college will not be welcome.

Peace Council Holds Meeting At High Noon

Frederick Vast Selected For Presidency Of College Group

Holding the last of its organizational meetings, the college Peace Council will meet today in Room 404 at 12 noon, in the Powell Street building.

Election of officers and consideration of activity for the semester is the business slated for today's conclave. The constitution and by-laws have already been adopted. Fred Vast was elected president of the council at last week's meeting, defeating John Healy for the post. Vice-president, secretary-treasurer, and corresponding secretary, are the other positions that have still to be filled.

After a lengthy discussion on what should constitute voting membership in the organization, the following article of the by-laws was adopted:

"Voting membership of the last month of the preceding semester shall constitute the membership of the first meeting of the succeeding semester; further, any member who shall not be present for two successive meetings shall be suspended; any new member shall have to attend two consecutive meetings before becoming a voting member."

The membership article of the constitution reads:

"Membership in this council shall consist of two representatives from every organization interested in peace and similarly interested individuals."

Dealing with parliamentary procedure, the following article was incorporated in the by-laws:

"Roberts' Rules of Order shall be the parliamentary authority of this council subject to special rules which may be adopted."

Two organizations, the Women's Athletic Association, and the Rifle and Pistol Club have withdrawn from the council.

So far the council meetings have been labeled "slow and dry." Leaders of the organization explain that this has been so because of the nature of the business discussed, adoption of the constitution and by-laws, but now that this will be out of the way interesting and informative meetings will be the rule as will the activity of the group.

Anyone who is interested in peace is urged to attend the meeting at noon today and join the Peace Council.

Movie Tomorrow Aft. At Galileo

Salvaging ships' cargoes will be shown in film tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 o'clock in the Galileo Auditorium. This movie is intended particularly for Carl Stough's class in insurance, which has just completed the subject of Marine Insurance, but Stough believes it should be of general interest to all students.

The pictures, which were filmed by A. R. Bowhay, manager of the Marine Claims Department of the Fireman's Fund Insurance Company, show the gold salvaging operations employed on the wreck of the ship "Columbia," which was lost off the coast of Lower California, of the "Ohian," wrecked in

"WHERE ANGELS FEAR TO TREAD"

Stepping in where even the more durable angels would hesitate to tread, members of The Guardsman staff, armed to the teeth with necessities of finer writing, ventured beneath the sagging roof of the old county jail, only building at present on the college site at Balboa Park, commonly known as the land of lost illusions, and brought forth this issue of our illustrious sheet.

NYA Students Will Receive Compensation For Injuries

That college students will get compensation for injuries received while working on NYA jobs was revealed by the Works Progress Administration in a letter with the following excerpt:

"The United States Employees Compensation Commission has extended the benefits of compensation coverage to all youths rendering services to the United States under the National Youth Administration and receiving payments from the United States for such services performed in educational institutions.

"Any youth sustaining a traumatic injury (harm or damage to the physical structure of the body and shall not include disease in any form except as it naturally results from a traumatic injury) during the performance of his duties for the National Youth Administration is entitled to medical, surgical and hospital services at the U. S. Marine Hospital, Fourteenth Avenue and Lake Street, San Francisco, and compensation during disability from work at the rate of two-thirds of the monthly wage."

There are two vacancies on NYA, one for a man to act as mail clerk from 12:45 to 2 every day, and one for a woman to work Monday through Thursday from 12 to 1:40 as a life guard at the YWCA, NYA directors announced.

Instructors Gather En Masse On Oct. 16

Holding the fall session of its semi-annual conference at the University of California, the Northern Association of Junior Colleges will meet en masse at Wheeler Hall, Berkeley, October 16. This meeting will count as one day of institute and all instructors must attend.

The opening speeches will include a statement of aims and objectives of the Northern California Association of Junior Colleges, and guidance at Junior College and University levels. The election of officers will take place at a business meeting which will precede a luncheon at International House. Dr. Robert G. Sproul and Dr. Ray L. Wilbur will give speeches.

INDIGNANT GUARDSMAN STAFF OCCUPIES PARK BUILDING SITE

Newspaper Plant Ignored In Architect's Plans; Writers Claim Old City Jail To Print Paper, Breed First Tradition Of Permanent Campus

By DON MIX

Indignation by itself is fruitless. Most students and departments can depend on boards, administration, and architects to facilitate their wants and needs but, alas, The Guardsman has no one to turn to in her hour of need. When this week the newly approved plans for the college building showed no provision for a newspaper office, members of the staff were moved to indignation. Proof of the remedy speaks for itself in this issue of The Guardsman.

It was pointed out with special pride that the architect had made lavish plans for a beautiful scientific division and an ornate swimming pool. But it seems that the Board of Education administration and the good Mr. Pfleuger completely ignored the necessities of the Gentlemen of the Press.

RESOURCEFUL

This overnight hurts the members of The Guardsman staff deeply, but they are a hardy and resourceful lot and they resolved with this issue of The Guardsman not to be daunted by so grave a lack of consideration for the members of the fourth estate. Thus it was unanimously decided at a spirited meeting of the staff to remedy the sad situation by staking a claim on the old city jail.

With heavy hearts and equally heavy typewriters the more rugged members of the staff struggled over the trackless wastes of wind-swept Balboa Park, determined that they should do their part in the development of the new college.

LOVE'S LABOR

The wind and the sun beat down on the laboring newshawks as they performed their labor of love in the rustic atmosphere of the fog-swept hills. Stories were written, copy was read and paper were outlined in the tumbledown shack that the gallant disciples of Horace Greeley had taken for their own.

As the deadline approached the chaotic fury, so characteristic of a newspaper, was evident despite the handicap of the tumbling bricks and grass in the typewriters' keys. Copy Boy Flamm was tireless as he hurried around the improvised office. Weary fingers were blistered by the rain, silk stockings torn into shreds by the brambles, shoes and faces covered with brick dust, but the valiant spirit of the press bad risen triumphant over the obstacles of climate and location.

In tangible evidence of success The Editor herewith presents in 217 point HEA business meeting in 217, Friday, October 15, at 2:15. The affair will be held on Tuesday, October 19, at the Shanghai Low, located at Pine and Grant Ave., from 12:50 to 2:00. The tickets are 40 cents and those members, who do not make reservations immediately, will be omitted from the luncheon. Members who intend to bring friends must procure tickets for them on or before Friday, October 15. Tickets may be obtained from Mary Skattebol and Barbara Allen, newly appointed chairmen of the Home Economics and Household Science groups respectively.

Neal Urges Sophs To Attend Meeting At Galileo Today

Urging every member of the High Sophomore class to be present, Bob Neal, High Sophomore president, announced that a meeting will be held this afternoon between 2:00 and 2:30 o'clock in the Faculty Cafeteria at Galileo.

"This meeting is very important," Neal said, "because we will discuss the Sophomore Formal and other items of interest to all High Sophomores. The dance committee has several places in mind but as yet no definite selection has been made as to where the affair will be held. When all the class have been gathered together and given a chance to voice their views, the committee will be better able to come to a definite decision."

Neal said that places being considered include the Gold Room of the Palace Hotel, the Colonial Room of the St. Francis, the Terrace Room of the Fairmont, the Veteran's Memorial Auditorium and the roof garden of the Clift Hotel.

Neal's committee, which includes Charlotte Zier and Isabel Sherratt, High Sophomore officers, Gene Blumenthal, Associated Students President, and Caroline Orginos, vice-president and head of the college social committee, are working up novel ideas for bids and concentrating on the selection of an orchestra.

"We hope to have a very special surprise and if things go the way we expect them to, there is no reason why our Soph Formal cannot be the best ever."

Tiffin Tickets On Sale By HEA Group

Tickets will be sold and plans completed for a Chinese tiffin, during a short HEA business meeting in 217, Friday, October 15, at 2:15. The tiffin will be held on Tuesday, October 19, at the Shanghai Low, located at Pine and Grant Ave., from 12:50 to 2:00. ARCHITECT'S BEAUTIFUL ETHEREALITY TO BE 1939'S COLLEGE REALITY

Stimulating new hopes for an early occupancy of the College plant, City Architect Charles H. Sawyer told the Board of Education last week that the first unit of the college may be completed for the opening of the 1939 spring semester, and will absolutely be finished by the end of 1939, at the very latest.

Appearing before the Board, Architect Timothy Pfleuger said detailed plans for the foundation would be ready by December, 1937, which is three months sooner than formerly expected, and plans for the superstructure by the time the foundation is completed. The actual work of building will occupy the best part of a year after the work on the foundation is started, so that there is a possibility that the plant will be ready for occupancy by the time the fall semester opens. Pfleuger submitted to the Board drawings of the proposed building and tentative floor plans.

At an estimated cost of about $800,000, the first unit at Phelan and Ocean Avenues will house the entire college until more buildings are provided. It will then become the science building of the junior college. It is to be a three-story structure with a basement addition for laboratories, kitchen, shops, and storerooms.

Delaying completion of the plans for other buildings is the problem of securing sufficient land. Three separate city departments—schools, parks, and playgrounds have ownership of different sections of the site in Balboa Park.

Another three-story structure of modern architectural design, the Exposition Administration Building at 588 Bush Street was completed on August 15th, 1937, only one month after construction began on July 15th of the same year. Students may find encouragement in this fact, for if the new (same) speedy construction methods are employed, they may anticipate an early completion of the plant.

FORCING PEACE

In his much discussed speech of last week, President Roosevelt spoke of the peril to the United States that has arisen out of the present world anarchy. He said that "no nation can isolate itself in security" and avowed that "all the peace loving nations of the earth must unite in a concerted effort to enforce the laws and principles upon which peace can rest secure."

It would seem that the use of the very term "enforcing peace" would imply the necessity of going to war against the violators of the principles of peace. Such a thing seems paradoxical, that we must fight to achieve peace, but it's the only logical conclusion to the premise of the President's statement which calls for united and direct action against those who have "a greed for power."

Roosevelt defended his stand by stating "If those things (warfare and destruction) come to pass in other parts of the world, let no one imagine that America will escape, that it may expect mercy, that this western hemisphere will not be attacked and that it will continue tranquilly and peacefully to carry on the ethics and arts of civilization."

There is no doubt a great deal of truth and perhaps some wisdom in what the president says concerning the impossibility of the United States remaining outside the bounds of a great international conflict. The nation is constantly being reminded that economic interests and respect of treaties make our country an important factor in world activities but it is debatable whether our commercial and diplomatic entanglements involve us to the extent of necessitating our going to war to defend them.

Our history books tell us how this same highly ideal regard for world safety embroiled us in the futile and costly World War. At that time the United States was "enforcing democracy" much in the same way that our chief executive feels we should now "enforce peace."

We paid a ghastly price in men and resources in our humanitarian attempt to insure world-wide peace in 1917 but all that our efforts have brought us is a deluge of facistism, communism, and international anarchy.

It is commonly admitted that the United States made a mistake by participating in a combination of nations against other nations twenty years ago. To make a mistake once is human and understandable, but to repeat the same mistake a second time is sheer stupidity.

PEACE WANTED

President Roosevelt's understanding of the preponderance of sentiment favoring peace is quite evident. But is he using sound judgment when he hopes to use the power of the peaceful majority to force peace down the throats of war-mad nations?

He says, "The peace, the freedom and the security of 90 per cent of the population of the world is being jeopardized by the remaining 10 per cent who are threatening a breakdown of all international order and law. Surely the 90 per cent can and must find some way to make their will prevail."

The President has suddenly become too coldly logical. Always a man of action, he sees only that positive action can solve the complex international situation. And we may be quite sure that positive action will ultimately lead to war.

A sane but less sensational course of action involving a policy of strict neutrality and complete abstinence from foreign entanglements apparently does not appeal to the President. Can it be that he lacks the foresight and vision to see around the corners of time and to admit the possibility of the solution to the present situation without the intervention of the Americans?

To those bold advocates of direct action who must always go to the source of the trouble to eradicate it, it is perhaps pertinent to repeat the old adage about fools rushing in where angels fear to tread.

INNOCENT PEOPLE

President Roosevelt further stated, "Innocent people and nations are being cruelly sacrificed to a greed for power and supremacy which is devoid of all sense of justice and humane consideration."

If the foreign policy of the government pushes our people into an unpopular war to "enforce peace" we also will be innocent people sacrificed, not to a greed for power and supremacy, but to the inability or unwillingness of our leaders to act in accord with the will of the people they were elected to represent.

The American people do not want war. That is definite. So, Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Hull, it is your duty to keep us

Mental Mutterings

You gals can have the football team,
The bucket-festers too,
And baseball players by the ream,
But me, I'll take the crew!
Four-forty men may thrill some hearts
But they leave me quite cold.
Crewing is the manly art,
(At least so I've been told.)
So shot-put shieks and ping pong champs,
A twenty-three skiddo!
At you I'll never cast my lamps,
'Cause I prefer the crew!

A bit out of season perhaps, but with our rugged oarsmen rowing in the Columbus Day Regatta, it seems permissible to dig up a little tribute penned last semester but, alas, never used. Besides, with everybody else writing about football it does the heart good to feel that we alone dare to be different!

May We Present . . . Don Mills, Associated Men's Students president and a member of the Social Committee, the Cap and Meg Society and the Iota Chi Fraternity . . . born in San Francisco, he migrated to Santa Barbara where he attended school, wandering back in time to graduate from Balboa High . . . plans to go to work for a while after junior college and then to continue his education with the intention of entering into law and politics . . . has hopes of some day becoming a great public speaker and gets in a little practice every week by moving that the Executive Council meetings adjourn . . . enjoys watching people and studying their characteristics and personalities and is interested in where cartoonists in general, and George Petty in particular, find their inspirations . . . has two pet hates, people who ask "why" and our favorite newspaper (you guess) and along with several hundred other people would like to know when we will get our completed campus.

Maybe it's because Fall is in the air or something, but there seems to be a great deal of "dropping off" on the part of students active in college activities. The most recent "dropper-offer" was Hugh Waite, High Freshman president, who found it necessary to leave school because of an illness in his family. Prominent since his entrance to the college, Hughie, as he is affectionately called, was one of the best liked fellows around these parts. His work on the Social Committee, the Cap and Meg and the Ex-Council has always been of a high caliber and it is with a great deal of personal feeling that we say for the rest of his friends, "So long, Hughie, it was swell knowing you!"

Presidential Patter

By Gene Blumenthal

Puzzling over Locke's opposition to the doctrine of innate ideas one evening, we sought relaxation by indulging in a local newspaper. Scanning the pages, we ran across an article, the caption of which was so startling, so vital, so breathtaking, and so awe-inspiring in its broad sweep, that for a moment it caused us to be completely dumbfounded. Slightly unnerved, we did as Descartes, when he found there was something of which he couldn't be entirely certain; we doubted its truth. But no, this was a reliable newspaper; therefore, it must be true. It was an evident, self-evident, axiomatic, obvious truth.

Inherently a conservative, but unable to find fault with Descartes' first rule of the method, we took issue with ourself to see if a slightly prejudiced mind could accept a pure, unadulterated truth. Still, with reference to the news item, such consideration for us appeared to be entirely unjustified and unmerited.

That section of the paper which we were fortunate enough to stumble onto had published in it a short news item about a Board of Education meeting. That in itself was not startling. What floored us, however, and nearly set us on the brink of disaster with paroxysms of hallucinations was the fact that this newspaper had blithely announced that the Board of Education had discussed plans for taking action on our demands for college buildings, which cause we have pleaded so long. And there you have it, the most surprising bit of news this year.

Seeking to qualify this item about a really austere body, we visited Mr. Philip Lee Bush, an active public figure, former president of the Board of Education, and now chairman of the finance committee of that group.

Interrupting Mr. Bush during office hours, we found him a slight, energetic, business-like, responsive gentleman, who exhibited more than a passive interest in the questions asked of him.

Devoting to us almost a full hour of his time, Mr. Bush pointed out the many intricacies involved in arranging for the erection of college buildings.

The one point which pleased and reassured us most was that the Board of Education has been unwaveringly loyal to the college in cooperating to the fullest extent to see that we achieve what has proved to be our constant objective.

It has been no small matter to trade acres with the Park Commission, in order that the architect might proceed with his plans. To accomplish this has been a slow, almost evolutionary process.

Not yet completely drawn, the architect's plans, it is hoped, will be finished early next year. They must then meet with the approval of the Board of Education and the Federal Government. The latter's approval is essential, for they supply almost forty-five per cent of the funds needed in the completion of the building.

The picture, however, is not simple, and at this point it becomes complicated. Earnestly believing in our college, and in its ability to prove itself as San Francisco's best, the outlook, nevertheless, is not immediately promising. Enforcement of the "no parking" ban, and that stroke of genius "parallel parking" has presented more obstacles in an already congested path.

We have suffered our privations; we have served our apprenticeship; to those capable of helping us, we ask continued activity that will give us a building—now!

Those of you who listen to the radio will know whereof I speak when I make mention of a certain hideous "Safety Program." (Editorial "we" should be used instead of "I", but I am not being editorial-minded here.)

However, you more intelligent people who forego the pleasure of Marconi's invention must accept on hearsay the fact that the program does exist and, if you will, that it IS hideous, both in suggestion and in execution.

Skipping further preamble we come to the radio itself:

It is Sunday morning. After prying yourself out of bed, you writhe your way to the kitchen for the much-needed Alka-Seltzer. A pang of conscience gnaws at you and you weave into the hallway to stand up that lamp which assaulted you on the night before as you picked your way through the corridor of your flat in quest of holy bed.

For want of anything more desirable to do, you then wend your way living-room-ward where the family radio is quartered. You twist a black thingummy and things crackle.

After you locate a station, la nasal voice tells you that you are listening to a radio station. You question this surprising statement, but finally you give in and believe. You assume the most comfortable position possible in the chair, gracefully slithering your body around that broken spring. You almost feel comfortable. And then it hits you. A ghastly voice leaps out at you:

"Put down that bottle for DEATH RIDES THE HIGHWAY!"

"Death" then emits one of those trite mystery-man cackles, the kind which starts at the skylight and ends up knocking the bottles off the cellar shelf.

Your day is ruined, and you wish you had that quarter back which you gave to erect the proposed statue to Marconi.

It's bad enough to frighten innocent car drivers, but it's positively obscene to give temperance lectures on SUNDAY MORNINGS.

It does seem as if the semester is really going strong. Here we have had enough social events to keep us all busy for the last two or three weeks, and another dance is scheduled for Saturday night. Judging by the turnout at the last informal, this one should be a great success. Please note that it is on Saturday night, so if you are (like us) a bit of a softie, this is your night to howl—no classes to wear you out before the big evening. Does that sound good?

After our publicity of last week about movie titles describing people, we herewith burden you with a few more: Florence Murphy — The Irish In Us; Norma Parent—The Girl Friend; Allen Williams—The Go-Getter; The Block SF Society—Varsity Show; Jerry Flamm—Life Begins At College.

Show's over 'till next week.

In answer to "Out of the Fog's" request for what men do in public that women don't like—we can think of only one objectionable trait: the tendency that men have invariably to make an innuendo out of the most innocent remark. No sooner have you made some observation on the weather or things in general, than the air is filled with guffaws or else an eyebrow is raised and a leer spreads over the face of the male listener. Then there's nothing to do but squirm and blush. Very embarrassing! But as for any other annoying idiosyncrasies peculiar to men in general, we don't believe there are any that aren't done by just a few. This also is true, we think, of women, and if "Mac" will notice the behavior of women students as a whole he will doubtless find that only a few comb their hair on street cars and apply nail polish on the Extension Building steps. It's just that actions of this kind attract your attention far more easily than normal behavior.

After Dark

By John Ward

The 15th annual season of the San Francisco Opera Association opens on the evening of October 15 with a performance of Verdi's "Aida" — magnificent war-horse of the lyric stage. And as long as Gaetano Merola is general director of the opera it seems likely that "Aida" will continue to open or to appear during every other season. This has been the plan for several years now and there appears small hope for any change.

* * * *

This is unfortunate in view of Mr. Merola's decidedly Italian leanings, for there are operas by Rossini that would fill "Aida's" place quite admirably, yet this has not been done. There are even rarely performed operas of Verdi that might well be done in the place of "Aida" (and the other famous pair "Traviata" and "Rigoletto") — but rarely has this been tried.

It is true that Verdi's "Masked Ball" is billed for this season and his "Force of Destiny" was presented last year—but never as substitutes for those over-done works already mentioned. It is not claimed here that "Aida" or "Traviata" are bad operas—they couldn't be considering their popularity — but it IS claimed that they are overdone to the point of monotony.

After all, opera is a loose form—tremendously popular because of this—and a somewhat lesser art than, say, the piano sonata or the string quartet. And, with something so easily brought to the commonplace by dreary and incessant repetition, it is not to be wondered at that many music lovers begin their listening experiences by being ardent opera enthusiasts and then, sooner or later, finding opera less satisfying and less stimulating than before.

A portion of this interest might not be lost if men in the position of Gaetano Merola sought some means to add greater variety to their opera seasons. This might be found in revivals of old, half-forgotten works and in the commissioning of new operas by contemporary composers. Whatever could be done should be done now while opera is one of the most popular forms of serious music in America, not when general interest has either centered around the symphonies or retrogressed to jazz, more jazz and nothing but jazz.

Out of the Fog

By BOB MacARTHUR

Amusing indeed is a contest now being sponsored by a transbay newspaper. This worthy sheet titles the police as "Public Friends Number One" and asks entrants in the contest to uphold this opinion. In theory, fine; actually, nuts! It is our humble opinion that such a contest would fail dismally at San Francisco Junior College, particularly if any of our inoffensive students, who have been slapped in the face, pushed from their places on the sidewalk in front of the building on Powell Street, and subjected to various forms of verbal abuse, were to enter essays, explaining why they thought the policeman to be "Public Friend Number One," more than likely our students would be moved to deep laughs at the irony of extolling the virtues of some member of the force. We wonder if our star-wearing hero of the face-slapping episode realizes the gravity of his offense. There is no law in the land which gives him a right to lay hands on innocent bystanders, even though they may be making comments derogatory to him or his actions.

Anyway, after some of the movies we've seen, wherein the cops are giving a prisoner the "third degree," we sometimes question the "Friend" part of "Public Friend Number One."

Your columnist was, himself, ordered from a very comfortable seat on the sidewalk by a rugged individual with scrambled ears, who said very politely, "What in hell do you think this is, a kindergarten?" To which we replied, as we sadly but wisely moved, "We dunno, what do you think, or can you?" As we recall, this last was uttered under our breath.

It isn't the fact that the officers of the law ordered us around that rankles, it is the idiotic, domineering, turncoat (pardon me, I mean bluecoat's) manner which forces the bulk of the public to look upon them as preventers, rather than protectors. Nearly anyone who has had any occasion to converse with a "cop" has been antagonized by his hard-boiled manner. Oh well, as someone wisely said,

"By ignorance is pride increased;
"They must assume, who know the least."

Around the town . . . listening to the band concerts in Union Square at noon of a Wednesday . . . marveling at the grace of some of our co-eds who, wearing high heels, safely descend Mount Powell Street . . . yawning all the way to school trying to get fully awake, and then falling asleep in our first class anyway.

GRIDIRON GRUMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

We start off the column this week with a tribute to a bunch of fellows who haven't been receiving anywhere near the credit to which they are entitled. They are those unsung heroes, the Lambs, or, if you want to be blunt about it, the "goofs". These fellows, not big enough or experienced enough to make the varsity squad, nevertheless report faithfully for practice, day in and day out, and receipt for many a mauling from the brawnier members of the first team. They receive no credit toward an award, and, in return for absorbing a good pounding five days in the week, get only the half unit of Physical Education credit which could be acquired by loafing around in gym trunks twice a week. They stick, though, either because of love of the game or a dogged refusal to admit defeat, and, in remaining, are an invaluable aid to the coaches in building up a powerful varsity, a fact that should be realized and taken into account. Looked at from this standpoint, they are more than just the "goofs," they are an integral and important part of the squad.

Many instructors last week were mystified by the sudden dwindling of their classes during the middle of the day. Of the throngs of merry lads who usually clustered into the rooms, only a few remained. The majority of them were trying to wedge themselves into parked automobiles or worm their way to some cigar store radio to find out how many the Giants had scored (if any) or whether Di Maggio had hit or not. Maybe the public is losing interest in baseball, as the experts say, but, looking at the mobs around the radios at noon time, one is inclined to disagree.

It is with a sigh of relief that we learn that the Marin students who were suspended after the Santa Rosa paint party have been reinstated. After all, they didn't do a great deal of damage and "boys will be boys," but their fate should serve as a lesson for rambunctiously-inclined Ram rooters. The accommodations in small-town jail-houses are notoriously poor.

A big time is in prospect for the trip to Sacramento, if the plan of Yell-leader Al Williams goes through. With a special "dancing-car" on the rooters' train, those with terpsichorean tendencies may "truck" and "Suzi-Q" to their hearts' content, although the quarters may be a trifle cramped for the "Big Apple."

Writing a column in advance has its disadvantages. Last week, trying, oh so hard, to be clever, we presented you with some sure-fire football winners. On Friday, they looked pretty good; on Monday two of them, Minnesota and Rice, looked a trifle green about the gills, and well they might. Last minute efforts to yank out the incriminating evidence failed ignominously, and the damning sentence came out in print. We're sorry, but then three out of five isn't such a bad average—or is it?

Those in authority here might do worse than take a leaf from the book of the Oakland Athletic League, which has insured its players, all high school boys, against injury on the gridiron, thus removing one of the worst of the spectres which haunt football players everywhere.

It is rumored that Jerry Flamm was found late last week laboring over a rowing machine, one of those mechanical devices designed to teach rowing to the beginner. The machine must have had a workout when Jerry brought his "experienced power and rhythmic stroke" to bear on it.

Ed Frediani, erstwhile soccer player and fiction writer de luxe, was the victim of a regrettable accident a few days ago. It seems that Ed had become so engrossed in the study of psychology that he set out to build a rat-maze; one of those things with twisting corridors that intelligent rats are supposed to find their way out of. Well, so complicated a maze did Ed construct that, when he finally decided to knock off and go to dinner, he found to his dismay that he was unable to find his way out of the labyrinth he had constructed. His cries of distress soon brought an audience to the scene, and a call was sent to the University of California Research Dept. for help. They responded by sending one of their duller rats to the rescue. The little beast plunged unhesitatingly into the maze and reappeared within a few minutes with Frediani clinging fast to his tail. The little chap (Frediani) was greatly shaken by his experience, but is gradually recuperating from the shock.

STUFF

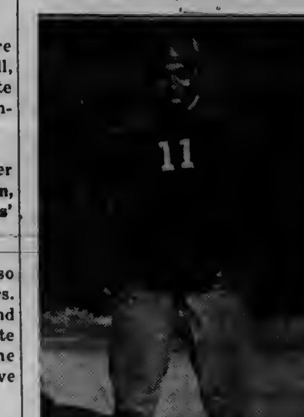
By JERRY FLAMM

This week we "shoot an arrow into the air and if it falls we know not where." In other words we are invading the precincts of our more famed and established contemporaries, the metropolitan sport writers. With our tongue in our cheek, we give our impressions and whatnot of activities outside the sacred portals of this institution. Please bear with us.

The muchly ballyhooed "All American Board of Football" has evidently decided to give the smaller colleges a better break in the weekly ratings. The unknowns who have entered the professional leagues and made the official All-Americans look like sandlotters must have influenced the estimable board who really know that the so-called All-America teams are a lot of the old homomagogus. Among the players receiving "cards of merit" last week were boys from Williams, Amherst, and dear 'ol Rutgers.

The quality of the local netsters was shown oh-so-clearly at Berkeley last week in the Pacific Coast Championships, when our own Don Budge, Von Cramm, Hare, Yamagishi, Nakano, Riggs, Hardwick, Lizana, and the other world ranking stars were forced to hustle and play their top brand of tennis to oust unexpectedly strong opposition from the local talent. Several upsets were scored. Among those showing up well were Bobby Harman, Dan Roberts, Jack Lynch, Marcus Gordon, Gussie Raegener Claire, and young Anne Morgan. An example of the heights reached by the youngsters was when the German, Von Cramm, was forced to three sets in consecutive matches with Dick Bennett, Howard Blethen, and Gene Smith who are little-known outside of the bay region.

The world series has just concluded and the enthusiasm and wild-eyed frenzy caused among the fans by the "nickel series" between the Giants and Yankees has shown that, whatever the apathetic condition of professional baseball on the Pacific Coast, in the Eastern population centers at least, America's "national game" is still the Number One sport. East side, west side, all around Manhattan town, they speak not of Morningside Heights and Lou Little's Columbia grid machine, nor of Rose Hill and Jimmy Crowley's new off-tackle power smashes at Fordham. Rather, they yell and gesticulate of the Polo Grounds and Yankee Stadium, of batting averages, and of Di Maggio, Gehrig, Bartell, McCarthy, and associated companies. The gang gathers down in the little restaurants on Delancey Street in the fading evening light, or in shadowed doorways on Third Avenue, and discuss the same topics being debated in sequestered and fashionable clubs further uptown. Football is secondary, or less, to these people.



With the descent of Maxie Baer from the fistic heights, Northern California, renowned in past years for the good boys sent East to campaign, is left high and dry in first-rate timber with only Freddie Apostoli and the perennial Young Corbett III carrying on in the middleweight division. Furthermore, the shameful condition of the local boxing game presents little hope for the future. Even the prospects are scarce, Buddy Baer and Eddie Booker being the standouts with the younger Baer scheduled to leave for the East soon.

"Moleskin Moe" says: It looks like a dreary season for the Big Red Machine at Palo Alto. They certainly picked the wrong season to dub "Tiny" Thornhill "Laughing Boy" . . . if you want to see a suicide schedule, glance at Notre Dame's. From here on in, after having met Drake and Illinois the past two Saturdays, they take on Carnegie Tech, Navy, Minnesota, Pittsburgh, Army, Northwestern, and Southern California in succession without a break. Nine tough games for the season without a respite. Whooey! . . . how Los Angeles will be pulling for UCLA to get the Rose Bowl bid. They tolerated Stanford for three tortuous years, and now Cal comes up with a ballyhooed "wonder team." They must feel pretty bad when they see those lop-sided scores from Berkeley . . . the Bears probably have no "wonder team" this year, but they do have a good outfit. It looks like the Top Sarge has finally worked out a system to take advantage of the overabundance of material at Berkeley, which has been more of a curse than a blessing in past years . . . the Palo Alto boys have no leader this year. It is going to take several more games to find out who can call signals and line up an offensive that cannot be deciphered by even the "Sunday-morning-quarterbacks" in the stands. They lost a sure scoring chance and maybe more in the Santa Clara game when Thornhill sent in an ace-in-the-hole who called the wrong play. The fact that some of the other backs each think that they are better suited to call the plays, is not

'ON TO PASADENA' IS BATTLE CRY

Arch-Rivals Beaten, 12-7, In Thriller; Peterson and Boitano Chalk Up Scores

Revenge was Sweet's last Friday night when his battered but triumphant Ram emerged the victor over a scrappy State College Gater by the score of 12 to 7 in a game that had 8,000 fans in frenzy of excitement in a thrill-packed final quarter.

The highly favored Sweetmen had a real battle on their hands for sixty minutes from the inspired Golden Tide who threatened with a wide-open aerial attack and were within nine yards of a winning touchdown in the final minute of the game.

The Red gridmen scored first midway in the second quarter on a powerful sustained drive from their own 20-yard line, making eighty yards in nine plays, with Walt "The Moose" Boitano making the tally on an eleven-yard plunge over the right side of the Gater line. The second Ram touchdown came in the last stanza when Mel Peterson, center, intercepted Harkness' pass and rambled like a halfback for forty yards running over half of the State defenders in his solo march to the goal line.

The Staters' score was the direct result of a break when Tom Fisher, guard, fell on a Ram fumble on the local 29-yard line. A twelve-yard pass from the ever-present Bill Harkness to Kelnofer, a half back, and two line plunges put the oval on the 1-inch line from where Harkness continued his orneryness by plunging over left tackle for the score.

FIRST THREAT REPULSED

The power of the Rams' running attack was in evidence soon after the opening kick-off when Alan McDonald, elusive key back, and Walt Boitano, bouncing fullback, broke away on long gallops that brought the ball deep into touchdown territory. The submarining State guards, Glavich and Kauer, ganged up to stop the attack at this point and then the general handy man of the Gater legions, Harkness, rooted out a punt for forty-five yards to finish the threat.

After making one first down by the dint of Boitano's short side bucks, the locals sent McDonald back to punt one out twenty-two yards.

In the second quarter the Gaters were told in no uncertain terms that their running attack was a little less than futile when Merv Weiner, smashing tackle, and Tom "Moon" Burke, the sixty-minute guard, came banging through the State interference to throw Gomez and Harkness for losses on consecutive tries.

At this point Harkness punted it over the goal and the Rams took it on the twenty-yard line to start their touchdown drive. Here is how it happened: Boitano took the ball over the State right guard, cut away from the secondary, and went for forty yards before Thompson, the State safety, pulled him down from behind. McDonald then bumped over Captain Hal Beseman's left tackle spot for six yards to the State thirty-three. Wes Olson then tried his luck on a couple of tries, adding five more yards to the cause. Boitano and McDonald then alternated in smashing the Golden Tide tackles and sweeping their ends to put the ball on the eleven-yard line. "Moose" Boitano plunged through the short side, shook off the attempted tackles of the State fullbacks, and went the remaining yards in a smash that saw him go over standing up. Dan Wiechers attempted conversion was wide of the uprights.

FUMBLES HIT RAMS

The third period saw the Rams threaten several times but the handicap of uncertain ball handling spoiled the drives. The sharp offensive blocking of Joe Guedet, Willie Dolman, Andy Oddstead, and Elwood Pearce, and the down-field work of "Bubbles" Egelhofer and Captain Wes Olson were responsible for the potency of the Sweetmen's attack.

When the erstwhile Golden Tide elected to try some passes they received the just desserts of such faulty quarterbacking when Peterson intercepted Harkness' pass and rambled forty yards to the goal line.

The thrill-packed final quarter saw State passing in a frantic effort to get back into the ball game. The Ram line finally began to put on too much pressure for the passing maniacs and it looked as if the Ram's two touchdown margin was safe.

Then Fisher picked up the loose ball on the Sweeters' thirty and the Tide marched over for the score. The conversion was good. With only three minutes left to play, another fumble put the Rams in a bad hole when Hodgins pounced on a bobbled reverse on the twenty-yard line.

It was a dark moment for the forces of the Ram when State began to move via the pass route again. Harkness hit Osborne for a six-yard gain. Harkness back again, this time tossing a floater to Iago for four more. At this point little Woody Lennis proved himself a real "comer througher" by leaping into the skies to pull down the last attempt of the Tide in a perfect interception.

SWEETMEN PLAY IN ROSE BOWL FRIDAY

Making their fourth appearance of the season, the Rambling Rams will endeavor to continue their winning ways when they collide with the Bulldogs of Pasadena Junior College this Friday night in the famous Rose Bowl at Pasadena. On the basis of their impressive victory over State last week, the Red and White gridders will probably occupy the unenviable favorite's role for the encounter, as the Bulldogs have yet to win a game this year.

One of the country's undefeated and untied squads last season, the Pasadenans have fallen down badly, having lost to Santa Ana, San Bernardino, Pomona, and Taft in four games so far. Although potentially powerful, they have not lived up to their potentialities. The southern squad is well-balanced and fairly heavy, but apparently lacking in the vital quality of co-ordination.

Coach Tom Mallory of Pasadena has built an offensive around Bill Busik, 165-lb. quarter-back, and Bill Schuelke, full-back and only two-year letter man on the squad. Busik has been the outstanding star for the southerners so far. He is a genuine triple-threater, possessed of running, passing, and kicking ability, and will probably bear the brunt of the Bulldogs' attack. In addition to his offensive talents, he is reported to be a deadly tackler, and likely to cause plenty of trouble for Coach Russ Sweet's aggregation.

Schuelke, the other key man in the attack, is rather light, but is possessed of no mean ability at line-plunging, a chore which he will be called upon to perform against the Rams.

The other starters in the Bulldog backfield will be Frank Spratt and Torrey Smith. Spratt does most of the kicking on the squad as well as being the target for a good share of Busik's tosses. Smith, a 175-pounder, performs as a blocking back.

Ends should be Dick Sieber and Art Meek. Sieber, who was imported by Mallory from the high school in Oklahoma where the latter formerly coached, is a rather diminutive wingman, who shines on the defense rather than on the offense. Meek is also rather light, so the Rams will possess a decided weight advantage at the flank positions, which will be filled by Bud Wickers and Joe Guedet.

Pitted against Will Dolman and Merv Weiner at the tackle spots will be Jack McBride and Frank Stepp, the latter another Oklahoma importation. These lads weigh 192 and 201 pounds respectively.

The guards who will oppose Tom Burke and Randy Osborne of the Rams are Norm Tolstoy and Norm Hoyal, the latter considered the most capable lineman on the southern squad.

Charley Gibson will start at center for the Bulldogs. Although an erratic passer, he is outstanding on defense. Gibson tips the scales at 185 pounds, and will battle it out during the contest with Mel Peterson. He, along with five other members of the Pasadena squad, hails from Mallory's old high school in Oklahoma. All hope that Duke Worsham would be able to return to the pivot position for the Rams has been abandoned, as the doctors deemed it best that he refrain from taking any chances of re-injuring his vertebrae.

Coach Russ Sweet plans to take a squad of thirty men with him on the trip. They will leave at eight o'clock Friday morning, so as to arrive in plenty of time for the game, which will be played at 8:00 Friday night.

Statistics show that Pasadena has been outgained in every game so far, and that their passing attack is practically non-existent, as they clicked 0 out of 13 against San Bernardino. Nevertheless, they should be in an ugly mood Friday, and are quite capable of providing the Ram gridders with a busy evening. There have been a few changes in the Rams' line-up, Wickers replacing Pearce at end and Boitano stepping into Ray Egelhofer's shoes at fullback. As they stand at present, the starting line-ups are:

COLEY	LGR	OSBORNE

Men's Club Stages Bouts November 3; Location Undecided

"Anyone intending to fight, in the Men's Club annual bouts, should sign up either with me, or on the Powell Street Bulletin Board," announced Don Mills, prexy of the Associated Men's Students organization.

"The fights will be held on Nov. 3, and we sincerely hope that everyone entering will be in the best possible physical condition by that date," Mills continued. "We haven't decided on a location of the event yet, but the plans for the rest of the features are already completed."

There will be free cigarettes for all spectators, and it has been rumored that perhaps there will also be light refreshments. Among the many features on the card for the evening will be that great grunt and groan match put on by Maury Schwarz and Sad Sam Goldstein, professional wrestler.

Maury, a former student of the college and the second Associated Student President of the organization, is quite well-known in local fistic and wrestling quarters, and has quite a reputation as a matster. "Sad Sam" is one of those muscled men who earns his bread and butter by that mild form of torture known as wrestling. The bout is said to be a grudge affair, as the two contestants haven't been on speaking terms since their last tussle, when Maury pulled enough hair out of Sam's chest to stuff a sofa.

Many of the boys are already hard at work preparing for the engagements. Frank O'Conner, Dale Ross, Jimmy Neal, ex-student body prexy, and several other boxers are working out daily in the Galileo Gym.

As in the past, medals will be awarded to the winners in each division of both the wrestling and boxing matches. Because of the small number of entrants in last term's affair, some of the fellows annexed a medal by winning just one fight. The term before that the situation was just the opposite, with so many entries that it was necessary to hold some of the bouts at the Galileo Gym and eliminate some of the leather pushers.

Frank Silvestri, 126 lb. scrapper, who lost the final in his division by a bad break last term, Tip Hamilton, last year's heavyweight champion, and Merv Weiner, light heavyweight boxer are some of the boys who probably will be throwing punches in this term's show.

Last term several celebrants, including Geo. Malley, the University of San Francisco's very successful coach, were presented to the gathering, and this term several like features have been planned, although Mills would not disclose the identity of the celebrities.

Admission to the affair will be by student body card, and should draw a good crowd. Joe Amori, college instructor will act as referee for all bouts on the card. Amori, adviser to the Men's Club, has had a lot of experience in the fistic line, and does a good job of judging the fights.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

Successful is the word for the first WAA luncheon of the semester, held last Thursday, October 7, at the Galileo cafeteria. All new members signed the WAA membership book and took the entering pledge at the luncheon. The new sports managers were introduced at their tables. Speeches were made by Gloria Swicegood, president; Dorothy Canavan, secretary; Margaret Parks, vice-president, and the WAA sponsor, Vera Spencer.

Especially interesting was the speech of Miss Spencer in which she outlined the purpose of women's athletics and explained why competition is not stressed as it is in men's athletics. Margaret Dougherty, woman's adviser, was an unexpected and welcome guest at the luncheon. And the food was good too. We know. We were there.

Margaret Parks has been installed as the new vice-president of the WAA. She replaces Margaret Wormell.

The date for the epic contest between male and female volleyball players of the college has been definitely set for October 21 at 4 o'clock. "Simply propaganda," say the women to reports by the men that the contest will result in "just another masculine triumph over the weaker sex." The game will be open to spectators.

And in the feud between the two feminine volleyball teams it is reported that the Ramettes, captained by Marie Rossi, are ahead 2 to 1 of the Toppers, led by Anita Washington. They seem to be running true to "Ram" form.

Charlotte Zier, riding manager, has appointed Phyllis Reardon captain of the beginning riding team, Claire Mason, captain of the intermediate class, and Betty McKenzie, captain of the advanced team. The riding calendar for this semester includes a moonlight ride for men and women, a morning ride at Golden Gate Park with the Sacramento junior college riding classes as guests, an informal horse show and, during Tourney Week, a formal horse show.

The beginners are already beginning to canter, which, we are told, is extra good.

And then there is the case of the two maidens who, at the WAA luncheon, decided that since peach sherbet was their favorite dessert they would have two helpings.

"Hey, you," said one, to the waiter in charge, "We've been waiting and waiting but no dessert." Whereupon the embarrassed and apologetic waiter immediately rushed to the kitchen and brought in two more dishes which the culprits devoured with greater relish because of the knowledge of their guilt.

The first pair of empty dishes? Throughout the luncheon they rested secure beneath napkins on the laps of the guilty ones.

Has anyone ever named the bold gentlemen who sit so brazenly astride the horse on the bulletin board in the Galileo gym? He might be dubbed "Horace Baer."

In rifle an attempt is being made to form a team composed solely of women to compete in a league formed of other women's teams.

On October 20 will be held a women's rally for the purpose of explaining the game of football to women from a spectator's point of view. Dutch Conlan, one of the junior college football coaches and a noted Pacific Coast official, will attempt this magnanimous task. There will be a woman cheer leader to lead the girls in a few yells.

Tentative plans include an open forum for questions, selections from the Music Department of the college, and some college songs which the entire assembly will sing. The committee in charge is composed of Gloria Swicegood and Virginia Lum.

The WAA archery club is soon to spend its budget in the purchase of new equipment, "the better to shoot you with, my dear," (target).

College Crew Loses Despite Endeavors Of Rhythmic Flamm

In a blanket finish, with not more than a half a boat length separating the three crews, the San Francisco Junior College galleymen, co-champions of last spring's rowing conference, finished behind the cutters from USF and San Mateo Junior College in the annual Columbus Day Regatta held at Aquatic Park last Sunday.

The college crew race was the feature event of the rowing program of the day and saw the Ram sweep swingers give up the large Columbus Day Cup that they had won last year.

The contest was a sprint affair over a half mile course and saw the powerful locals pull into the lead in the opening hundred yards only to have the smoother and better trained boats of the opposition move ahead at the half way mark. The Rams made a gallant bid for victory in a stirring stretch drive but lack of condition and sufficient practice proved their undoing when the sprint ruined the timing and rhythm.

Besides the plucky Jerry Flamm, who put on a solo sprint midway down the course, the Red Galley was manned by Carl Brogger, Joe Arnold, Merv Weiner, Art Nelson, Ed Cassidy, Elmer Hubacker, Bob Carotto, "Tip" Hamilton and Don Mix. Willie Cordano handled the coxswain's post.

RAMS' HORN

Editor, The Guardsman:

What do the people who are organizing the Peace Council take us for? In the October 6 Guardsman, under Peace Council Plans Second Conclave Today, "Every group that continues to send representatives will have a vote in the council and subsequently will be signifying their desire for peace and their endorsement of the council's activities." Good heavens, grandma, what large teeth you are going to have! Representatives have only one vote but they will endorse the council's activities whether they agree with them or not.

Advocates of the U.S. Supreme Court packing plan are a bunch of rank amateurs compared to our own pink-tinted Peace Councilites. The constitution of the council reads in part, "Membership in this council shall consist of two representatives from every organization interested in peace and similarly interested individuals." How do you like that? A club or society with fifty members is allowed one vote and any "similarly interested individual" is allowed one vote. Equality must be the watchword. By this method all the students of the school, who are members of a represented club, will be outvoted by a group of eight or ten individual members.

The students seem to have their eyes open, the way the clubs are withdrawing from the council. Perhaps you can tell me, through the columns of The Guardsman, the names of the clubs which are still affiliated with the Peace Council, if any.

"ALSO DISGUSTED."

Ed.'s Note: At the request of the WAA, The Guardsman herewith publishes the following letter to the Peace Council:

San Francisco, Cal.,
October 1, 1937.

Mr. Fred Vast,
Temporary Chairman SFJC
Peace Council,
S. F. Junior College.
Dear Sir:

Since the Women's Athletic Association of SFJC is one that does not meet as a unit, we feel obliged to withdraw our representatives from your meetings. By this action, we do not mean to imply that W. A. A. is not behind your organization, since we will urge our girls to join as individual members; rather, we do not think it advisable to send representatives to speak for such a large group as our own, in which there are undoubtedly varying opinions.

Your cause is a noble one, and you have our whole-hearted wishes for a successful organization.

Sincerely,
GLORIA SWICEGOOD,
Pres. W. A. A.
GAIL HANNA, Treas.

the Golden Gate, and several others.

Bowhay, who handled claims on the Ohian and other wrecked ships, filmed the salvaging operations to show before interested spectators, and not as a money-making feature.

Carl Stough, business instructor, who was instrumental in securing the film, said, "I would urge all students and instructors who are free tomorrow at 2:30 to come to the Galileo Auditorium and enjoy the film."

ROOTING TRAIN TO SACRAMENTO GAME PLANNED

Plans for a huge train excursion to see the Rams meet the Sacramento Junior College in the capital city on Friday night, October 22, were announced by Jack Schmale, the college's efficient publicity man.

A special reduced rate of $1.80 round trip will be possible if one hundred students will make the jaunt, according to Schmale. Present arrangements have it that the junior college rooters would leave from the Ferry Building at 4:00 o'clock on Friday afternoon, arrive in Sacramento about 7:00 o'clock in the evening, go to the football game, and then leave again at 11:00, returning to the city early the next morning.

Schmale has made arrangements with the new college band to play on the trip to provide music for dancing in a special car that will be set aside for that purpose.

A complete section will be devoted entirely to the college and in addition to the car for dancing, there will be a diner, several chair cars and an observation car.

All those interested in making the trip should see Schmale, Allen Williams, Gene Blumenthal or Don Mix.

Chinese Students In Relief Drive

Perhaps you've noticed young Chinese grammar students turned shoeshining experts for sight-seers in San Francisco—wonder if the "little black boys" have gone on strike? On inquiry Allen Toy, president of the college Chinese Club, would tell you that this, and other forms of activities, is the result of a movement by Chinese students throughout the United States to raise money for Medical Relief in China today.

The Chinese Federation of Clubs, a new organization, is attempting to band together all Chinese clubs in order to make better the possibilities of giving aid to their brothers in China, Toy said. A recent activity of the Federation was a Noel Coward play, "Hay Fever", proceeds of which went to their cause.

Library Announces Available Fiction

Students using the Study Hall and not wishing to study may be interested in reading a good short story, novel or biography. More than one hundred and fifty novels are available, and may be secured from the loan desk in the lobby of the Extension Building. The collection includes such excellent classical novels as: Jane Austen's Pride and Prejudice, Cervantes' Don Quixote, Minds of Today, Cather's Death Comes to the Archbishop, and Josephine Laurences' If I Had Four Apples.

Magazines will be found on the mezzanine floor at 518 Powell Street, where biographies are also available.

The ten digits, 0, 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, are one of the most important contributions to science and to commerce that the world has known. The system originated in India earlier than the eighth century, was carried to Arabia by an Indian traveler, and continued to spread throughout the Arabian world from then on.

New Instructor Finds Students Keen on Speech

New comer to the college factulty is Margaret Brennan, speech instructor, who denies the old adage that college students do not "take to public speaking."

Asked to give her ideas, she says "I find the students keenly interested in speech work, and it's amazing to think how far speech and drama classes in college have advanced in the last few years. When we realize that fifty years ago the idea of granting college credit for Public Speaking classes was considered radical, and that now every college offers and encourages speech work, we have reason to be very hopeful concerning the future. We are in a speech conscious age. The radio and the motion picture have seen to this.

"I find the students at the college happily lacking in false values concerning Public Speaking. The sincere speakers on Constitution Day proved that point, and we may sincerely thank Heaven that the days of 'orating' and 'elocuting' are gone forever.

"As for the college theater (when we HAVE a college theater) great things may be expected of it, if present enthusiasm is any indication. Glenn Hughes of the University of Washington said recently that there are not more than thirty companies in the United States playing professional legitimate drama, whereas the number of college theaters is rising rapidly."

Student Acts Ease Instructor's Task

One of the aims of an Anthropology instructor is to prove to his students that man is "up from the ape" and not the superior creature that he thinks he is.

Instructor Joseph Williams' job in Anthropology 1A has been made considerably easy by the kind cooperation of his little homosapien charges.

Mary Catherine Way first illustrated, by resoundly thumping her chest. The hollow echo of this action corresponded to that of a full grown orangoutang.

Her sister, Emmy Lou Way, writes inspiring missives to her Pithicanthropus man and signs them "affectionately the Wajack Lady." Emmy claims she is sad becouse the Sinanthopus man from Peking is just too mellow and very much dead.

Ruth Burby doesn't do anything but stare in awe at instructor Williams, like the quaint little Chimpanzee Oscar whom she occasionally visits at Fleishhacker Zoo.

Other students contribute to the general simian atmosphere with a monotonous chittering and eternal fidgeting which reminds one of the sound effects of a Tarzan epic.

AWS Invites Coeds To Tea October 28

All women students are invited to the Associated Women Students' tea, to be held in the Galileo Faculty Cafeteria on Thursday, October 28, from four to six o'clock, AWS officers have announced. A personal invitation to the affair will be sent to each of the college's 520 co-eds.

Norma Parent, AWS president, promised that entertainment would be provided, but said that it was intended as a surprise.

Committee chairmen in charge of the tea are: Refreshments, Isabelle Sherratt; invitations, Kay Evulich and Barbara Randall; entertainment, Marion Yager and Miss Parent. All AWS officers and other women students specially invited to do so will act as hostesses.

"We are planning on having a record attendance for this, our traditional semi-annual AWS tea," Miss Parent commented. "I would like to urge every woman student in the college to attend, for our tea will provide an opportunity for the AWS officers to become better acquainted with the other AWS members. We can promise an enjoyable afternoon to all who attend."

Seal Approved

Approval of the new college seal was the main business of the last meeting of the Executive Council, held last Friday, October 8. Routine committee reports and discussions were held but no definite action was taken on any proposals.

Paramount Pictures wishes it had never heard the four words, "HIGH, WIDE AND HANDSOME."

VANDALS ADMIT RED SMEARS TO DEAN

Apparently deciding that confession is good for the soul, the vandals who smeared red paint on the goal posts and press box at Roberts Field after the pre-game rally last Thursday night with San Francisco State College admitted their guilt to Edwin C. Browne, dean of men, and then hurried to apologize to David Cox, dean of men and athletic director at State.

Preceding the confession, Cox had telephoned Browne, appriaing him of the extent of the damages, and seeking reparations. Browne expressed the regrets of the junior college for the inconsiderate action of the unknown students and advised Cox to have paint removed at the expense of the college, which expense would be charged against the college's share of the proceeds of the game. He also promised an investigation to try to identify the guilty persons.

Cox, in deprecating the deed, said, "The job was evidently done by persons who sneaked in after the stadium was emptied. Naturally I cannot condone such actions, and I'm sure that neither does the junior college faculty nor the Associated Students as a whole. The vandalous act made necessary a great deal of extra work getting the stadium ready for the game."

Hal Delma, State's head yell leader in charge of the rally, intimated that the event would probably be the last of its kind. "Although the rally itself was a success, some parties apparently have no self-control."

The Guardsman having already pointed out the "childishness" of this type of "fun", is joined by members of the faculty and student leaders in reassuring friends of the junior college that such acts are committed by a very small group of people and should not be construed as representative of the spirit of the college. From an editorial which appeared in Volume 5, Number 1 of The Guardsman, the following is reprinted: "When one aims at serving the best interest of his college, he could never condone any vandalistic activities performed against rival institutions under the guise of 'school spirit'."

Kantor's Newest Volume Reviewed

By DONN NORDEN

Our choice for the book of the week is MacKinlay Kantor's latest contribution to American letters, "The Romance of Rosy Ridge." Like his other book whose audience it can hope to win, "The Voice of Bugle Ann," in length it is hardly more than a short story, but its unusual simplicity and charm give it every right to a separate volume.

Like so many of his stories, it is written about the South as it was immediately after the Civil war. Its slight plot relates the love of Comb-Hummin' Henry, school teacher turned wandering minstrel after leaving the Union Army, for Lissy Ann, daughter of Gill MacBean, one of Missouri's hottest rebels. Despite the many obvious difficulties that confronted them, we have the author's word that theirs was a fruitful union.

Our choice for the best picture on Market Street is still "Life of Emile Zola." A new picture will have to be very good to change our opinion, but it is not receiving the support it deserves. With such consistently poor houses, it cannot remain much longer.

Block SF's Plans For Super Drama

Plans for the dramatic endeavor of the Block "SF" society have started to take shape. Last Thursday at the meeting in the afternoon at Galileo, Bubbles Egelhofer was named chairman of the committee. Rehearsals will start at a later date and the tentative date of the show was set for the second week of November of this semester.

"Duke" Worsham, president of the society, opened the meeting at 2:00 o'clock, having Will Dolman, secretary, read the minutes of the previous meeting. Executive council representative, Joe Guedet, had little to report.

Finally the meeting was turned over to business. A motion was passed which would levy a five cent fine on members absent from the meetings.

Bub Egelhofer will start to work right away on the show. Permission will be obtained from the faculty to stage the show, and, as soon as the script has been readied, it will go into rehearsal.

Another motion was passed, at the insistence of the president, providing that disorderly members attending the meetings of the society will be assessed one cent for each outburst.

The next meeting will be held Thursday, October 21, at Galileo in Room 458. A roll will be called when the meeting opens and members absent will be assessed the five cent fine.

Forum Sets Oct. 22 For Next Meeting

Improvement of the penal system will be the subject of discussion at the next meeting of the Forum Club, Friday night, October 22, at the home of Betty Ross, 25 La Plazuela Street.

Arguments for a system of leniency and education will be presented by Doris Speroni, who will be opposed by William Brown who is slated to uphold the present American penal system.

All students interested in the topic, or any of the other activities of the group, are invited to join by either attending the next meeting or, if more information is desired seeing John Healy, chairman, or Dorothy Mercer or William Goss, faculty advisers.

Manuscripts are being received for the club's annual literary publication, according to John Ward, editor. Although the magazine will not make its appearance until next spring, contributions are being accepted so that students leaving the college this fall may have an opportunity to have their writings published.

Rifle Teams Start Competition Soon

During the week of October 25th, the college rifle teams will have their baptism of fire for this semester. That is the week when the various leagues, in which the rifle teams have entered, will begin their series of matches, according to William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college teams. "Team tryouts are being held Saturday mornings from 9:00 to 11:30, and are open to all who care to try out," he said. "Also managers' positions for the teams are still open. There will be the two regular teams entered, and one team will be entered in a Girls' League, which is being formed and will probably consist of four competing teams," he concluded.

Answering the questions of many in regard to a date for the next social function of the Rifle and Pistol Club, Gail Hanna, club vice-president, announced November 10 as the tentative date set for the next party. "This will be a dancing party," she said, "and will be open to members and their guests. Another enjoyable evening is being planned, and further details will be given later," Miss Hanna added.

Rifle Club members are asked to watch for an announcement of another meeting, which will be held soon. Further details of the plans for the party and of the team tryouts will be heard at this meeting, so that it will be of great interest to all members.

Omicron Initiation Coming Friday

Initiation of new members into Omicron Phi Pi is definitely set for Friday, October 15. All members are requested to be in front of President Cloud's office at Galileo High School at seven thirty o'clock in the evening.

Franklin E. Sewell is the latest member of the faculty signifying his intentions to join the society. Other applicants who have been checked and passed on by the committee on acceptance to be initiated are: Lloyd Luckmann, Fred Wright, Edward Garrard, William Simonds, Mrs. Cecile Elliott and others.

All initiation fees should be paid to Dr. Michael Zarchin, Omicron Phi Pi faculty adviser, not later than today.

Friday, October 15, is the deadline for entries to the essay contest sponsored by the organization.

Students are reminded that the word limit on the topic, "The Influence of Our New School Plan On Our Campus Societies," is limited to one hundred words. First prize will consist of two dollars cash and a surprise, with a theatre ticket to be awarded second prize winner. All entries will be received by Dr. Zarcbin.

Newman Club Dance For November 20th

November 20 has definitely been chosen as the date for the Newman Club Dance, according to Bob Fex, president of the organization. The affair which will be held on "Big Game" night, is informal and the place and orchestra will be selected by the several committees appointed for that purpose at the last meeting, Fex announced.

On last Sunday morning, October 10, the club held its monthly communion and breakfast at St. Mary's cathedral on Van Ness Avenue.

It was at the last meeting of the Newman Club that the new San Francisco Junior College fight song was first presented by its composer, Jack Schmale, college publicity man. Schmale was reluctant to present his composition to the general student body, but its enthusiastic reception by a large assemblage of Newmanites, who spent a whole evening lustily singing the song, made him certain of its popular approval.

Chess Club Holds First Meet Friday

Organization of a Chess Club will be effected next Friday afternoon, October 15, in Room 301, when the first meeting of the group is held at one o'clock in the Extension Building.

All students interested in chess should be sure to attend, Bill Switzer, organizer of the club urged. Henry Ralston, zoology instructor, is the faculty adviser.

Business scheduled for the first meeting is adoption of a constitution, election of officers, and setting the date for the first tournament.

Beta Phi Rents New Frat House

Rental of a new fraternity house was announced last week by Alfred Coffman, president of Beta Phi. The organization will move into its new quarters on the first of next month, Coffman said.

The new house is a spacious old mansion located on Leavenworth Street near Filbert, close to the Galileo building of the college. The committee which selected the house was composed of Coffman, Carl Brogger, Sylvester MacAtee, Bruce Bolton, and the fraternity's faculty adviser, Dr. Franklin Sewell.

A few of the members of the fraternity will use the house as a dormitory, while the remainder of the group will use it for meetings, study, and other fraternity activities, according to Coffman.

Musicians Gather At Scott's Tonight

Robert Scott's home at 2447 19th Ave. will be the scene of the Music Club meeting tonight at 7:30 o'clock. Kay Warner urges everyone to come as this gathering will be of the utmost importance. Further plans for the mammoth Hallowe'en party which is to be held later in the month will be discussed and it is necessary for all members and newcomers to attend.

Refreshments and entertainment will follow the business end of the meeting.

Astronomers Gaze At Stars Monday

Less than a few shackles of formality remain in the Astronomy 2A class since the members have organized an Astronomy Club.

Under the sponsorship of Louis Berman and the presidency of Betty Rehbock the twelve members meet every Monday night from seven to nine-thirty o'clock at the Galileo observatory.

The actual astronomical observations are taken between seven and nine; the remainder of the time is spent in social repose activated by refreshments.

Vice-president Fred Hoshiyama together with the rest of the members invites interested students to attend and scientifically gaze at a star or two with the aid of astronomical apparatus. Hoshiyama also announces that the refreshments for the evening will consist of the usual coffee plus a cake baked by the president.

RIFLE CLUB GROWS

During the college year of 1936-37, the Club expanded its membership, with John N. Stewart as President, to a total of sixty-six. That year also marked the formation of two rifle teams which represented the college successfully in competition sponsored by the San Francisco Rifle Association. Members of the teams received Student Body awards for their fine showing of first in one league and second in the other. Last semester physical education credit was given for rifle marksmanship, a boys' section of thirty and a girls' section of fifteen completing the required firing.

HOPE

The American people have every right to be confident in the ability of President Roosevelt to guide us safely over the period of international stress. He has been a capable and thorough executive and we must trust that he does not mean to follow too literally his stated policy of "enforcing peace."

"It is my determination," the President said, "to pursue a policy of peace and to adopt every practicable measure to avoid involvement in war."

The people of the United States can only hope that a policy of absolute neutrality will fit Mr. Roosevelt's definition of a "practicable measure."

SACRAMENTO TRIP RALLIES RAM ROOTERS

RESTAURANT GROUP SERVES COLLEGE

Typical pre-noon hour shot in the Galileo cafeteria, where college and Galileo High School students gather for luncheon prepared and served by the college's famed Hotel and Restaurant Division, the above picture illustrates one reason for the success of the division which was marked last weekend by invitation to the Northern California Hotel Association Convention at Del Monte. In addition to managing the Galileo High School cafeteria, the division also directs the Everett and Marina Junior High School cafeterias. All students enrolled in the courses gain the benefit of practical restaurant experience through actual work in such an enterprise as is demonstrated in the above picture.

WAA HOLDS RALLY TODAY TO TEACH WOMEN FOOTBALL

Coach Dutch Conlan To Instruct Femmes In Art of Watching Grid Game

Officially sponsored by the Women's Athletic Association, the first women's football rally in the history of the college will be held in the Galileo auditorium today at 2 o'clock. The committee in charge, composed of Virginia Lum and Gloria Swicegood, president of the WAA, has promised an entertaining and enlightening program for football-minded women. The newly organized college band will add color to the program with a group of college songs, including the recently-written college aria.

Assistant Football Coach Dutch Conlan will courageously attempt to answer any and all questions of the feminine fans. Through his explanations the bevy of college women who attend the Sacramento game next Friday will know when to boo the referees for a poor decision.

"The purpose of the rally is to explain and clarify the game of football for women from a spectator's point of view," declared WAA President Gloria Swicegood. "We wish as many women as possible would turn out for the rally and show that the women of the college as well as the men are imbued with college spirit."

The rally is scheduled from 2 to 2:30 o'clock and will not interfere with classes. A short introductory speech by Margaret Daugherty, women's adviser, and some selections by the men's chorus are tentatively scheduled as part of the program. The women gym teachers will be present and give their support to the rally.

WAA tennis manager Virginia Lum expressed the hope that, "the women will come to the rally and show the football team the support which they intend to give the team at Sacramento."

As only women will be admitted to the rally, for the first time feminine voices will not be drowned in a roar from the masculine members usually present at the rallies.

DEBATE SQUADS ARGUE TUESDAY

Meeting Modesto Junior College and San Francisco State next Tuesday, October 26, at 2:30 o'clock in Room 462 at Galileo, the college debate squad will begin a season of active forensic activity.

Modesto will send one team to oppose Catherine Mountanous, George Woodland, Frank Bosl, and Joe Meeko, who will uphold the unicameral legislature. One State team will defend the jury system against Elizabeth Rehbock and James Scott. The other State team will attack neutrality, while William Simonds and Charles Vaughn representing the junior college, will praise it.

On October 28, the Ram debaters cross the city to meet State again on the question of "neutrality" with Robert Holmes and Dave Levy.

Four debates are scheduled for the following month. On November 2 State comes to Galileo again to debate "American Federation of Labor versus Committee for Industrial Organization." Lloyd Luckmann, debate coach, has not chosen the junior college representatives for this encounter.

November 9 finds Lorraine Johnson and Herbert Midgely opposing the unicameral legislature when they meet Sacramento Junior College at Galileo. Elizabeth Rehbock and Robert Holmes will travel to the capital city to argue for compulsory arbitration of strikes against the Sacramento debaters.

Coalinga Junior College, 300 miles south of San Francisco, will be the destination of a Ram team on November 18 when they will debate arbitration with Coalinga. San Francisco's representatives have not been definitely chosen, Isabel Sherrat went to the southern institution last year and has been tentatively chosen this year.

Rivalry between Coalinga and San Francisco is rapidly becoming a tradition in the forensics field. In 1936 a team from San Francisco journeyed to the south and in the spring of 1937 Coalinga's representatives came to San Francisco.

Local Schools Aid In Annual Charity Drive

College Faculty Members Take Active Part In Chest Campaign

Headed by C. Harold Caulfield, President of the Board of Education, the School Division of the San Francisco Community Chest Agency officially opened its drive last Monday. Mr. Caulfield is ably assisted by Archibald Cloud, president of San Francisco Junior College, who will be one of his Lieutenant-Colonels, and Dean of Men Edwin C. Browne, who has been appointed Major of Battalion "F" in the school division.

The Chest outlined its plans for this fall last night at the Civic Auditorium, in a program sponsored by the San Francisco Junior Chamber of Commerce. A galaxy of stars of radio, stage and screen, headed by Leo Carrillo and Jimmy Gleason as master of ceremonies, furnished the feature part of the show, which was followed by "Planet V66" a magnificent pageant depicting the activities of the Chest Agencies in an entertaining, instructive and altogether delightful manner.

Started about ten years ago, the Community Chest movement has met with constantly growing success in San Francisco. Its organization was accomplished through the united efforts of a great many civic leaders, who were conscious of the need for a systematized work. Before the inception of the Chest, there was a great deal of confusion and duplication of work among the charitable organizations. The Chest was begun primarily as a move to stamp out the disorder and inefficiency which marked the old order of the day. Professional beggars were clutching from two or three different agencies; citizens were asked to contribute to any number of societies, and sometimes didn't know what was being done with their money.

Fostered by the more prominent members of the community, men who were leaders in every field of social endeavor, the movement grew into the present-day machinery which accomplishes an untold amount of good each year. The prime objective of the Community Chest, and the main reason for its birth, is a concerted drive by all agencies, either of an out-and-out charitable nature, or of a re-habilitative, or constructive aid type, to obtain subscriptions and donations up to a certain quota, and then to distribute the money among all agencies in direct proportion to their size, importance and needs.

At times, the question has been raised as to why the National Government did not or could not accomplish the work as well as the Chest Agencies. The answer to this is obvious. In the first place, all the agencies for relief of the Federal Government are concerned primarily with the provision of food and clothing only, to see that people are given the necessities of life at most. The Community Chest movement is undertaking to aid and further every work of any sort which aids someone less fortunate than his fellows. Boys' Clubs, hospitals, opportunities for young people to find work, homes for unwed mothers, homes for the aged and infirm, Red Cross work, clinics, are but a few of the worthy movements sponsored and aided by the Community Chest and its affiliated agencies.

President Cloud, in a statement issued to The Guardsman, said that he hoped the young people of today would acquaint themselves with the work which is being done by the Chest, and that they would co-operate with the people who are actively engaged in the work at present. "All the young people," said Cloud, "will someday be faced with the problems which beset the leaders of the present. When they are called upon to do their share in directing the destinies of the race, it will be of inestimable value to them to know something of how to aid their more unfortunate fellows."

It is earnestly hoped by the leaders of the Chest Agencies that students and faculty alike will get behind the drive this year in order that the quota may not only be reached, but exceeded. As one of the spokesmen for the committee on subscriptions said, "It is not so much the amount in actual cash that the individual gives, but rather the support and encouragement which the people as a whole show, that counts in the long run.

Hotel Division Students At Del Monte Gathering

Presenting a rare and vital opportunity for future employers to meet students of the College Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, the California Northern Hotel Association invited J. Graham Sullivan, coordinator of the College Hotel Division, and student members of his group, to attend its Annual Convention at the Del Monte Country Club from Thursday through Saturday, October 14th, 15th, and 16th.

The College Hotel and Restaurant Division has attracted the wide attention of other colleges and organizations throughout the state, according to Sullivan, by its enthusiastic and industrious activities. Although the local college is a comparatively new institution, the group's outstanding advancement has been awarded recognition by hotel business men of California.

EXHIBIT WORK

The students were asked to present an exhibit of the work done in the Hotel classes and to conduct a round-table conference with Sullivan in charge, as part of the program planned by the hotel men.

Several students who participated in the affair by presenting lantern slides of Division activities were Louis Aber, Jr., Clark Chittick, Carl Ruteledge, Trevett Wilson, Collin Oveland, and Kenneth Wurch. The slides taken during the last year cover such typical work as waiting on tables, visiting hotels in the city, class-room study, store-room inspection, and front-office practice.

The college was given a booth conducted by students to acquaint hotel men with the scope of work and training Hotel and Restaurant Management classes receive under Sullivan's guidance.

PLANS DISPLAYED

Perspectives of the entire new college plant prepared by Architect Timothy Pfleuger, charts of class distribution, proposed kitchen plans, accompanied by material presented in class lectures were taken to the convention for the benefit of the hotel men.

"This affair was the biggest chance the college has ever had to allow students to meet all the leading hotel men in California and present them with facts about the Hotel Division. The college has never before participated in an event of this type," said Doris Becker, secretary to Sullivan. "Future plans for the Division include an Open Forum conducted at the next monthly meeting of the California Northern Hotel Association," she added.

Winning further acclaim, the College Hotel Division received praise in an elaborate illustrated description of its activities in the October, 1937, edition of "The Western Hotel and Restaurant Reporter," a local magazine covering all hotel news on the coast and widely read by business men.

PRACTICAL EFFORT

Operating as a non-profit organization, cafeteria dining room service is conducted by the class at the cafeterias of Galileo High School and at Marina and Everett Junior High Schools.

"The benefits derived are two-fold. First, students gain practical experience in the fundamental principles already studied, and, second, the essentials of high school and junior high school cafeteria operation are analyzed and studied," said Miss Becker.

"Hotel and Restaurant Management fall plans provide for other excursions. The exact dates of future trips will be announced later," added Miss Becker.

Exam Warning

Final aptitude examinations will be conducted at 2:30 in the afternoon of Thursday, November 4, in Room 458, at Galileo High School.

Failure of any student to take the examinations will automatically forfeit his right to credit for his semester's work or to graduate.

WOMEN CHOOSE OCTOBER 28 FOR TEA

Honoring all women students of the college, the semi-annual Associated Women Students' tea will take place on the afternoon of next Thursday, October 28, from 3 to 5 o'clock, in the Galileo Faculty cafeteria. All of the college's 520 co-eds are urged to attend the affair, AWS officers have announced. A brace of college talent has been secured to entertain and refreshments capable of assuaging the pangs of hunger of a large and enthusiastic crowd have been assured.

Committee chairmen having charge of the tea are as follows: refreshments, Isabelle Sherratt; invitations, Kay Evulich and Barbara Randall; entertainment, Marion Yager and Norma Parent, AWS president. These women and the rest of the AWS Executive Council, together with other specially selected co-eds, will act as hostesses.

Miss Parent said that she would personally extend an oral invitation to the women of the college to attend the tea at the Women's Athletic Association football rally today. She also commented on the rally, "On behalf of the AWS, I would like to express our enthusiasm for and support of the WAA rally. Not only will it be helpful in giving the women of the college a better understanding of football from the standpoint of the spectator, but it provides a most welcome opportunity for AWS and WAA members alike to find a common ground on which to work."

On the subject of the tea itself, Miss Parent continued, "Please be assured (and I am speaking directly to every woman student) that we have planned the tea in the hope that you will enjoy it. Be sure to attend, and urge your friends to attend. This tea is held semi-annually primarily as a social affair giving the AWS members an opportunity to become better acquainted with one another. If you come, you can give us some ideas about how we can improve the organization and work of the AWS, and incidentally let us know who you are. We'd like to know you and, we hope, you'd like to know us.

COLLEGE GRIDTEAM SUPPORTERS TO TRAVEL TO PANTHER'S CITY

Unusual Entertainment Promised On Special Excursion; Complete Section Devoted to Activities of Local Collegiate Tourists

Enthusiastic reception by the college students of the proposed trip to Sacramento on next Friday evening was announced by Jack Schmale, college publicity manager, who is in charge of arrangements for the trip. Today is the final date for making train reservations, according to Schmale, and all those intending to go should secure their tickets at the Finance Office at Galileo before 4:30 this afternoon. Price of the tickets is $1.80.

The excursion to see the Ram footballers meet the Sacramento Panthers in the Capital City Stadium on Friday night will leave from the Ferry Building at 3:00 o'clock in the afternoon and arrive at 5:00 o'clock in the evening. It is planned to leave from Sacramento at midnight following the grid game and arrive back in San Francisco early the next morning, Schmale said.

—TRIP STUPENDOUS

Those who have been aiding Schmale in making arrangements for the trip have stated that present plans promise all students making the jaunt what might mildly be termed as a stupendous evening. A special section of the Southern Pacific train to Sacramento will be devoted entirely to the college, with provisions being made for the much-discussed "dancing car" which will be provided with music by the newly-organized college swing band. Two regular chair cars will be included in the special section and it is hoped that the railroad company will provide an observation car and diner exclusively for the junior college students.

"We expect a huge crowd," Schmale said, "and we can promise all those who attend a hilarious trip. It is hoped that every one will take advantage of all the unusual innovations to train travel that we are arranging, such as dancing in a car especially constructed for that purpose, community singing, and other activities drumming up enthusiasm for the game. Get over to the finance office with your $1.80 before 4:30 this afternoon so that you don't get left at home.

COMEBACK PROMISED

"As to the game itself, I can promise you a lot of swell football when the Rams, eager to do a comeback after last week's drubbing, tangle with the wide open attack of the capital city Panthers."

Student body cards from the college will be recognized at the gate of the Sacramento Stadium and it is being planned to secure reduced rates on the diner of the train so that trip will not be too expensive for the student travellers.

Peace Body To Hold Postponed Election Of Officers Today

Meeting in Room 465 at Galileo at 2 o'clock today, the Peace Council will hold a short meeting to elect officers.

Although elections were supposed to be held last week, they were postponed until today by vote of the group present. More than a quorum was present at last week's meeting, but the group felt that it would be more democratic to wait another week when more members would be present. Poor attendance was blamed on the change of meeting time.

Officers to be elected today are a vice-president, secretary-treasurer and a corresponding secretary. The last conclave of the Council was devoted to an informal discussion of members of what sort of activity they thought the Council should conduct. According to members, although the meeting did not reach any decisions, it was a very fruitful one.

Assemblies, educational meetings of the Peace Council itself, use of the bulletin board and publications, and issuance of a bulletin by the Council were some of the suggestions advanced at last Wednesday's meeting as methods of advancing the idea of peace before the student body.

"There have been many criticisms," Fred Vast, president of the Peace Council, declared, "directed at the Council since it has been organized. We welcome criticism that is constructive because it aids us in our activity for peace, but to those whose criticism is destructive we can only look at it as aimed at the cause of peace. We know that many students are confused as to just what the issues involved are, especially by derogatory remarks made of the Council through the columns of the Ram's Horn and by mouth. To those students," he continued, "who are sincerely interested in peace and to those students who are confused and want to arrive at a decision in this matter, we extend an invitation to attend our meetings and decide for themselves what the argument is all about. And further, if they find the Council an organization which they feel is doing the right thing and to their liking, to join. Those students that are sincerely interested in peace and in aiding the Council to be successful, we heartily welcome."

After today's confab, the Council will be completely organized and meetings will not be held so often as they have been in the last few weeks, regular activity will begin! This will mark the beginning of a new organization and a new activity.

Editor's note: The Peace Council has evoked much discussion, both pro and con. For both sides of the question read the "Ram's Horn" on page four. For editorial comment, read the editorial on page two.

Plans Being Made For Halloween Hop

With novel decorations of pumpkins, witches, ghosts and black cats, devised by Richard Allman of the college art department, the Men's Club Hallowe'en dance, to be held on Friday evening, October 29, at Oceanside Park, promises to be one of the most unusual affairs of the semester, according to Don Mills, president of the organization.

"We are expecting a large crowd," Mills said, "as admission is by one student body card per couple and there is room enough for every one in the college. The only light will be from the large open fireplace and the grinning jack-o-lanterns placed about the room.

RIFLE TEAM IN INITIAL SHOOT

Firing their first inter-collegiate match of this semester, the college rifle team will journey to Kentfield on the afternoon of October 28 to meet the Marin Junior College rifle team at 2 o'clock, according to William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college team. All four positions will be used in firing: prone, sitting, kneeling, and offhand.

Although the teams will only fire once, three separate matches will be counted from the results. Out of the ten men firing on each team, the scores of the high five will count for one match; the scores of the high five from a picked team of eight out of the ten, for another; and the scores of all of the men will count for a third match, thus saving the time and trouble of firing three times.

"This is the first of what I hope to be a series of matches between the junior colleges throughout the state, leading up to a recognized Junior College Conference for rifle teams," Hancock said. "I have communicated with the National Rifle Association, asking them to make a Junior College Division in their NRA Inter-collegiate matches," he added.

The team that will fire against the Mariners, as announced by Hancock, follows:

Don Smith, George Dieser, Frank Dupnik, John Benton, Max Brewen, Duane Peterson, John Julius, Bill Gibson, Bill Carroll, and Alfred Plaw. The team will be managed by Fred Wright, Bill Hancock will act as coach.

PEACE WORK

Within the last few weeks the college has heard much discussion concerning the merits and demerits of the newly established Peace Council. The last two editions of The Guardsman have carried several vigorous letters of protest in the Ram's Horn, while the news columns of these same issues carried stories in which originators spoke with satisfaction of the work of the embryonic organization.

All those who have derided the efforts of the council have been in unanimous agreement on one point. All are in favor of peace. The difficulty lies in determining whether or not the Peace Council will serve as an effective measure in the enforcement of peace.

The ideals and objectives of the organization are without question noble and progressive. It is naturally the hope of any sane and intelligent man to keep the Hounds of War well leashed, and The Guardsman will obviously support, in its broad aspect, any activities devoted to the furtherance of peace.

In considerating the points raised by those objecting to the present council, it is well to dismiss the eloquent but hardly logical points of dissension brought up by those whose opposition is based on purely personal grounds. It seems somewhat officious and overbearing for one to condemn the efforts of the group because its first few meetings did not exemplify the epitome of orderly parliamentary procedure.

To those who refuse to support the council because of suspected pinkish tendencies, it can be answered that our college peace organization has no such affiliation despite the fact that some similar groups in other colleges admittedly do. It would seem a far wiser course of action for those who fear radicalism to join the council and exert all their efforts to keep it free from Red leanings rather than to stand off in helpless horror and watch the undesirable element take hold without putting up a fight.

The main point of dissension, and the one most worthy of consideration, is the point regarding the constitutional provision for voting rights. The constitution of the Peace Council states in part, "Every group that continues to send representatives will have a vote in the council and subsequently will be signifying its desire for peace, and endorsement of the council's activities. Membership in the organization shall consist of two representatives from every college organization and similarly interested individuals."

As was pointed out in a recent letter to the Ram's Horn, it is possible by such a device to have all the organizations of the college subservient to the will of ten or twelve individuals with absolutely no other extra-curricular affiliations.

Another objectionable point regarding the present form of the organization of the peace group is its self-erected position as a convention with the extraordinary power of drawing representatives from all other college organization. The technicality involved, regarding the usurpation of the powers of the Executive Council, is not clearly understood by the student body, and it is further believed by The Editor that even those who drafted the council's constitution did not fully realize the possible significance of their dictatorial enactment.

In completely clarifying the issue in regard to the power of the Peace Council to call for representatives from college organization, it becomes necessary to explain the position of the Executive Council in regard to other college associations. As its name implies, the Executive Council is a gathering of representatives from all campus activities working in the interests of coordination of all the diverse forces of the extra-curricular life of the college, and it is naturally superior to any single organization or group of organizations represented within itself. It is the organ through which the opinion of the entire student body and not that of merely one clique is expressed. The force of authority of the whole student body rests in the Executive Council and by the very nature of the definition of authority it is seen that no two groups can logically hope to represent the general opinion of the student body. One must be supreme. Yet the Peace Council, by drawing representatives from all campus organization, and thereby pretending to present the opinion of the entire college, is placing itself on a position equal in power to that of the Executive Council.

Efforts spent in the interests of peace are certainly commendable, but it is doubtful whether the present college Peace Council will be very successful unless the above mentioned ridiculous constitutional provisions are removed.

LA ARTISTE

Seated here at my trusty machine,
With nary a thought in my rusty bean,
I hem and haw, and I bite my nails,
And try to think of some suitable tales
To thrill my readers, (all two of them)
Who clap for joy at the thought of "FEM".
But think as I will, I can't quite strike
The spirit I'm after, the tempo I'd like,
So I tear up the paper and leave the room,
To save myself from going boom!
And I walk around in the cool night air,
To prevent the tearing out of my hair,
And I finally come back and go to bed
With a pain in my neck and an ache in my head,
Resolving never to write again,
But I do!

And why? I ask you! After receiving a nice long pep-talk last night from a young man on "Why Women Shouldn't Be Writers," we find that we still harbor within us that desire to put things down on paper and, as you who read this column regularly know, we are not too particular about what we put down on paper just so long as we get it out of our system. "You," our friend told us, "should be an actress!" Imagine, we can't even give an oral book report in front of a small class without having the shakes for days before! Actress, indeed! We painted a word picture of ourselves all put away in the flowing draperies of a Juliet only to be halted by our friend who cried, "Oh no, I mean that you should be a comedienne!" Humm-mm, we humm-ed to ourselves, just how is that to be taken? After thinking it over, we decided to give Patsy Kelly a break and stay away from Hollywood for a little while anyway.

In a few short days, (God and Miss Nourse willing) we will be joining the rest of the boys and girls and setting off on that long-looked-for trip to Sacramento. From all indications there is to be quite a time going up and coming back what with special cars, etc., and then too there is that slap-bang football game that will be waiting for us when we get there. We'd like to urge that those who plan to go and haven't signed up yet, do so at once. See you aboard!

From the numbers of people who declare they're going to the Sacramento game, the college will have to charter two special cars instead of a mere one. Why don't we have pom-pons for the women rooters to wave at the game? We heard something about the WSS getting busy on this matter, but so far no definite action has come of it. . . . After the AWS officers getting so much Green Flash publicity, The Guardsman staff finally got a break in the News. It does seem as if the college is breaking into print in a big way. . . . With everyone saying that now the Rams will play in the Rose Bowl before Cal does this year, the football team should have an inspiration to spur it on to success. . . . Pay Dirt

He sat staring at the two tall drinks before him. His trembling hands wrestled each other nervously. He started and looked up as footsteps sounded behind him. His eyes sparkled momentarily, but as he gazed at his friend's dejected countenance, the spark was quenched, the flame unkindled.

The two men sat staring at the two tall drinks before them. They turned at the same instant and looked full into each other's eyes. Neither spoke. Words were not necessary, for each understood what the other failed to say. Both reached for their drinks and drank. The act of drinking rather than the liquid relieved the tension. Each made as if to speak. The newcomer gave utterance first:

"What'll you do now, D. S., since I can't negotiate the loan? Look for some new security to put up as collateral?"

The figure addressed pushed back his chair. A wan smile clung precariously to his sagging jaw. He pursed his lips, then separated them.

"No, I don't think so, J. C. I guess Ill just give up. But how can I face her?"

His companion clutched the speaker's shoulder reassuringly:

"Don't give up hope, D. S. Just tell her the truth and the next day start from scratch. Well, c'mon, let's get out of this place."

They rose and started down the runway to the exit. Halfway there D. S., staring straight ahead, stiffened, staggered, and might have fallen had not J. C. been there to steady him.

"There she is, J. C., I can't go through with it."

"Steady, steady, old man," admonished his friend, "don't lose heart. Remember it wasn't because you did not try that you failed." As he spoke, J. C. glanced toward the woman seated near the door. She was beautiful, but he passed over that feature. She was cold and calculating. He had always noticed that. He turned back, for D. S. was speaking.

"I'll go through with it. I feel better now. C'mon, let's go."

"You go out first, J. C. I don't want you dragged into this."

"O. K., D. S. See you after."

D.S., left alone, snapped back his shoulders. He strode resolutely up to the woman. Lifting his head, he stared straight at her.

"I'm sorry," he said, "I'm sorry. I have the money for the milk shakes but I can't pay the sales tax."

And so, once again, the cashier at Carroll's Light Lunches was short of her sales tax money. (Dick Simpers now brings his lunch.)

After Dark

By John Ward

While the opera is with us these few fall weeks it might be well to continue our mild denouncement begun last week. For there are faults to be found not only on the stage and in the orchestra pit but in the audience, both sitting and standing, as well. And perhaps the very reason for these faults is that they are not often enough exposed and criticized.

Some of the audience arrive early and clutter up the entrances, others arrive late and disturb no end. Some come to talk to friends, and others come to rattle programs as though they suffered from palsy. Many, many women suffer from a desire to snap pocket-books open and shut throughout the evening as if they had nothing better to do. And there are those choice multitudes who know automatically the time to leave during the last act when it is most annoying to those listening—and they leave for no better reason than to obtain a taxi. One wonders why they bother to come at all.

These public nuisances attend the opera year in, year out, gathering more disquieting traits or such and never losing. And every year there is a call for some announcement from the directors of the opera asking a natural courtesy that the audience have failed to realize. Last year it was the rushing after the first taxi, this year . . . .

While the fashion parades of the orchestra and grand tier sitters is an understandable evil, it is just the opposite with those who sit in the balcony and near vicinity. It is an old saying and true that the balcony is reserved for musicians. But during the opera season it would seem that this last sanctuary is invaded by the "unbelievers" and there is just as much irritating and unnecessary noise as elsewhere in the opera house.

It is only to be hoped that each individual member of an opera audience learns a lesson in courteous and musicianly listening (impossible as this may sound). And until this actually happens we may only shout and cry about it until something begins this wholesale education. After all, it isn't very easy to turn to a talkative neighbor and say, "Madam, I don't know what you came here for, but I came to hear 'Carmen'!" unless your intestinal fortitude is well founded.

Presidential Patter

By Gene Blumenthal

We who have been the object of much devastating criticism and thus far, quite unimpressed with the Peace Council proceedings, are thankful that we have been blessed with a liberal mind and a broad perspective.

In keeping with our own philosophy of opposition to destructive criticism, we seek to placate those wounded and bewildered individuals, who are wondering why the storm rages, by offering constructive comments on the correct method of procedure.

Most certainly, the Council's actions thus far, have not proved to be an inducement for a widely variegated group of individuals to come stampeding to the meetings to apply for membership. Our reaction has been that by their actions and haste to do a big job in a hurry, they have very nearly sounded their own death knell.

Not completely comprehending the magnitude of the task they have undertaken, the leaders of the Peace Council have rushed blindly into many obstacles and have thus been hit at almost every turn with derogatory comments and withdrawals.

The fact that the Peace Council has made mistakes and run into almost insurmountable obstacles at the beginning, is not unusual. Almost every group, no matter what its objective or purpose, has found, either through lack of foresight or a thorough understanding of its problems, that it has by its own measures impeded its progress.

Making more mistakes in two organization meetings than was thought possible by any mere mortal, the Peace Council started off by blundering. If only the council will reconsider its actions, and pause reflectively for a solution, then it is not too late to be turned in the right direction.

Passing an unfit and inadequate constitution, by a unanimous vote, the council made its first and greatest error, and from which the present controversy has sprung. The method of procedure, too, was an injustice to Roberts' "Rules of Order." That, however, is relatively unimportant, but it offered an opportunity for disgruntled factions to raise the cry.

Having arrived at the crux of the situation, upon which hinges the fate of the Peace Council, the time has come for it to prove its integrity by rebuilding the constitution.

Seeking an answer to the barrage of criticism which has fallen upon the Peace Council, and having made many interesting discoveries, we suggest that that Council's leaders take heed.

The members have antagonized almost every group, by approving a disproportionate method of representation and voting, and usurping the powers of the Executive Council by making themselves an omnipotent organization of the college. The Peace Council has an uncertain set of by-laws and an indefinite method of achieving their objectives.

Should the group abandon its rush methods, and in their place adopt deliberative ones; should it amend its constitution and by-laws to provide for a representative and adequate system of constituting the council; should it provide for a method of voting which will reflect a true majority will; and should it build a group which will not interfere with the status of the Executive Council; should this be done, then, and only then, will the council stand a chance of succeeding.

We do not particularly favor this method of achieving peace. The fate of the Peace Council, however, lies not in our hands, but in its own. The burden of proof is on its leaders. So, regardless of our prejudices, let's give them a chance.

Out of the Fog

By BOB MacARTHUR

Feeling rather lazy this morning, and having nothing important to write about anyway, we have decided to inflict the following column on our defenseless readers (all three of them).

College moments we'd like to relive . . . registering as a low freshman. Boy, were we big stuff? We cannot admit just how long ago that was, or exactly what we mean by stuff. . . . attending the first meeting of the students, before anyone was registered, which was held at the War Memorial Opera House. . . . hearing those lectures by members of the faculty, during Orientation Week. We never have gotten "oriented."

. . . the time we tried to fool Dean Browne by telling him we went to Galileo High School. He still kids us about that one. Well, it was one way of getting acquainted with the great man.

. . . the swell bridge games we used to have on the mezzanine floor of the college book store. We used to play another game, and Fimmy Jahn was always the "old maid."

. . . the sensational blasts of The Guardsman, in connection with an election which seemed of dubious quality.

. . . the first semi-formal dance, which was held at the Palace, and Willy Beinstock thought the waitresses who served the ice water were supposed to be favours.

. . . the time the Block Society's initiates raced up and down Powell Street dressed as old women. They made 'em eat raw vegetables, and some of them sure looked weird with beet juice smeared all over their faces.

. . . the day the football team threatened the life of a certain sports writer, for making various derogatory remarks in his column. He suddenly found it rather attractive at State.

. . . the lunches the gang used to cook, up at Howie Pfeiffer's place. Howie's now peddling insurance for a local company. Check us if we're wrong on that.

. . . the night the gang went ice-skating out at the beach. Zarlotte Chier tried to cut a figure, and almost froze her figure.

. . . the beautiful night of the first Los Angeles game when nearly everyone who came arrived in a boat of some sort. Tony Scafani nearly drowned when an exceptionally big rain drop hit him. The crowd, about one hundred strong, massed in the dug-outs at Seals' Stadium. Yes. it was unusual weather.

Around the town . . . watching them carry a "stiff" in front of our squeamish nose, as we passed the Emergency Hospital on Sacramento Street the other night. . . hoping the ancient ferry-boat would not sink one morning, when everyone rushed to one side to see how close we came to another boat, in the heavy fog which enshrouded the bay. We're positive it tipped to a forty-five degree angle . . . seen on an awning "On Ning Herb Co.," 846 Stockton Street.

We'll try to "dew" better by you next week.

FOOTBALLERS LOSE TO PASADENA, 13-7, IN STARTLING UPSET

By GENE BLUMENTHAL

ABOARD RAM'S STREAMLINER—APPROACHING SANTA BARBARA OCT. 17th 10 A.M.: Powerhousing to touchdowns on two quick thrusts, the underdog Pasadena Bulldogs turned the tables on the highly touted Rams last Friday evening. Sweeping into historic Rose Bowl in the Arroyo Seco, the San Francisco Rams received a severe setback, when, before thirty thousand frenzied spectators, an inspired Pasadena team, gambling on open plays, succeeded in tallying twice. Almost before the Rams were aware that the game was in progress the Bulldog attack was under way, and a confused red and white team just couldn't stem the tide.

Led by Captain Bill Busik, backfield ace, who seemingly had everything, the Bulldogs played one quarter of sensational football. After that, they hung on, carefully nursing their one touchdown lead. Sparking the Pasadena outfit to great heights, Busik, alternating with fullback Harry Campbell, passed and ran his team to its first victory of the season.

Following the opening kickoff "Cutter" Boitano and Bill Busik engaged in a punting duel, with a slight edge to Boitano. When Campbell returned a Ram punt to his own 43, the signal was on for the Bulldogs to go to town. With Busik leading the way, Pasadena swept down the field some 57 yards into pay dirt, and 6 points.

Busik and Campbell alternating in packing the spheroid made it first down on the 12, and again with Busik toting made another first down on the Ram 1 foot line.

On the next play, Busik attempting a wide sweep, was thrown by Captain Elwood Pierce for a four yard loss. However, the play was called back and the Raiders penalized to the 6 inch line for offside. Pasadena couldn't miss, and on the next play Busik skirted end for six points, and then calmly kicked the extra point.

MacDonald on the second kickoff took Stepp's boot behind his own goal line and returned it to the Ram 22. After two line plays, MacDonald then lofted a high 37 yard kick to Pasadena's 40, where it was returned by Busik to the Pasadena 45.

Busik made 4 over left tackle, and Spratt on a reverse squirmed through to the Ram 34. Busik cut over guard for 3 yards to the Ram 31. Sensing a touchdown Busik faded, and tossed a long pass to left end Bartlett, who snagged it and fell on the 1 foot line. The pass was a floater, and it deceived the safety man, Al MacDonald.

At this point the quarter ended, and on the first play of the second, Campbell went straight over center for another score. Stepp's attempted placement was blocked and the score remained 13 to 0 in Pasadena's favor.

The kickoff was taken by Olsen on his 5, and on his 10 he reversed it to Walt Boitano. Boitano started up the side lines and when apparently away, he cut in and was stopped on the Ram 45. After "Cutter" Boitano made it a first down in three tries on the Pasadena 38, MacDonald faded, and tossed an eleven yard pass to El Pierce for a first down on the Bulldog twenty-seven. Boitano then cracked over guard for 5 yards, and on a power play over the middle, he made another first down on the Pasadena 15 yard line. Allen MacDonald on a reverse lost 3 but Boitano on the next play made five to the thirteen. Boitano on two successive tries over center, made it a first down on the Bulldog 4.

Two line plays availed nothing as Pasadena shifted into a nine man line. Egelhofer showed smart quarterbacking by calling a pass in the end zone. The pass, intended for Pierce, fell incomplete, but it served to split the Pasadena backs and open a hole in the defense. Boitano, taking the ball on a direct pass from center, lowered the boom on the middle of the Pasadena line, and went over for a touchdown. It was a sustained drive of 55 yards. "Bud" Weichers came in for Guedet and kicked the extra point, making the score Pasadena 13, Rams 7. That ended the scoring for the evening.

Ram Soccer Squad Meets Menlo Next

With one conference win already under their belt, the Ram soccer men will be well on their way to another championship, if they down the highly touted Blue and White wave from Menlo J. C. on their own stamping grounds Saturday.

Coach Tom Wilson is dubious over the outcome of this game. "Our first conference tilt was so close, and ended in such a whirlwind finish, that I wouldn't give up as lost if our team was five points behind, because the team has proven that it is capable of a last minute victory. My only hope is that we will be in full strength, as a couple of the players are down with colds."

The Rams will put a revised squad on the field, the team being reorganized to put more power in the forward line so that they can run up an early lead, then hold it by playing a defensive game. One of the important shifts on the part of Coach Wilson was the switching of "Sandy" Lim from the half-back spot to left wing. In his new position he forms a powerful scoring combination with Jimmie Fahn, left inside.

In the key center forward spot is the high scorer of the squad, hefty Leo Johnson, a veteran of last season's championship team. Assisting him on his right will be "Tiger" Stokes who proved his ability last week by scoring two of the four goals the Rams made in defeating the U. S. F. Frosh. As his running mate is Mike Klebanoff, all-conference wing, who really knows how to handle, or rather "footle" the ball.

GRIDIRON GRUMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

It appears that the members of the football teams were not the only ones who got banged around during the game between the Rams and State. It happened like this:

Much annoyed by the encroachment of rowdies during football contests, the management of Roberts Field decided to put a stop once and for all to the raids of the toughies, who had formed the habit of clambering over the fence and enjoying the games without benefit of tickets. Consequently, a squad of guards was recruited from the ranks of the NYA boys, to guard the fence and prevent anyone from crashing. "If anyone tries to get in," were the instructions, "just smack 'em, and they'll run away."

Those issuing the orders, however, apparently underestimated the mettle of the force with which they had to deal. Game time rolled around, the guards took up their positions, and, sure enough, it was not long before furtive figures began to approach the fence. According to the defenders, most of these figures were between seven and eight feet tall, and built proportionately. Nevertheless, some of the hardier souls among the sentinels proceeded to carry out their orders, and flailed away at the attackers. Much to their surprise and discomfiture, the latter showed no disposition to rush off in terror. On the contrary, they proceeded to return the blows vigorously, and, judging from the battered visages of several of the guards the next day, with telling effect. Hereafter, avow the NYA lads, the Buchanan Streeters can defend their own premises, if they feel so disposed. A little diplomacy, however, might not be amiss.

Several members of the grid squad showed their resourcefulness last week when rain had turned the practice field into a veritable mud-bath. Since the condition of Funston was hopeless, workouts were held at the Army field near Galileo, which resembled a sea of thick, gooey muck. Nothing daunted by the prospect of slopping around in such a mess, little Johnny Verducci made his appearance clad only in a pair of swimming trunks, and splashed about to his heart's content. Willie Dolman showed up with a yellow slicker draped over his football togs, and Bob Fex donned a bathing cap to keep his curly(?) hair from being disarranged by the rain. The lads emerged from the slime a trifle untidy, but apparently none the worse for wear.

Inspired by some kindly motive, the members of Margaret Dougherty's Home Economics class last Thursday sent a supply of sandwiches over to the Guardsman office, for the nourishment of the weary and deserving scribes who were busily giving their all that the traditions of the Press might be upheld; but do you think for a minute that the poor Guardsmaneers received the goodies intact? No indeed, such was not the case. Scarcely had the beautiful waitress passed the portals of the editorial sanctum when she was pounced upon by those greedy gridders, Nelson and Weiner, who proceeded to make short work of the dainty tid-bits, while the intended recipients looked on in speechless horror.

Wily attempts on the part of the staff to angle another batch were met with the sorrowful statement that "theah ahn't any moah," so the starving scribblers had to make the best of the situation, while their tormentors lounged and picked their teeth, smirkingly contentedly.

On their recent trip to Marin, the Ram racquet-wielders returned not only with a victory over the Mariners in tennis, but with the ping-pong championship of Marin County tucked safely away, wrested from the Kentfield champion by Bob Kuhn in a gruelling battle subsequent to the regular matches. Looks like a banner year in athletics for the Rams.

U. S. F. BOOTERS DOWN WILSON'S SQUAD, 6 TO 2

Borne under by superior weight of numbers, the Ram soccer squad last Saturday lost to the University of San Francisco's combined varsity and freshman squads by the score of 6 to 2, at the Hilltoppers' field.

Handicapped by the fact that they had but two substitutes, and were without the services of three of their star players, Lim, Johnson, and Fisher, the Rams put up a gallant battle, and at half time the score was deadlocked, 2-2. At the opening of the second half, the Dons fielded an entire new team, while the Powell Streeters had to continue with the same line-up which had already played one half of fast soccer. The strain was too much, and fresh troops of the Dons succeeded in pushing four more goals between the uprights before the game ended.

Tallying the Rams' two goals were Stokes and Fahn, who managed to penetrate the defense of their opponents during the first period of play. Others who shone for Coach Tom Wilson's team were Flynn and Zuardo at fullbacks and Campbell and Taylor at halfbacks. Mike Klebanoff also turned in a good performance, while "Vodka" Leporsky was all over the field on defense.

The principal weakness of the Rams proved to be lack of reserve strength, which was directly responsible for their defeat. There are plenty of individual stars, but a lamentable dearth of replacements.

Co-eds Foiled In Seeing-Off Party

Deserting their downy couches at the dew-drenched crack of dawn, and forsaking the unmistakable luxury of a few extra hours of beauty sleep, several of the more rugged among the junior college co-eds tore themselves down to Third and Townsend last Friday morning to bid a fond farewell to the departing football heroes.

Getting off to a late start, the gals went through stop signals, railroad crossings and traffic tieups, arriving, as the old melly-dramas have it, "just in the nick of time." The lads were about to go through the gate and climb aboard their chugging charger so the young ladies, wanting to wave a final "bye bye" as the choo choo pulled out, took themselves out to an adjoining platform and stood opposite the car in which they were sitting, prepared to stick until the very end.

Alas, the end came too soon! A khaki-clad figure approached with murder in his eye! "Get off this platform!" he stormed. "Go on, get off!" The girls were amazed! They stood there wide-eyed. "Go on, now, get off this platform," blazed the over-efficient officer of the law (the khaki-clad figure, remember?), this time punctuating his commands with several far-from-gentle pushes.

Needless to say, the gals got!

Smarting under the severe blow to their dignity and the embarrassment of being called down in front of their departing heroes, the ladies stalked out of the station muttering something about inefficient railroads that didn't put up "keep out" signs.

TALENT SOUGHT FOR FIGHTS ON 3 OF NOVEMBER

With November 3 the date for the Men's Club fights rapidly approaching, plans for the affair are being brought to a completion by the committee handling the bouts. The place where the tussles will take place has not yet been announced, but will be by the next edition of The Guardsman.

The committee under the head of Don Mills is scouting talent for the boxing and wrestling bouts, and already quite a number of men students have signed on the dotted line, either to throw leather or engage in a grunt and groan match on the eventful evening.

There is still room for plenty of entrants, and it is not necessary to have a world of experience in order to compete in either division. Few of last year's champs will be defending their titles, so the field is wide open, with every entrant having a fifty-fifty chance to annex a crown.

One of the highlights of the entertainment will be the grudge match between two mighty muscled wrestlers, Maury Schwartz, former president of the Associated Students, and Sad Sam Goldstein, rugged professional grunt and groaner.

According to Mills, there will be free cigarettes for all spectators, and a possibility that there will also be free refreshments. Anyone interested in entering the bouts, either see Mills or sign up on the Powell Street Bulletin Board.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

Today at 2 o'clock at the first women's football rally, Dutch Conlan, junior college assistant football coach, will valiantly face a barrage of feminine questions such as: "What is the easiest way to tell who has the ball? Are the tackles usually more handsome than the guards? Is an offside when a player steps over the sidelines? How can even football players crash through a stone-wall defense? Who is a line buck? There is one fullback and two halfbacks so why aren't there four quarterbacks? What is our team going to do to Sacramento Junior College?"

The number of students to enjoy the riding class moonlight ride, to be held on October 29, is limited to 20 and all those who wish to go are requested to sign up in the Galileo gym or to see Laurine Bergin, riding instructor, or Charlotte Zier, manager of the WAA riding team. Men as well as women are invited to take part in the ride which will probably be along the ocean.

The dancing classes have completely worked out two dances for the dance recital to be held later in the semester. Future Eleanor Powells will be given an opportunity to try their hand at creating as well as performing dances, when the intermediate tap dancing class hands in dances which the students themselves have created this week. Dancers in modern dancing have been toiling diligently on solo dances.

Reaping the rewards of constant practice, seven of the women taking rifle have been chosen to represent the junior college in the women's league, when the matches begin. Those chosen are Helen Eltont, Gail Hanna, Jean Kidwell, Virginia Kwiatt, Betty McKenzie, Sylvia Rogers and Edna Wedam.

What happens when a men's football team and a women's hockey team hold practice at the same place and at the same time? This occurs at Funston Field with the following results:

A long punt soars over and down amidst a hockey game and a wily "hockeyette" makes a twenty-yard gain before the quarterback grabs a hockey stick and trips her. The girls are learning the football team's signals. Unwary football players often get a healthy clout on the head by a swinging stick. The puck is booted between the goal posts for the extra point, and the football is pushed past a female goalie into the goal. In short, the girls are becoming dandy football players and the football team is pretty good at hockey.

RED RAIDERS WILL MEET PANTHERS IN CONFERENCE CLASH

Making their second conference start of the season, Coach Russ Sweet's Ram gridmen travel up to Sacramento this Friday to engage Sacramento J. C. on the latter's home field. Despite their upset defeat by Pasadena last week, the Red and White footballers will probably enter the contest as favorites, as the only comparison between the squads gives them a decided edge. The Rams trounced Marin 12-0, while the Mariners whipped the boys from the Capital City by a score of 20 to 6.

In view of recent events, however, there appears to be a strong possibility of an upset, as the San Franciscans have tailed off, while the valley team has shown signs of increasing offensive power, although their defense is still far from impregnable. Their chief weapon is a powerful passing attack, which they have employed with satisfying results in every game so far.

The Solons play a wide-open game, and are not afraid to take chances; an ideal game from the spectators' point of view. They will send onto the field an eleven which, while not particularly large or heavy, is a threat at all times. Most of their scores so far have been accomplished by sudden thrusts from mid-field, rather than by sustained power drives.

SAME LINEUP

Against them, Russ Sweet will send virtually the same squad which started the Pasadena game: Guedet and Weichers at ends, Weiner and Dolman at tackles, Burke and Osborne at guards, Petersan at center, Boitano, Egelhofer, Olsen, and McDonald in the backfield. This combination has shown itself capable of applying plenty of power when it gets going, as evidenced by its long touchdown marches against State, Marin, and Pasadena, and if the attack doesn't bog down inside the twenty-yard line, as it did last week on four different occasions, should score on the Sacramentans.

Coach Hack Applequist views the chances of his team pessimistically, but too much weight should not be placed on his predictions, as he is known far and wide as a disciple of Stub Allison, and is possessed of more moaning ability than any other coach in the conference. If he is to be believed, the contest will be more in the nature of a slaughter than a football game, but it is fairly certain that he has some trick up his sleeve with which to befuddle Sweet's men.

STUFF

By JERRY FLAMM

Once again "The Guardsman" scoops the nation's press with the first exclusive details of the super-colossal, stupendous, million dollar musical comedy that will hit the local "Broadway" (Galileo Auditorium) on November 17. In a special secret interview granted behind locked and guarded doors, "Ziggy" Egelhofer, brilliant impresario and producer of smash hits that annually amaze the critics with their "different" touches, gave "The Guardsman" correspondent the details in a hushed tone. Dark circles were around his eyes, his face showed the unmistakable signs of fatigue, and his eyes darted furtively about the room.

"We've been working night and day on this production," said "Ziggy." "But we have to be careful. There are a lot of spies from other producers about who are trying to steal my ideas."

As he said this, "Ziggy" tiptoed suddenly over to a closed closet door, took out a nickel-plated revolver, pointed it at the door and shouted: "Come on out, you sneaking rat, before I blow you to kingdom come!" He waited a minute and then threw open the door and emptied six shots into the interior. Yes, "Ziggy" is right on edge.

The production will be titled "Life Begins In College" and is a musical comedy in three acts. Mr. Egelhofer has already finished the script and rehearsals began last Monday afternoon. The cast consists of the abundant talent from the Ram football team augmented by guest stars from the student body. Among those in the all-star cast are: "Shirley Temple" Verducci, "Charley McCarthy" Frediani, "Edgar Bergen" Hamilton, "Captain Bly" Egelhofer, "W. C. Fields" Worsham and "Bob Burns" Dolman. Among the special features are the engagement of "Guernewood Bowl" Weichers, a professional caroler at the ignoring of expense by "Ziggy"; and a "raid hod" dance number featuring "Truck-on-down" McDonald, the Alameda Schoolboy, with a beautiful chorus of "girls" accompanying him. The college dance band will furnish the music for this rhythmic spectacle. At the request of Mr. Egelhofer, we are asking our readers to keep this information under their respective hats, as spies are all around the campus. Mum's the word, men!

Every Monday is wash day for Simms Hamilton. With the blushes mounting in his cheek, the cherubic Hamilton enters the shower room and deftly clutching a bar of genuine 100% "Peach-bloom" soap in one hand, he cleanses his undershirt, or crudely known as "pimple-shirt," of all foreign matter. . . . Duke Worsham is now being groomed as a fullback by Russ Sweet. The permanency of the move is unknown. . . . Stan Beirwidth, varsity tackle, dreamed of ring fame with the announcement of the J. C. boxing championships. He started practicing. He went over to the Oakland Y.M.C.A. for a "warm-up" bout. Some monster "cooled" him in the first round with a couple of lusty swings. At first, they thought he was dead. He woke up in ten minutes and wanted the license number of the truck. The next day, still groggy, he flunked a history examination. Stan has retired to country life.

It seems that there was once a man in Pittsburgh who made a habit of reading the classified lost and found ads. One day, he noticed an advertisement in a London paper asking for the return of a shaggy dog and offering a large reward. That afternoon, while taking a stroll in the park, he noticed a very large and very shaggy dog. Without more ado, he proceeded to put a leash on it and set out for London. Upon arriving at the address given in the advertisement, he rang the doorbell.

"You advertised that you had lost a shaggy dog, I believe?" he queried.

The Englishman looked at the dog, then turned away and shook his head. "Not so d—— shaggy," he said.

Netsters Triumph Easily Over Marin

Showing continuance of the form which carried it to the conference championship last spring, the tennis team traveled across the bay to Kentfield on Columbus Day and scored a smashing victory over the Marin J. C. netsters, sweeping every match, both doubles and singles.

Competing on the victorious squad were Chandler Ennes, Bob Lazare, Alvin Altfield, Harold Wagner, Bob Kuhn, and Ben Mason. All these players won singles matches, and Lazare and Wagner teamed up to secure a win in the only doubles match played.

Definite seedings have not been made yet, pending the result of a ladder tournament which Coach Tom Wilson plans to hold in the near future, and which will establish the rankings of the various players. Anyone interested in competing for a position on the squad should consult Coach Wilson and make arrangements to enter.

There will probably be a number of matches played before the actual conference season rolls around, as league play does not start until early spring.

Veterans returning from last season's championship squad are Chandler Ennes, Bob Lazare, and Alvin Altfield. Newcomers who have shown to good advantage so far are Wagner, Kuhn, Mason, and Kirker. Harold Mitchell, who was one of the mainstays of last season's squad and who seems to be a greatly improved player, will probably hold down a regular berth, although he was unable to make the trip to Marin.

The Rams encountered little difficulty in downing the Mariners, only one match being really close. This was the one which found Ennes, first man last year, colliding with Harrington, the ace of the Kentfield aggregation. Ennes was fully extended in winning, 4-6, 6-3, 11-9, but he showed flashes of the form that made him one of the most feared players in the conference, and bids fair to retain his position, despite the fact that the competition will be stronger than ever.

"We have," says Coach Wilson, "one of the most evenly balanced squads that I have ever seen. Every man plays such a high grade of tennis that it is hard to choose between them. With such a squad, I feel that our chances of retaining the championship for another year are excellent."

BATTLE RAGES! PEACE COUNCIL MERITS ARGUED

RAMS' HORN

Eds Note:

In view of the unusual amount of interest and controversy that has developed over the establishment and organization of the college peace council, The Guardsman has decided to devote the entire Ram's Horn section to the presentation of the conflicting opinions that the first few meetings of the group have evoked. It is in keeping with the policy of the paper to present both sides of any topic of pertinent college interest, so pick your sides and let the battle roar.

Dear Editor:

In the last two issues of The Guardsman letters were printed which, to say the least were uncomplimentary to the Peace Council. I would like to take this opportunity to answer the charges and falsehoods the letters contained.

1) The first letter states: "I have heard that the German Club, Rifle and Pistol Club, Music Club and the Spanish Club intend to withdraw." However, the German and Spanish Clubs weren't even represented at the Peace Council! Only two organizations, the WAA and Rifle Club, have withdrawn; others are withholding further representation until the council becomes a chartered college organization.

2) "As the approved constitution now stands the Council can not even elect its officers." This is refuted by Article 4, (constitution) "The officers of this council shall consist of a president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer, and a corresponding secretary." Article 6 (by-laws): "The officers shall be elected every semester by a plurality vote."

3) The second letter deplores the fact that once a decision is reached by the Council, its member must abide by it. I wonder how the writer of the letter expects the Council, or for that matter any other organization, to accomplish anything if its members don't support matters adopted by it. And every decision of the Council is by majority vote.

4) The letter then goes on to attack "peace councilites" and advocates of President Roosevelt's court reform plan as being "pink-tinted," or in other words: radicals, communists, and what have you. In other words anyone who supports any sort of a progressive measure (be it President Roosevelt or someone else) is a communist: It's too bad that anyone interested in peace and in acting for peace has to be labeled a "communist."

5) The last charge in the second letter maintains that it isn't fair for clubs and interested individuals to have an equal vote. If the clubs themselves voted for the proposition why does the writer object? Actually they have double representation through their representatives and individual members!

Under the circumstances with which we have had to cope, the progress of the Council and the interest taken in it has been decidedly encouraging.

Anyone who has participated in the basic organization of a group knows it always takes a little while to get over the first stages. The position taken by the authors of these letters only tends to hinder the council's success. Only one conclusion can be drawn, and that is that they are opposed to the Council and therefore opposed to peace.

New movements and organizations with similar aims (for example Christianity) have always met opposition but have overcome them. The Peace Council will succeed because its purpose embodies the ideals and the aspirations of the majority of students and the people of the United States and the world as a whole.

Dr. Harry F. Ward has said that "the time to stop war is before it starts. The time to defend our democratic rights is now, before they are lost." President Roosevelt, in his famous Chicago address, said: "America hates war. America hopes for peace. Therefore, America actively engages in the search for peace." The Peace Council recognizes these statements, that is the basis for its existence, that is why it exists.

FRED VAST.

Dear Editor:

PEACE COUNCIL GOES TO PIECES!

Last week a letter in this column asked how many clubs were still represented in the Peace Council. I do not know how many the optimistic council claims to have, but at the last peace meeting there were only four clubs represented. Last week's letter also pointed out that a few interested individuals could out-vote all the clubs. How true. At the last meeting, seven individuals held the majority of votes.

For a club that is supposed to have the unanimous support of the Student Body, the Peace Council is making a very poor showing. Perhaps the students of the junior college feel that the council is defeating its purpose, and the students may not be wrong.

STILL DISGUSTED.

Editor, The Guardsman:

Dear Disgusteds — I am sure the Peace Council is willing to accept any justified criticism, and some of your criticism is valid. However, I personally feel a good deal was unjustified.

It is not our aims that you oppose; you condemn our activity solely on the evidence of imperfect order at our meetings. If you admitted the truth you would not have advanced this point as the organizers and others objected to unintentional hindrances of some of the members at the meetings. Yes, we didn't function perfectly; we made mistakes. But the proceedings of the meetings are minor details compared to our larger aim. I wonder too if you have ever seen the activity of other groups being organized.

I like your logic too — calling us names! Is that an accusation? Does that help your cause? Is that your only offense? The group has given you no reason, other than your own prejudices, to believe it fosters communism, is opposed to fascism, or in any way champions any cause other than peace. The Peace Council is meant to be a separate independent organization which will adopt and proceed with its own policies. If it should condemn anything it will be because it is counter to the ideals of the Council and not because it embodies a term obnoxious to certain groups of self-interested individuals.

However, I am sure the Peace Council, as it professes, is glad to accept your criticism and ideas if you are genuinely interested in a problem so universal and gigantic. We are not set in our ideas. Why not come to the meetings and foster your ideas? Are they that worthwhile? If your idea, however, is merely to destroy us, I think your purpose and tactics most unfair.

I cannot say officially, but I think the members of the Forum will uphold my opinion, that the Forum Club, who originally sponsored the idea of a peace council, gladly and proudly accepts the responsibility and will continue to further its efforts for the success of the Council.

And may I wonder if the writers of the letters aren't militarists seeking to stem the tide of a counter-force? Well, that would justify your actions!

RAY VALDEZ.

Dear Editor:

Aroused from our lethargy by an article recently printed in The Guardsman, we turn both barrels on another council, namely the Peace Council, which as a group, have yet to prove their ability to take it.

Claiming attention as an organization which heartily endorses peace, we find that listed as one of the bodies represented on the farcical Peace committee is the executive council.

Now this is a purely false, hypothetical, delirious dream of that council's leaders, who upon seeing the student body president present at one of their organization meetings, drew the very illogical conclusion that he and the executive council as a whole, endorsed their policy.

No such endorsement at present is forthcoming, as that can be decided only in an official executive session. To our way of thinking, the Peace Council under its present set-up, could not elicit a healthy response from any group, no matter what its purpose; as has already been proved by subsequent withdrawals.

Speaking as an individual, and acting as such, we visited two organization meetings of the Peace Council, merely as a spectator, perhaps, to aid and instruct them in the correct methods to obtain a charter.

But this council refused to be helped. Showing surprising ineptitude in all knowledge of procedure and organization, they proceeded to defeat their own purposes.

The Peace Council as at present constituted has shown itself to be a shallow, disconcerted, disorganized group, unworthy of what our college is capable of producing.

At no time should these statements be misinterpreted as to mean that we oppose peace, and endorse war. We despise wars and the men that cause them, as fervently as is humanly possible. Being individualistic, we differ from others in the manner of achieving that ideal.

An organized peace movement may not be the best method of curbing war. The attempted peace movement at the college may or may not have significance; but such persistent rumors that all such movements have communist approval have reached our ears, that we are forced to concede some foundation to them. On those grounds also, we hesitate and pause to consider matters as they really exist.

We know that war wastes a nation's wealth, chokes its industries, narrows its sympathies, destroys the flower of its manhood, and leaves only the weak, puny and deformed to breed the next generation.

We want peace, and its adjoining happiness; we seek the key to it; not foolishly, but almost abstractedly. Perhaps, passive resistance, rather than active aggression is the answer.

GENE BLUMENTHAL.

Editor, The Guardsman:

As a member of the Peace Council and one, seemingly of a minority, who is wholeheartedly in sympathy with its activities, I should like to present my "two cents' worth" on the other side of this present argument concerning the Council and its activities.

This destructive criticism to which the Peace Council has been subjected shows short sightedness and narrow-mindedness on the part of those most active in doing the condemning. But then it always has been a well-known fact that anything new and different is criticized adversely by those who know no better.

The charge that the meetings are poorly managed and accomplish nothing is decidedly unjust. They have not been given a fair chance. There are several students who are sincerely interested and who are doing everything possible to get the organization completed and activities under way, and believe it or not, they have plannned a very ambitious program of peace education.

If those who have been so active in their criticism would be willing to give a little "silent cooperation" I am sure that in the end they will have to admit that they were a bit too hasty in their condemnation for I am certain that there are enough fair-minded, interested individuals willing to give their support to this fine movement in order to make it the success that it is sure to be.

Sincerely,
INDIGNANT BUT OPTIMISTIC.

Editor, The Guardsman:

The answer to the statement or question of "what do the people who are organizing the peace council take us for": understand we who are trying to form this Peace Council do not take you who are disinterested for anything that constitutes a normal intelligent human being.

The Peace Council is not trying to override the votes of any club, but neither does the Council intend to be swayed from its main purpose by a few individuals whose interest in life is parliamentary law.

I have gotten away from my main point though. We who are trying to form this Peace Council have in mind grim remembrances of the last war. No, we did not fight, but who can help being reminded each day in the street when we pass those minus limbs, eyes, etc., that a war was fought?

What are we going to do in the furtherance of peace? That is for the students who form the Council to decide. If we accomplish nothing but educating those who compose our group in the horrors of war we will consider the council well worth our efforts. A world that thinks in terms of peace is in no danger of being disrupted.

A lawyer once said, "If you can't talk about the facts of a case before the jury, talk about the other lawyer." The same may apply to our opposition "if you can't talk about the basic facts the council has organized for, talk about the council."

We also state that anyone who believes the interests of peace are just, or anyone who wishes to show us that the interests of peace are unjust, is cordially invited to attend our meetings and take part in discussion.

College Marksmen Compete In State Rifle Tournament

Competing in the California Indoor 100 yard championships, a team of four men from the college Rifle Club fired at the Oakland National Guard Armory, last Sunday, October 17. The squad made a team score of 781 out of a possible 800. Members of the team were Duane Peterson, William A. Hancock, John Benton, and Don Smith.

Hancock, coach and range officer of the college rifle teams expressed himself as being well pleased with the showing of the team. "We were up against men from all over the state, many of them veterans of long standing, and as an added disadvantage, our team was using only the common Iron sights, whereas most of the other entrants were equipped with expensive guns and telescopic sights, consequently, I am very gratified with our showing."

Rifle classes are progressing rapidly, witnesses to last week's practice said. Last year's "veterans" are beginning to get back into shape and new members are learning the nomenclature of the rifle. The range is open at 5:00 Monday, and 5:30 Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday for club members.

AWS Tea

This is our chance to enjoy ourselves together."

Last semester the tea was held in the John Howell Art Gallery, in conjunction with the college-sponsored Federal Art Exhibit taking place at that time. This semester, however, the Galileo Faculty cafeteria was chosen as a background, AWS officers believing that this location was more convenient for most of the women students. The Cafeteria is situated in the basement of the Galileo High School, making it possible to go into the tea between classes.

TROUBADOUR IN RECITAL AT COLLEGE

By JOHN WARD

A very young and enthusiastic singer, Dwight Dier-Bennett, self-styled "Twentieth Century troubadour," gave a concert of folk-song last Friday in the Powell Street Extension Building. Playing on a specially constructed twelve-stringed Swedish lute, an instrument of the guitar family, he sang old and unfamiliar folk music of several countries.

His first number was a vigorous English sea chanty called "My father kept a boarding house." In this Dier-Bennett proved himself a sincere musician and a fine singer. There followed, in quick succession, a song of one Schubart, not the famous Franz, that was half folksong and half art-song, having to do with a hen and an egg; a German tune called "Krenzelkraut," was in the form of a dialogue, Dier-Bennett's wife singing with her husband. Especially charming was an American folk-song called "Crawdad," a spirited bit in the Negro spiritual style.

It was interesting to see the audience catch the mood of each song, whether humorous like the Austrian one about an old gossip and a flirting wife or tragic like the German song called "Little Sister." And when each little tune or story was over, the audience was quick to respond and quick to hear more. Mr. Dier-Bennett has the art of holding an audience at a good pitch during his recital.

All of which is rather astonishing for a young man twenty-three years old, who speaks several languages excellently, and who has great plans for the immediate future. He has a vision of the troubadours and bards and minstrels coming back in some new guise and creating a great folk-art theatre and an international understanding of all folk-art. He plans to visit Russia next year because of all places Russia offers the greatest opportunity to those interested in such a union and such a revival.

Cooking Classes Swell HEA's Size

Swelling the membership of the Home Economics Association to almost twice its former size, the college cooking classes donate their all, namely, their text-book, "The Way to a Man's Heart," further to improve the gaiety of this group.

During their lab periods these "would-be cookers of dinners" not only try difficult recipes but experiment with the different foods. According to Margaret Dougherty, instructor, they also do chemistry experiments, limited to household usefulness. They enter in contests and vie to see which group can prepare the most attractive and at the same time most palatable dish.

AMS Dance Plans

We are planning to serve popcorn and cider and there will be an oldfashioned apple-ducking just to get people into the spirit of Hallowe'en."

"The dance," he continued, "will be a semi-costume affair. That is, costumes will not be required but everyone is requested to wear a mask. There is a slight possibility that those attending will be asked to contribute a very small sum to be used toward financing the football team's trip.

Newly Organized Chess Club Meets At Ralston's Home

First meeting of the newly-organized chess club was held October 15 for the purpose of club organization, membership and the appointment of officers. Officers temporarily elected were Bill Switzer, chairman, and Henry Evans, secretary. It was decided that members missing three meetings in succession will be dropped from the rolls, and if a person attends two meetings in succession, he automatically becomes a member. Officers decided upon were president, secretary and treasurer and team manager. Meetings will be planned at each meeting previously held, and officers are empowered to call a meeting. A quorum will consist of a majority of the members and two thirds vote would be necessary to amend the club constitution.

Henry Ralston, faculty adviser, stated that the members should try to gain tournament experience and gave accounts of his own chess experience.

It was decided that the next meeting will be held at 7:30 o'clock October 20, at Ralston's residence, 1748 Tenth Ave.

The following members present at the meeting were: Bill Switzer, Carl Christiansen, Carl Von Herrmann, Henry Evans, and John Ward.

All students who are interested in joining the newly-organized chess club are urged to attend the meeting on October 20. Those who are interested in chess but are unable to play are likewise urged to join, for they will be taught the fundamentals of the game.

Iota Chi Plans Social Activities

Iota Chi fraternity is again planning another successful year in the social activities of the college. Organized in the fall semester two years ago, Iota Chi was formed purely as a social organization and has no national fraternity affiliations. As Russel Turver explained it, "Naturally it is an asset to have affiliations with a national fraternity, along with prestige, but I feel inasmuch as this is a junior college, the fellows will transfer elsewhere to an institution of higher learning. Another angle to consider is that the respective merits of a certain fraternity may not always be of the highest caliber on every campus that it may be represented. Consequently, one would not be desirous of transferring his allegiance to a certain chapter that does not have a high rating among intra-fraternity circles.

"Also, the cost of maintaining national chapter affiliations would involve a greater amount of expense than that which we are operating at now."

At the last meeting, plans were formulated by members for a picnic to be held within the next week or two at Point Reyes. Also the leasing of a fraternity house was taken under consideration.

Iota Chi officers for the ensuing year include: Russel Turver, president; Nor Woodfort, vice-president; Jim Preovolos, secretary and treasurer, and Richard Allman, faculty adviser. At present there are nine active members and four pledges.

Many prominent alumni of the college are past members of Iota Chi, including Bob Sisco, former Associated Students president, and now attending the University of California; Fleming Pope, former business manager for The Guardsman and now employed by a Sacramento ice concern; Eddie Schwartz, affiliated with Metro Goldwyn Mayer Studios in Hollywood, and Tyler McHugh, employee of a local drug concern.

Professor Speaks To Astronomers

Members of the Astronomy Club attended the first of two illustrated lectures by Dr. William F. Myer, professor of astronomy, University of California, given in the auditorium of the Pacific Gas and Electric Building last Monday night. The lectures are on the general subject, "The Two Solar Families," Monday night's topic being "The Sun's Family of Planets." The second lecture, "The Sun's Family of Comets and Meteors," will be given Monday night, November 15.

Betty Rehback, president of the Astronomy Club, urges new members, and promises more events of a similar nature.

Two dozen students and their friends journeyed by automobile to the Lick Observatory on Mt. Hamilton, Saturday, October 9, with Louis Berman, instructor of astronomy, in charge. Chief observations made by the visitors were the planet Jupiter, seen through the great refracting telescope, and the moon and the planet Saturn, through the small telescope.

Most of the party met in front of the main branch of the public library, but several took to the road after taking in the U. C. L. A. - Stanford football game at Palo Alto.

Beta Phi Moves First Of Month

Definite arrangements have been completed by Beta Phi fraternity for the leasing of a fraternity house, and members are expected to take over occupancy the first of November. Located on Leavenworth Street near Filbert, the spacious ten-room mansion affords a desirable location for a fraternity house.

At last week's meeting, plans were announced for a sponsored dance to be held the middle of next week. Also a banquet will be held in the near future for the purpose of introducing new pledges.

Beta Phi faculty advisers are Alden Smith and Dr. Sewell.

Scribe Reports Latest War News

"Take cover!" Extension Fort, the main objective in the Battle of Powell Hill is in a state of siege between the hours of 9 and 12 this morning. Don't become too alarmed, however, for this is only the semi-annual initiation of new members into the Army-Navy Club. The situation as brought to you directly from the front lines by your war correspondent, is as follows:

The Vermillion Army, composed of cavalry and infantry, has established a base and trenches along the Powell Street cable car tracks, and is attempting to capture Extension Fort, which is being defended by the artillery and machine guns of the Organdy Army. (Members of the Student Body are requested to maintain a policy of strict neutrality toward the belligerents.) Beautiful Red Cross nurses are on hand to take care of any casualties, but it is hoped that no neutrals will be harmed by either of the forces.

The valor of both armies will be reinforced by paddles, wielded by the Committee of Terror, composed of Walter "Dictator-For-A-Day" Thompson, Fred "Referee" Wright, and Ronald "War Correspondent" Smith.

This evening at 6:30, a buffet dinner and formal initiation ceremony will be held at the home of Bill Carroll. The newly-initiated members will be the guests of the Club at this dinner.

PE Majors Eat Waffles Tonight

With plans complete to hold a waffle supper tonight, the Physical Education club held their first meeting of the term last Friday at Adviser Bertha Keller's home. The constitution and aims of the club were reviewed for the benefit of new members. The principal aim is to further prepare girls for entering the teaching profession in the Physical Education department.

Mid scattered remarks about ice-skating, bicycling, hiking, and swimming parties it was decided to contact San Francisco high schools immediately in order to plan for a big get-together in the near future.

RIFLE AND PISTOL CLUB MEETS OCT. 28, AT GALILEO

PANEL SPEECHES FOR NEUTRALITY NEXT WEDNESDAY

MEN'S CLUB HALLOWEEN HOP FRIDAY

Don Mills Promises New Planned For Oceanside Entertainment at Dance

Promising to be one of the outstanding events on the term's social calendar, the Men's Club Hallowe'en dance will be held Friday evening, October 29, at Oceanside Park with a formidable array of features, including decorations of pumpkins, black cats and witches, designed by Ricard Allman, of the college's art department.

"We are expecting a large gathering, as admission is by one student body card per couple," stated Don Mills, president of the Men's organization, "and there will be plenty of room for every one in the college. Following out the spirit of Hallowe'en, we will have games and dances that are typical of an old fashioned Hallowe'en party. The orchestra has already been arranged for, and plenty of good dance music is in the offing. As a novelty in illumination, the only light furnished will be from a huge open fireplace and from the multitude of grinning pumpkins in attendance."

MASKS COMPULSORY

The dance will be a semi-costume affair. Masks will be compulsory, but the rest of the costume will be optional. "We realize," said Mills, "that many of the students will go to the dance by street-car, and that is why we are not making complete costumes compulsory, however, we wish that everyone who can, will please wear a costume, in order to help along the festive spirit."

The location of the dance was the best available. It has extensive grounds around the building. There is plenty of room for parking cars. It is accessible by street car from almost every point in the city, but is far enough removed from residential districts to permit a little noise making.

ROUTES TO TAKE

Oceanside Park is located on 48th Ave., between Ulloa and Vicente, directly across the street from the white capped Pacific. For those going by street-car, the L car goes within one block of the Park, while those going by automobile should take the closest route to the beach and then go down 48th Ave. to Vicente St. Those who will be coming by machine from the Eastbay should go out Market Street and right over Twin Peaks by Corbett Road, which is a continuation of Market Street. At the end of Corbett Road, they should turn to the right and go west on Sloat Blvd. until they reach 48th Ave., and then turn right once more. From there it is a very short distance to the park.

Joe Amori, faculty adviser for the Men's Club, is assisting the boys in their preparations, and will be in attendance the night of the affair. The committee is composed of Merv Weiner, Irv Amstrup, Don Mix, and President Don Mills.

E-e-e-e-e-o-o-o-O-O-H!

Seeking to capture some ghoulish atmosphere for Men's Club Hallowe'en dance on next Friday night, Don Mills, group president, and Sylvester McAtee have succeeded in treeing some ghostly creature. Whether or not they were successful in their attempted ghost hunt can only be determined by coming out to the frolic and seeing if the above specimen is hanging on the wall.

Women Will Be Guests At AWS Tea Tomorrow

Norma Parent Urges All To Attend Between 3 and 5 P.M.

All women students in the college are invited to the semi-annual Associated Women Students' tea, to be held tomorrow afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock in Room 212 at Galileo, AWS officers have announced. Norma Parent, AWS president, urged every woman student to attend.

"We are anxious for all women in the college to meet at this tea," Miss Parent said, "as we believe that it is particularly helpful for the AWS officers to meet every AWS member. The success of this semester's AWS activities such as our dance and other affairs, has led us to plan a more ambitious undertaking, this tea. We chose Galileo High School as a setting because it is more convenient for the women students, since they can drop in at the tea between classes."

HOSTESS NAMED

Committee chairmen having charge of the tea are Isabelle Sherratt, refreshments; Kay Evulich and Barbara Randall, invitations; Marion Yager and Miss Parent, entertainment. Members of the AWS Executive Committee: Miss Parent, Gail Hanna, vice-president; Miss Randall, secretary; Miss Yager, treasurer; Miss Sherratt, high sophomore representative; Miss Evulich, low sophomore representative; Betty Nelson, high freshman representative, and Ardell White, women's editor of The Guardsman, will act as hostesses. Also acting as hostesses will be Caroline Originos, vice-president of the Associated Students; Florence Murphy, associate editor of The Guardsman; Gloria Swleegood, president of the Women's Athletic Association, and Betty Morand, vice-president of the low freshman class.

Margaret Dougherty, organizer of the women's guidance bureau, and faculty adviser to the AWS, said of the tea: "May I at this time urge every AWS member to attend our tea. We have planned it with you in mind, and if the success of our teas in the past is repeated, we should have a record attendance."

FOOD FOR ALL

Miss Dougherty, instructor of the home economics classes providing the refreshments, promised that enough food to satisfy the hungriest of the college's 520 co-eds would be on hand, while a brace of college talent will entertain with music, song, and sleight-of-hand.

Miss Randall said that she has sent invitations to the affair to the following members of the faculty: President Archibald Cloud, Paul Pitman, assistant to the president; Edna Denhardt, secretary to the president; Helene Turner, NYA administrator; J. Paul Mohr, registrar; Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar; Dean Edwin C. Browne; Ward Nichols, comptroller, and Instructors Lloyd Luckmann, Harold Luenberger, Alfred P. Agosti, John Booher, Margaret Flournoy, Gladys Finney, Flossita Badger, Dora Garibaldi, Ruth Gavin, Alice Cooper, Claire Cuneo, Laurine Kuhn Bergin, Bertha Keller, Vera Spencer, and Verrel Weber.

BATTLE RAGES! ARMY-NAVY CITES LOYALTY; PACIFISTS ASK CHARTER WHILE EX-COUNCIL REFUSES ACTION

Militarists Renew Defense Pledge At Annual Initiation

Emphasizing again the purposes of the Army-Navy Club to promote a sense of loyalty toward the government of the United States and toward the San Francisco Junior College, to promote the interests of an adequate national defence, and to help the college whenever possible, the club welcomed the new members at the formal initiation and dinner held at the home of Bill Carroll, 149 Kensington Way.

An excellent meal was served, through the cooperation of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Department. Faculty members attending the dinner were Edwin C. Browne, Dean of Men, Carl F. Stough of the Business Department, and James S. Hughes of the Speech and Political Science Departments.

Following the dinner, the formal initiation was held. Those initiated were Bill Carroll, Dick Sales, John Avellar, Jack Evans, and LeRoy Zaro.

SYMBOLS EXPLAINED

Explaining the significance of the watch charms, symbols of membership in the organization, President T. Gordon Sollman declared: "Our motto, 'Duty To Country', was selected as the best expression of the club's ideals; the colors, red, white, and blue, are symbolic of our national colors; the three stars represent the three branches of service, land, sea, and air; the army mule is represented in one corner and the navy goat in the opposite; the palm branches signify the desire to maintain peace."

Don Smith, stating his views on national defense, said that the United States should have a navy second to none, and a small mobile army, thus being prepared to withstand internal or foreign attack. "We must remind everyone of the value of our type of government, of the meanings of democracy and liberty, and we must also safeguard our government from forces that may seek to destroy it," he asserted.

At the meeting it was learned that the destroyer launching, planned for October 21, has been postponed until the 20th of November. The next meeting of the club will be held at the home of T. Gordon Sollman, 1239 15th Ave., November 10.

POWELL BATTLE STAGED

Lightening the serious side of the initiation, the daytime activities were highlighted by the Battle of Powell Hill and a platoon drill staged in Union Square, much to the wonderment of the park bench devotees. Surprising the defending forces, which had expected an attack from the west, a burst of machine gun fire from the vicinity of Sutter and Powell Streets announced the approach of the invading army. Relentlessly the invaders advanced until the rapid firing of the defenders forced them back. Finally, an infantry saber charge, led by Generals Jack Evans and Dick Sales led the invaders to the triumphant capture of Extension Fort. During this skirmish, General Sales was wounded but first aid was applied by flirtatious Nurse Bill Carroll.

A platoon of the victorious invaders, while proceeding down Powell Street, caused curious motorists to knock bumpers, and while staging a triumphant parade down Market Street, were temporarily routed by the motorized cavalry of the San Francisco Police Department.

ARMISTICE SIGNED

Reorganizing their forces on Grant Avenue, they proceeded to Union Square where Nurse Carroll was gently reprimanded to remember that her obligations as a nurse did not include coquetry with the healthy members of the army.

At noon, Nurse LeRoy Zaro, who had been A.W.O.L. was put to work as a policewoman and performed a remarkable service in effectively solving the traffic problem.

Toward evening, peace was declared and with shouts of "The war is over," the armies disbanded and started for home.

Officers of the Army-Navy Club are: Sollman, president; John Benton, vice-president; Walter Thompson, secretary, and George Dieser, treasurer. James S. Hughes is the faculty adviser.

Executive Body Balks Power Threat Of Minor Group

In a bombastic session replet with violent oratory and subtl inuendoes, the College Executiv Council recommended several v tal changes in the proposed co stitution of the Peace Council i a meeting held on last Friday, Octob 22. The momentous issue never act ally came to a vote, but after almost a hour of heated discussion it was decid that the application for a charter b the peace group would not be consider until the desired changes had be made.

Despite urgent and eloquent pleas b the numerous and articulate supporte present from the organization seeki recognition, members of the Ex Cou cil could not be convinced of the validi of the constitutional provisions co cerning voting rights and the extr ordinary power of calling represent tives from other campus organizatio

The specific recommendations ma by the Executive group were that t proposed constitutional provision whi stated that both individual memb and representatives of campus clu should have equal voting rights changed and that the title of the ganization should be changed to Pe Club instead of Peace Council.

After the routine business of meeting had been finished, Presid Eugene Blumenthal announced t "The most important part of the me ing has arrived. Will Mr. Smith ple present the application for the Pe Council's charter?"

Smith replied that the council complied with all provisions and t proceeded to read the brief consti tion and by-laws. After the consti tion had been read it was pointed by one of the members that it would well to have an officer of the pe society attempt to explain the so-ca "ridiculous voting provisions."

Fred Vast, president of the gr explained at great length that the c themselves had voted approval of measure and then attempted to ans the question of "duplication of pow by stating that the only field in w the Peace Council hoped for suprem was in the activity of furthering p propaganda.

After several other peace group vocates had spoken to emphasize t same two points, Blumenthal rep that despite the desires of the org zation to limit their authority to field of peace it was logically imposs for two groups to hope to be a re sentative authority within the s college even in the limited field of activity.

A certain Mr. Ray Valdez, advo extraordinary for the peace orga tion, then rose to his feet and deliv a stirring bit of oratory that cent around the point that President menthal was not yet qualified to himself up as a sovereign authori parliamentary law. He neglected t plain, however, just what bearing discourse had on the point at issu

Peace Organ May Reconsider Cause Of Heated Debate

With officers elected, advice by the Associated Students' executive council for improvement of its constitution rendered, and discussion by the college as a whole on its merits and demerits, the Peace Council is planning to get active immediately and prove its usefulness and value through action, according to officers of the organization.

"We appreciate the interest taken in the Council through the widespread discussion that has taken place these past few weeks," Fred Vast, president of the Council, stated. "It shows that the student body is interested in the organization and in peace, otherwise such discussion would not have taken place. By thrashing out our differences and offering our suggestions we are able to evolve a group that is definitely a product of the students. This is democracy in its truest form. Now," he continued, "that the discussion is over, and it should be over, there has been ample time for all to have their say, we can proceed to get to work. Now that the Council is organized, we can best show our value through activity, not words. The student body has shown itself to be interested in peace, now it is up to the students who are not members of the Peace Council to give their wholehearted co-operation to the Council."

OFFICERS ELECTED

At the Council's meeting held last Wednesday, officers to lead the group for this semester were elected. Paul Benson was chosen for the vice-president's post. The duties of secretary-treasurer will be handled by Doris Speroni; Ray Valdez will serve as corresponding secretary. Vast was elected president at a previous meeting of the Council. Named to the executive committee in addition to the four officers were Elizabeth Rehbock, Jack Corcoran and Arthur Becker. Faculty advisers to the organization are Gertrude Bolton, William Goss, and John Ross.

SUGGESTIONS TAKEN

The Associated Students' executive council at its meeting last Friday recommended to the Peace Council that the clause in the constitution providing for both club and individual membership be changed to read only individual membership. Officers of the peace group stated that the executive council's point was well taken and intimated that such a change would probably be made.

Panel Discussion To View Oriental Neutrality Crisis

Dealing specifically with the present crisis in the Orient, a panel discussion, conducted by members of the college faculty, will be held in the Lecture Hall at Powell Street, Wednesday, November 3, at ten o'clock. It was decided by the speakers that the contributions of the panel members would center definitely around the problems involved in the application of the United States Neutrality Act to the present Sino-Japanese conflict.

Faculty members who will participate, and their respective topics are as follows: John Gerstung, "The Historical Attitude of the United States"; William Goss, "Economic Aspects of the Problem"; Kenneth Hobbs, "Asiatic Attitude toward the United States"; Charles McKiernan, "Geographical Aspects of the Situation"; John Ross, "The European Attitude"; Franklin Sewell, "International Law As It Affects the Crisis", and James Hughes, who will act as chairman of the group.

The group organizing the panel, attempted to arrange its material with an eye to covering the subject from every pertinent angle, and, therefore, selected speakers who had made special studies in their respective fields. To give a clearer understanding of the inter-relation of the various viewpoints expressed, it was suggested that, if possible, a mimeographed cyllabus of the discussion be distributed to the audience.

The timeliness of this particular topic was stressed by Hughes in an interview with a Guardsman reporter. "The United States is at present vitally concerned with the question of invocation of the national neutrality act in connection with the war in China, and it should be of paramount interest to the people of America and particularly the youth of the country, which way the question is decided," averred Hughes, adding, "the nations of the world are all interested in any action taken by our government, and such action might well have a very important bearing on international complications. It is important that the college students become aware of the conditions which exist in the world today, and also that they understand the significance of governmental policy as affecting the people as a whole. Many people feel that topics and lectures such as these are stuffy.

Convention Invites Restaurant Division

As guests of the California Hotel Greeters of America, students of the college Hotel and Restaurant Division have been invited to attend the Greeters' Convention at San Diego, November 7, 8, and 9, announced J. Graham Sullivan, coordinator of the division, who is to speak before the members of the convention. Affairs of the convention will include social breakfasts, luncheons, dinner dances, banquets, sports, and business sessions.

The college Society of Hotel and Restaurant Men visited the Moffat Meat Company's plant Saturday, October 23, and, under the guidance of Carl Meyer of the company, viewed the process of wholesale slaughter. A tour of inspection of the Schweitzer Meat plant the same day illustrated the method of grading and checking of meat by government inspectors. Chris Saranti of the Schweitzer Company explained and demonstrated the methods of meat-cutting.

The Society held its luncheon-meeting at noon, October 23, at the El Cortez Hotel with H. C. Blunck, manager of the El Cortez; Brander Watson, hotel man, and Mrs. Watson, manager of the Galileo Cafeteria, and Mrs. M. Miliken, publicity manager, as guests.

Four more meetings are planned for the remainder of the present semester. All members are urged to attend.

NYA Heads Discuss Future Existence

Heads of the National Youth Administration and college presidents from all the higher institutions of Northern California met at a conference at Stanford University, October 13, to discuss whether or not the Federal Government should continue to supply student aid now that the depression is over.

It was felt that there might be danger of having the government take over schools if these funds were supplied, but NYA heads were assured that the plan would remain the same as it has been in the past and that colleges will continue to regulate applications for government funds.

Pacific Relations Institute To Meet Students Thursday

For college students interested in the problems of the Pacific area, meetings with representatives of the Student Institute of Pacific Relations will be held tomorrow in the lobby of the Powell Street Building at 10 and 1 o'clock.

In a letter to Gertrude Bolton, history instructor, the institute explained its purpose and its desire to have San Francisco Junior College students participate in its annual conference to be held over the Thanksgiving holidays. The Institute was founded 11 years ago and its headquarters are in Berkeley.

"The Institute which exists," Miss Bolton said, "for the purpose of discussing informally the social, political and economic problems of the Pacific area, is expanding this year. It is sending a representative to the college tomorrow to interview any student or group that may be interested. The annual conferences are student administered, and delegates express their opinions freely. Students interested," she continued, "in learning details about the organization and about the conference to be held this Thanksgiving are invited to be present."

Unclutter Checking Stand Pitman Asks

One large pigskin suitcase replete with a gold zipper, one man's overcoat, and an unclaimed article of great value which must be identified by the owner, were left at the checking stand and may be retrieved at Paul M. Pitman's office at Powell Street.

Mr. Pitman would like these articles claimed as soon as possible because they are seriously cramping the floor space in an already too small office.

Building Plans Shaping Up As Architect Speeds Work

With the entire floor plan for the junior college building completed and the minor details of construction being taken care of with all possible speed, indications point to the start of actual construction within a very short time.

J. Paul Mohr, registrar, has made several trips to the office of the college architects to suggest certain minor changes in the plans, until now very little remains to hold up the beginning of work on the first unit of the group of buildings to be erected at Balboa Park. Only small details, such as the type of windows to be installed, length of window shades, and location of cupboards, stand between the present plans and the completed ones. All these details must be disposed of before active work can start.

President A. J. Cloud has emphatic in his statement that quarters will be provided for The Guardsman, and to prove his point, brought out a plan of the first building showing ample provision for publications. He hopes to have a printing plant installed in the building after its completion, but it is too early at present to make any definite statement concerning this.

The second unit to be constructed will be the Students' Union Building, which will have rooms for all college activities, clubs, fraternities, and similar organizations.

A shift has been made from the original plans, moving the site of the first building fifteen feet to the north, so that it can be erected with the minimum amount of excavation. Under the new plan, much less earth will have to be removed than under the old one, thus saving much valuable time.

EXECUTIVE ACTION

Yea, even the gods do yield to entreaty—Iliad, ix, 497.

All admire men of action who, like a Napoleon or a Caesar, can sweep all obstacles from their path and wither opposition by the application of the dynamic force radiating out of their capacity for executive action. The world has placed the stamp of infallibility on such men who can act with dictatorial directness.

However, it is debatable whether the world arrived at this fallacious conclusion through any process of logical deduction. It would seem that the premise of such a conclusion would of necessity be based on the constant but nevertheless erroneous human tendency to consider not the facts but the results.

Men of the stamp of Napoleon and Caesar have always been personal successes, but it is questionable whether they make the most desired type of leaders.

Those who direct the activities of any organization must of necessity have the executive facility of being able to make decisions. But it seems reasonable to suppose that they would make more capable executives if they would temper their decisions with the advice and counsel of others who understand the situation under consideration.

Officers of the student body for this fall semester have demonstrated on numerous occasions that they can act with executive directness. The only essential that they could possibly be accused of falling short in is the ability to accept the opinions and viewpoints of others who are not as high as themselves politically (but who in many cases possess a better understanding of the specific issue under consideration) and to assimilate this knowledge into their executive decisions. That this has been one of the most capable student administrations in the history of the college cannot be denied and it is hoped that it will not endanger its success by a callous disregard of the views of others and a ruthless obsession that they are the ultimate authority on all and any activities within the college.

THE HISTORICAL HOAX

Reading books by modern scientific historians is a trifle disillusioning. The leaders in this field are not, to use a vulgarism, debunkers. But the romance of early Virginia and the glamor of primitive Massachusetts fade considerably beneath the microscope of research. Modern historians have torn away the mystic and revered veils of time to show us that the cavaliers of Jamestown were, as a class, rather a rough crew, while the Pilgrim Fathers, in the mass, were largely reprobates, strictly disciplined by a narrow and bigoted theocracy.

It is worth noting that the more youthful historians stress the fact that the Puritans were never more than an aggressive minority in England. They were a gens electra, a peculiar people. The moderns do not indulge in the usual diatribes against Charles I, an evil left over from Whig history, which still defaces many textbooks. An unbiased attitude toward our early history shows that the contribution of the Pilgrims to both American and English tradition has been exaggerated. Plymouth Rock has bulked far too large in our historical perspective.

Many of the current books present a frank and detailed account of our early days that is in conflict with the sticky sweet stuff that was forced upon us as grammar school children. One then heard much of the severities of the Inquisition, but now we are shown the gloomy theocracies that held sway in Geneva, Holland, Scotland and New England, and which imposed on the masses a Calvinistic yoke heavier by far than that of Torquemada. Indeed that personage appears a jovial embodiment of sweetness when compared with a Puritan theocrat.

It is heartening indeed to see evidences of wider, more human interpretation in the writings of modern scientific historians.

THE EDUCATED CLASS?

It is naturally supposed that college students are of a higher than average intelligence and have a more comprehensive and complete facility for interpretation of current affairs than those who are unable to indulge in the luxury of higher education. But sometimes one is confronted with evidence that makes you doubt the veracity of this supposition.

A striking example of the apathy or perhaps inability of the supposedly intelligent college student to understand the vital issues that are in conflict around him was demonstrated in one of the college's political science courses, which is composed mainly of sophomores who are preparing to go on to a university. During the course of the

By FEM

With last week's balmy weather tucked under our belt, we found the task of writing a column just too much. Therefore, at the suggestion of a poor, "down-on-her-back-in-bed" friend, we decided to launch ourselves into the higher fields and do a bit of delving into the realm of free, blank, or impressionistic (take yer cherce) verse. Thus, my friends, this:

Oh Hallowe'en,
Oh Hallowe'en,
You come but once a year.
Except when it has twenty-nine,
Then it comes every four years
Like the presidential elections,
Except for Maine and Vermont.

Ah, go on! You know that hot weather makes you feel the same way, except for February which has twenty-eight, oh shucks, there we go again!

RAH RAH-ISM

After attending the WAA football rally last week and hearing Dutch Conlan's careful explanation of when is a touchdown, where is a quarterback and why is a football, to say nothing of several other rip-roaring rallies, and the now famous train trip to Sacramento, we are really beginning to get full of college spirit and rah rah-ism. While on the subject of Mr. Conlan, he really got quite a workout for the ladies had lots and lots of things to ask him and his nonchalance in the face of the onslaught of questions was really amazing. Ah, well, we people from Commerce! A-hem!

PRESENTING

May We Present . . . Jimmy Preovolos, Low Sophomore president, officer in the Iota Chi fraternity and one of the wittier of the college wags . . . born and reared in San Francisco and a graduate of Lowell High School with ambitions to become (shades of Tom Coakley!) a combination lawyer and musician . . . wields a wicked drum stick (not the Thanksgiving variety) and enjoys playing tennis and basketball, tooting the clarinet and spending money on his girl friend . . . will go from Junior College to Cal if he is not too old, and will probably be too old if something isn't done about abolishing midterms . . . his pet aversions are guys and girls that offend his delicate sense of rhythm by whistling popular tunes that they don't know and "gals that write poems that can't."

EXCHANGE NOTES

High school representatives of their respective journalism classes attended the fourth annual Press Day at University of California, October 14, under the direction of campus publications. Guest speaker, Willis O'Brien, reporter for the San Francisco Chronicle, told of the growth of news. Round table discussions of news reporting, advertising, college humor, and other matters of interest to a news writer were held in Eshleman Hall. After the luncheon, the "junior journalists" were the guests of the publication staffs of ASUC at a football game.

University of California has a new rooting section that, pardon us, is certainly rooted to the spot in its enthusiasm. They are 677 inmates of Folsom and San Quentin prisons registered in English, mathematics, journalism, and law. Stan McCaffer, ASUC president, started the first of a series of educational programs sponsored by the University YMCA, by addressing his "fellow classmates" in San Quentin two weeks ago. Professor Ralph Chaney also spoke. Harry Kingman, executive secretary of the University YMCA, explains that the group wishes to get an idea of life in an "institution as large as San Quentin."

* * * *

The sophomore class of University of California felt that it was "duty bound" to uphold Big "C" tradition and so voted to renew guarding the historic emblem on Charter Hill. Military defense is to be used and the aid of the Interfraternity Council and women's auxiliary, who will bring coffee and sandwiches to the guards on duty was offered.

THE DAILY CALIFORNIAN

PAY DIRT

By Jack Campbell

SAN FRANCISCO PREFERRED

There are so many truly delightful phases of life in San Francisco that the impulse to burst into rapturous lyric can scarcely be restrained. One joy shared by all is the enchanting aroma of Oakland's garbage (dumped twelve miles at sea) drifting through the Golden Gate. Equally exhilarating is the ever-predictable climate. From the old man of Potrero's broken streets to the lighthouse keeper on Mile Rock, every San Franciscan can forecast the weather. They all know it will either be rainy or foggy, windy or mild.

TRADITIONS

Aside from the physical pleasures which San Francisco provides, there is the mental stimulus derived from its glorious traditions. Prominent among its departed glories is the famed Barbary Coast. Citizens look back with pride to the days when vice was rampant and virtue had not yet reared its ugly head, and Atherton still meant a small town near Burlingame. None the less inspiring is the brilliant record of the Vigilantes who abhorred crime and yet were considerably miffed when they were finally restrained from indulging in it.

Residents of this paradise as a whole are indeed fortunate, but, taken individually, their lot is happy beyond compare.

. . . WHILE YE MAY

Consider the motorist. (He won't consider you when he chases you across streets, but think of him anyway, if only for the moment.) No glaring sun to blind his eye; no monotonous flat roads to tire him; plenty of pedestrians to aim at. When he takes a Market Street Railway bump in stride, the autoist enjoys all the emotions encompassed in a lifetime; joy that only fierce unrestrained exercise can give; fear that his tires will blow out; love for the company which provides recreation where playgrounds and golf courses have failed; hate for the cranks who holler for repairs.

Even greater pleasure is provided for the pedestrian. Hill-climbing, his favorite sport can be indulged in without stint. With the spirit of an intrepid Alpine yodeler, the walker ascends peak after peak. Numerous crosspaths through which mischievous motorists scurry stud his way. Nimbly dodging a well-aimed fender, he leaps to a safe level from which he chides the frustrated driver. "Ya-aaa-ah", he shouts.

AH, WILDERNESS

Upon reaching his destination the "hoofer" meditates upon the enjoyment which has been permitted him. His vanity, that he has conquered obstacles, is tickled. His intellect rejoices in the dead genius of Colonel O'Farrell who mapped San Francisco's streets with military precision, asking and giving no quarter to annoying hills. The pedestrian hurries through his work that he may again test his wits and physical prowess in descending these vertical streets.

Resorts may chant of pine-clad hills and fairy lakes, but give the San Franciscan Powell Street hills and the filthy bay, and he'll regard life as a permanent vacation.

Presidential Patter

By Gene Blumenthal

Pausing to reminisce over our recent sojourn into the Southland, we feel that we would trade almost anything to do it over again. With the exception of the two short hours in which a football game was played, we would like to repeat the process from beginning to end. And even the game brought moments of joy to all of us.

Sitting in the press box, at the top of the Rose Bowl, watching the game with high-powered binoculars, we felt sincere moments of pride in the fight that the fellows put up.

Slightly awed by the large crowd, we felt the loss as keenly as anyone. Sitting on the bench in the last quarter proved to be a real thrill. If the fellows never put on the cleats again, they can always, with a trace of pride, speak about their part in a Rose Bowl game, about the game they almost won . . . but didn't.

We received a typical Pasadena reception; no one met us at the train, no band played, and no one greeted us at the hotel. The only thing that met us was the football team, and they stole our thunder.

Taking it upon ourselves to become a sports writer for the occasion, we discovered that the task was not as simple as it appeared. Endeavoring to chart the plays, determine the length of the kicks, the yardage gained, and the tackles made, while at the same time, rooting for our squad of "Rams," proved to be almost more than we could handle.

At the conclusion of the first half, weak with enthusiasm, we would undoubtedly have been fit subjects for an institution for the mentally deranged. We can readily appreciate the hardships which are heaped upon sports writers in covering a game. Thanks just the same, but we'll stick to covering news on the executive side and blissfully watching the game from the stands.

When the Pasadena trip is forgotten, the thing we will all carry with us and remember, was the sincere good-fellowship prevailing on all sides. In this remember was the sincere good-fellowthat ever happened to any of us. For after all, the score is unimportant. Those friendships really count, and you can bet they won't be forgotten in a hurry!

Interrupting our reverie and turning to matters of a more conscientious nature, we find our week spoiled by a letter we received from W. J. J. Smith, student body prexy at S. F. State. Admiring his stationery, as well as his audacity, we must confess that he really has a serious complaint. The letter, in essence, is "Please remit."

Seldom it is that an organization gives an affair to which everyone in the college is invited, but such a one will take place tomorrow. We are referring to the semi-annual AWS tea, which is scheduled for tomorrow afternoon from 3 to 5 o'clock. And may we at this point congratulate Norma Parent, Gail Hanna, and the rest of the AWS officers for undertaking to give a tea for all the women students in the college. It's much easier, you know, to plan a tea for graduating students or some other limited group than to go to town on a crowd of hundreds of guests. These girls should be commended for making the tea everybody's affair, in spite of the extra work it demands.

GINGERBREAD!

We're glad about the new inclusion of the cooking classes in the HES, for now we'll have two excuses instead of one to visit the Thursday afternoon food laboratory. We discovered it quite by accident one day when we went to see the instructor about a story. She was kind enough to offer us some gingerbread, and ever since then we drop by to see what we can chisel—and, the cooking being as good as it is, others have begun to count on a Thursday snack. WJ on Thursday afternoon, in fact, is so full of football players that the poor journalists have to sit on the desks. Of course the gridders, being trained in speed and blocking ability, manage to grab the major portion of the refreshments that are brought in.

CONFUSION

Things get more and more confusing as the semester wears on. For instance, after breaking papa's credit to buy new fall clothes, most of the co-eds can't wear their new outfits because it's too warm. . . . And then, scarcely after recovering from the last midterm, a new one is here. . . . That fact, plus the addition of many more editorial (ahem) duties to worry us, makes this week's "Girl-i-gigs" foggier than "Out of the Fog."

At Galileo—a hall on the second floor, a dismal, dark place, is filled with men students loitering near the windows. Outside, in front of the building, it is sunny and a gay crowd laughs and talks. Yet the men cool their heels in the stuffy corridor, for within a nearby room a cooking class is baking chocolate cake, and the odors of the delicacy waft into the hall.

OUT OF THE FOG

THE SAGA OF SACRAMENTO
By Bob MacArthur

The hands of the clock at the ferry boat dock
Were pointing the hour of three,
When we sailed the bay, that thrilling day;
A hardy band were we.

We grabbed the train and our refrain,
As we whooped it up en route
Was, "We'll sack Sac, and then come back
With a hey-nonny-nonny-toot-toot."

The band, they blew, and the engine too;
What a riot, we had that day!
We trucked on down, we went to town,
As we tore on our merry way.

There were women and song and more along,
They'd censor, if we told you;
Suffice to say, there was hell to pay
On the travelin' racket we threw.

Each tunnel dark provided a lark,
For the happy jaysee crew,
And man and maid, their joy portray'd,
As we went roaring through.

We finally arrived and there contrived,
As we swarmed from our gallant train,
To out-yell the gang from Sac, who sang
A welcome with might and main.

After we ate, we hauled our freight
To the stadium for the game,
And hollered and howled, as Panthers prowled
Through Ram-fleece to their fame.

The score, we won't tell, but whatthehell,
Our fun for nothin' we'd stop;
We hollered "Foo" and a Ram's yell too,
And "Nov shmoz ka pop."

With a right good will, we shouted until
The game was over and done,
And even then, we cheered our men,
The same as if they'd won.

Then we headed for town to do it up "Browne"
And entered the Legion Hall,
Where our famous Dean with jovial mien
Entertained us, one and all.

We danced some more on a rugged floor,
As the gals pianoed a song,
"Give a hail for the gang," we laughed and sang,
And kept on shufflin' along.

Then back to our train, we went again,
When the hour of midnight came,
And there as before to the band once more,
Each laddie swung his dame.

As we flew toward home, the Capitol dome—
And Sacramento left behind,
Each gal and guy had his spirits high;
There was fun of every kind.

And once more on the boat, the band got a note
And the revel went on, on deck;
We were almost home, out there on the foam,
But we were strong to the last, by heck!

The hands of the clock at the ferry boat dock
Were pointing a bit past two,
When we finally blew in, with a helluva din;
A tired but happy crew.

Since it has appeared in two rival college papers, the fact that the Amish and Mennonites people refused their children's entrance into a $112,000 school, seems to be of interest. These strictly religious people, you know, are those whose religion is that of simple living and consider a building which looks like the home Abraham Lincoln was born in good enough for their children's education. (And here we're yelping for a new building which must be nothing but the best.)

Browne's Team Smashes To Volley-Ball Win In Breath-Taking Struggle

By JEAN PAGE

ABOARD WJ'S STREAMLINED CHAIR—APPROACHING A STATE OF EXHAUSTION, OCT. 21th, 5 P. M.: Powerhousing to win to the score of 24 to 17, the men's junior college volleyball team turned the tables on the women volleyball stars last Thursday afternoon. Sweeping into the historic Galileo gym, the inspired men's team, riding the crest of team spirit, succeeded in tallying 24 times before a frenzied crowd of 25 spectators.

Although losing, the women played an excellent game and offered the men some keen competition. From the standpoint of teamwork and coordination the women's team was much the superior of the two. Outstanding for the support she gave her team was Marie Rossi, captain of one of the two women teams. Unfortunately Ellen Cummings, volleyball manager, was unable to play because of an injured hand.

Led by Captain Don Mills, who seemingly had everything, the men's team played a fast if erratic game. Football players Mervin Weiner and Ray Egelhofer were among the lineup and insisted on rushing the net until they learned by experience that football tactics are barred on a volleyball court. Weiner, WJ and cooking class protege, was outstanding in his loud and varied protests to Referee Laurine Bergin.

It was not until the game was well under way that Dean(I-could-have-won-but-my-team-held-me-back) Browne made his appearance, immediately acquiring a rebuke from the referee for neglecting to report to her before entering the game. In spite of the fact that twice again he was censured for an unintentional infringement of the rules, Dean Browne, in borrowed tennis shoes and sweater emblazoned with the initials SFJC, played merrily through the remainder of the contest. In commenting upon the result of the contest Browne declared, "We attribute our victory to faithful practice at the Salvation Army hall where our souls were saved as well."

The men's team sported added college celebrities in the form of Gene Blumenthal At half time the score was 13 to 5 in favor of the men. From then on the first inspired, then perspired, and finally almost expired men kept a substantial lead.

A rousing cheer from both men's and women's teams at the end of the game signified the friendly spirit between the two teams throughout the contest.

"The purpose of this game was not the arousing of a competitive spirit but rather to further show the value of co-educational activities," declared volleyball instructor Bertha Keller. "We hope to have many such matches in the future in which the men and women will not necessarily play against one another, but rather together for the common enjoyment to be obtained from co-educational sports."

Shin-Kickers Held To Scoreless Tie

Outfighting and outsmarting a highly touted Menlo eleven, the Red and White shin massagers fought to a 0 to 0 deadlock, with the boys from down under, in last Wednesday's league encounter.

Before the contest the Rams were considered the underdogs, but the dope bucket was upset most emphatically.

Coach Wilson's proteges were the aggressors during the entire contest, and were banging away at the Blue and White goal almost at will, but it just wasn't their day.

The vastly improved Ram ball club had the breaks against them all afternoon, but they don't feel exactly like complaining over the results of the contest, for their tie with Menlo puts them in the lead for the conference championship.

Fisher, Red and White goalie, turned in one of the best performances of the day in guarding the Rams' scoring territory, while Jimmy Fahn, and Mike Klebanoff were standouts on the forward line. Leo Johnson, who unfortunately has been absent from college and soccer practice because of an illness in his family, held down the tough center-forward position, but failed to show his usually sparkling type of play.

Zuardo and Flynn played a good game as fullbacks, but their work was not too heavy as the play was in Menlo's territory most of the contest.

Ellard Taylor, Bob Campbell, and Bill Neeko held down the half-back berths in a creditable manner, with Taylor standing out on defense. Johnson, Klebanoff, Fahn, Lim and Mull started the game as the forward wall, and played the entire game as a unit, with the exception of two substitutions at the left-wing position, by Stokes and Leporsky. Frank O'Conner, utility halfback, also saw action in the fray.

SOCCERMEN LOSE TO SAN JOSE STATERS

In the sweltering October sun the Ram soccer team fought with tooth and nail, only to be downed by the powerful Spartans from San Jose State by a score of 3-0. Wednesday on their own gridiron.

The Spartans took an early lead, scoring three goals in the first ten minutes of play. The first came as a result of a foul in the penalty area, and Johnson, stalwart center-half, took the free kick and placed it neatly between the goal posts. A few minutes later Berman scored a beautiful goal from the wing position. Immediately after the kick off they again brought the ball down into paying ground but their attack was broken up by "Wild Willie" Flynn who kicked the ball out of bounds, giving the Spartans a corner kick, which resulted in a goal, being headed in by Johnson.

With the game on edge Ellard Taylor the Rams scrappy center half got his defense organized, and held the Spartans throughout the remainder of the game, keeping the ball in Spartan territory. He was ably assisted by Bob Campbell, left half, and Frank O'Connor, new comer to the team, who played a great game at right half. Backing up the stalwart halfs were Bill Flynn and Vince Zuardo, who turned in one of the best games of the year.

The forward line that was revised to cover up the loss of Leo Johnson, saw a switch of all-conference Mike Klebanoff to the key, center forward, position. Jim Fahn, the Rams' spark plug, was all over the field, constantly proving a definite scoring threat, but was unable to put the ball through the goal posts.

Jim Mull, left wing, made some beautiful corner kicks. Coach "New Suit" Wilson was reluctant to make a statement after the game but when quizzed, he finally stated, "I am well pleased with the defensive game, the backfield played today, it would have been even better if we hadn't played Menlo J. C. yesterday. Saturday I hope to have a stronger forward line, a line that will have that scoring punch."

Block Show To Be "Super-Production"

Under the guidance of "Duke Worsham, the muscle men of the junior college, better known as the Block SF Society, are hard at work on their fall extravaganza. Ray Egelhofer, who cavorts on the gridiron for the college, will be the producer of the play which will be entitled "Life Begins At Junior College." It is scheduled for November 17, and will probably be held in the afternoon, with ten cents the price of admission.

"With all the fellows pitching in to help," stated Eaglehofer, "we have hopes of selling nearly 1,000 tickets! We have been rehearsing twice a week, and we should have the whole show smoothed out and in first class condition by November 17."

"Anyone who would like to see Drs. Egelhofer, Flamm, Boitano, and Canepa perform a major operation should not miss this show, because that's just one of our many feature attractions," claimed Worsham, prexy of the organization. "In fact," continued Worsham, "we will also present a bona fide 'Truckin' Contest', not to mention our 'Ambassador of Good Will', whose identity will be kept secret for the present, and last but not least the Grand Finale, featuring the entire cast."

SKI CLUB FORMS

For any men students interested in forming a ski club, there will be a meeting this afternoon in the small Galileo cafeteria at 2:00 o'clock. There will be an attempt to form an organization that will facilitate the following of winter sports, skiing especially. If the organization is successful, trips will be planned for the coming winter sport season. Those interested who cannot attend the meeting, should contact Ed Frediani for full particulars.

RAMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

Just before the football team left on its recent journey to the southland to play Pasadena, a couple of its members approached Don Mix, a former resident of the hamlet known as Los Angeles, and asked him whether there was anyone down there that he'd like to have them look up during their sojourn. Don thought a moment, then gave them the telephone number of a young lady in Los Angeles, thinking that they'd just call up and say hello for him. (As this is written, the orchestra on the radio is, by some coincidence, playing the song called, "An Old Flame Never Dies.")

They called her up all right, and one can guess at her feelings when, a few minutes later, two taxicabs pulled to a stop in front of her house and proceeded to disgorge no less than twelve brawny specimens of masculinity, who immediately began to clamor for admission, which they duly received. Further details are left to the imagination, but the gridders avow firmly that a good time was had by all; that is their version of the episode, and the only one available, so we'll have to take their word for it.

It was during the disastrous first quarter of that same Pasadena game previously referred to that Lee Eisan cut loose with one of the cutest cracks of the year. Said Lee, "I've often heard of the line of least resistance, but I never thought we'd have one." Clever chap, isn't he?

We discover that the local prep teams found themselves "up a creek," while the Rams were playing in other parts of the state. They have been depending on "Dutch" Conlan, Lee Eisan, and Russ Sweet to officiate at most of their games, and, in the absence of the college coaches, have been hard put to it to find capable officials for their contests. Incidentally, these mentors have been turning in some pretty swell jobs of officiating at the high school tilts. Indeed, Conlan seems to be definitely headed for the "big time". No wonder they were missed.

A fellow who deserves his share of credit is Jack Heaslett, end. Starting from scratch at the beginning of the season, he has progressed steadily until he is now rated by Russ Sweet as being of first string calibre.

Injuries have dealt the squad another severe blow. Jerry Flamm, recently elevated to the post of first-string tackle, may not see action for some time as the result of an ankle injury received during practice last week.

A word of warning to the sponsors of the Men's Club fights which come off next week: if the much-ballyhooed "free cigarettes" meet the same fate that they did last year, there is a probability that drastic action will be taken by some of the students. Everyone arrived at the last such affair prepared to acquire several weeks' supply of free smokes, only to be greeted by the announcement that "someone took them." We advocate that extreme care be taken to insure their preservation this time.

No longer does Russ Sweet rove restlessly thither and yon with deep furrows between his brows and contemplate the dreary prospect of a one-point defeat, such as stared him in the face at the State game. He has finally uncovered a lad who seems quite capable of booting the pigskin between the uprights whenever called upon, for that extra point which often assumes such gigantic proportions. The new "find" is Bud Weichers, whose place-kicking ability assures the Rams of a majority of successful conversions for the rest of the season.

Verdi Club Selected As Scene Of Mens Club Bouts Next Wednesday

With a fine array of medals, already ordered, the Men's Club is rapidly completing plans for its semi-annual junior college championship wrestling and boxing matches. The show will be presented on November 3 at the Verdi Athletic Club, according to Don Mills, president of the organization.

As a special attraction, the show will also be considered as a smoker for the San Mateo-San Francisco football contest to be held the week-end following the affair. Coaches and players from San Mateo Junior College will be present, as will Buck Shaw, coach of the Santa Clara Broncos. Shaw will speak on football as will the guests from San Mateo.

"The number of entries so far," stated Mills, "is far below what we expected. The fellows evidently don't realize that it is not necessary to be a second Dempsey in order to have a chance of winning a title. Why last term, three of the fellows who won crowns in their divisions had never boxed in a tournament before in their lives, in fact it was the first competition for nearly half of the entrants."

According to Joe Amori, faculty adviser to the Men's Club, it will hardly be worth while to hold the fights unless more fellows sign up. "I can't understand why in a college our size we are not able to interest more fellows in intra-mural sports," declared Amori. "The wrestling and boxing championship matches afford a fine chance for some who are athletically inclined, but who haven't gone out for a team, to earn an award. The fellow who wins a title should be just as proud of his award as the fellow who plays on a championship team for the college."

It has been reported that Jimmy Neal, former student president, and Bill Wilson will be the only titleholders who will defend their laurels. The rest of the divisions in both the wrestling and boxing classes are wide open. The entrants will be divided into 119-lb., 129-lb., 139-lb., 149-lb., 159-lb., 169-lb., and heavyweight classes.

President Mills has arranged for many novel features, including a match between a prominent professional wrestler and a former student body president of the college.

Admission to the affair will be by student body card only.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

Marking a new form of WAA activity, the first women's rally was held last Wednesday. Assistant Football Coach Dutch Conlan was plied with questions concerning football by the audience. Some of the questions were of a highly technical nature too. In fact, Mr. Conlan was even asked what teams would play in the Rose Bowl game, to which he replied, "I wish I knew, I'd make some money."

Margaret Dougherty, women's adviser, gave a short welcoming speech and Allen Williams led the women in some high-pitched cheers. The ceremonies were conducted by WAA President Gloria Swicegood.

Unfortunately because of the approach of time for classes, the program could not be entirely completed.

A water carnival, to which both men and women will be invited, is scheduled for November 10 and will be held either at Sutro's pool or at the Fairmont plunge. As the next day is Armistice Day and a holiday, students who attend the carnival need not worry about the next day's classes.

Although plans have not been completed, Swimming Manager Norma Gattavara promises contests for both men and women, including object diving and swimming races. There will also be exhibitions by local swimming start. The committees in charge have not yet been selected.

Practice on Saturday is now a requirement for WAA tennis. This week marks the third round of the doubles tournament now in progress. The second round matches to be played off by October 30, are between Tillie Huddleston-Elcurie Centanoro, Dorothy Canavan-Sue Meuthers, and Dorothy Schreffer-Alice Civanaugh.

Next week the sign-up for women's doubles will begin. All those who wish to sign up are requested to see Virginia Lum.

The men came out on top to the tune of 24 to 17 in the volleyball game between men and women held last Thursday. It was a fast and exciting game and as women's sports writer, we were rooting for the women all the way. Consolations to Ellen Cumming, manager, who was unable to play because of an injured hand.

"The object of my affection can change my complection from white to rosy red." Which is another way of saying that women who have signed up for WAA swimming because of their love of the sport are suffering the agonies of learning swan dives and back flips.

Someone told us that Gloria Swicegood is a specialist in flat-iron diving, much to her discomfort. That is no way for one with the dignity of the presidency of the WAA upon her head to act.

Panthers Smother Favored Sweetmen By 24-6 Score; Ram Defense Proves Weak

By DICK SIMPERS

Smashing with ease through a Ram defense that was as weak as the traditional water, the Panthers of Sacramento Junior College last Friday night administered a thorough beating to Russ Sweet's squad. The final score was 24 to 6 in favor of the Valley lads, and would probably have been a good deal larger had not Coach Hack Applequist mercifully eased up late in the game by putting in his second and third string players.

Sparked by the slashing runs of Martin Relles and Mack Woerner, the Panthers lost no time in getting started. They pushed over the first touchdown early in the initial period of play, after a sustained drive of thirty-five yards, most of which was gained through the line. Woerner went over from the two-yard line on first down to make the score 6 to 0, but Sartore's attempt for the extra point failed.

OLSEN SCORES

Upon receiving the kick-off, the Rams suddenly came to life for a brief period. Egelhofer brought the kick back to his own 33, a pass from McDonald to Pearce was good for twelve yards, and then the attack bogged down temporarily and McDonald had to punt. His boot was returned to the Sacramento 12, from which point the Panthers advanced to the 38, where they were held and forced to punt. McDonald returned the punt 30 yards to the Sacramento 46, and on the next play Olsen cut back over center for 27 yards and a first down on the 19-yard line. Two line plays were stopped short, and then Walt Boitano smashed to a first down on the nine. A pass on first down fell incomplete, Boitano gained two, and on the next play the Rams pulled what was probably the neatest trick of the game to tally their only touchdown. It was a shovel pass from Boitano to Olsen, who, aided by some efficient blocking, romped across the goal line. Bud Weichers was sent in to try for the extra point, but his boot was blocked, due to the fact that he took half the night to get ready to kick, and the line didn't block out anyone.

Having shown this one brief spurt of life, the Powell Street lads seemed to consider that they had done all that could be expected of them, and it was with no great difficulty that the Capitol City boys slammed three more touchdowns across the line.

Taking the kick-off, the Sacramentans lost no time in getting down to business. A 55-yard pass, Sartore to Smith, was complete to the Ram 17. From here, despite the fact that they were set back five yards for being off-side, the Panthers scored in two plays, Fred Sartore going through center for the touchdown.

PASS INTERCEPTED

The Sacramento line was off-side on the kick-off, and the ball was kicked over again from the thirty-five. McDonald returned the ball to the 28, and on the next play his pass was intercepted by Holloway. Five quick running plays and Sartore went over to make the score 18 to 6. Again the conversion failed, but the Panther squad didn't seem to be very worried about it this time.

The Rams managed to stave off calamity for the rest of the half, but the third quarter brought a renewal of the attack and another touchdown, Sacramento driving fifty yards to a score. Once again it was Sartore who went over, this time from twenty yards out.

With the game in the bag, the Sacramento coach sent in his reserves, but the San Franciscans, although making a little more yardage against them, were still unable to score, bogging down every time that an opportunity presented itself. The game ended with the ball in Sacramento's possession on their own 18-yard line.

Statistics show that the Panthers made a total of 210 yards as compared to 137 for the Rams, and also had an edge in first downs, making 15 to the Rams' 7.

High spots of the game were the kicking of Bob Wai, Hawaiian halfback of the Panthers, and the running of Relles, Smith, and Sartore. For the Rams, Al McDonald and Jerry Flamm turned in good performances, but for the most part the team looked rather futile. The line, especially, was inadequate, to say the least. Absolutely lacking in charge, it was shoved about at will by the Panthers, all of whom were playing fast, aggressive football.

The starting line-ups:

SOBERED RAMS WILL BATTLE S. J. FROSH

Seeking to rise out of the doldrums after the last two disastrous games and play the brand of ball that their coaches know they can play, the embittered Ram football men will attempt to play a successful game of redemption against a powerful San Jose State Frosh eleven next Saturday night at Seals' Stadium. Their detriment of overconfidence wiped away by two defeats at the hands of teams that rose up in quick, devastating offensive deluges before the Rams knew they were in a ball game, the locals will enter this contest with the realization that they will have to go out on the field resolved to play sixty minutes of hard, determined football.

The San Jose State boys form one of the strongest frosh teams on the coast, and the Rams will have to duplicate, or perhaps, better their performance against the powerful U.S.F. Frosh to whom they lost 6-0. With the coaches driving the team this week, seeking to remedy the defects of the previous contests, the student body can be sure that win or lose, they will have a fighting, hustling representative gridmachine out on Roberts Field next Saturday night.

O'GRADY STAR

The offensive strength of the Spartan Babes will center around Leo O'Grady, dynamic left halfback, and either Dick Vanderlie or Jim Edgmon at fullback. Vanderlie has been on the sidelines recently with a bad knee, and Edgmon, a converted end, has been filling in. If Vanderlie can play, then Edgmon will return to his flank spot. Neil Van Poyden at right halfback and Joe Rishwain, quarterback and signal caller, will round out the backfield. Buckingham will hold down the pivot spot in the forward wall. Svend Hansen and "Abbie" Abdallah, described as the foundation of the Babe strength, will start at guards. Charlie Smith and Rex Stickles are scheduled to open at the two tackle positions, while Walt Hanna and Romeo Simoni round out the line-up at the end posts.

LINEUP UNKNOWN

The Ram lineup is unknown at the present moment. It will probably be unknown to almost game time. There is going to be blood and thunder at Funston Field this week, you can be sure of that. The past lackadaisical and frolicsome attitude of the Ram squad took a final exit when the beaten and dejected varsity walked off the greensword at the Sacramento Memorial Stadium last Friday night. Coach Russ Sweet and Assistant Coach Lee Eisan said little after the battle, but they were thinking plenty. The tackling, above all, must be improved. Live tackling practice will be the order of the day this week. The blocking and the defensive charging must be bettered. Something that has needed remedying all season will be taken care of—the matter of blocking out possible tacklers when receiving a punt. "Slave Ship" will be playing at Funston Field this week, comrades.

Badminton Classes Stage Tournament

The badminton classes will hold a tournament from October 29 to December 2.

And speaking of badminton, there was a doubles tournament in Bertha Keller's Freshman Activity class last week. The victorious team was composed of Virginia Hein and Ethel Vizzard.

FLAMM FAILS US!

For those of Jerry Flamm's readers who have missed his column this week, The Guardsman wishes to announce that STUFF is located at the Mission Orange Drink stand in the Ferry Building, and that a look at the first page of copy is given free with every five-cent glass, while all three pages may be perused if a ten-cent glass of orange juice is bought. Deadline for all copy was Friday at one o'clock, but it was not until two-twenty that a nonchalant Flamm phoned the Editor saying that those precious pages of type-written sports material were being held for his public at the stand. The Ferry Building may be reached by cars F, H, C, B, 5, 7, and also by placing two gallons of gas in one jalloppe and stepping on the starter.

SIGN-UP DEADLINE

Final date for sign up in the men's single and doubles tennis tournament will be tomorow, according to Coach Tom Wilson.

RAMS' HORN

Dear Ram:

I would like to comment on the swell spirit of the Sacramento Rally last Thursday. There was more noise (at the right time), more spirit and pep than we have had at any previous rally this semester. It's really encouraging, Mr. Ram, and we sure hope the students continue to sound as though they had gotten over the idea that school spirit in the Jr. College is a barred word. Many students have admitted that they root louder for Stanford and California than for their own school. Why? Well, Mr. Ram, it seems that most of us are going down on the farm or across the bay in the near future and we are just working up the necessary spirit before we get there. But, when you begin to think about it, Mr. Ram, you will realize that most students will be at Jr. College for a year or more and there is no sense in wasting time and missing out on the fun.

Our dances are good, the games are spirited, and all the activities are interesting — and all are free, Mr. Ram. Well, let's continue to get into the spirit of things. Here lately it's beginning to look much better. I'll see you at the next rally and thanks a lot, Mr. Ram.

ALLEN WILLIAMS.

Dear Editor:

Recently a group of students were discussing the place a business course had in a modern junior college.

The business students who attend this college usually take such a course because they must become self-supporting within two years, and they have not time to continue at the university.

HOWEVER, these students desire the atmosphere of a college and the pleasure of participating in extra-curricular events. They also try to manage to insert cultural studies with their other lessons.

To young people of this type, the local college is the only and best medium of accomplishing the important reasons for having colleges: That is, to learn to mix with all kinds of people, to be able to meet new situations, to have the ability of thinking clearly. All this must be done in two brief years.

What all this leads to is that business students look forward to having a building in the new Junior College at Balboa Site. They sincerely hope they will not be forgotten, for all industrious young San Franciscans deserve the privilege of using the new buildings they have waited for so long, no matter what their college major.

Be sure to make provisions for us!

Yours truly,

A BUSINESS STUDENT.

(Ed.'s Note: Examination of building plans shows that the college business department occupies an integral part in building provisions.)

Dear Editor:

Must certain individuals hog the steps at Powell Street when students are doing their best to pass to and from the building?

If you aren't suffocated in the crush, you're darn near dying from being perforated with punches while trying to mince your way down the entrance steps.

I don't see that it is too much to ask individuals to clear the steps for ten minutes before classes, because they certainly can't enjoy being stepped on or jostled by the stampeding Rams.

So again may I ask if people won't refrain from "tete tetes" on the Powell doorstep?

DEBATERS MEET SAN MATEO AND STATE TUES.

Opening the season yesterday by debating Modesto Junior College and San Francisco State, the local forensics society will send a team over to the latter institution tomorrow afternoon and will play host to San Mateo Junior and San Francisco State Colleges next Tuesday, November 2, at 2:30 in Room 462 at Galileo.

"This semester finds the heaviest debating schedule in the history of the college," Lloyd Luckmann, debating mentor, said, "and conclusively proves that forensics are becoming more popular and have come to be considered important. Debating is very important in improving one's mental faculties, it sharpens one's mind and trains one to think rapidly."

Robert Holmes and David Levy argue for neutrality tomorrow at the Buchanan Street institution. On November 2 three debates will be held. J. C. Armstrong is scheduled to favor the American Federation of Labor over the Committee for Industrial Organization when he meets a representative from State. Lorraine Johnson and Kenneth Germann will uphold neutrality against San Mateo. State's other team will meet Catherine Mountanous and George Woodland who are to argue for a unicameral legislature.

Six more debates are scheduled for the college debating squad which is exceptionally large this semester. On November 4 Sacramento Junior College comes here and a team travels to the capital city. November 9 finds the University of San Francisco debating at Galileo while a local team is at San Jose State. On November 18 one team will travel to Modesto and another team will journey to Coalinga to debate compulsory arbitration.

Luckmann said that only two veterans would be debating this year, Isabel Sherrat and Morris Rabinowitch. Outstanding amongst this year's debaters is Elizabeth Rehbock who is "very good," according to Luckmann.

Bureau Aids Women Seeking Employment

That women students interested in obtaining part-time employment should see Margaret Dougherty, director of the women's guidance bureau, as soon as possible, has been announced by Miss Dougherty.

According to a statement issued by her, Miss Dougherty has placed several women in household employment, in theaters, and in other types of part-time work, and has received favorable reports from employers as to the efficiency of work done.

"I hope that all women students interested in work of this kind will see me," Miss Dougherty said, "as I would like to help them. Very often we receive offers of jobs for women students, and those who are qualified to work should be able to obtain employment."

lecture the current labor controversy was brought up and the instructor requested some member of the class to explain the issues that are at stake, but to his surprise, and their own humiliation, not one member of the group was well enough informed even to attempt an answer.

In striking contrast to this it happened that on the same day while riding home on the street car, The Editor heard two young men, obviously factory workers, engaged in an intelligent and accurate argument concerning the relative merits of the AFL and the CIO.

Perhaps this case is exceptional but nevertheless it provokes thought as to whether college students are capable of taking advantage of the opportunities that have been given them.

GIVE 'TILL IT HURTS

The Community Chest drive is now in full swing. You will hear eloquent and touching pleas over the radio, you will see clever and effective signs devoted to demonstrating the need for funds, you will read the offerings of powerful and polished editorial writers asking you to be generous. Our voice is also willingly lent to this worthwhile cause. Being neither eloquent nor polished, these columns can only hope that their appeal to your generosity will add to the volume of requests and by the very force of their numbers make you conscious of the great need.

It is understandable that not all will be able to give handsome sums of cash to the benefit of charity. Some will not be able to spare more than a dollar or so. The sum that you give is in itself not important; it is the demonstration of the American spirit of cooperation, of that feeling of responsibility toward someone who has been unfortunate, that makes your donation worthwhile and places your contribution beyond the measuring stick of the almighty dollar sign.

. . . CLUBS . . .

Alumni Rifle Members Organized

Initial meeting of the newly-organized Alumni Rifle Club was held Friday, October 22, at the residence of T. Gordon Sollman, for the purpose of adopting a constitution and by-laws. All members voted to adopt the official title of Rifleers. Officers elected were: President, John Stewart; vice-president, Betty Hyde; secretary and treasurer, Mary Gail Conkel. Honorary members include James S. Hughes and Mac Garr.

Plans to affiliate with the National Rifle Association were discussed and as soon as possible, the club will secure its own equipment and rifle range. At present, the Alumni Rifle Club will be affiliated with the college Rifle and Pistol Club and will have access to their facilities and range.

The main function of the Alumni Rifle Club is to act as a social organization. Members present at the meeting included Edward Sollman, Allen Newman, Oscar Fisher, Sid Farley and Dorothy Moore.

Music Club Holds Hallowe'en Party

Promising true Hallowe'en spirit, the Music Club will hold a party on Friday night, October 29, at Viola Gibson's home, 2407 Lincoln Way.

Ghosts and goblins will add atmosphere to the social which will feature dancing and refreshments. Kay Warner has announced that all junior college students are invited to attend and that they should come attired in street clothes.

Tourney Planned By Chess Group

Second meeting of the newly-organized chess club was held Wednesday, October 20, at the residence of Henry Ralston, 1748 Tenth Avenue. It was planned to conduct a chess tournament between club members, thus determining the ranking of each player, later, matches will be arranged with other college chess organizations throughout the bay area. At present, the club is in the process of organization and only temporary officers were elected at the first meeting.

"May I stress," said Ralston, "that those students who are interested in chess but have no knowledge of the game's fundamentals, are urged to join. This is an opportunity to learn a highly interesting game."

At present, it has not been definitely decided where the chess club will hold its meetings, other than that they will be conducted weekly. Until the group is fully organized, members will get together and decide where each meeting will be held.

PE Majors Club To Stage Roast

Inviting three women from each of the San Francisco high schools, the Physical Education club has planned a weiner roast on November 18, at Sigmund Stern Grove, from 4:30 to 7:30 o'clock. Community singing and music by a one-man band are a scheduled part of the evening's entertainment.

The Physical Education club, most recent of college organizations, has as its officers Margaret Wormell, president; Ellen Cumming, vice-president; Gail Hanna, secretary, and Ruth Gustafson, treasurer. The club is sponsored by Bertha Keller, physical education instructor.

"The Physical Education club is not to be confused with the WAA," explained Vice-President Ellen Cumming. "While the WAA is open to all women who are in any way interested in athletics, the Physical Education club is for only those who intend to make physical education their major."

On November 2 the women in the club will demonstrate the correct technique in playing badminton to girls in Everett Junior High School classes.

Class To Discuss Languages Friday

Nine members of Mr. Joseph Williams' Anthropology 1A class are planning to discuss the question "Should languages be taught in college?" in the lecture hall on Friday at one o'clock.

As the students will present their own ideas and opinions on this pertinent question, language instructors have been invited to the discussion so that they may hear the students' reactions.

Jane Mitchell will act as chairman of the panel and she will discuss the prospects of obtaining an International language. Other speakers will be: Ruth Burby, Spanish and Semetic languages; Charles Decreval, French; Tom Low, Chinese; Chiyoko Matsueda, Japanese; Robert Ridolfi, Italian, and Vernajo Soanes, Latin and Greek.

HOTEL JOB

Chester Jordan, former member of the college Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, was chosen as steward for Whitney Brothers in their newly opened Cliff House.

Newmaneers Okeh Fex's Dance Plans

In a meeting held Monday evening, October 18, 125 members of the Newman Club unanimously acclaimed President Bob Fex' plans for an informal dance to be given November 6, the evening of the football game with San Mateo Junior College.

Although the date is all that has been definitely set, it has been tentatively decided that this affair will be given at the Sacred Heart High School Hall with a 75 cent admission fee and will be open to all students.

Meanwhile Fex is giving auditions to various popular dance bands of the Bay Region in order that those who attend will be able to dance to the best music available.

As this dance will be on the evening of the annual fracas with the peninsular school, it is supposed that many students of both schools will attend in order to complete the day.

Also under discussion by this group were plans calling for a great football rally in which all leading coaches of this section of the country would take part. It would probably be open to the school.

However, if a small admission fee is charged the proceeds would be turned over to the college football team, according to Fex.

Fex also stated this year-old club is still open to new members and meetings are held in the basement of Saint Mary's Cathedral on the first and third Monday evenings of each month.

The officers who were elected in an early meeting are as follows: Bob Fex, president; Edith Hicky, vice-president; Mary Colbert, secretary; Tracy Slattery, treasurer; Al Flaherty, sergeant-at-arms, and Alyce Thompson, historian.

HEA Members Urged To View Fashions

Home Economics Association members and all interested women students are urged to attend the San Francisco Sewing Institute Fashion Show this afternoon at 4 o'clock in the Emporium Auditorium, according to Claire Cuneo, faculty adviser to the HEA. The fashion show is being given for all high schools and colleges in the city, and delegations from the home economics departments of all local colleges and schools will be present. Cooperation between retail department stores and the sewing departments of the schools has made the show possible, Miss Cuneo said.

Miss Cuneo stressed, however, that membership in the delegation from San Francisco Junior College to the show is not limited to members of the HEA. "Any other women students who would like to come and see the latest college style trends displayed are urged to do so," she declared. "In fact, I would like to have as many women as possible attend. We are meeting in the auditorium, not in school, at precisely 4 o'clock."

Frances Henry of the Institute extended the invitation to the HEA, adding that new and different styles and materials will be shown.

Speaking of other HEA activities, Miss Cuneo mentioned a Chinese tiffin (luncheon) held on Tuesday, October 5, the second of a series of three foreign dinners, the next of which will be European.

WSS Elects Twelve New Probationers

Welcomed into the group at an informal gathering held at the home of Norma Parent on Monday evening, October 18, twelve women students in the college were elected to probationary membership in the Women's Service Society, according to Florence Murphy, WSS president.

These new members, according to Miss Murphy, are Annabelle Benson, Miriam Dunne, Lou Hagerman, Virginia Kwiatt, Phyllis Learned, Betty McAllister, Jane Mitchell, Orellia Orsland, Gloria Swicegood, Betty Verni, Shirley Woodman, and Marge Wright.

"Following a short business meeting," Miss Murphy said, "the girls played games, and refreshments were served. One of the highlights of the evening was the unexpected visit of three former members of the club, Helen Davis, Barbara Latz and Hermine King."

Speaking of future plans for the organization's activities, Miss Murphy said that the most important thing on the club program was deciding upon a way to make money for the WSS Scholarship Fund.

"With all our new members," she said, "We shouldn't have any trouble thinking up some original way of making money. If nothing new develops, we may give another Rummage Sale, as we did last semester."

Omicron Initiation Termed Impressive

Impressive ceremonies initiating new members into Omicron Phi Pi were conducted Friday evening, October 15, at Galileo High School. Arranged as the first of a series of initiation rites to new entrants, seven members were duly sworn in. Those new entrants included Bill Switzer, Edward Garrard, Karnig Kenchelian, Fred Wright, Bill Simonds, Jack Muzinko and Mrs. Cecile Elliott. Officers officiating at the gathering were: Gertrude Bolton, instructor in History; Ward Nichols, comptroller; Dr. Michael Zarchin, Omicron Phi Pi faculty adviser; I. Zangor, Omicron Phi Pi president, and Charles H. Vaughn, vice-president.

At the last officers meeting, it was decided to set the date for the next initiation ceremonies of new members on November 5. Among the new entrants being administered the rites will be Lloyd D. Luckmann, jurisprudence instructor; Franklin E. Sewell, political science instructor, and James Hempseed.

Malcom Longacre was appointed chairman of arrangements for the Omicron Phi Pi dinner. This event is held semi-annually in a downtown restaurant, and is designed to acquaint the new members more freely with the officers and other members of the organization. A definite date has not as yet been set by the officers, but it will be held within three weeks.

"Again may I urge," stated President Zangor, "that all those students, and faculty members as well, who have an interest in economics and who have attained an average of B plus or better in at least six units of economics, please contact either myself or Dr. Zarchin for membership in Omicron Phi Pi. I am sure that those students will find it one of the most helpful and constructive organizations to subscribe to in their college career. Papers on current economic affairs are prepared and discussed by members at each meeting. It enables one to keep pace with world economic problems, and as well gives him an opportunity to expound his own theories. Consequently, try and get in touch with us before the next initiation which will take place on November 5."

HOTEL STUDENT TELLS ABOUT CONCLAVE

By CLARK CHITTICK

As a hotel student of the San Francisco Junior College, I attended the convention at Del Monte last week. There were two reasons for me being at Del Monte. The first was to learn something from the hotel people and second to inform hotel men of the work being done in college. I believe both aims were accomplished.

Although the hotel division at the San Francisco Junior College was known to almost everyone at the convention, its general accomplishments were not. Photographs and slide films were displayed at our booth outside the assembly room. These pictures showed the students preparing meals, testing canned fruit, inspecting machinery, analyzing material for fire prevention, and greeting guests from the front office.

Several members present did not know that Mr. Hugh McKevitt taught hotel law at our school, or that Mr. Harry Troupe was the instructor of front-office psychology, or that Chef Stromberk had a class in cake decorating, or that hotel insurance, administration, and statistics are offered students. It was of interest that students came from all over California and some out of state: San Diego, Los Angeles, Oakland, San Jose, Palm Springs, Minnesota, and Oregon. It surprised most of the men when they saw the plans for the new Junior College cafeteria that the hotel drawing class drew. Until the convention, the managers did not think it wise to send their clerks to school for a few classes. After the convention several of the men asked for more literature on the school activities.

Contrary to all traditions of conventions, the twenty-sixth annual convention of the California State Hotel Association became an educational event. Students learned about hotel men and the hotel men learned about the students. If that same understanding is maintained it will benefit both of us.

Williams Divides Cap-Meg Society Into Committees

Announcing his intention of securing efficiency by giving everyone in the group a definite job to do, Allen Williams, head yell leader and Cap and Meg Society head, announced that the society had been divided into several standing committees and that these committees would function as separate units throughout the semester, working with the entire group at all college functions.

The committees, according to Williams, are the Publicity Committee, which has charge of publicizing, by means of posters, and similar devices, all games, rallies and other events which are under the supervision of the Cap and Meg, the Membership Committee, which investigates future members and decides upon their eligibility, the Peace Committee, whose function is to maintain the proper spirit at rallies and athletic events, the Rally Committee, which arranges programs and secures talent for all college rallies, and the Society Promotion Committee, which acts entirely within the group itself.

The personnel of these committees, according to Williams, is as follows:

Publicity Committee: Norma Parent, chairman; Bruce Bolton, Florence Murphy, Stan Adams, Betty Morand, Lorraine Haffmeyer and Allen Benbow.

Membership Committee: Caroline Orginos, chairman; Bob Neal, Don Mills, Margaret Wormell, Dean Edwin C. Browne, Gloria Swicegood and Russ Turver.

Peace Committee: Ed Frediani, chairman; Merv Weiner, Tip Hamilton, Irv Amstrup, Eddie Canapa, Elmer Hubacher, and Joe Kelly.

Rally Committee: Allen Williams, chairman; President Archibald J. Cloud; Barney Viner, Fern Muhiem, Art Nelson and Don Mix.

Society Promotion Committee: Orellia Orsland, chairman; Kay Evelitch, political science instructor; Alden Smith, Dick Simpers, Lou De Lara and Bob Gronn.

Plans are being completed for the morning ride in Golden Gate Park with Sacramento Junior College women as guests of the junior college riding classes. Because of the lack of a moon on October 29, the date for the men and women moonlight ride has been changed to November 19.

This week has been set as the beginning of the putting tournament in the golf classes. After two weeks of intensive practice there should be some keen competition between the women competing.

More notes on the opera:

Because of Gaetano Merola's far-reaching visions and excessive good taste, one of the world's great scenic artists for Wagnerian music-drama will do the sets for Beethoven's "Fidelio" performance, and the sets for "Lohengrin" and "Tristan" will be revived from previous seasons. Thus San Francisco will not have the opportunity of seeing Herr Graf's reputedly great Wagnerian sets. Thank you, Mr. Merola!

Yet this may be the result of considerable attention given to the budget of the opera. It should be remembered that Mr. Merola has been generous enough to engage Lily Pons for two performances of "Lakme"—no doubt at an enormous figure. (Miss Pons is of the cinema now.) But what we would like to know: is Pons worth it? We must suffer slap-dash-bang sets from Mr. Armando Agnini because of it and we must give up seeing Herr Graf's most famed accomplishments as well; we must accept fewer fine singers than usual—and all because of a movie singing opera star.

It is preposterous to suppose that the "big" name of Lily Pons is needed by the opera company. Every season is certain of being sold out no matter what the bill or who the artists. Perhaps Mr. Merola believes that Miss Pons is a really great singer and is worth the price (we are of course going on the rather obvious supposition that Miss Pons will receive a goodly sum for her name and presence and voice) and that it is a nice bit of balancing when the rest of the season suffers in quality, whether set, costumes or singers.

If this is the case, we beg to disagree with him, because we don't believe one opera makes a season or one artist a personnel. Nor do we believe one name can make up for deficiencies in the rest of a season. It may be pointed out that Flagstad is singing in "Tristan" and "Fidelio," Gina Cigna in "Norma" and Rene Maison in "Manon" and "Fidelio." However, it will not be surprising if some large feature of each of these is sadly scimp or cheap.

And Mr. Merola's record shows that he has spent a goodly percentage of his fifteen seasons doing just this. Always some trick or some display for publicity that is beneath the dignity of opera and altogether unnecessary. It is no wonder then that this season opened with a week that was flat and uninspiring and feebly presented, with many second rate singers and an annoyingly familiar repertoire.

Forum To Discuss Medical Question Wed., November 10

Socialized Medicine is the topic to be discussed at the next meeting of the College Forum to be held Wednesday, November 10, at the home of Dorothy Mercer, at the Residence Club, 940 Powell Street.

Leona Wilcock and Phyllis Devante will lead the discussion for the evening. John Healy, Forum Club chairman, expressed satisfaction with the attendance at the meeting and added that there is still room for a few more who are interested in joining.

Articles for the group's yearly publication, "Forum", are being accepted, John Ward, editor of the magazine, has announced. Writing of all types: fiction, poetry, articles, and others will be accepted. Manuscripts may be handed to Ward or to Miss Mercer or William Goss, faculty advisers of the club. For further information they should also be seen.

The point was well discussed and at the request of the chair it was decided to recommend that the organization change its title from council to club.

After the meeting had been adjourned President Blumenthal announced, "Despite the fact that the Executive Council recommended certain changes in the constitution of the peace group it does not necessarily follow that we guarantee to approve their charter upon compliance with our requests."

RALLY FOR BULLDOG CLASH FRIDAY

NEUTRALITY PANEL DISCUSSION WILL BE HELD AT TEN O'CLOCK

College Faculty Members To Speak On Policy of Government In Present Oriental Crisis With James S. Hughes As Chairman of the Group

In an assembly to be held at the Lecture Hall at Powell Street this morning at ten o'clock, a group of instructors of the college faculty will conduct a panel discussion to consider the problems arising over the question of United States neutrality in the present Oriental crisis. James S. Hughes, chairman of the group, announced the following speakers and their topics: John Gerstung, "The Historical Attitude of the United States"; William Goss, "Economic Aspects of the Problem"; Kenneth Hobbs, "The Asiatic Attitude Toward the United States"; Charles McKiernan, "Geographical Aspects of the Situation"; John Ross, "The European Attitude", and Franklin Sewell, "International Law As It Affects the Crisis."

The speakers were chosen with an eye to getting men who had made a special study of the subject in their particular field. Considerable preparation and outside work have gone into the program, in an attempt the present the material in a clear and concise manner, and to cover the topic from every pertinent angle.

HISTORICAL IMPETUS

Students of American History will recall that the United States gave to the world the modern doctrine of neutrality. It was an idea that Washington conceived and Jefferson phrased in 1793. The American Neutrality Act of 1794 was the foundation of all such acts where they existed, and the progress of International law thereafter was due largely to the insistence of neutral states, generally under the American leadership and demanding that belligerents respect their rights and property.

Many and varied are the controversies which have raged over the question of neutrality, and many have been the definitions applied to the word. One of the best is that definition by Edwin D. Dickinson, professor of international law at the University of California, given at the proceedings of the American Society of International Law in 1935, to wit: "Perhaps we may define neutrality as that condition, status, or relation of a nation not a participant in a war to other states engaged therein."

TIMELINESS NOTED

Hughes, in urging that all students should attend the panel, again pointed out the timeliness of the topic, and the importance of any action of the United States, regarding neutrality as applied to the situation in the Far East.

Automobile Parking Warning Issued By Police

Word has been received in the Administrative office that unless students and instructors who drive their own cars do not conform to the parking regulations will be issued citations by the police department.

"There are many instances of parking violations around the vicinity of Galileo High School," stated an officer, "especially is this noticeable on Bay Street. Cars are not supposed to be parked on Bay between Polk and Van Ness Avenue while the new underpass connecting the gymnasium with the main building is under construction. It presents too dangerous an obstacle for Bay Street which carries a heavy amount of traffic. It is against the law for cars to be parked on the sidewalk, which seems to be a common habit along Bay Street. Also, do not park along the curb where there are visible painted signs which state NO PARKING."

Officers also warned that because of the new ruling handed down by Judge Michaelsen concerning traffic violations, they will enter the classrooms and personally present the ticket to the person guilty of violating traffic regulations.

Tomorrow Last Day For Entrance Tests

Students are reminded by Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar, that registration is not complete, and no credits will be given until the Aptitude Examinations are filed. Last day for the examinations is Thursday, November 4, Room 458 at Galileo, from 2:30 to 6 o'clock.

Colligan Announces Addition of Books

Recommending the following biographies, Francis Colligen, instructor-in-charge of the college library, states: "I would like to call students' attention to the fine collection of biographies which are available for circulation from the Library desk in the Extension Building. Though the books were secured for use in specific courses, they are available for anyone."

A few of the biographies include: Catherine the Great by Catherine Anthony; My Musical Life by Walter Damrosch; Hindenburg, by Emil Ludwig; Abdul Hamid, by Sir Edwin Pears; Memoirs of Napoleon, by Duchess D'Abrantes; Franklin Roosevelt, by Lindley.

Newman Dance Will Be Held On Saturday

Tickets May Be Obtained From All Members of Club

While scores of San Francisco Junior College students are planning to take in the Newman Club "after the game" dance this Saturday night, officers of that organization are busy making final plans for the affair, which promises to be one of the social highlights of the semester.

This dance, which will be held following the football game with San Mateo Junior College, will be given at the Sacred Heart College auditorium, with an admission price of 75 cents for each couple. The mode being informal, many plan to attend almost directly after the game.

After much deliberation, Bob Fex, president of this group, decided that the music of Milton Frank's orchestra would be best for the occasion. This decision was made after Fex had given auditions to many of the best dance orchestras of the bay region.

Since many who attend will go by street car, the Sacred Heart College auditorium was chosen because of its easy accessibility. It can be reached by either the Geary Street or Van Ness Avenue cars. Those who go by Geary should get off at Franklin Street and walk down two blocks to Ellis. Those who go by Van Ness should get off at Ellis and walk up one block to Franklin.

Tickets may still be obtained from members of the Newman Club who have been selling them since last Monday.

Fex also said that students may still join, or join any time for that matter. Meetings are held the first and third Monday evenings of each month in the basement of Saint Mary's Cathedral.

Debate Scheduled With Sacramentans Thurs. At Galileo

Sacramento Junior College is the next opponent of the local debaters tomorrow in Room 462 at Galileo, at 2:30 o'clock. A team from San Francisco will also travel to Sacramento to do battle at the capital city. Both cities will hear arguments on the merits and demerits of the unicameral legislature.

Next Tuesday, November 9, San Jose State and the University of San Francisco will clash with the Ram squad, at San Jose and at Galileo. The tussle with San Jose will center around compulsory arbitration of strikes, and the USF meet finds the unicameral legislature the question of discussion once more.

Frank Bosl and James Scott will uphold the unicameral system here tomorrow, while Lorraine Johnson and Kenneth Germann oppose it at Sacramento. Elizabeth Rehbock and Isabel Sherrat will journey to San Jose to oppose compulsory arbitration. Joe Meeko and Morris Rabinowitch stay here to debate USF on Unicameralism, which they will support.

Feature of last week's debate with Modesto Junior College on the unicameral question was that both sides because of a misunderstanding prepared affirmative arguments. George Woodland, who was the last speaker of the San Francisco team and of the debate, threw away his prepared speech and then proceeded, to the amazement of all, to tear to shreds the arguments of the affirmative which he himself had been scheduled to uphold.

Time Slips Must Be In On Nov. 18

All NYA students should turn in their time slips November 18, to Helene Turner, assistant director, at Powell Street in the morning, and at Galileo in the afternoon.

Students should have worked at least 30 hours, and no more. Students will also be allowed to work the full number of hours right up to the time that college closes December 17.

If NYA pay checks are not delivered promptly through the mail, contact Miss Turner in case of changes of address, otherwise the checks will be delayed for three months.

HOTELS TO CONVENE IN SAN DIEGO

Meeting To Show College Restaurant Division To Nation's Hotel Greeters

Although the convention of the California Hotel Greeters of America to be held at San Diego November 7, 8 and 9 promises to provide entertainment of educational value to those who attend, several students of the college Hotel and Restaurant Management Division plan the excursion with two serious purposes in mind, announced J. Graham Sullivan, coordinator of the division.

"First, the trip will enable the Greeters to hear of the facilities offered at the college and learn of the work done and courses given. Second, the students may see how conventions and meetings are handled in the commercial world," Sullivan said.

SECOND CONVENTION

The convention is the second important business affair to which the hotel group of the college has been invited. The first was the Del Monte Convention of hotel men held October 14, 15 and 16.

Sullivan plans to invite the business men to visit the college and select courses which they would be interested in attending in order to broaden their knowledge of hotel work. Several of the classes of the division are taught by men active in the hotel world who aim to extend their experience to students and to hotel employees who desire further theoretical practice.

BREAKFAST GET-TOGETHER

The Hotel Greeters, a national organization composed of the "front office" men who contact the guests in hotels and restaurants, have crowded numerous activities into the three-day convention. A breakfast is to be held as a "get-together," and the luncheon which follows later in the first day will further enable the business men and visitors to become acquainted. Dinners, dances, sport sessions, and other social events are part of the program planned.

"This convention offers another means of acquainting professional people with the word done by the Hotel Division in the college. The division feels that it has something of value to offer even to those who are already 'out on the job'," said Sullivan, who will speak at the affair. "The Hotel and Restaurant Management group welcomes business employees who have a few hours free daily to come to the college as students and listen to lectures which may assist them in promotion."

Students of the division visited the S. & W. Packing Company Saturday, October 29, and watched the process of testing fruits and vegetables for sugar content, texture, and cleanliness.

Men's Club Bouts Set For Tonight, Is Latest Report

After announcing definitely that the Men's Club fights scheduled for tonight had been called off, officials of the organization decided that they would go ahead with their earlier plans. So, unless President Don Mills has been fooling us again, the battles will be staged tonight at the Italian Athletic Club, 1630 Stockton Street, at 8:00 o'clock.

It is suggested by The Guardsman, however, that those planning to attend the matches make sure that the AMS officers meant what they have announced, because this is the third time the paper has run a story concerning the date of the fights only to have the Men's Club postpone them.

Aided in arrangements by his capable student officers, Joe Amori has outlined a program consisting of boxing and wrestling bouts and several celebrities, including Buck Shaw of Santa Clara and George Malley of U.S.F. Among the students who will compete are Bob MacArthur, Allen Williams, Andy Oddstead, Frank Knowlton, the Holmes Boys, Frank Sylvestri and Ray Greenwood. Free cigarettes are also promised.

Ricks College Game Canceled By Idaho Group

Financial Element Proves Downfall of Nov. 25 Contest

Cancellation of the proposed game with Ricks College of Idaho was announced by Dean Edwin C. Browne after receiving a communication from the northern school. Lack of adequate funds was blamed for the failure of plans to materialize, Browne said.

Jack Schmale, college publicity man, has been negotiating with several colleges in Utah to arrange a post-season game, but no answers have been received as yet.

Following is the letter received by Dean Browne:

E. C. Browne, Asst. Dean of Men,
San Francisco Junior College,
San Francisco, California.

Dear Mr. Browne:

This will acknowledge receipt of your two letters of October 18th.

It is very unpleasant for me to write that the Ricks-San Francisco Junior College game will have to be cancelled in Twin Falls.

For the past two weeks the committee and officers of the local chamber have been extending every effort to try to get things so arranged that we can go ahead with the game. But unfortunately we are going through a period of reorganization which so adversely affects the proposed game that the incoming board has voted against staging the game here. To be perfectly frank, we just yesterday completed a project which was such a financial failure that there is absolutely no chance of successfully sponsoring the game.

We have delayed writing because of an extensive campaign to try to get the necessary support, but just couldn't do it. It would be far better to cancel now than to go ahead to the inevitable result—a flop.

We hope to get a fine organization built up this year, and may be contacting you this spring to contract with us for next year. However, it will be on a definite basis, which I am sure you will want.

Very sincerely,

(Signed) STANTON G. HALE.

Pedestrians Irked Over Powell Hill Traffic Problem

Numerous complaints from pedestrians in regard to college students loitering in front of the Extension Building between classes have necessitated police to take action. Officers acting under direct orders of Chief of Police William J. Quinn, urge students to please cooperate with the department in keeping the sidewalks clear along Powell Street in front of the Extension Building.

"Many people," stated an officer, "are unable to pass in front of the Extension Building as a result of students blocking all sidewalk traffic. Those who do attempt to edge through the congested section are pushed and jostled, although unintentionally in many cases, and consequently it is almost impossible to get by. Some of the men students refuse to stand aside at all and let those pedestrians pass. Many are forced either to go down the street or cross over and pass down the other side of Powell. We have had a few complaints before, but so numerous has the department received them lately, that as a result we are forced to take action.

"May I also add," continued the officer, "the law states that all sidewalks must be clear for trespass purposes; thus students please have a regard for others and refrain from blocking the sidewalk. We realize that you are in need of more space and that your present headquarters are inadequate for the large enrollment, but if you wish to congregate in groups between classes, please go around in the alley for such purposes."

It is advisable, officers stated, for those students who wish to stand in front of the building to stand at one side and at least clear a path for those to pass through who are coming and going from downtown.

CHAMPIONSHIP FOOTBALL GAME INSPIRES PEP DEMONSTRATION

Cheerfests At Both Colleges Will Be Led By Rival Yell Leaders; Local Assemblage Slated For Two O'clock in Galileo High School Auditorium

In anticipation of the classic grid meeting with San Mateo Junior College on the following day, exchange rallies will be held with the peninsula institution on Friday, November 5, according to Allen Williams, college yell leader.

The local contingent will take complete charge of the San Mateo pep demonstration at 11 o'clock Friday morning, while the Bulldogs will send up their noise makers and entertainers to take command of the Ram rally at 2 o'clock in the afternoon at the Galileo auditorium.

Led by Williams and Student Body President Eugene Blumenthal, the San Francisco entourage will include Vice-President Caroline Orginos, Secretary Lorraine Haffmayer, and numerous vocalists and musicians. All the local officials are scheduled to deliver short pep talks to the San Mateo student body.

HALF-HOUR PROGRAM

Starting at 2 o'clock on Friday afternoon in the Galileo auditorium, the San Mateo head yell leader and assistants will present a half-hour program that they have promised will be unusual. The leader of the Bulldog troupe has announced that he has prepared a speech to convince the San Franciscans of the hopelessness of their cause.

"This is one of the last big football rallies of the year and we want everyone out there at Galileo to show the team we are still with them," Williams said. "The team is still very much in the running for the conference championship, and the men need our support. Remember to be at Galileo at 2 o'clock on Friday afternoon."

Williams has disclosed that he has secured the services of Ray Mann, the college's famous imitator, and Clark Mitchell, piano player, to represent the college at the San Mateo pep fest. San Mateo did not announce the names of any of her entertainers.

Tickets for the San Mateo-San Francisco Junior College football game to be held at San Mateo on November 6, are now on sale at the Finance Office at Galileo. The office is open from 2:15 to 4:30 o'clock. Admission tickets are 25c, with student body cards.

For faculty members and other adults who plan to attend the game, tickets are available at the Finance Office at 40c. Adults who buy tickets at the game will be charged 55c.

"Because of traditional rivalry between the two schools, a large crowd is anticipated," says John Selig, treasurer. "Experience has shown that much time will be saved, if one buys his ticket beforehand."

Williams announced that those who have no available automobile transportation can reach San Mateo by taking the Number 40 car at Fifth and Market Streets. It takes approximately 45 minutes to reach the peninsula city via the street car route.

Manifestations Of Peace Given In Next Week

Peace will reign supreme during peace week, November 8 to 12 inclusive. Monday the Peace Council meets, Wednesday a peace play will be presented, and on Friday a peace assembly in relation to Armistice Day will be held.

Holding its first meeting since its now famous series of organizational confabs, the Peace Council will meet Monday night, November 8, at 8 o'clock in the home of Gertrude Bolton, 1060 Pine Street. Scheduled for the meeting is the question of amending the constitution to eliminate club representation. Feature of the evening will be a presentation of the pros and cons of the boycott as a means of checking aggressor nations. Discussion of the question by the group will follow. All students interested are invited to attend, the Council's executive committee announced.

Ruth Jensen's Speech 21B class will present a play appropriate for Armistice Day next Wednesday, November 10. The time and place of presentation was not yet determined when The Guardsman went to press. A decision had not been reached whether the drama would be put on at the Galileo or Powell Street buildings. The time depends upon which building is secured. If presented at Galileo, curtain time will be in the afternoon; if Powell Street is the scene of activity, the morning hours will see the performance, Paul Pitman, assistant to President Cloud, indicated. The play will not only be significant from the peace angle but it will be the first time such an activity is performed in the college.

Armistice Day will be observed with a peace assembly on Friday, November 12, in the Powell Street Lecture Hall at 12 noon. The Peace Council is sponsoring the meeting and has invited Dr. Alfred G. Fisk, philosophy professor at San Francisco State College, to deliver the main address. Dr. Fisk is widely known for his activity in the peace movement. Ray Valdez will be the student speaker. The chairman's duties will be handled by Fred Vast.

RR-RRRRAH!! PF-FF-FF-TT-T!

Although the Ram should be the official college mascot to tangle with the San Mateo Bulldog next Saturday, there is another young fellow who holds a place in the hearts of the college rooters, and who has a "claws" in his contract which traditionally demands that he do the bulldog baiting for the Rams. "Snoopy" is the name of this worthy who departed this region, some three hundred and sixty-five days ago. (Remember?) Pictured at the right, he calmly eyes his saggy-pussed rival's visage and plans his strategy for the coming duel.

Ah, "Snoopy", were you but with us in the flesh to lend your claws as well as your beneficent and bewhiskered inspiration!

ABILITY AND AFFABILITY

Within the next few weeks the college will again be called upon to select student body officers for the spring semester. Before the atmosphere becomes clouded with the smoke of campaign enthusiasm it is well to reiterate the time-honored warning that deals with the fact that you elect your leaders for their ability and not merely for their affability.

Our college is now in the most important phase of its development. We are a young school, a school eager to erect standards and traditions that will be worthy of the countless generations to follow us. To use a very understandable analogy, the college is now in a period akin to that of our government in the years immediately following the revolution. We are in a perilous stage in our growth and should not endanger our expansion by selecting leaders who are incapable of realizing the trust that has been given them.

It is a common fallacy in high school elections that the voters are unable to distinguish between true executive ability and mere exhibitionalism, or to use the vernacular, showmanship. However, it can reasonably be expected that the college student, more mature and intelligent than his prep school counterpart, should be able to make a correct choice in his selection of leaders.

COMMUNISTIC CAPERS

It cannot be denied even by the most optimistic that Communism is a growing menace in our nation, although the bulk of the American masses are not as yet revolutionary minded. The depression has not been entirely surmounted. According to recent figures almost one-sixth of our population depends upon relief for subsistence; at least one-fifth of our workers are out of jobs; one-half of the American nation lacks properd medical care, and millions of our countrymen dwell in "homes" that are in reality hovels. Even in the boom year of 1929 the average earnings of more than 18,000,000 workers were under $1,000 per year.

In the international area the threat of war looms large upon the horizon. Since 1919 little real progress has been made in laying a permanent basis for world peace. The "satiated powers," United States, Great Britain, France and Russia, hold in their grip a virtual monopoly of many essential raw materials. Tariffs, quotas and currency manipulations have largely strangled international trade. Germany, Italy and Japan, under-privileged and resenting the status quo, are ruled by military dictatorships, and are the motivating factors of the warfare in Spain and the Orient.

On such material the Communist peril feeds. The toiling masses seek peace, the Communist propagandist tells them that his party alone champions true and permanent world harmony. "Fascism, Imperialism and Capitalism beget war—smash them and you end war." So runs this plausible formula. The people are irked by semi-starvation amid potential plenty. They know that our farms and factories can sustain a growing population and a rising standard of living if properly controlled and organized. Why, they ask, do we have poverty and misery? The Communist has a simple answer. He blames the profit system, the monopolization of the wealth by the privileged classes, the control of credit by the bankers, for the exploitation of the masses by the wolves of industrialism, ruthless and collapsing.

All real Americans have faith in the ability of their government to surmount the depression and retain what is best in its contribution to human progress. Before we liquidate ordered liberty of speech and the press, before we clamor for the knout and the straitjacket, let us throw the full weight of our influence upon the progressive and truly liberal side.

Young America shows a preponderant sentiment toward what the French term the "Left Center." Such a tendency in governmental philosophy is both healthy and heartening because the "Left Center" is a constructive yet temperate course of action that will eventually rescue capitalism from degradation to which it now seems to be heading and will also serve as an effective force in the fight against Communism.

Mere repression may check Bolshevism for a time but what then? Moscow answers: "Capitalism and Fascism will produce war; war will beget depression and chaos and then the Red Revolution is at hand." Young America must have confidence in its ability to develop real, constructive remedies for the miseries of the masses. We must make an effort to build a truly corporative system. Mere negativism and perfectionism must be discarded by Youth. Let us be prepared to overcome the catastrophe before the crisis arrives!

San Francisco's a wonderful place,
You stride along with the fog in your face,
And a song in your heart 'cause you're glad to be
Where there's everything under the sun to see.
Chinatown and the hilly streets,
The spots where the old and the new world meets,
The cable cars, and that tall white shaft
That stands on the hill called Telegraph.
Fisherman's Wharf with its lobster pots
And a dozen other famous spots
Is it any wonder we love to tell
The world that San Francisco's swell?

Pardon us a moment while we dash down to the Chamber of Commerce and pick up our check! Seriously though, we've had the first three lines of this particular poem rambling around in our head for over a year and have never found the time or incentive to finish it. And after that Hallowe'en gadget of last week, we felt that we owed it to ourself to write something that at least rhymed.

CLEAN UP

Desiring, once and for all, to rid ourselves of several little items that have been cluttering up our mental closet, we hereby present the names of several people who have asked us on different occasions to please mention them in the paper. Hence, we give you (and in bold face caps please, Mister Printer) DUKE WORSHAM, DOUG DOWD and VERA WALSH. There, now are you satisfied or would you prefer some other corner of the paper? And speaking of cleaning up reminds us of talking up, and in talking up will all the talker-uppers around the school please join all of us who had such a swell time on the Sacramento trip in talking up a similar trip to Modesto?

PRESENTING

May We Present . . . Hugh Waite, High Freshman president, vice-president of the Beta Phi fraternity, and one of our favorite people . . . came all the way from Holyrood, Kansas, to our fair city where he attended Polytechnic High School . . . will go from junior college to Stanford and has two ambitions, to be a State Cop and to own a ferryboat . . . enjoys nothing more than visiting his girl friend in Alameda (now, do you get the ferryboat connection?) unless it be wrestling with his pal "Boy Scout" Bolton . . . loves chocolate eclairs and hates driving with women or "Mac" and dizzy blondes with southern accents.

PAY DIRT

By Jack Campbell

How about this Subway proposition? Your reporter, after being conveyed Market Streetward to the tune of 24c (7c for fare and transfer and 17c lunch money and car fare home bumped loose from him by a Sutter Street bump) recently had the privilege(?) of interviewing several of San Francisco's allegedly intelligent voters, meaning of course, those most heckled of all humans, "The Men on the Street." (Sensible people, more commonly known as those who fail to vote, remain at home, traffic conditions being what they are.) Let it be firmly stressed from the start, the people interviewed herein are voters. All set. Let's go.

Your reporter: "I say, Conductor, what think you of the subway plan?"

Ans.: "Don't crowd—Plenty of room up forward."

(At this point twenty wildly staggering unseated passengers clawed for straps for another bump hove in sight. Your reporter climbed to his feet and shimmied off the car.)

A gray-headed newsie approached.

"Paper, sir?"

Y. Rep.: "Yes, I see it is."

"Yes, but do you wish to own this copy?"

Your R.: "No, but say, what do you think of the subway plan?"

Ans.: "In my opinion, a subway in San Francisco will facilitate rapid transit, stimulate business, and promote general good will among the citizenry."

Y. R.: "Thanks." (exit)

There appeared on the horizon created by the curb and the top of a Packard car, a business executive.

Quest.: "Are you a business executive?"

Ans.: "Whacha tink, punk? Whacha tink?"

Question: (Really "answer," but this form of Q and A cannot be broken): "I tink not."

A: "Well, I am exec'tive so what?"

Q: "Well, whacha tink—I mean what do you think of the subway plan?"

A: "Nuts wit it, brudder. I ain't interested."

The reporter of you walked home for which he fervently gives thanks, all things considered. (Really, only one thing is responsible for the thanks given—that Sutter Street bump and a very worn dime plus 7c carfare trickling down Montgomery Street to provide a meal for a broke broker.)

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

Highly elated at perceiving a neatly folded newspaper on the seat next to us as we sat down on the train the other morning, we gleefully opened to the front page and prepared to read all the latest news, as we sped toward the waiting ferry boat.

Imagine our surprise at finding ourselves in possession of a copy of that esteemed sheet, The Clodhop Corners Clarion. Eagerly we began to devour the headlines. . . .

CITY IN ARMS OVER GRAFT EXPOSE

. . . here was excitement, reading on . . . The Clodhop Corners Citizens Committee was aroused to a fighting pitch today by the daring exposures which proved beyond a shadow of a doubt, that Mayor Ezra Umptweedle has been buying all the postage stamps for his private correspondence with town funds. Furthermore, it was alleged, the City Fire Dept. has been padding their expense accounts, in order to buy cat food for the station mascot.

. . . wow! Think of the excitement which must have reigned in Clodhop Corners. There was more. . . .

McWhortleberry Elected To Civic Honor Position

J. Abner McWhortleberry, local financier, and president of the Clodhop Corners First National Trust and Savings Bank, was today elected president of the Civic Improvement Society. His first official words were in the nature of a promise to take immediate action on the question of advancing the curfew from 10:00 o'clock to 9:00 o'clock. McWhortleberry gave as reason for his drastic step, the fact that local merchants were unable to get the sidewalks tucked away before the college students from the city came through town. He said, "Last week those derned city kids stole twelve feet of cement from in front of my bank, and something's gotta be done about it."

. . . There was a man of action, we turned to the sports section. . . .

Clodhop Corners Cougar Claw Cheeseville Condor

A fighting Cougar eleven swamped a weak Cheeseville team by a score of 2-0, in the annual homecoming game at Clodhop Bowl yesterday. The score might have been larger, had not Coach Lem Prunepuss chose to allow his second string to play the whole last three minutes. The Clodhop's score came on a brilliantly-executed play, which saw the Cougar quarterback being hit in the sconce with a Cheeseville pass from behind their own goal line. The ball bounded back into the arms of the Cheeseville passer, who promptly fell down, thereby ringing up two points for Clodhop Corners. . . .

At this point, we were interrupted by a large individual, with a red face and what appeared to be hay seeds protruding from his ears, who demanded that we give him back his paper. We hurried to comply with his by-no-means-uncertain request, and he went off, muttering something about "gosh darned city dudes—think they own everything."

Sadly we resumed our gazing out of the train window, resolved to send in our subscription to The Clodhop Corners Clarion, as soon as we could raise thirty-two cents and three beer bottle tops.

We decided to close without our usual bum pun, this week, so all we'll say is, "Gone but not Fog-gotten."

"Snoopy," the famous feline, now a legendary figure, first broke into the headlines. He was very purr-oud of the portrait of his catniptic majesty, which adorned the front page of The Guardsman.

The Rams, fresh from their 12-6 victory over Marin, prepared to entrain for Los Angeles and the Lair of the Cub. They won, too, 12-0, and brought home the Roos trophy.

Dr. Merton E. Hill, of the University of California, one of the "ground workers" of the early organization of San Francisco Junior College visited the college. (Dr. Hill is the official coordinator between the junior college and the University of California.)

Junior college students had first-hand views of the movie trucks riding up and down Powell Street for location shots of the William Powell-Myrna Loy film, "After the Thin Man."

JUST WEAR A GRIN

If things go wrong and you feel bad,
Don't let it get you down;
Just go along and wear a grin,
And never wear a frown;
For if we do, some people think
That we have stooped to sinning,
And nothing's gained by doing this:
Sometimes there is, by grinning.
O life is sweet, each day of it,
So this, we all should spare,
Instead of killing folks each day,
Like they're doing over there,
We should pitch in, and help them out,
That is, the ones who need it,
And do away with guns and war,
And a good life; try to lead it.
By doing this, the world is safe
From all things that are bad,
And things that all good people want,
Are the things that can be had.
Just bear in mind these things in life,
And you are bound to win;
So instead of wearing scowls and frowns,
Just wear a big broad grin.

CARNIVAL

Something really novel in the way of a college affair will be given next Wednesday when the WAA water carnival splashes its way through. Norma Gattavara, swimming manager, has arranged a program of contests and exhibition, and we were particularly impressed with the efficient manner in which she is arranging such an ambitious party. (Yes, that last sentence was too wordy, but ain't it dignified?) Anyhow, the carnival should be well worth attending.

WAY OF THE COOK

Can you cook? When confronted with this question, the busy co-ed usually hems and haws and ends up by muttering something about toast and lamb chops and anyway it's a modern world. But, my little feminists, you are evading the issue. The way to a man's heart is still through his stomach, and if you need further proof just notice the popularity enjoyed by that pretty brunette with the Mason-Dixon accent, who is also the star pupil of the cooking class. Then, too, there is that husky football player who says that his idea of the perfect date is a dinner prepared by the girl friend with her own fair hands, followed by a nice, long, bracing walk. While this may sound too economical to be exciting, the chances are that after the dinner your swain will be in such a mellow mood that he will suggest hotel dancing for the rest of the evening. Quick, Geraldine, the Martha Mead recipes!

ENTHUSIASM

Jane Mitchell of Berkeley tells us that this year's Big Game Rally at Cal will be for co-eds only. Seems that the co-eds go in for spirit, but within reasonable limits, while the men students believe in demonstrating their loyalty for their Alma Mater with action. Last year about Big Game time residents of Berkeley and Palo Alto stayed indoors and shivered. Those tough enough to venture outside for a spin had their cars rocked like an old-fashioned parlor chair, and if they objected the hilarious students turned the gas buggies over. Wonder if we'll be as "enthusiastic" when we have our own campus?

* * * *

After they heard about all the fun and hilarity of the Sacramento trip, those who stayed home and moped are asking when the Modesto train leaves. . . . Nominated for the title of the most beautiful co-ed of the college: Orellia Orsland. We'd pick out the best-looking man for you, too, if we didn't know that Nelson and Weiner would be disappointed.

While we're on the subject, Girls' seems to be developing a good track team, judging from the way the students zip down long steep flights of stairs to open the street doors for two college men, both tall; one blond and the other dark. The combination slays the ladies, and could it be that the two pal around for that very reason?

* * * *

Seems that we aren't the only junior college who is crowded, and, at present, (past and future) on the receiving end of promises. San Jose State College is planning to have a new library and to take over the present high school within two years. Sounds familiar.

THE SPARTAN DAILY

Presidential Patter

By Gene Blumenthal

Gasping for a second breath with the discovery that the semester is half over and second midterms ended, we prepare to wade through the work cut out for us in the short few weeks left. Reflecting, one becomes aware of the fleetness of time and finds it a most disconcerting thing. Seeking to recall what has gone before, while at the same time weighing the relative merits of our actions, we use the flash-back method for a first half review.

Entering into the executive tasks so anxiously sought after and so willingly accepted, we soon discovered implications and responsibilities in this coveted prize capable of taxing our faltering mental capacities to the utmost. Quickly surveying the situation and totally unconscious of the possibility of subtlety or suavity anywhere, we figuratively lowered our head and attempted to plow up everything.

Seeing many abuses in our system of student government, and with a definite but rather unruly means of remedying the shortcomings, we soon learned that the existing order of things is not so easily changed. Refusing at first to acknowledge this fact, we found ourself as a result becoming enmeshed in trivial matters which at the time appeared to be of paramount importance. Although we sharpened our wits and eagerly anticipated the next verbal exchange, the orders of the day in executive council soon became only the employing of forensic tricks.

When we paused for self-analysis, it dawned on us that other matters and other persons were of equal importance and deserving of consideration. Arriving at this conclusion, we decided to curb our rush methods and save our energies for something constructive.

More often than not, the careful words of advice tendered by those persons old enough and capable of giving it, fall upon deaf ears. Our optimistic stubbornness of listening to advice and then doing as we pleased did not make us an exception. Our lesson was driven home to us, however, when those conscientious bits of wisdom offered us proved to have solid foundation.

We think we have profited by our experience thus far. Rather than search for argument, our goal will be agreement. And who knows? Maybe we'll get results!

LOS ANGELES MEETS RAMS NOVEMBER 11

Cubs Reputed To Boast Powerful Squad; Are Favored

Bringing junior college football into the public eye for the brief space of one day, the classic of the Ram's football season will be staged when the team meets the highly-touted Los Angeles Junior College gridders in the featured grid game of the bay area on Armistice Day, November 11.

The Colossal is scheduled to be held in Kezar Stadium before what publicity director Jack Schmale has styled a "tremendous throng." Despite the fact that the effervescent Mr. Schmale is a bit prone to deal in huge adjectives, it seems highly probable that the combination of a national holiday and an inter-city grid clash should attract considerable numbers of John Q. Fan and his family.

The Los Angeles Cubs from the wilds of Vermont Avenue have one of the best junior college teams in the southern sector and will be rated as heavy favorites over the occasionally capable Powell Street lads who have allowed themselves to get rather accustomed to ending on the short end of the scoring.

Coach Glenn Ackerman's colorful southerners have defeated many of the best university freshmen and junior college aggregations in the vicinity around Los Angeles and will be lowering the boom in an effort to erase last year's 12-0 dumping handed them by Russ Sweet's 1936 machine.

The Cubs use a modified USC offense, and have shown particular potency in their off-tackle thrusts, patterning their play after Howard Jones famed "power play." Sweet has been hampered by injuries at the tackle posts, and unless suitable replacements are found, the Angelenos will have a field day at the expense of the none-too-strong Ram forward wall.

The unbalanced line featured by Akerman's outfit have no real power coming back to the weak side on reverses unless they find themselves pitted against a right tackle who is a sucker for the slow-developing cutbacks. The Ram's powerful defensive guards should be able to smother everything that is shot through the middle, according to Sweet's analysis.

"If my tackles can get across the line of scrimmage on every play we should have no trouble in stopping the Los Angeles running attack," Sweet said.

The burden of the task will be placed on Will Dolman, Jerry Flamm and Merv Weiner, who along with Duke Worsham at center, Moon Burke and Andy Oddstead at guard, and El Pearce and Dan Wieckers at ends, complete the Ram line.

The regular local backfield will start the contest unless some of the reserves show some hidden talent in the San Mateo game, Sweet indicated. Allen McDonald, brilliant workhorse of the Powell Street legions, will open at the key post and should have the support of Walt Boitano, Wes Olson and Ray Egelhofer. Sweet has hopes of throwing his baby backfield composed of Woody Lennis, John Verducci, Art Nelson and Ed Cregi into the fray to speed up the offense after the regulars have tested the quality of the southern line.

Soccerites Defeat San Mateans, 1 to 0

In a drenching downpour, the fighting Ram soccer squad outplayed and outfought the powerful Bulldogs from San Mateo, 1-0, last Saturday at Beach Chalet. This victory means that the soccer team only has to tie Menlo J. C. and they will have their second consecutive championship.

The Red and White got off to a good start by kicking the ball into Bulldog territory, and keeping it there throughout the first quarter. Mike Klebanoff, the Rams' all-conference wing, sent a couple of deadly kicks into the Bulldog goal, but both of them hit the goal posts and were kicked out by the alert San Mateo backs.

Coming into the second quarter, the locals scored after an intercepted pass by Ellard Taylor, Ram center half, and a quick pass to Jim Mull, left wing, who centered it into the center to "Sandy" Lim, who boomed it through the goal for the only tally of the game.

With clock-like precision the Ram forward line passed the ball around the opponents only to be stopped from scoring by the elusiveness of the San Mateo fullbacks. The wet field slowed down both teams, but gave the edge to the Rams as they had more fast men.

Coming through as prophesied, the Ram backfield played over its heads. A newcomer to the varsity, "Bevo" O'Connor, recently promoted, played a heads-up game at right half, causing the Bulldog forwards plenty of trouble both offensively and defensively. Bob Neeko played a good game at offensive left half. Ellard Taylor, veteran center half, played his usual offensive game, and on several occasions broke through and took shots at the goal.

"Wild Willie" Flynn played his best game of the season, and at no time allowed the Bulldogs any good shots from his side. Vin "Cupie" Zuardo, left fullback, and veteran from last year's team, played a bang-up game.

Coach "New Suit" Wilson was highly optimistic at the end of the battle and said, "I'm extremely pleased with the way our defense clicked today, and I was glad to see how improved the forwards were."

RAMblings

By DICK SIMPERS

Our heart went out last week to the poor chaps who have the misfortune to be members of the football squad. A visit to Funston Field brought to light the fact that the noble fellows were being forced to mistreat each other in the most frightful fashion. Live dummies were employed in blocking and tackling practice, while the coaches stood by and admonished their charges to "go on, hit 'em". The carnage was indeed dreadful as the unfortunate "dummies" were battered around and about by their enraged teammates, who were continually being goaded from the sidelines to perpetrate mayhem to the best of their ability.

After the appearance in last week's Guardsman of an announcement regarding the formation of a club for winter sport enthusiasts, several tobogganists and snow-shoers were gathered in the cafeteria awaiting the scheduled appearance of Ed Frediani, organizer of the group. While light refreshments were being served from the sugar bowl in the center of the table, all present were startled by a sudden uproar in the corridor outside. The door swung open and a blast of icy air swept in. When the snowflakes had settled, there stood Frediani, clad in a woolen jacket, a stocking cap, and a pair of eight-foot skiis, munching on a popsicle. "Gosh," says Ed, in explanation of the incident, "I guess I must have let my enthusiasm run away with me."

After the immense success of the trip to Sacramento, reports are current that there may be a similar expedition to Modesto on November 19. Although no definite statement has been made at this writing, there is a distinct possibility that such a trip may be made. Even though these plans may not materialize, plenty of rooters will undoubtedly travel up anyway to see what should be one of the best games of the season.

And who was it that made that map that was distributed to the students on the Sacramento trip so that they could find their way to the stadium? Your correspondent and a scribbler from one of the local evening dailies found themselves at the Capitol building about an hour before game time and proceeded to consult the map for directions. According to the plan, more than half the distance had already been transversed. Having got that far, they thought they might as well walk the rest of the way, since it looked like only a few minutes' stroll, and set out to follow the directions. For a few blocks all was well, then upon turning a corner, they were suddenly in the middle of a graveyard, not marked on the map. Finding their way out of this, they were suddenly set upon by a number of large, wolfish-looking dogs. Finally escaping from these, it was discovered that the map had been lost somewhere in the struggle. Stumbling blindly through the darkened streets (someone ought to say something to the Sacramento City Council about procuring decent illumination) they came upon a creamery. Inquiry within disclosed the fact that the stadium was a mile "that way and then that way." After three or four more miles of trudging and a couple of narrow escapes from beastly dogs, they were informed by a family group that the stadium was a mile away, but the man and his wife and daughter were unable to agree on the direction. Since the argument bade fair to last all night, they rambled off into the darkness, and only through sheer luck finally encountered a bus full of spectators and so managed to arrive barely in time for the kick-off.

The fights tonight promise to be a truly inspiring spectacle and a splendid exhibition of young American manhood in action. Some of the greatest local exponents of the manly art of self-defense will strut their stuff for the edification of the multitude, and it is rumored that there will be a sensational "dark horse" sprung on the audience who will provide them with the thrill of a lifetime.

Probably the only member of the squad to get more than his share at the dinner provided the gridders at Sacramento was the versatile and resourceful G. Flamm. Still hungry after a meal that would satisfy any normal person, Jerry tucked his dishes neatly under the table and began to clamor loudly for his dinner, which was served to him without a murmur, and which he proceeded to polish off without batting an eyelash. They have to get up pretty early in the morning to catch G. Flamm, all right, all right.

San Jose Contest Postponed; Lambs Beat Streamliners

After the scheduled varsity game with the San Jose Freshmen had been cancelled at the last minute a united regular and reserve squad combined efforts to crush a woefully weak Southern Pacific team by the score of 25 to 0 at Seal's Stadium last Saturday night.

Because of the weather conditions early Saturday afternoon local officials contacted the San Jose institution and decided to call off the game. Later as conditions cleared it was arranged to go ahead with Flying Lamb-Southern Pacific Streamliners game as planned.

By the dint of some doggedly determined defensive play the railroad boys managed to stave off a Ram touchdown in the first period but when Coach Russ Sweet inserted his varsity in the combat for a few moments in the second stanza the S. P. line crumbled and the locals produced a score in short order after a long sustained drive. Walt Boitano smashed over for the tally.

Coach Jack Gaddy's Flying Lambs took things over for the remainder of the evening and had a merry time rolling up three touchdowns over the outclassed Streamliners. A spectacular passing combination featuring Ed "Lefty" Cregi and Joe Alio gave the Lambs their second score after slashing line play had nullified the Train team's offensive attempts. Art Nelson and "Jeep" accounted for the other points.

Rifle Team Beats Telephone Company In Shooting Match

Outshooting the Telephone Company men in their first league match of this semester, which was fired last Tuesday evening, October 26, the college first rifle team started its season successfully. The match was held at the Telephone Company's range, 445 Bush Street, with the high five of the college team totalling a score of 854 and the high five of the Telephone Company scoring 804.

There will be matches for the next five weeks, according to William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college teams.

Tomorrow night, November 4, the first team faces Company I of the 159th Infantry, in a match to be held at the Galileo range.

Not faring as well as the first team in their first match of the semester, held Monday evening, October 25, at the Lowell High School range, the college second team lost its match with the second team of American Legion Post 429 by the score of 883 to 806.

"The college team made a very good score," said Hancock, "but the Legion team is too good for the League in which it is entered, and should have been placed in a higher league."

NETSTERS WIN

Coach Tom Wilson's tennis team scored another victory last week when it turned back the aggregation from Marin Junior College by the score of six matches to none at the Palace of Fine Arts. The Ram netsters made a clean sweep of the program, winning every match, both doubles and singles.

This was the second time that the Ram racqueteers have met the Marineers this semester, as the two teams collided on Columbus Day, at which time the outcome was exactly the same.

Competing on the victorious squad were Chandler Ennes, Alvin Altfield, Bob Lazare, Bob Kuhn and Harold Wagner.

The WAA volleyball team has invited State to a volleyball playday on Thursday, November 4. It has not yet been decided whether the game will be one team against the other or whether the teams will be mixed with players from both sides.

As to the Ramettes and Toppers and their volleyball feud, the two teams seem to be very evenly matched. In the last game the Toppers won to the score of 40-38. The Ramettes blame their defeat upon the absence of their bombastic captain, Marie Rossi.

Organization Being Formed By College Winter Sport Fans

Gathering speed like a rolling snowball, the newly organized Men's Ski Club is rapidly getting under way. Ed Frediani, who is organizing the club declared that the group would be running smoothly by the end of next month.

Among those who have signed up for the organization are a couple of fellows who have done plenty of skiing. Bob Stager, high freshman, is an ardent ski enthusiast. He has been skiing for seven years, doing quite a bit of Slalom and Gross country skiing, not to mention a little jumping.

Budge Brockman, another of the charter members, has the most colorful record of anyone in the group. Brockman has spent over a year in the Swiss Alps, and has competed in many amateur ski events in that country. He competed mostly in the "Downhill" events, but he hasn't confined his skiing to this department alone, for he has a jump of 180 feet to his credit, which is quite an accomplishment.

"Despite the records of these two fellows, the club as a whole has not had a great deal of experience," said Frediani. "Personally, I became interested in the sport only last winter, and many of the fellows that are helping to form the club are in the same boat. It is not necessary to be an expert skier in order to join the organization, in fact beginners are welcomed with just as much enthusiasm as veteran skiers. Most of us are joining in order to learn how to ski better, so if you are interested at all come to our next meeting."

There will be a meeting of the Ski Club this afternoon at 2:00 o'clock at the small Galileo cafeteria. Anyone who is interested, but cannot attend the meeting, please contact Ed Frediani.

Water Carnival Will Be Next Wednesday

Plans for a men's and women's water carnival, abounding in races, diving matches, and exhibitions by local stars, have been announced by WAA swimming manager, Norma Gattavara. The meet is to be held on November 10, from 8 to 10 o'clock. As the next day is Armistice Day and a holiday, students attending need not worry about 8 o'clock classes. The Women's City Club, located on Post Street, has been selected for the meet rather than Sutro's pool or the Fairmont plunge, first under consideration.

Although arrangements have not yet been completed, there promises to be an array of local swimming talent, featuring the University of California's women's diving team, on the aquatic bill-of-fare. Besides exhibitions there will be many matches in which the students may participate.

The admission is 50 cents and students are requested to bring their own suits. The committees in charge of arrangements consist of: Ellen Cumming, entertainment; Gloria Swicegood and Margaret Parks, tickets, and Gail Hanna, advertising. Tickets may be obtained at the Galileo Gym or from the ticket committee.

"We expect a big turn-out to this, our first swimming carnival of the semester," declared Norma Gattavara, WAA swimming manager. "The Women's City Club pool is one of the best in the city and as the date is scheduled so as to remove the worry of neglected studies and since we promise an evening's entertainment well worth the price of admission we hope that all students who find it possible will attend the carnival."

STUFF

By JERRY FLAMM

We dislike to glorify or elevate to sublime pedestals, kids on any football team. There are reasons. The kid might not be of the type who can stand the publicity without his head swelling. We might be wrong about the value of the boy, and do a great injustice to some other, or others, on the team. The article might cause dissension on the squad which penalty would have to be borne by an innocent coach. There are innumerable reasons. On the other hand, there are exceptions. Some kids, who are really deserving, do not receive the credit they deserve. Usually, articles on these fellows will not cause any bad effects, because the players themselves know the value of their play and the fact that they have not been receiving their just due. Also, strangely, these fellows can usually be depended on to keep their noggins at the standard size. It was with this thought in mind that we wrote in the past of Duke Worsham and his cheery outlook and dogged courage in spite of his serious early-season injury, and of little Johnny Verducci, who was mistakenly under-rated by some early in the season, because of his size. It is with this thought again uppermost in our mind that we call attention this week to the best football players on the Rams, day in and day out, when the going is tough or when it is easy; fellows that have little to say unless it be an encouraging word to their teammates, who prefer to say it with wallops rather than words on the football field. They are coach's players. They work hard every minute they are in uniform, whether it be in a game or in signal practice. They are full of hustle and fire. They furnish a spark to the very lackadaisical spirit that the Rams have shown in recent games, and that the effervescent Russ Sweet has been endeavoring to overcome. They are smashing tacklers, powerful blockers, and dangerous offensive men, although one of them being in the backfield has had more opportunity to reach the limelight. Both of them have starred in every game to date. They are both tough sixty minute ball players, and neither has been injured this season. They are GOOD football players. Off the field, they are quiet, restrained, and pleasant. They have no enemies. They are both good-looking young men. One of them probably has more feminine hearts fluttering both in this city and in his hometown across the Bay than Martha Washington has bon-bons. It however has had very little effect on him. Both are "Frank Merriwells" in their habits. Their health is evident. The reason we speak of these two fellows simultaneously is because they are inseparable. They form one of those common, youthful "Damon and Pythias" friendships that people note pleasantly. They are, of course, Wes Olsen and Elwood Pearce. Sentimentalities aside, they are okay!

The varsity injured list has added two new victims. Joe Guedet suffered a dislocated shoulder in the Sacramento game, and Bob Fex, "the local Sammy Baugh," received a broken finger in practice which will keep the aforementioned digit in splints for three weeks more. Of lesser nature were the injured knee of "Moon" Burke, the touch of water on the knee by Simms Hamilton which has all the thirsty dogs around school following him, the aggravated ankle injury of Randy Osborne, the arm injury of Bob Lee, and the pulled shoulder muscle of Gus Kotta. On the permanently injured list, apparently, is halfback Ed Canepa, whose knee has shown little improvement. Canepa, who showed much promise early in the season, received a tough break when he was laid low so early in the year.

A newcomer in the Ram line is Frank Knowlton, a made-over quarterback, who showed up well at guard in the Sacramento tussle. He is fast, aggressive, is built for the guard spot, and likes the going. He should make some of the other boys step. Knowlton also blasts the saxophone in the school dance band.

"Ol' Three Point" Weichers, the man who runs like a combination of Charley Chaplin and Popeye the Sailor, has been practicing for a month now in an attempt to learn how to "truck" so that he can break into the McDonald-Worsham-Boitano specialty in the Varsity Show, Nov. 17th, but still resembles a little kid squashing sun-uva-guns on the Fourth of July.

* * * *

Moleskin Moe says: This kid, Jim Mohlick, halfback of Jack Gaddy's Lambs, looks like a natural for next year . . . also, an orchid to Tony Manuel, a little guy . . . ditto to Bill Tessier who has come up smiling from the sundry setbacks and injuries he has received this year. . . . Despite their loss to Sacramento, the Rams are still very much in the running for the Jaysee Conference title. . . if the Rams could recapture their early season spirit and forget their losses in games which they should have won, we would pick them right off the hat . . . if Russ Sweet's boys could knock over San Mateo next Saturday afternoon, they could slightly remedify the spot the Jaysee officials are in. The Rams are scheduled to meet Los Angeles Junior College on Armistice Day at Kezar Stadium. The game looks like a natural and the date was so good that the local friars rented Kezar. However, with the locals losing ball games, the Stadium will resemble a haunted house on November 11th. If something does not happen, the school is going to take a sock in the pocketbook—where it hurts the most.

GRIDDERS TO CLASH WITH SAN MATEO

Ram Footballers Will Be Underdogs For Tilt On Saturday

Determined not to be eliminated from the conference race, Coach Russ Sweet's Ram gridmen will go onto the field against the powerful Bulldogs from San Mateo next Saturday afternoon in a battle that will settle once and for all the question of whether or not they can be considered as factors in the struggle for the championship.

Judging from comparative records, the Bulldogs possess a decided edge in Saturday's tussle, which will be played on their home grounds at San Mateo. So far, they have had three victories, one tie, and two defeats. In their first start of the season, they rolled over San Francisco State 20 to 8, and then traveled to Stockton and took the College of Pacific frosh into camp, 20 to 0. Their first setback came at the hands of the University of California freshmen, who defeated them by the freak score of 7 to 4, in a hard fought battle.

Entering their contest with Modesto, one of the strongest teams in the league, as favorites, they battled throughout four periods without menacing the Pirates' goal, and emerged with a 0 to 0 tie. In their next encounter they met the San Jose State frosh squad and succeeded in scoring an easy 21 to 6 victory. Last Saturday the Bulldogs looked rather futile while allowing themselves to be shoved all over the field by the Stanford freshmen, who sent them home with a 20 to 0 beating.

PETERS STAR

The big gun in the San Mateo attack so far this season has been Vance Peters, former all-city high school player from Polytechnic High. Peters occupies the key left halfback position and is a real triple threat man. He passes, punts, and runs on offense, and performs the duties of safety man when on defense. His coffin corner kicking has been a feature of every game, while he is a deadly passer and a dangerous broken-field runner. He also takes care of the place-kicking assignment for Coach Marius McFadden's eleven.

Either Bill Fitzpatrick or Ethan Higgins will open at fullback against the Rams. Willie Silva will start at quarter, and Bill Mayne will round out the backfield at right half.

Bill Steirman will handle the left guard assignment, while either Bud Young or Al Luddy will open at right guard for the Bulldogs. Young, regular first string guard, has been ill, but it is believed that he will be in shape for Saturday's contest. Vance Adler, a veteran, will be at center. Mike Milinich and Bill White will probably get the call at the tackle spots, and ends will be Dan Bates and Jack Huber.

Coach McFadden is reported to have built up a squad that, in addition to a classy first string, has exceptionally strong reserves. Indeed, his second team is said to be almost on a par with his first, so that he is occasioned little worry over the problem of substitution.

WORSHAM READY

The Ram starting lineup is indefinite, as Coach Russ Sweet has been shaking the team up ever since the Sacramento disaster in an effort to find a workable combination. It is not likely, however, that there will be any drastic changes. Preston Worsham, now fully recovered from his early-season injury, will probably be in at center, with Tom Burke and Randy Osborne at guards. There has been a battle waging over the tackle positions, with Jerry Flamm, Merv Weiner, Neil Swanson, and Willy Dolman fighting it out for the privilege of starting. Of these, Weiner is almost a certainty, but the competition is hot for the other berth.

The discovery that Jack Heaslett is ineligible was a severe blow to Ram hopes. In his absence, starting ends should be Joe Guedet and Elwood Pearce.

Ray Egelhofer, Art Nelson, Wes Olsen, Johnny Verducci, Woody Lennes, and Walter Boitano are the players from whom the starting backfield will probably be drawn, but which of these will get the call is unknown, and will probably remain so up until game time.

A loss to San Mateo will definitely eliminate the San Franciscans from the race for the conference title, so Coach Sweet is priming his squad carefully in an effort to knock over the favored peninsulans. The Rams will enter the fray as underdogs, but hope for an upset runs high among the boys out at Funston, who are determined to cut loose with everything they have in an effort to redeem themselves.

RAMS' HORN

Safety Valver Scored!

Dear Editor:

Reports have it that lately there has been quite a whoop and holler about the so-called congestion on the sidewalk in front of the Extension Building, resulting in a menace to Powell Street pedestrians. To carry the point further, one irate person went so far as to actually give vent to his wrath through the medium of the Safety Valve in the Chronicle concerning the situation. The party went on to state that it was almost impossible to fight his way through the mob and remain in an unscathed condition. It seems to me that this type of people are the chronic grouch type and never get out on the right side of bed in the morning.

If all these kickers would be desirous of remedying this situation and refrain from picking on the "Orphans from Cable Car Canyon," I suggest a plan whereby they band together and demand the building of our new college in Balboa Park.

I realize, of course, that the police are forced to perform their duties and take care of all complaints, but in a few cases the line should be drawn. Our situation merits this consideration because at the present time we are up against it as to building facilities. Consequently, space is at a premium on Powell Street. The big question is just where can 1,700 students go when they wish a bit of sunshine (or fog). After all, this is a free country, our parents are tax payers, therefore I do not feel that we should be subjected to all this criticism. Everyone is willing to cooperate with pedestrians and I have yet to see a case of jostling or pushing by a student. The only criticism I can advance concerns those few who insist on planting themselves squarely in the middle of the sidewalk and refuse to move in any instance. Otherwise, the present situation, under the existing conditions, is handled as efficiently as possible and, in general, everyone is willing to ease this congestion.

I would appreciate it if those irate citizenry would study conditions beforehand, without criticizing the "orphans from cable car canyon."

"A Powell Street Waif."

MILITARY BAND TO BE FORMED

Determined to form a college military band, Tom Kennedy, band and orchestra instructor, has dissolved the symphony orchestra so that all energies may be concentrated to build the band.

"Any students interested in joining the band will be welcomed," Lilburn Erb, drummer, said. "We need about 10 more students. We meet on Mondays and Fridays at 3:30 in the Galileo auditorium. When the band is organized we will be able to furnish plenty of color and pep to the college."

Not content with organizing a dance orchestra, Kennedy wants to see a military band this semester too. He has announced that he will furnish bass and percussion instruments to students who would like to join the band but have no instruments.

EX-COMMITTEE THANKED BY AWS HEAD

Norma Parent, Associated Women Students president, expressed her appreciation Friday to the AWS executive committee and to other women students who aided her in planning last Thursday's tea, in a statement issued to a Guardsman reporter. "May I thank the executive committee; Gail Hanna, Kay Evulich, Barbara Randall, Marion Yager, Isabelle Sherratt, Betty Nelson, and Ardell White, and the rest of the hostesses; Caroline Originos, Florence Murphy, Gloria Swicegood, Betty Morand, Mildred Farquhar, Oreilla Orsland and Charlotte Zier, Marge Wright, Agnes Korus, Greta Holliger and Helen

Miss Parent mentioned another tea to be given soon for senior class officers of high schools at a downtown hotel or club in the latter part of November. She said that the tea will honor the officers and also members of the home economics classes who helped with the affair last week.

Soph Formal Bids On Sale Tomorrow

Declaring that this semester's Sophomore Formal will be "different from any other formal," Bob Neal, High Sophomore president, announced that bids for the affair will be on sale during the latter part of this week.

"We have definitely decided upon December 3 as the date for the formal," Neal said, "and it will be held in the Gold room of the Palace Hotel. At the present time we are auditioning orchestras in the hopes of getting the best music possible."

Neal urged that all those who intend going to the formal start saving their money now, because there will only be 150 bids for sale, and they are not expected to last long.

Entrance Exams Scheduled Dec. 4

French	211 Wheeler Hall
German	211 Wheeler Hall
Italian	440 Wheeler Hall
Latin	211 Wheeler Hall
Spanish	212 Wheeler Hall

After December, 1937, students in the College of Commerce will be required to complete 12 units of one language in satisfaction of the language requirements for the Junior Certificate in Commerce, Registrar J. Paul Mohr said.

Carl Stough Glad To Act As Captain

In accepting the position of Captain in charge of securing faculty contributions for the Community Chest, Carl Stough, Business Instructor, stated, "I am exceedingly glad to be able to do my bit in the drive for a bigger Community Chest fund."

Edwin C. Browne, Dean of Men, President Cloud and Stough are collaborating with Hon. C. Harold Caulfield, President of the San Francisco Board of Education and head of the Division of Public Schools in the drive for Community Chest funds.

THEORETICAL KNOWLEDGE TO BE APPLIED BY RADIO 51A STUDENTS

Students of Radio 51A will begin the application of theoretical knowledge to the practical side of radio study at once as most of the equipment and parts necessary has arrived, said Lowell M. Hollingsworth, instructor of college work at the Gompers Trade School.

Explaining the functions of various devices, Hollingsworth described the cathode ray oscillograph, which from outside appearances is about the size of a receiving set plus many intricate gadgets. Along with the oscillograph is a test oscillator which acts as a matching unit to the former, and they must both be employed in performing their specific function. The purpose of the cathode ray oscillograph is to test the selectivity of a receiving set; that is, the situation resulting when a weak station may be tuned in and the program of a stronger station faintly detected in the background. Results of the selectivity of a radio set is recorded by a cathode ray tube located on the oscillograph set and is distinguishable through a glass panel. The test oscillator checks on adjustment of the selectivity of the receiving set, and acts as a transmitter for test purposes. The cathode ray tube acts as a receiving set adjuster. This type of set has been on the market approximately two years and has proved a boon to radio in checking on, and correcting the selectivity of receiving sets.

Also received this week is a Weston supersensitive analyzer, which is the latest of its type in the radio field. Considered twenty times more sensitive than previous analyzers, this newest device is comparatively recent, having been on the market only a year. Located on the face of the set is a large meter with a recording needle. The set itself is of a portable type and can be easily carried around. In conjunction with the supersensitive analyzer is a socket selector set which can be plugged in to any tube socket on a receiving set. As a result of the socket contact with the receiving set which is connected with the super-sensitive analyzer, it is possible to diagnose all trouble.

The large meter records both on alternating and direct current and because of its sensitiveness, it is possible to measure things in the set as they actually are. In case the design of a tube socket were to be changed, it would not be necessary to secure another analyzer, but only a tube socket, for they are two distinctive parts, which work in unison with each other.

A cabinet to store different equipment has been installed on the third floor of the Gompers school. Offering a large amount of storage space, the upper part of the cabinet contains built-in shelves with three large doors opening out. The lower part is devoted exclusively to large drawers.

Implements supplied to students to work with consist of two different type pairs of plyers, a screw driver, a soldering iron and solder.

. . . CLUBS . . .

Bolton Elected Beta Phi Prexy

Formal election of new officers was held at the last meeting of Beta Phi, national fraternity. Newly-elected officers for the term are: president, Bruce Bolton; vice-president, Hugh Waite; secretary, Bill Leavitt; treasurer, Sylvester McAtee, and pledge master, Ed Canepa. Plans are being formulated to hold a formal dinner, which will be held in about two weeks.

Plans were completed for the leasing of the newly-acquired Beta Phi fraternity house located at 2117 Leavenworth Street, and members moved into their new headquarters November 1. The former mansion provides an ideal abode for the location of a fraternity house because of its location and building plan. Ample space is provided for, thus securing accommodations for greater membership and social functions. There are five bedrooms, a large downstairs room and a rumpus room which is located on the ground floor. The fraternity house affords an excellent view of the surrounding country and especially of the San Francisco-Oakland bay bridge with Berkeley in the background.

At the present time, there are six members occupying the fraternity house and Al Coffman has dropped out. Latest Beta Phi pledges are Jack Tobiason, Stanley Tobiason, Russell Henry, Bob Kantner, Nick Markoff and Jack Evans.

PE Majors Prepare For Demonstration

Combining business with pleasure, the physical education club held its regular meeting at the Palace of Fine Arts last Saturday. Following the meeting, the members of the club ate lunch on the shores of the bay.

Before the meeting, the club practiced badminton, preparing for the demonstration match at Everett Junior High School next Friday. Yesterday the club visited Everett Junior High School to become acquainted with the girls who will be shown the correct technique in playing badminton.

Rifle Club Plans November 12 Party

Final plans have been made in preparation for the next social event sponsored by the college Rifle and Pistol Club. As announced previously, this will be in the form of a party, with dancing, cards, refreshments, and a general good time for all. The date has been definitely set for Friday evening, November 12, from 8:30 until 12:00 o'clock, and a hall, that will easily take care of the crowd that is expected, has been secured at 44 Page Street.

The party is for members of the Rifle and Pistol Club and their guests, and the cost will be 25c per person. A sign-up sheet is posted at the Galileo rifle range, and the deadline is set for November 9, so get your reservation in.

The first inter-collegiate rifle match, scheduled for October 28, between San Francisco and Marin Junior Colleges, was postponed until yesterday afternoon, November 2, according to William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college rifle teams. Fred Wright, who managed rifle teams in several of the matches last year, was the manager in this first inter-collegiate match with the Mariners.

At the regular meeting of the Rifle Club, held last Thursday afternoon, October 28, Miss Hanna told of the final plans for the party. Don Smith presented three proposals, suggested by the alumni members, as amendments to the club constitution. These proposals should be thought over carefully by all club members, as they will be voted upon at the next club meeting. They are: First, a membership fee of $1.00 a year for alumni members, payable in January, as they will be using the club facilities only about half of the time; second, to make the president of the alumni group a member of the club board of control, increasing this body to seven members; and third, an amendment providing that any former member of the Rifle and Pistol Club may become an alumni member, with no right to vote or hold office, on payment of dues. These proposals are also posted on the bulletin board at the Galileo range.

Hancock suggested that the club give six memberships in the National Rifle Association to club members, because through the NRA, the club receives rifles, ammunition, targets, and hopes soon to start a junior college division in the inter-collegiate matches sponsored by the NRA. Several suggestions as to who these memberships should be given to, were also made. Some of these were: to give them to Board of Control members, to give them as door prizes at the party, or to give them to the members making the best scores. This proposition was also left over until the next meeting, to be considered in the meantime, by all club members.

Executive Council In Routine Confab

With routine committee reports and a short discussion of coming events on the college social calendar as the only business of the day, the college Executive Council held its weekly meeting last Friday morning, October 29.

The next meeting of the group was set for this afternoon at 2:00 and will be held in the office of Edwin C. Browne, activities director of the college.

College Men Will Form Spanish Club

The men's Spanish Club, which has been organized informally outside the school jurisdiction has progressed so successfully during the interim since its inception, that Thomas Gabbert, faculty adviser, predicts that it should become a permanent part of the school background.

"We are organized on a small and quiet scale, meeting every two weeks at some member's house, and everyone that has attended our sessions has been delighted by the manner in which the gatherings have been conducted. We endeavor to improve not only the fluency of the individual's Spanish, but also to give him a background and source of knowledge concerning the Latin-American countries and Spain by the members who have traveled in those countries. We intend to have a banquet at the conclusion of the term at a local restaurant or night club specializing in Spanish dinners, at which we hope every member will be able to insult each other in Spanish."

All men students interested are asked to see Dr. Gabbert.

Faculty Meet For Viennese "Jause"

Members of the faculty will meet this afternoon in Room 552 at Galileo for a Viennese "jause," Joseph Williams, president of the Association, has announced. The social part of the meeting will be followed by an address, given by Laurence N. Roberts, Educational Supervisor for the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company. Roberts' subject will be "The Development of Junior College Students for Industry."

Williams commented on the talk, "This contact with the large utility corporations should help to develop courses which might lead to placement of students with this or other utility concerns."

Business Women Hear Gilman Talk

Feature of the regular monthly meeting of the Associated Business Women was a talk by Helen Gilman, originator of the Modeling and Service Bureau of San Francisco, who told of some of her experiences in organizing and operating her type of business. The meeting was held at the Elizabeth Inn.

The Associated Business Women group is an organization of present and former students of the Business Department under the faculty supervision of Margaret Flournoy. All advanced students of the Business Department are invited to attend the meetings which are held Saturday afternoons or evenings, whichever time is convenient.

Ethel Flynn, president; Mildred Ross, secretary; Dorothy Chase, treasurer, are those holding office for this year.

Students See Film At Wheeler Hall

Forty college students attended a German-spoken film last Thursday at Wheeler Auditorium, Berkeley, as one of the social functions of the German Club.

The picture, entitled "Emil und die Detektive," was filmed against the modern background of Berlin. The plot was easily followed even by those who didn't speak German, as it was the action and not the dialogue that counted.

REPORTER ATTEMPTS TO SCRIBBLE FEATURE STORY ABOUT FEATURES?

So "no news is good news," hey? Well, just take up journalism and see if you still think so. "No news?" mimics Sir Don, "make a feature out of it." And so we venture into an attempt of one.

There is always a story, even if you have to chase prosperity to find it. For instance, one could extol the art of finding a new teacher in the college. From personal experience, the best effect or the best results to "get that man" is to go out in the middle of Galileo's court and yell "Come out, come, wherever you are." (Even though you don't get any results, at least you've started a rumor that his or her presence is wanted.)

Another feature could be the art of writing in WJ when half the football team jams in for one piece of cake (the kind the AWS people serve). That in itself is a start of a feature with perhaps the title "The piece of cake the Editor didn't get" or "You can't have your cake and be popular." (Incidentally, did someone eat that plate, too?).

To summarize, the art of writing a feature is to know a good opening or lead and to know when to stop, so we shall "learn" you how to stop. Heck, the Editor says remember the deadline, but we really had some "marvelous" (no emphasis on the third syllable) ideas.

Medicine To Be Topic Of Forum

With Socialized Medicine as the subject for discussion, the Forum Club will meet at the home of Dorothy Mercer, at the Residence Club, 940 Powell Street, on Wednesday night, November 10.

Leona Wilcox and Phyllis Devaney will present arguments for and against the method suggested to aid in checking disease.

John Ward, editor of Forum, the group's yearly publication, has announced that contributions for the magazine are now being accepted. "Although FORUM appears but once a year," he said, "we are accepting manuscripts now so that students who are leaving college at the close of the fall semester may have an opportunity to have their writings published in the spring. Writing of all types will be accepted and there is no length limit, students are expected to use their own judgment. Last spring's issue which was very successful and was known as the 'pick of student literature' contained fiction, poetry, drama, humor, and articles of social interest. Students desiring more information or wishing to turn in a manuscript should see Miss Mercer, Mr. Goss, or myself."

Italian Club In Inaugural Meet

With an inauguration banquet scheduled for tonight at a local restaurant, the college's newest organization, the Italian Club, comes into existence. All students interested in the Italian language, culture and history, are invited to attend. Members are expected to attend many functions given later in the term by the local Italian colony for university students of the language. The club is headed by Dora A. Garibaldi, instructor in the college's newest language department. Tonight's function is scheduled for 6:45 p. m. at the Veneto Restaurant. All men students seeking further details are asked to see either Miss Garibaldi or Audrey Martell. All women students are beseeched to see Jerry Flamm in Room 2 at Galileo during the 2:30 class.

Omicron Phi Pi Hold Initiation

Omicron Phi Pi will conduct the initiation of new members Wednesday, November 3, in the evening. At the last initiational ceremonies held October 15, seven new members were sworn in Omicron Phi Pi, which included the following: Bill Switzer, Edward Garrard, Karnig Kenchelian, Fred Wright, Bill Simonds, Mrs. Cicile Elliott and Junko Hedani, whose name was omitted by mistake in last week's issue of The Guardsman.

Rites will be conducted by Omicron Phi Pi officers and Dr. Michael Zarchin, faculty adviser for the organization.

HEA Holds Short Meeting Friday

Members of the Home Economics Association are urged to attend a short business meeting on Friday afternoon at 2:15 in Room 317 at Galileo, according to Caroline Originos, HEA president. Miss Originos said that the next foreign dinner will be planned, and plans for the annual Christmas party formulated.

The HEA has given a Japanese tea and a Chinese tiffin as the opening events in a series of parties featuring foreign food and atmosphere.

Many of the co-eds in the group, Miss Originos said, are planning to make costumes of other lands as part of the HEA activities of this semester. Chinese, Japanese, Italian, Greek, Spanish, Swedish, and Indian costumes will be displayed by the seamstresses. Members of the cooking classes were responsible for the refreshments served at the AWS tea, Miss Originos said.

SPEECH CLASS TO PRESENT PLAY WED.

Four members of Ruth Jensen's Speech 21b class will take part in a one-act play to be given next Wednesday morning in the Extension Building Study Hall as part of the college Armistice Day observance, according to Miss Jensen. All students are invited to the play, "Ransome Rideout's Boots." Three performances, at 9, 10,

Eugene Blumenthal, Robert Young, Lloyd Denfield and Bob Neal will act in the play, Miss Jensen said. "Since we are giving three performances," she continued, "it should be possible for everyone in the college to see at least one of them. The production is interesting and in keeping with the atmosphere of Armistice Day, and we hope that all the students will attend, either individually or as part of classes."

Students attending the college during the last fall semester will remember the Christmas offering of the dramatic department, a reading of John Norton's Christmas by Miss Jensen.

Dictaphones Carry Unromantic Voices To Coeds In Class

Is Girls' High the site of the forgotten co-ed? Not for six young fortunates who can be seen daily at eleven a. m. listening fondly to six masculine voices. College romance? Not exactly, for the owners of these voices are far from the scene!

The plot sickens! Close inspection reveals, however, that the girls are merely taking dictation from modern, streamlined dictaphones, which were purchased this semester to innovate a new course in the business curricula.

Instructed by Margaret Flournoy, the students spend a part of the college semester studying the use of the dictating machines. As the class enrollment exceeds the three dictaphones and three Ediphones available, the others of the group are lightening the lives of college instructors by typing stencils for tests and syllabii and duplicating them on the recently-installed mimeograph.

According to a student of the course, the class holds high ideals of workmanship and hopes to establish a reputation of diligence and carefulness.

Medical Treatment Free To Students

San Francisco Junior College is the only educational institution in the city with doctors constantly on service for the benefit of its students, according to R. Duffey Friedlander, college physician. Any member of the college can, on an afternoon, go to the medical headquarters at Room 201 at Galileo and receive absolutely free of charge almost any type of medical examination and treatment.

If the exact facilities or instruments are not there at hand, the person can be referred to the local Department of Health and receive, under the same stipulation, the treatment or examination he needs, which may be X-ray treatments or some such otherwise expensive work.

New Requirement Made For Credit

A new ruling has been put into effect that all those who are taking tennis for WAA credit, must practice on Saturday at the Palace of Fine Arts. A tennis tournament began last Friday with about 30 women participating. The tournament has among its competitors such stars as Dot Canavan, Lily Phillips, Jackie Cramer, Evelyn Ballard, Gerry Orginos, Sue Muther, and Virginia Lum. The finals will be played during Tourney Week.

The beginners in tennis have been receiving special attention, under the instruction of Bertha Keller.

King Carol of Rumania is also a grocer! At a shop built in the rear of his palace, he sells the surplus wines, cheese, butter and fruit produced by his own vineyards, dairies, and orchards.

After Dark

By John Ward

When local drama critics begin quibbling over the relative merits of two excruciatingly bad plays it is not to be wondered at that the Lunts came west for a premiere. When a critic, writing for one of the widely-read morning papers of San Francisco, acts like a fussy old lady at her first cocktail party there is no excuse save that of bad taste—and that is not an excuse but a condemnation.

At the Curran Theatre for the past seven weeks a small company has been doing the nine one-act plays of Noel Coward called, collectively, "Tonight at 8:30." Now, Mr. Coward, Noel to his friends, is a millionaire playboy who knows how to throw a quick success play together, creating a technically perfect corpse. Nothing more nor less than a corpse. It says absolutely nothing, and if it did, Mr. Coward would probably be as shocked and disappointed as his admirers and critics. He is the figure-head of the corpse-idolaters who take great pain toward being contemporary above all things, sophisticated in all things, and always different. That the artistic attempts of this group are a series of exquisite carcases is not at all surprising.

And yet, how could the local critics see in "The Astonished Heart," one of Coward's nine little offerings, anything but a feeble attempt at triangle melodrama? It only speaks loudly of the common delusion that Mr. Coward is a good playwright and has been on the verge of writing a great play for the last ten years. As far as we are concerned, Mr. Coward wrote his best play years ago and that was third-rate melodrama. You may remember that opus—it was called "Cavalcade." Since then there has been a gradual decrease of talent and an increase of poor taste.

If the actress who is now playing his several heroines at the Curran, Miss Estelle Winwood, is any sort of an example of the Coward followers, and she claims she is one of his best, we may take this as an exquisite bit of the sophisticated attitude of the group. "Winterset" — now nobody really enjoyed listening to all that stuffy blank verse. A lot of people pretented to enjoy it, I know. I told Guthrie McClintic that the only good thing about "Winterset" was that it took place in the dark, so that you couldn't see the people. This was printed some time ago in the Chronicle as part of an interview. But the best is yet to come:

"The theatre," continues Miss Winwood, "is big enough to embrace every type of play, from Shakespeare down to the lowest farce." (Hear, hear!) "I don't mind a cheap play; if a cheap play is entertaining, then there's a place for it in the theatre."

It is impossible to take such dribble seriously, and it has been much the same with Coward. He has done one or two second-rate comedies and a lot of third-rate dramatics, and out of the lot now billed at the Curran perhaps "Hands Across the Sea" is good comedy. But Mr. Coward a great or even a good playwright? No, just third-class entertainment of the hollow sort, full of empty, dried-up emotions and forced laughter.

Gladys Steele gave a recital of folk music for Flossita Badger's History of Music class last week, much to the delight of everyone present. Accompanying herself at the piano, Miss Steele sang an astonishing variety of songs, some from Germany, a lovely gypsy air from Russia, some charming songs of England, and some gay Italian melodies. Especially fine were the three or four American songs — "The Low Bridge" for one with its lovely "blues" chorus, and another about a mountain and some hill-billies. A French song about a woman who sold babies in her bakery shop, and a Spanish song about a Toreador admirably displayed the different types of folk songs.

At the end of her fine program Miss Steele did a South American sea chanty that was one of the most entertaining moments of the hour. This one was called "The cook he is a very dirty man." Needless to say the class enjoyed the vital and lively character of the folk-music, all the more because Miss Steele is a thorough musician and an experienced artist.

RAM-CUB FEUD RENEWED!

College To Swim Tonight

WOMEN'S WATER CARNIVAL SET FOR 8 O'CLOCK THIS EVENING

Event Promises To Be One of Semester's Highlights; Women's City Club Will Be Scene of Aquatic Frolic, As All Students Participate

Promising to be one of the most entertaining events of the semester, a WAA water carnival will be held this evening from 8 to 10 o'clock at the Women's City Club located at Post and Mason Streets. Both men and women students are invited to attend and participate in the various aquatic events which are part of the evening's entertainment. The admission is 50 cents and since the next day is Armistice Day and a holiday, students attending need not worry about 8 o'clock classes.

EXHIBITIONS PROMISED

Allen Williams, head yell leader, will be master of ceremonies. The judges will be Football Coach Russ Sweet, Robert Parker, history instructor, and Verrel Weber, gym instructor. There will be several exhibitions by local swimming stars between races. Although their presence is not guaranteed, it is rumored that among these stars will be Ted Needham, Olympic star, a comedy diving team from the Crystal Palace, and a woman diver from the University of California diving team.

Six teams, composed of both men and women and identified by different colored arm bands, will be chosen to compete in the numerous contests which have been arranged. These contests include: a freestyle relay with four entries from each team, a breast-stroke balloon race, a cross-chest carry, a novelty egg and spoon race, tandem races (crawl stroke, side stroke, rolling back stroke) and a medley relay race. Each team may pick two out of a list of four dives, consisting of the swan dive, the jacknife, the back dive and the back somersault, to perform.

BIG TURNOUTS

"We expect a big turn-out to this, our first swimming carnival of the semester," declared Norma Gattavara, WAA swimming manager and in charge of the arrangements. "The Women's City Club pool is one of the best in the city and as the date is scheduled as to remove the worry of neglected studies and since we promise an evening's entertainment well worth the price of admission, we hope that all students who find it possible will attend the carnival."

The committee who aided in completing plans consisted of: Ellen Cumming, entertainment; Gloria Swicegood and Margaret Parks, tickets, and Gail Hanna, advertising. Tickets may be obtained at the Galileo gym, from the ticket committee, or at the pool. The Women's City Club has two ten-foot boards and one three-foot board. There are five lanes and the pool is a tile pool. Those who do not wish to participate in the races may watch from the side of the pool or in the balcony. Because of its convenient location, the Women's City Club pool was selected rather than Sutro's pool or the Fairmont plunge, first under consideration.

Special Train Will Carry Ram Rooters To Modesto Tussle

Plans are under way to charter a special train to carry students to Modesto November 19 when the San Francisco Junior Rams clash with Modesto Junior College Panthers on that date. Al Williams, head yell leader, is in charge of arrangements for the trip and has been working all week in order to insure the trip a complete success.

"So successful," stated Williams, "was the Sacramento excursion, that many of the students have been clamoring to organize a like excursion to Modesto. There were around three hundred that went to Sacramento which really went over all expectations. As a result in the large increase in the amount of tickets sold, a six-car train had to be chartered instead of just three cars. An attempt will be made to make this excursion a bigger and better one, surpassing the Sacramento trip. I believe that we will sell around five hundred tickets this time since the Modesto game is the last conference game of the season for San Francisco."

Tickets will be on sale at the Galileo High School bank for a price of two dollars. Attempts are being made to secure a lower rate from the Southern Pacific Company, but a definite word has not been received. The trip will not exceed two dollars, however. Wednesday, November 17, will be the last day to secure tickets so it is advisable to buy your ticket early as possible. A price of fifteen cents admission to the game has been assured students, but it is necessary that they have a student body card.

Rooters will leave the ferry building at three o'clock, boarding the train at the Oakland Mole, with possible stops at the Sixteenth Street and Berkeley stations. Modesto Junior College stadium is a few blocks from the station and the special will return to San Francisco in the early hours of the morning.

Also to be added on the Modesto excursion special will be a dancing car which proved to be very popular on the Sacramento trip.

Vocational Future Pondered By Group

Meeting to discuss the future development of vocational courses in the junior college, the following men were present at a luncheon given in their honor at the Galileo Faculty Cafeteria, last Friday: Superintendent of Schools Joseph P. Nourse, and his chief deputy, John Brady; Dr. Ira Kibby of the State Department of Education, Director of Vocational Education in San Francisco, Robert Stoffer; Art Director of the San Francisco Public Schools, Aaron Altman, and Walter Schmidt, assistant to the superintendent, and Archibald J. Cloud, president of the college.

Following the luncheon, the group was escorted on an inspection tour of the Hotel and Restaurant Division and the regular classes of the junior college by Cloud.

SF Hotel Students Accompany Sullivan To San Diego Meet

Accompanying J. Graham Sullivan, coordinator of the college Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, four students of the hotel group attended the convention of the California Hotel Greeters of America at San Diego, which ended yesterday.

Combining an educational survey of hotel work at San Diego with participation in the activities offered by the Greeters, Trevitt Wilson, president of the college Hotel Men's Society; Colin Oveland, vice-president; Clark Chittick, and Louis Aber discovered much of value about actual hotel work, Sullivan said. The group stayed at La Jolla Manor.

The college society also convened at Galileo High School, Tuesday, November 2, with Leon Barker, assistant manager of the Hotel Oakland, who showed a series of lantern slides referring to hotel advertising. About 35 students attended the gathering.

Football Rally This Afternoon For L. A. Clash

Varied Entertainment Planned To Fire Game Spirit

Fanning the fires of the traditional rivalry between the north and the south a rally for the intersectional football clash with Los Angeles Junior College on tomorrow afternoon will be held today at 2 p.m. in the Galileo Auditorium, Allen Williams, college yell leader, announced.

BEST EVER

"We have been tremendously pleased with the turnouts at our last few rallies," Williams said, "so please don't let up for this one. Elaborate plans have been made to cram all the entertainment possible in the half hour allowed us and all are assured of seeing a rally that they will long remember. I hate to always deal in superlatives, but this is really the 'best ever' football rally of the semester. The mere mention of the names of Los Angeles and San Francisco should serve as a sufficient incentive to pack the auditorium."

L. A. COACH

GLENN ACKERMAN

Another feature of the pep demonstration will be the presentation of the boxing and wrestling medals won at the Men's Club by the President of the Associated Men's Students, Don Mills.

CARD STUNTS

"It is hoped that the rally will bring all the students out to the game at Kezar because we are planning an innovation in our rooting methods, that of having card stunts. It would make things rather awkward if we don't have enough people out there to handle the cards," Williams said.

1918 ARMISTICE INSPIRES RALLY FRIDAY AT NOON

Timely Theme to Feature Peace Group Assembly; Fisk to Give Address

Observance of Armistice Day will be marked by a college peace rally sponsored by the Peace Council, next Friday, November 12, at noon in the Powell Street lecture hall.

Dr. Alfred G. Fisk, philosophy professor at San Francisco State College and prominent peace leader of the city, will be the main speaker. Dr. Fisk was in the Orient last summer, and is expected to touch upon the Far Eastern conflict in his talk. He will also refer to youth's role in the quest for peace.

VALDEZ SPEAKS

The student speaker of the rally will be Ray Valdez, peace leader and corresponding secretary of the college Peace Council. He will discuss Education and Peace. Fred Vast, Peace Council president, will act as chairman of the meeting.

In a message addressed to the student body, the committee arranging the affair proclaimed: "Nineteen years ago an armistice was signed—but how long will it last? War in China and Spain furnishes the spark that may start another world conflagration—and then YOU will be stopping bullets and inhaling gas!

"Let us observe Armistice Day by resolving to work for peace! Come to the peace rally in observance of Armistice Day, Friday, November 12, at noon in the Lecture Hall."

COMMITTEE

The committee, composed of Doris Speroni, Elizabeth Rehbock, Paul Benson, Valdez and Vast, announced that anyone who would like to march in the peace division in the city's armistice parade, should see them for detailed information. This is the first time in the history of Armistice Day parades that a peace contingent will be included. Because of Dr. Fisk's efforts this was made possible.

The college Peace Council met last Monday night and made constitutional changes. The "Boycott and Peace" was discussed under the leadership of Benson, vice-president of the group.

Forensic Group To Meet In Symposium At Menlo Tomorrow

Labor problems will be the topic of a symposium to be held jointly by San Francisco and Menlo Junior Colleges tomorrow at Menlo. Charles Vaughn and William Simonds will represent the local debating society at the talk-fest.

San Mateo Junior College and San Francisco State will argue with the local debaters on neutrality and the unicameral legislature respectively, on Tuesday, November 16, at 2:30 o'clock in Room 462 at the Galileo Building.

These debates were scheduled for last week but were postponed to next Tuesday by mutual consent of the three colleges.

Lorraine Johnson and Kenneth Germann will uphold neutrality against San Mateo. Unicameralism will be defended by Catherine Mountanous and George Woodland, while State's representatives attack it.

Debates were held with San Jose State and the University of San Francisco yesterday at San Jose and Galileo.

On November 18, six local debaters will travel to Modesto and Coalinga Junior Colleges to discuss compulsory arbitration of strikes.

Lloyd Luckmann, college forensics director, explained that non-decision debates are held because the debaters do not argue to win, but for the value they derive from the discussion.

Whitcomb Roof Scene of Post Game Informal

Caroline Orginos Plans For Huge Throng Tomorrow

Serving as the final social event of the semester, with the exception of the Sophomore Formal, an informal dance will be given by the college Social Committee on Thursday evening, November 11, according to Caroline Orginos, vice president of the Associated Students and Social Committee head.

"The dance will be held on the roof garden of the Whitcomb Hotel," Miss Orginos said, "and as it is being given on the evening of our big game with Los Angeles Junior College we plan to entertain their football team unless it becomes necessary for them to return home immediately after the game.

"Music will be furnished by a splendid group of musicians known as the NTG's and we have made negotiations for some very clever bids which will be completely carried out in red and white. With the help of Richard Allman of the art department, we plan to decorate the room in some appropriate fashion and from the way our plans are working out, the affair seems destined to be successful."

The orchestra was selected by a committee consisting of Gene Blumenthal, Associated Students president, Don Mills, AMS president, and Miss Orginos. Bids were chosen by Norma Parent, AWS president; Al Williams, Associated Students yell leader, and Lorraine Haffmeyer, Associated Students secretary.

"These students," Miss Orginos said, "are all members of the college social committee and worked out all arrangements for the dance with the able assistance of Alfred Agosti, Margaret Dougherty, Ruth Gavin and Dean Edwin C. Browne, committee faculty advisors."

Marksman Team In 2nd Winning Shoot

Winning its second match of the semester, the college first rifle team outshot Company I of the 159th Infantry, California National Guard, last Thursday evening. The match was held at the Galileo range; the high five of the college team totaling a score of 804 to the 777 points scored by the National Guard team. High point man for the college team was Don Smith with a score of 172, Al Plaw, second high with 162, and Ronald Smith, third with 160 points.

Gaining other victories, the college rifle team which traveled to Marin Junior College Tuesday, November 2, returned after defeating the Mariners in three matches. This was the first Junior College Inter-Collegiate match and it is hoped that there will soon be more, according to William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college team. Ten shots, all in the prone position, were fired.

Less successful was the college second team, which fired against Company K of the 159th Infantry, California National Guard November 1, at the Galileo range. The high five of the National Guard team scored 786 to the 775 points scored by the college team. High point man of the college team was Bill Gibson with 167, Virginia Kwiatt, second with 158, and Bill Carroll, third with 151 points.

A word of appreciation should be said for the work of the team managers who are of great assistance. They are Fred Wright, manager of the team sent to Marin; Walter Thompson, manager of the first team, and Charles Seymer, manager of the second team.

CIVIL WAR FLARES AGAIN AS NORTH-SOUTH RIVALS TANGLE IN KEZAR BATTLE TOMORROW

By DICK SIMPERS

What may well turn out to be one of the hardest-fought battles of the year will take place tomorrow afternoon in Kezar Stadium, when the Cubs of Los Angeles Junior College collide with Russ Sweet's battered but dauntless Rams. The Southerners will be out to prove that football as played in Los Angeles is superior to anything that San Francisco can muster, while the Powell Streeters will be doing their best to show that last year's 12-0 victory was not a fluke.

All indications at present point to a close battle, with whatever edge there may be going to the Cubs, who have so far encountered but little difficulty in winning from their local opponents. Their record shows four victories, a loss, and a tie, their only defeat coming at the hands of Riverside J. C. in the first game of the season.

Both squads will be in good shape for the clash, although both were hit by injuries early in the season. The only first stringer who may be absent from the Ram line-up is Joe Guedet, end, who has been suffering from an elbow injury. It is likely, however, that he will be in shape to start tomorrow, and, in any event, he is almost certain to see action.

The mainstay of the Cubs is "Mustang Mike" Maros, a brawny Texan who does all the kicking and passing and is reputed to be quite a runner when he gets started. His punts so far this season have averaged more than forty yards. He will start the game at left half.

Right halfback will be Jack Daigh, a blocker, who is one of the key men in the Notre Dame system used by the Cubs.

Captain of the team and fullback will be Dick Ruess, who performs as safety man, while Bill Ruess, his brother, will call signals from the quarter-back position.

LOS ANGELES LINE STRONG

The Los Angeles line, containing several veterans, is one of the strongest in the southern conference and has been largely responsible for the success of the Cubs so far. Vince Toomey, who caused Russ Sweet's squad no little trouble last year, will be in the right tackle position, and is expected to repeat his sensational performance of last season.

Another stalwart is Bill Engel, left guard, who is credited with making fifty per cent of all tackles on defense, and, in addition, is a sterling blocker and possessed of unusual speed for a man in his position.

Lloyd Tutor, a made-over halfback, will start at center and will back up the line on defense, while Dennis Gland and Goudge make up the balance of the team.

SAME RAMS START

Against this array of talent, Sweet will probably elect to start about the same squad that he sent against San Mateo last Saturday. Since the contest is not a conference game, he may use Jack Heaslett at end, but the starters will probably be Bud Weichers and Elwood Pearce.

Al McDonald, Ray Egelhofer, Walt Boitano and Wes Olsen are in line to get the call as the starting backfield, although there is a possibility that little Johnny Verducci may open at the fullback spot.

The unfortunate arm injury to Will Dolman has caused Sweet to revise his tackle jobs and he will probably shift Merv Weiner to left and insert the much improved Jerry Flamm at the right tackle spot. Neil Swanson and Tip Hamilton are in reserve.

Center will be Duke Worsham, who will be flanked by Andy Oddstead and Tom Burke, guards. Oddstead is a newcomer to the starting lineup, having recently ousted Randy Osborne from the coveted spot.

ILLEGALITY

The recent controversy over the legality of the Cap and Meg Society has been the cause of much unjustified criticism being directed at Student Body President Gene Blumenthal. Many students, either through ignorance or misunderstanding of the true facts of the case, condemned the president's conduct in the matter as officious and overbearing, apparently not understanding that his actions were prompted by a sensible desire to rectify as quickly as possible a condition which was liable to develop into a cantankerous sore spot on the side of student government.

No one denies that Allen Williams and his organization have been a major factor in the success of many college activities this fall, but the mere fact of their success could in no way condone their present illegal status. It is clearly and irrefutably shown in the presidential column appearing on this page that the Cap and Meg Society, as it now exists, is strictly unconstitutional.

Despite the hopes of those base minded trouble seekers who are unable to see over the curb stone of personal squabbles, it seems that Allen Williams is far too intelligent and sensible to allow a mulish stubbornness to disrupt the fine foundations that have been laid for a permanent and duly constitutional rally committee by the establishment of the Cap and Meg Society.

All that the constitutionality of creating a legal rally committee demands are several modifications and changes that in no way vitally affect the major purpose of the organization. It is hoped that student officers Blumenthal and Williams will follow the precept that cooperation is more conducive to the production of satisfactory results than is competition — although the latter is sometimes highly gratifying to personal ego.

BE YOURSELF

Many aspects of modern civilization impress upon the thoughtful youth the need for individuality. The present day trends toward the group mind, standardization, and the pursuit in our schools of a common mental denominator are all striking evidences of the willingness of moderns to be classed not as a particular person, but merely as types.

The analysis of this phase of modern life and its origins, which are said to lie in rugged individualism, scientific rationalism, and a quantitative theory of the mind, should be a pertinent consideration of today's college student. He should realize that our hope of attaining a desired state of individuality is based on a theory of integration and is, in the main, psychological. His education should aid him in not being beguiled by the prevalent mechanistic view of life, but should serve as a force to demonstrate the necessity of taking into account the spiritual side of man's nature.

AND MORE PEACE TROUBLE

It was with considerable surprise that members of the college Executive Council learned that the Peace Council (or is it club?) was going to stage an assembly on next Friday. These student leaders had a few weeks previously given conclusive proof that the proposed organization of the erstwhile pacifists was absolutely unconstitutional.

The Executive Council even went so far as to make specific recommendations for changes in the organization that would establish its legality, but to date (November 6) the peace group has not made the slightest effort to comply with the suggestions.

The present status of the peace council is an unusual one. Although its lack of status was decided upon by an elected body of student representatives, the group has been allowed to continue to act—despite the fact that the members do act against the stated wishes of the student body they pretend to represent.

The situation that has arisen was predicted by those who opposed the movement since its inception. This highly individualistic group, representing nothing other than a few personal opinions, has delegated to itself the extraordinary power of planning a student body assembly.

The very essence of the nature of student government demands that some coordinating group representative of all student interests be allocated supreme authority in directing activities. Such was our conception of the Executive Council. But present conditions would seem to indicate that such a concept was erroneous because the supposedly supreme authority on student matters rejected the Peace Council because of a possible duplication of powers, only to have that organization override the edict, and give itself the power to call a student assembly without even consulting the duly elected student body officers.

Presidential Patter

By Gene Blumenthal

Contemplating the furore over the Peace Council and the constitutional points involved, we turn to other fields in an endeavor to maintain strict adherence to the constitution of the Associated Students. The Cap and Meg Society is now the object of our attentions. Perceiving the desirability of maintaining our constitution as the supreme law of the Associated Students, it becomes our duty then to point out the irregularities involved in the organization of our Rally Committee.

Having long been aware of these inconsistencies, we took no action on the matter until such time when it was definitely needed. Also involved in our attitude of fairness toward other organizations, and being unaware of the Cap and Meg's method of functioning, nor the goals which it wished to achieve, we turned our back on it and awaited the spectacular results promised.

The Cap and Meg Society has had sufficient time to prove its ability, and has done a satisfactory piece of work. The constitution has been thrown into the laps of the student body, but no one, not even the Cap and Meg leaders, suspected that their organization was contrary to the constitution. Therefore, it became obvious that we must demonstrate to all the legal points involved.

As President of the Associated Students, it is part of our obligation, and also within the scope of our powers to interpret the constitution as we see fit. This interpretation may not please those persons or those groups affected by it; nevertheless, according to our method of procedure, it must stand.

The Cap and Meg Society, if it can be called a society, was organized and presumed to be regarded as the official college Rally Committee by the Executive Council. Rather than impede progress at the beginning of the semester, we let that matter slide. This Rally Committee provides for a president, a vice-president, and all other elective and appointive offices we find ordinarily in a club. The yell leader is automatically president of the society, as provided in its own constitution, and one can only become a member by being elected into the group.

It must be made even more clear that this group, which is the subject of our discussion, has indeed a most unusual organization, including as it does any number of standing committees, while at the same time reaching out to perform the functions of a service society.

The Rally Committee is a sub-committee of the Cap and Meg Society, which is in itself, the official rally committee. This does not make sense, and is indeed a paradox, and demonstrates clearly the contrariness of the group to the Associated Students' constitution.

It is expressly provided in the college constitution and stated in specific terms that the Cap and Meg or any other such committee as is officially recognized, shall be the Rally Committee. It is followed upon in another section that the Executive Council shall appoint all such committees. It is not provided for in the constitution, however, that the yell leader shall be chairman of the committee, which he automatically does become, according to the constitution of the Cap and Meg Society. When no such provision is made, it automatically devolves upon the student body president to appoint a chairman of this committee, according to Roberts' "Rules of Order," under which set of laws we function. In further accordance with the "Rules of Order" no standing committee may make itself a self-perpetuating society, electing its own members. Every standing committee, as in the case of our own social committee, must be reconstituted in accordance with our semesters. In as much as the Student Council is in existence for a semester only, as the personnel changes, any one committee, including the Rally Committee, must be reconstituted at the beginning of each new semester, and each new council, unless otherwise provided in our constitution, which it is not in this case.

The Rally Committee produces rallies, which is obviously the function of any such committee. In doing so, they render a service to the college, a service, however, which is common to all committees, and does not necessarily make that committee a Service Society. Furthermore, a committee may have by-laws, should its functions be sufficiently varied, but it is literally unheard of that any committee should have a constitution. Following upon this, no committee ever has a president or a vice-president. The usual procedure is an appointed chairman and a vice-chairman to take his place in his absence. There is a distinction, as a cogent observer might well perceive. The organization of the Cap and Meg is perfect club organization, rather than committee organization. We respect the integrity of the present organization; however, in a multitude of points, so numerous as to question the plausibility of counting them; we must again point out that the Cap and Meg, as a committee, is unconstitutional in almost every respect. Repeating our former argument—if any group violates the supreme laws of the Associated Students, namely the constitution, it must, by reason of its very structure, not exist. What has been written has not been presented in a vindictive manner, but rather in an expository way to show the students and the persons involved just exactly where the bounds of the constitution have been over-stepped. It is not a question of take it or leave it, but a question of defending the integrity of our constitution. At this writing the issue is wide open, but we are reasonably certain that an adequate solution will be attained.

EXCHANGE NOTES

The old-fashioned idea that when the greater majority of babies born during a year are boys the result is a war, is being supplemented by Dr. Clarence Mills of the University of Cincinnati's theory that weather is a factor affecting war.

In his research work, Dr. Mills discovered that the unusually cold winter of 1916-1917 brought us into the World War, and the abnormally warm weather brought Austria and Germany together, France and England temperatures being normal at that time.

Disregarding the fact that body heat dissipation brought defeat to Napoleon in his Russian invasion, and the French Revolution, which occurred during the coldest years on record following uncommonly warm weather. The war of 1812 also took place in the coldest years of history.

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

Looking further into the mechanical features of the word, we find that words beginning with "f" are very popular with the mass of the speaking public, and more specifically, words which combine the consonant "f" with the diphthong "oo". Probably the most popular words which contain these two are "fool", "food", and "foot".

Some of the startling effects, which may be gained by this "foo" business, have been noted by this writer and are here given to the reader:

"What foos these mortals be!"

"A foo and his money are soon parted."

"Foo for thought."

These, however, are only the simplest forms of this idiocy. Many intricate variations and subtle attempts at humor are possible, such as, "When is a foo not a foo?" or "There's no foo like an old foo." There are even other uses for this versatile bit of psychopathia verbalis (wonder what that means?). It may be used to express either joy, sorrow, disgust, or boredom. The common expression in any of the latter cases is simply, "Oh, foo!"

No one seems to know just where the movement started, or where it will end, but the possibilities are unlimited. Some day, if "foo" keeps up, we may have a language with only one noun, and meaning will be conveyed in the length, accent, and tonal qualities of the noun. A typical lover's conversation would then sound something like this, "Oh, foo, I love foo. Will foo marry foo?" or between coach and foo-ball player, "Listen, foo, get in there and make a foo. We've got to win this foo," and the answer: "Okay foo, I'll play like foo!"

All of which nonsense means that this column would then be called, "Out of the Foo-g." So long!

MATHEMATICIAN

Having received comments from several readers on our column to the effect that we ought to write more about the students in the college and less about the president of this or that, we offer you our Personality of the Week.

This week's personality is handsome Willy Blackfield, the geometry wizard, who is studying to supplant Einstein as a mathematical genius when the professor retires. Just now Willy is working on what two plus two equals. "Several times," stated Willy in an exclusive interview with a Guardsman reporter, "I have almost achieved the answer, but it always seems to evade me. However, I will issue a statement when I have at last completed this great scientific problem."

Willy is not only a great mathematician, but a basketball star and one of the only two panther bunnies in existence. (Don Mills is the other.) This title has dogged Willy since earliest childhood, and recently he decided to find out once and for all just what is a panther bunny. Being a bright student, he already knew what panther meant, so he looked up bunny in the dictionary. There was a picture of a large and fuzzy squirrel.

Art Nelson, the original fair-haired boy, says that he wants to be Men's Club president next semester, and can we do anything about it? Sorry, Art, that isn't our department, but if you'd like to run the AWS or the WAA, we'll see what we can do. . . . Speaking of the AWS, that was superlative food served at the women's tea . . . what's more, the food was prepared by the home economics classes. All the invited guests enjoyed it, and so did the uninvited guests outside in the hall. Biggest hit of the tea, however, was the sponge layer cake with whipped cream filling and chocolate frosting. We're getting the recipe and it will be printed next week.

Seems as if this semester was the shortest one in the history of the college; maybe because it's the football season, or because there have been so many successful social affairs, but the students are saying that the term seems to have hardly started, and here it is almost time for the Christmas holidays. With which original observation we'll sign off.

TSK!! TSK!!

The morning after Hallowe'en Stanford students discovered big blue and gold "C's" painted on the sides and windows of about 40 cars. It's got them guessing down there but no charges can be made until after further investigation.

Mental Mutterings

By FEM

Time flies, somebody said once upon a time, and was he right! Here it is November with student body elections, finals, and Christmas not around the corner but right next door, and to most of us it seems as if the semester is just getting started. Which (as somebody else once said), is the way things go. Now, under usual circumstances, this should all be leading up to something, but, strangely enough, it isn't. We were just feeling mutter-ey, and when we feel mutter-ey there's nothing we can do but mutter. Oh, well, it's universally known that everyone's best friend is his mutter and who wants to suppress his best friend?

And is everyone and his cousin Sally going to be at the WAA Swimming Party which is going to be held at the Women's City Club this evening? Norma Gattavara, who is in charge of this event has assured us that it is really going to be quite an affair. Men and women students are invited and admission is fifty cents if you bring your own suit. There will be lots of games and exhibition events and sissies like us, whose swimming ability resembles that of a sack of cement, may sit in an adjoining balcony and watch the fun float by. Norma asked us to please write a poem about her swimming party, so here it is:

"Mother, may I go out tonight?"
"Yes, my little smartie,
"Grab your suit, here's fifty cents
"For the J. C. Swimming Party!"

Not so hot, but what can you do when you can't swim?

May We Present . . . Joe Kelly. Low Freshman president and a very unusual young man in that he is the first person ever to protest against having his name in the paper . . . a graduate of Commerce High School, Joe can't quite see why he should be "written up," and asked us to call the whole thing off . . . finally admitted, after much probing on our part, that he was born in San Francisco and will go from Junior College to Cal and work toward being a Certified Public Accountant . . . spends most of his spare time "taking it easy" and going to shows and dances . . . we still haven't decided whether he is the most modest fellow in the college or the most stubborn, but being part Kelly ourself, we are inclined to be in favor of the latter.

We met a former fellow-journalist of ours 'tother day and he startled us no end by telling us that a student of the college was responsible for the long delay in the building of a building. He said that every time anyone asked when we were getting such a building, they were given the same answer and that answer was always the name of a student in the college. We bated our breath and waited. "What," we demanded, "is the answer that is always given?" "Hugh Waite," he replied, "Hugh Waite!"

GOOD OLD DAYS

In order to have been called a "prim young lady" in the not so gay 90's, women students had to follow these strict rules:

Do not be seen walking in the afternoon in the park with a masculine classmate.

To entertain, have a few members of the girl's glee club and the very best of young men join in with the guitars and mandolins. This necessitated quite a number of chaperons which leads one to wonder how far entertainment went in those "hey days".

SOCCERITES TIE MENLO, ANNEX CONFERENCE TITLE

By ED FREDIANI

With a blazing finish that caught their opponents flatfooted, the Rambunctious Ram shin-maulers annexed their second league championship in as many years, by tying a very strong Menlo aggregation 1 to 1 last Saturday morning at the Beach Chalet.

Winning two titles in the first two seasons of league play gives the soccer squad the best record of competition for teams representing the Red and White since the start of the college.

Three weeks ago, the Rams were tied for first place in the league standings with the boys from the Menlo farm. The San Francisco outfit was conceded a very small chance to successfully defend the title that it had won the previous years, as the tough part of its schedule was coming up, but with a sudden improvement in their once weak defense and the unleashing of a savage attack, the Rams ran roughshod over the two league favorites, taking the measure of Menlo 2 to 1, and outscoring a rough and tough San Mateo outfit 1 to 0.

Coming into their last game with the Menlo team, the Rams were exactly 1 point, or a half a game, ahead of their opponents in conference standings, needing only a tie in order to cop the crown, and the result was a 1 to 1 deadlock.

The score of the game is very far from painting a true picture of the story. The Wilsonmen were far superior to the boys from the farm, and it was only through the yeoman efforts of the Menlo goalie, who stamped himself as a certain all-conference selection, that the Rams were held to one tally.

Early in the third quarter, Bob Campbell, left halfback, for the college, let a shot fly at the Menlo goal from twenty yards out. Leo Johnson, brilliant center forward saw that the Menlo goalie was set to stop the attempt so leaping high in the air he deflected the shot with his head just enough to put it out of the reach of the Menlo goalkeeper, and with that fast piece of thinking, the league crown came to rest once more under the banner of San Francisco.

Men's Club Bouts Are Replete With Thrills and Blood

With a maelstrom of flying boxing gloves and a groaning chorus of wrestlers, the semi-annual Men's Club athletic carnival was held at the Italian Athletic Club last Wednesday night. The affair was a success both from an attendance as well as from an action standpoint. The evening's bouts and exhibitions were replete with action. Talks were given by Coach George Malley of the University of San Francisco football team, and Coach Louis "Dutch" Conlan of the Rams, who accentuated the importance of mental attitude on winning football elevens.

On the more serious side, Frank Holmes declioned Frank Sylvestri for the 129 lb. boxing championship, Lionel Cade scored a technical knockout over Bob Holmes in the third round for the 135 lb. title, and Al Williams, Jayee yell leader, decisioned Bill Burke for the 149 lb. crown after they had respectively decisioned Bob Re and Bob Gromm in the semi-finals. Floyd Lawrence captured the 155 lb. championship by a first round technical knockout over Joe Walsh. For the wrestling title, Al Taylor threw Hugh Waite for the 149 lb. championship, after Waite had defeated Bob MacArthur in a semi-final match.

By DICK SIMPERS

"Neither rain nor snow nor sleet shall stay these cogriers from the completion of their appointed rounds."

The above quotation, although officially the slogan of the U. S. Post office, might well be applied to Coach Russ Sweet's Ram footballers. Despite the fact that their game with the San Jose State frosh had been called off on account of rain, a number of the more dauntless pigskinners made their appearance at Seals' Stadium on the appointed night and did battle with a heterogeneous aggregation known as the Southern Pacific Streamliners. The Streamliners made a picturesque group indeed, having only two or three suits for the entire team, but they proved easy meat for the Rams.

A bunch of boys who haven't been getting much publicity or glory and who deserve plenty of both are the members of the Ram soccer team. Starting out the season with only the very bleakest of prospects, they have managed to win a majority of their games and make the season a highly successful one. Most students are apt to dismiss soccer with a shrug as just a minor sport, and the lads that play do so out of sheer love for the game, and receive nothing in return other than the satisfaction of knowing that they have done their best; and their best was, this year, plenty.

Block SF Society Plans To Present Colossal Spectacle

Under the direction of that able showman and director, Ray Egelhofer, the Block Society of the college will present their super-colossus of the legitimate stage to the students of the college on the afternoon of Nov. 17. The performance will take place in the Galileo Auditorium, and, according to society members, promises to offer an afternoon of high-class entertainment.

The title of the extravaganza, "Life Begins At Junior College," was originated by Egelhofer, who besides being chief organizer for the event, will act as Master of Ceremonies on the fatal afternoon.

The price of admission will be the nominal sum of ten cents, according to Duke Worsham, college gridder and president of the Block Society.

"We have high hopes," stated Worsham, "of selling nearly 1,000 tickets to the show. The boys have been rehearsing faithfully for the past three weeks, and have a great variety of talent to offer the students of the college. Anyone who would like to see Drs. Flamm, Boitano, Egelhofer, and Canepa perform a major operation should not miss the show, because that is just one of the many feature attrac-

RAMS STAGE SPECTACULAR FINISH TO BEAT BULLDOGS

By DICK SIMPERS

Staging a whirlwind finish that had the crowd on its feet during the entire last period, Russ Sweet's Ram gridmen precipitated themselves back into the thick of the race for the conference title last Saturday afternoon by drubbing the highly favored Bulldogs of San Mateo by the score of 13 to 12.

On the short end of 12 to 0 score at the beginning of the fourth quarter, the suddenly inspired Rams fought with the fury of desperation, drove to two touchdowns in quick succession, and Ray Egelhofer stepped into the hero's role by successfully adding the all-important extra point after the second one, his placement kick splitting the goal posts squarely in half and giving the Rams their slim margin of victory.

Both the San Mateo tallies came in the first period of play, the first one when the game was less than two minutes old. Dan Bates, Bulldog end, broke through to block Olsen's kick, recovered the ball, and dash twenty yards to a touchdown.

A few plays later, little Frank Catania broke into the clear for 32 yards and another touchdown. Both conversion attempts failed.

For the next two quarters play seesawed more or less evenly, the San Mateans clinging tenaciously to their substantial lead and the Rams being unable to make much progress.

The decisive break finally came in the middle of the fourth period when a poor San Mateo punt gave the Rams possession of the ball deep in Bulldog territory. Smashes by Walt Boitano and Wes Olsen carried the ball to the six-yard marker, and from here Olsen circled right end for the touchdown. Rod Weichers' attempted place kick for the extra point was wide.

With the San Francisco stands pleading for another score and with six minutes to play, the rejuvenated Rams drove relentlessly down the field, ripping off gain after gain through a San Mateo line that strove desperately but in vain to stop them. Culmination of the drive came when Al McDonald broke loose from 18 yards out and scampered across the goal for the tally thatlied up the contest. Ray Egelhofer made the try for point good, and the score stood at 13 to 12, and 13 to 12 it remained, as a frenzied last minute passing attack by San Mateo failed to produce results.

Editor, The Guardsman,
San Francisco Junior College,
San Francisco, California.
Dear Editor:

May I use the columns of your excellent paper to express to you and the general student body my praises of the way in which the social affairs of the college are conducted?

Being interested in educational procedures and practices, having two sons in college now, coupled with the fact that your college has been given some unfavorable publicity of late, I have followed the activities of the student body with a keen interest.

I understand that the Associated Men Students of the college put on the finest dance and party last Friday night which has ever been held in the San Francisco Junior College, much finer than the barn dance, which to my mind was excellent. It is a great satisfaction to parents to know that their sons and daughters are in such fine environment when they are not within the confines of home. I have been told that the faculty member responsible for such activities as with our Friday night is doing an outstanding piece of work and that he is a fine example, not only for my sons but for the sons and daughters of other fathers and mothers. It is a consolation and also spiritually satisfying to me to know that our college here in San Francisco is doing such wonderful work. I, along with many others, vote for the San Francisco Junior College one hundred per cent.

Very truly yours,
MRS. J. W.

straight on the bow and that was a teeny weeny bear, another was to fix her point of aim correctly and that was a medium size bear, and the third was to hit the target and that was a GREAT BIG BEAR. Day after day she struggled at 15 yards until every one else had moved on and she was all alone with the three bears. Try as she might she could not seem to acquire the necessary points to move.

However, this is not a tragedy but rather a success story. With constant practice there came a day when the sun broke through the lowering clouds and brave little Goldilocks banished the three bugbears and made an excellent score. Now she has been elevated to the company of other 20-yard archers. So this little narrative of life among the bows and arrows is not without a happy ending even though it is without a point.

...CLUBS...

Forum Meets At Residence Club

To discuss the pros and cons of socializing medicine, the Forum Club meets tonight at the home of Dorothy Mercer, at the Residence Club, 940 Powell Street, at eight o'clock.

The subject will be introduced by Leona Wilcox and Phyllis Devaney who will present both sides of the argument and then let the group take up the question and express their own opinions as to the best methods of checking disease. All students interested are invited to attend, Miss Mercer said.

Some manuscripts for the organization's annual publication, "Forum," have already been received, announced John Ward, editor of the magazine. Anyone who has the urge to write or has written something that he or she would like to see published, should turn in their contribution to Ward or Miss Mercer. Writing of all types will be accepted but this does not necessarily mean that the manuscript will be accepted. If it is not accepted it will be returned to the author with suggestions for improvement. A word limit of 1,500 words has been set.

Japanese Group Dances Tonight

Bob Uyeda, president of the Japanese Club, announced yesterday that on November 10 a mammoth Raffle Dance will be held at the Japanese Y. M. C. A. on Buchanan Street. "For the small fee of ten cents," Uyeda declared, "one not only has a good chance of winning a beautiful radio but of enjoying a pleasant evening of entertainment and dancing. Tickets for this affair are being sold by the members of the club who hope that everyone will get behind them and help make it a success."

The Japanese Club boasts one of the largest memberships of the school. A mixed group, they meet every other week at the Buchanan Street Japanese Y. M. C. A., and at their meetings they often have outside speakers and entertainers. Always open for new members, Uyeda asks all those wishing to join to see him or other officers of the club.

Skiers Set Second Meeting For Today

With plans for the coming winter sport season already under way, the Ski Club will hold its second organization meeting this afternoon at 2 o'clock in Room 260 at Galileo High School.

Three girls from each of the San Francisco High Schools have accepted the invitation of the Physical Education Club to attend the club's weiner roast on November 18 at Sigmund Stern Grove. The roast will be from 4 until 7 o'clock. Chairmen of the committees that will complete arrangements are: Ellen Cumming, general chairman; Marie Heiser, entertainment committee, and Carrol Pickering, refreshment committee.

Last Friday the women in the club demonstrated the correct technique in playing badminton to the girls of Everett Junior High School. They then, with the aid of Bertha Keller and Leo Boehm, gym instructors of the two schools, coached the Everett Junior High School girls. Mrs. Boehm expressed her pleasure and satisfaction with the club's work by stating that "it was a very successful teaching project and I think that the junior college women have possibilities in this branch of teaching." Margaret Wormell, president, gave a short blackboard talk.

HEA Will Stage Swedish Dinner

"Going Swedish," will be the theme of the last HEA foreign dinner to be given November 18 at the Swedish Applied Arts on Webster St., near Pacific at 6:30.

The members will eat a typical Swedish dinner in a Swedish atmosphere, surrounded by Swedish people in Swedish costumes. After dinner the group will participate in peasant dances. Scandinavian arts and textiles will be on display, and will be explained by a native of Sweden.

The committee, appointed to investigate, includes Barbara Allin, Jeanne Collins, and Cecil Thompson.

Plans were formulated for a Christmas Party to be held on January 6, 1938. Definite arrangements, however, have not been decided upon.

Rifle Club Party Slated For Friday

Officers promise an enjoyable evening for those who plan to attend the party sponsored by the college Rifle and Pistol Club, this Friday evening, November 12. There will be a short program of entertainment in addition to dancing, cards, refreshments, and an all-round good time. The hours will be from 8:30 until 12:00 o'clock.

The small charge, 25c per person, will be collected Friday evening at 44 Page Street. The hall is easy to reach as it is about one block from Market Street, near Franklin Street.

Much credit should go to the committee which has planned this entertaining evening. It is made up of Gail Hanna, chairman; Charlene Schock, Edna Wedam, and Don Smith.

Honorary members of the club will act as patrons and patronesses for the evening. Those who have signified their intentions of coming, as this issue of The Guardsman goes to press, are John Stewart and Betty Hyde, former club officers, Mr. and Mrs. James S. Hughes, and Mr. and Mrs. William A. Hancock.

New French Club Being Organized

Plans for the formation of a college French Club to make the French speaken language more practical for students are being instituted by Helen Kelly and Edwin Cranston, language instructors.

The club members will present several plays in French, attend French spoken meeting luncheons, and conduct informal discussions. The date for the first meeting will be announced later.

Adrienne Ehrfeh is in charge of drafting the Constitution. She is being assisted by Margaret Mee, Norma Hoffman, and Betty McAllister.

broken finger, but may be used if necessity warrants.

RESERVE STRENGTH TOSS-UP

Neither squad can be conceded an edge in reserve strength, as they appear to be about evenly matched in this respect, the reserves of both being rather weak.

Past performance records give an edge to the southerners, however, as their victories have been scored in convincing fashion and their only loss came when they were handicapped by several injuries to first string players. They rolled up a score of 30 to 0 against Bakersfield, and succeeded in trouncing Citrus, Santa Monica and Ventura without much difficulty, although held to a scoreless tie by Long Beach Junior College.

The squads are about evenly matched in regards to weight, neither having any decided edge in this respect, and, all factors being taken into consideration, tomorrow's contest should be one of the closest battles of the season.

College Musicians Entertain Students

Martinez High School had as visitors on Friday, November 5, the Double Quartet and A Cappella Choir of San Francisco Junior College. These two well known musical groups who have performed a number of times before audiences were guests on an elaborate program presented by the East Bay school. Mary Doran, Orellia Orsland, Marjorie Maynard, Greta Holliger, Eugene Blumenthal, Wesley Pomeroy, Bob Scott and Alex Ross composed the Double Quartet who offered as their selections "Home on the Range" and the "Bubble Song". Mary Doran's violin numbers were also enjoyed by the audience. The A Cappella Choir headed by Bob Scott, received rounds of applause for their singing.

Phi Beta Plans Initiation Dinner

Having the distinction of being pledged to San Francisco Junior College's first sorority, 15 girls are looking forward with anticipation to the Phi Beta's initiation dinner in two weeks at the Palace Hotel. A purely social group, these girls have formed themselves into an organization and are planning many outstanding affairs for the near future. The newly elected officers for the ensuing term are: President, Lorraine Haffemayer; vice-president, Fern Mohrlein; secretary, Anita Lauerman, and treasurer, Marion DeLano.

Spanish Club To Meet Next Monday

Luis DeLara will be host next Monday night to a group of Spanish students who will gather at his home for an informal Spanish discussion.

The group, which meets every other Monday night, exchanges experiences, expresses opinions, and discusses current events in Spanish. At the last meeting, Jerry Flamm related experiences of his two-months journey, last summer, through Old Mexico.

Omicron Phi Pi Still Initiating

Initiation of newest group of members into Omicron Phi Pi, Economics Honor Society, was held yesterday at Galileo High School. Those initiated were Lloyd Luckman, Dr. Sewell, and James Hempseed.

It is planned to have the annual dinner at the Ritz French Restaurant, where it was held last year, or at some other prominent restaurant.

Hjorth Latest Add To Teaching Staff

Latest addition to the college faculty was made on October 27, when Ernst J. Hjorth, was appointed chef of the San Francisco Junior College, and Galileo cafeterias, and made instructor in the Division of Hotel and Restaurant Management in the college, according to an announcement made by Paul M. Pitman.

Students are requested by Helene Turner, NYA director, to fill out their slips accurately, that payment of funds may be speeded.

SUPPLIES ARRIVE, SO STUDENTS IN RADIO 51A WORK

Because of the arrival of all the latest type equipment, activity in Radio 51A, latest course to be added to the college curriculum, San Francisco Junior is increasing its activity, during the first few weeks of the semester, students under the instruction of Lowell M. Hollingsworth were confined mainly to theory as a result of the delay in arrival of equipment. At present, one hour is devoted to theory with the remaining three hours required for radio building.

Students were introduced into the mechanical field by first being required to construct ear phone sets. After ear phone construction, they were given the first opportunity in radio construction by building one-tube radio sets. In this instance, the class was divided into three groups, with each assigned a specific problem to work on, one group to work on power supply, one to work on receiving sets and the other group to work on coils. Power supply sets are essential in that they supply power to receiving sets and take the place of batteries, which acted as a power supply during the earliest developments of radio.

It is to be noted also that the coil is an essential feature in the function of a radio. The purpose of a coil is to select a certain band of radio waves to rectify, that these waves may be audible, through the loudspeaker of a receiving set. It is divided into two parts, the secondary and primary and each part must have a certain number of windings. The coil must be wired exactly to the utmost precision in order to bring in proper radio reception and clearly as possible.

At the present time, students having completed one-tube sets are working on two-tube set construction. In testing station pick-ups, many one-tube sets were able to bring in bay region stations.

As time progresses, it is planned for the class to work into the more complex problems of radio.

tions that we will present on Nov. 17."

Maestro Egelhofer, director of the performance declared: "We have been working conscientously to perfect our show, and we should have the entire production in first class condition by the end of this week."

In addition to the regular show the boys will hold a bona-fide Truckin' Contest. At the present time a fellow who can't Truck is a social outcast, so the contest should receive hearty support. Sims Hamilton, giant tackle, in the latest adherent to this new dance craze, even going so far as to Truck on and off the Ferry boat while commuting from the East Bay.

Other attractions for the afternoon will include vocal offerings from hitherto unknown crooners, an "Ambassador of Good Will," several skits, and last but certainly not least, the Grand Finale, featuring the entire cast.

While not considered strictly a musical comedy, there will be several musical numbers in which the entire cast will take part. Bob Fex, the song-bird of the Parkside, will have the leading vocal role.

All in all, present indications suggest that the entertainment should be well worth the small admission that will be charged, and there will probably be a large audience present for the affair.

Notes on recently released phonograph records of RCA Victor:

A quartet by the contemporary Gian Francesco Malipiero that belongs with that large section of recent Italian music wherein the composers have tried to turn from opera to instrumental music. Signor Malipiero, in his one movement quartet, weaves a smooth and finely contrasted fabric, rarely losing that buoyancy of melody line for which his compatriots are so justly famed.

The work is titled "Rispetti Strambotti"—which is practically untranslatable. But the programatic implication is of the Italian Renaissance and its two dominant elements: the church with its dignity and the courts with their gaiety and color. The work is beautifully recorded by the Kreiner Quartet.

The first recorded program of Frank Black and the NBC String Symphony is a grand musical job. The selections are excellently chosen and executed. The Miaskowsky Sinfonietta that opens the set is a brisk and exhilarating opus with very exciting themes. Miaskowsky is contemporary in spirit and evidently full of singing music if the Sinfonietta is any standard. The performance is such that not once do you miss the woodwinds and percussion. Rather, the whole leaves you with a sensation of clarity, of a sharp ear and a keen mind.

The second item on Mr. Black's program is a symphony by the most famed of J. S. Bach's sons, C. P. E. Bach. The three movements are played without pause, creating a strange effect of two bodies of musical thought colliding—but with a quite pleasant result. The Arensky variations on a theme of Tschaikowsky, which come next, are essentially music for the ear alone. This is music that drenches the very pores with a sad, slavic beauty. Mr. Black's reading of the score is sympathetic and rich in detail.

The Sibelius Canzonetta which concludes this little concert is one of the Finnish composer's lesser works but none the less interesting. It has that restlessness and dark, somber color of so much Sibelius. All in all, this is one of the most entertaining and delightful sets that Victor has issued in a long while.

It is with frustrated hopes that we mention Leopold Stokowski's symphonic synthesis of Modeste Moussorgsky's "Boris Godonof." In the original form this is one of music's greatest achievements, but with Mr. Stokowski's transcription it becomes very much more like the prelude to a threering circus, and a rather bad circus at that. The liberties taken with rhythm, markings, instrumentation, effects, etc., are horrible and flashy and libelous. The only thing that saves the work from utter demolishment is the very music itself—and it is to be doubted if anyone could completely demolish that. As it sounds now, Mr. Stokowski has created background music for Gretta Garbo's "Conquest"—something a trifle more brilliant than Tschaikowsky's "Overture 1812."

Quite a time is in prospect for tonight's water carnival, to be held at the Western Women's Club, where aquatically-inclined students may splash about to their heart's content.

Bids For Soph Formal Now On Sale At Office

Vol. V WEDNESDAY, NOVEMBER 17, 1937 No. 12

MODESTO GOAL OF FRIDAY EXCURSION

PEACE SOCIETY APPROVAL VOTED BY EX COUNCIL

Blumenthal Censors Any Agitation Activities By Pacifistic Organization

Issuance of a stern warning by Student Body President Eugene Blumenthal to "keep removed from all unreasonable agitation" followed the college Executive Council's approval of the charter of the Peace Society at a meeting held on last Monday, November 15. The expected fireworks concerning the approval of the Society failed to materialize and the Council voted 8 to 1 in favor of the organization.

The motion for recognition of the Society was brought up under old business and was preceded by several comments on the part of Chairman Blumenthal.

SOUND BODY

"There have been many diverse elements under consideration during the weeks since the Peace Society has been organized," stated Blumenthal, "but leaders of that group have made what I believe was a sincere attempt to clean up all objectionable points and the only thing that can hold us from granting them a charter is personal prejudice. They are at the present time a sound body guided by a trio of extremely astute faculty advisers and there is no reasonable grounds upon which we could possibly refuse them."

The council also approved a charter for the first sorority in the history of the college which was organized under the title of Phi Beta Rho. The purposes of this group as described by Lorraine Haffmeyer, associated students secretary and president of the sorority, are "purely social".

Blumenthal announced that an outline of plans for the semi-formal dance had been completed and appointed James Preovolos, president of the low freshman class, chairman of the election committee. Duties will include a nomination rally on Monday, November 29, elections on Wednesday, December 1, and a presentation assembly on Friday, December 3. Voting machines will be used again this year, according to Blumenthal.

Caroline Lorgnos, vice president of the associated students and of the social committee, announced that there were no further dances planned this semester.

Much to the dismay of Don Mills, portrayed adjourner, the session was closed upon a motion by Hugh Waite.

Gold Ballroom Scene Of Soph Formal Dec. 3

Bob Neal Plans Elaborate Dance At Palace With Mystery Band

Definitely set for Friday evening, December 3, in the Gold Ballroom of the Palace Hotel, this semester's Sophomore Formal promises to be a fitting grand finale to an especially fine program of activities, according to Bob Neal, High Sophomore president.

"With all the swell rallies, dances and football games we've had this semester," Neal said, "we feel that our Soph Formal should be especially good so that we can maintain the standard that has been set."

BIDS NOW ON SALE

Bids, according to Neal, are now on sale at the college bank, Room 262 at Galileo.

"Bids will be $1.25," Neal said, "and I urge everyone to start saving his money now because there will only be 150 bids on sale and we expect them to go like hotcakes."

"The big surprise of the evening will be the orchestra that we have secured. We'd rather not tell which one it is right now, but I am willing to guarantee that it will be the finest music we've had this semester. The committee has planned some novel entertainment and I promise that everyone who attends will have one grand time."

COMMITTEE NAMED

Helping Neal with arrangements for the dance are Charlotte Zier, vice-president of the High Sophomore class, Isabel Sherratt, secretary of the High Sophomore class, Johnny Dismeyer, High Sophomore treasurer, Gene Blumenthal, Associated Student president and Caroline Orginos, Associated Student secretary and head of the college Social Committee.

"As the dance is to be a formal affair," Neal added, "all the fellows will be expected to wear tuxes. Any fellow who does not own one and is interested in securing one for the dance should see me as soon as possible."

FIFTH FORMAL

"This, the fifth Sophomore Formal in the history of the college, has a great deal of interest among the students of the college who have come to look upon it as one of the most important of college traditions. It is the only college affair where students are given a chance to put on their best bib and tucker and really go social in a great big way."

Southern Journalists Seek Non-Existent Press Plant

It happened one day last week, while we were sitting on the Powell Street steps minding our own business and watching the world waltz by. We were suddenly approached by Mister Tom O'Neil, assistant ruler of the Powell Street roost.

"Ah," said Mister O., pouncing upon us, "you're just the person I'm looking for! There are several desperate looking young men in my office seeking information about The Guardsman, so you'd better get a bodyguard or two and go see what they want."

After looking to the North and to the South and to the West, and seeing not a soul to whom we could turn in our hour of need (the chief was out puttin' the pigskin and the mighty MacArthur was down in Union Square eating his weekly cupcakes), we followed our chum into his office.

"This," he said in his most apologetic tone, "is the only member of The Guardsman staff that I could find. Perhaps she can help you." With that, and a request that we answer the phone should it ring between questions, he dashed off.

The spokesman for the group announced that they were members of the staff of the Los Angeles Junior College paper and, if it were not too much trouble, could we please show them around our printing presses and let them visit our Editorial Offices.

Quick like a bunny we changed the subject! How had they enjoyed the football game of the day before? What did they think of our beautiful bridges? Had they ever met Donald Duck?

"Loussy!" "Swell!" and "Hell No!" the answers came all in a row and then back they jumped to the embarrassing questions. With five pairs of assorted eyes begging us for the truth, what could we do? We were forced into revealing that our printing was done outside of the college and that our "Editorial Offices" consisted of one discarded closet fitted out with three desks, a number of slightly dilapidated chairs and a typewriter and a half that had seen better days.

The next few minutes were spent in explaining to them our circuitous system of attending classes and the singing of our new school song—"You take the 2 car and I'll take the F car, and we'll reach Galileo afore ye". Then they told us! Painting pictures of beautiful buildings clustered around an enormous campus with trees, flowers, and traditions, and a whole press building with their own linotype machines, and printing facilities!

We forced what we hoped was a gallant smile. "Ah well, it's really fun, pioneering, and all that sort of thing! We wouldn't (this with our fingers crossed and a tongue in each cheek) give it up for all the buildings in the world!" That finished them! They must be off to Golden Gate Park where the squirrels came right out in the open and admitted it!

With fond farewells they departed, leaving with us an invitation to "come to Los Angeles next year and see a real college!"

HEA Plan Varied Activities For Remainder Of Semester

Rounding out a series of Foreign festivities, which have previously included Chinese and Japanese motifs, the college Home Economics Association will gather tomorrow night at seven o'clock at the Swedish Applied Arts Sveagard on Sutter Street to "Eat, drink, and be merry," as the old saying goes. Foods typical of Sweden will be served, among them the bread and fish for which

The members also attended a fashion show recently, and acquired new ideas. Commenting on the possibility of the department giving a fashion show, Miss Cuneo said, "It is impossible to hold a fashion show at the college of such a size because of the inability to procure a set up."

College Choir In Concert Offerings

Participating in the second of four concerts at the Congregational Methodist Temple, the college A Capella choir last Sunday presented eight choral selections, both secular and sacred.

The concerts are being sponsored by the Music Department of the San Francisco State College, in cooperation with the Music Committee of the Congregational Methodist Temple.

The program contained the following choir selections:

Break Forth O Beauteous

Heavenly Light ..... Bach

Cherubim Song ..... Tschaikowsky

Hi Diddle Diddle ..... Schaffer

Junior College Alma Mater Song

Raymond L. White, organist, participated in the program.

This was the second public appearance the A Capella choir has made this semester, the first being made at the Alhambra High School, Martinez, on November 5. The next performance will be before the West Portal P.-T.A., on December 7.

Lunar Eclipse Occurs Tonight

Assoc. Student Ballots Name New Officers

Election Date Listed By Blumenthal On Dec. 1; Many Candidates

Inclusion of the offices of president of the Men's Club and AWS organizations on the ballot of the Associated Student officers was announced by Student Body President Eugene Blumenthal. The date of the elections has been definitely set as Wednesday, December 1.

Blumenthal's action remedied the ineffective voting methods used by both the women's and men's organizations and insured a representative vote for the presidency of these associations.

It was also announced by Blumenthal that all potential candidates for any student body office should consult with the administration immediately to obtain the nominating petitions. Because of the interference of the Thanksgiving holidays it will be necessary to have the petitions filled with the required number of names and returned to the office by Wednesday, November 24.

Beside the two positions mentioned above, the offices to be contested are president, vice-president, secretary and yell leader.

There has been no definite announcement of candidacy as yet but according to current rumors all positions will be sought by an unusually large number of qualified students.

For the office of president it has been rumored that Elwood Pearce, veteran football star, Leo Balastracci, active student, and Don Mix, former Men's Club president and present editor of The Guardsman, will compete, but there has been no authentic confirmation of these unofficial nominations.

Norma Parent, leader of the AWS, and Lorraine Haffameyer, Associated Students secretary, are the logical contenders for the vice-presidency and should provide a hotly-contested election.

Unconfirmed rumors have it that Fern Mulhein, Cap and Meg Society officer, and Florence Murphy, editor of The Guardsman last spring and present leader of Women's Athletics Society, will seek the office of secretary.

The newly-included post of Associated Women Students president has had mentioned as possible candidates the names of Marion Yeager, Annabelle Benson and Juanita Laurmann.

Unofficial statements have revealed that Hugh Waite, president of the high freshmen; Al Williams, yell leader, and Art Nelson, varsity footballer and present vice-president, will be the contestants for the position of president of the Men's Club.

Chronicle Editorial Proves S. F. Interest In College Building

(Editor's Note: The following editorial, pertaining to the ever-increasing interest of a Junior College building, appeared in the San Francisco Chronicle on November 11, and is reprinted here with the hope of convincing dubious students that San Francisco is interested in her Junior College.)

For almost thirteen months the city's application to PWA for a grant of $522,078 toward the school building program has hung fire in Washington, with no sign of either yes or no. On his present trip to the Mayors' Conference in the capital, Mayor Rossi is to try to pry out an answer.

The city's building program involves a number of schools, but the chief tragedy of the long delay is to the Junior College. The Junior College has no home. It is trying to accommodate 1,700 students in classrooms in sixteen different buildings throughout the city. Next year it expects 2,000. Its proposed building on the Balboa Park site might have been finished by this time if PWA had showed any speed on this application, either in approval or rejection.

This procrastination is hard to understand, since the city has met and still stands ready to meet instantly all the requirements involved in such a grant.

HUNDREDS OF S. F. ROOTERS TO TRAVEL TO RAM-BUC GRIDGAME

Special Rate From Southern Pacific Officials Allows College Students To Travel For $1.90 On Chartered Train With Orchestra For Dance

By ART SKOONBERG

Prospects of a conference championship grid clash will send hundreds of Ram rooters on the special football excursion to Modesto on next Friday afternoon. Through the cooperation of officials of the Southern Pacific railroad, a reduced rate of $1.90 has been obtained for roundtrip tickets and reservations can be made at the Finance office at Galileo today and tomorrow, according to Allen Williams, college yell leader, who has handled arrangements for the trip.

Rooters will leave the Ferry Building at three o'clock on Friday afternoon and arrive in Modesto shortly before six o'clock. On the return trip stops will be made at the Oakland and Berkeley stations. Admission to the game will be fifteen cents with student body card.

A popular feature of the Sacramento trip, the dancing car, will be included on this trip also, it was disclosed by railroad officials. A popular new feature to be added will be an observation car. Because of the rather high prices it was decided not to carry a dining car as the train will arrive in Modesto early enough to allow rooters to dine there before going to the game.

Williams has been busy making final plans for the excursion and contacting Southern Pacific officials in regard to chartering the special with all the promised features.

Williams stated: "Modesto is without a doubt our toughest foe in the Northern California Junior College Conference and our team will need plenty of support to take this Modesto game into camp. Therefore, all you ardent rooters can certainly do your bit by getting behind the team and going to Modesto. The only thing that will put this excursion over is by all of you cooperating to make it a success. There has been a number of tickets sold or the trip will have to be cancelled, but I am confident that it will go over without any trouble. I look with reason of confidence to results of the Sacramento excursion. Everybody had a good time and as a result have demanded a like excursion to Modesto. Just about everybody can be guaranteed a good time. I urge all of you to get together and put it over in a big way and don't forget our war cry, 'On to Modesto'."

'QUESTION BOX' INTRODUCED BY HOTEL DIVISION

Latest innovation of the alert Hotel and Restaurant Management Division was a "Question Box" presented under the direction of J. Graham Sullivan, instructor of the division, at the monthly meeting of Charter No. 4 of the Hotel Greeters of America at the Fairmont Hotel, Tuesday, November 16, said Doris Becker, secretary to Sullivan.

Fourteen questions such as, "Why does a restaurant find so much difficulty in serving hot coffee to the public?" "What causes the bitter taste in hot breads?" and "How do you know how many portions of an entree to prepare?" were discussed.

REALISM ADDED

To add realism to a talking picture on the manufacture of beer, the Anheuser-Busch Company sent along several cases of their product for sampling.

Discussing their mutual problems, the Hotel and Restaurant Society met with instructors at the El Cortez Hotel Saturday, November 13, for a special luncheon meeting. They included regular junior college instructors and those from the outside field. President Archibald J. Cloud attended as a guest speaker. Plans were discussed for the new courses to be taught next semester and the material they are to contain.

MORE TRIPS PLANNED

Saturday evening the society visited the Berkeley home of Narcisa Rhodes, student of the division, as guests at an informal social gathering.

"Students who attended the San Diego Convention have returned with a more practical outlook on the method in which conventions are conducted, and the actual work done by the greeters," Sullivan said. "The Hotel and Restaurant Management have planned other educational excursions at a future date."

AWS TEA FETES HIGH SCHOOL STUDENTS

Associated Women Students activities will officially close next Tuesday when the organization will sponsor a tea honoring high school graduates who plan to attend the college, Norma Parent, AWS president, has announced.

The tea, to be held at the Alexander Hamilton Hotel, 631 O'Farrell Street, will honor delegations from Lowell, Polytechnic, George Washington, Commerce, Balboa, Girls, Mission, and Balboa high schools, each delegation to consist of the dean of girls, the senior class faculty adviser, and three women graduates interested in attending the college.

In addition to the guests, several of the college faculty members have been invited.

Commenting on the semester's work done by the AWS, Miss Parent said, "This has been an unusually successful semester. We are particularly pleased with the interest shown in our tea for the women of the college, and in our dance held at the beginning of the semester. It is a fitting end to the fall term to honor future members of the AWS."

The tea, honoring high school graduates, has become a college tradition, such teas having been held semi-annually for several semesters. Last semester's tea was given in conjunction with the college-sponsored Federal Art Exhibit at a downtown art gallery, and the entire affair was broken up into series of teas held on different days. This semester's tea offers an innovation in that the high schools being honored at once.

The AWS executive committee—Miss Parent, Barbara Randall, Gail Hanna, Kay Evulich, Isabelle Sherratt, Fern Nohrden Marion Yager, and Adell Art Nelson, varsity footballer and present vice-president, with the contests for the position of president of the Men's Club.

State Prom Opened To Junior College

San Francisco State College will hold its annual Junior Prom at the Fairmont-Terrace Plunge, November 20, an affair which promises to be a highlight in State's social season.

Music for the dance will be furnished by Jack Buckingham's orchestra, which was formerly with the Club Deauville. According to word received by The Guardsman, students of San Francisco Junior College are cordially invited to attend the Prom.

Bids are selling for $1.75 at present, but will be advanced to $2.50 at the door. The committee in charge at State urges all students interested in attending this dance to procure their bids as soon as possible, as a last minute rush is anticipated.

ATTENTION PLEASE

With the semester rapidly drawing to a close, the pertinent subject of elections again arises. There are many features in the present arrangement of elections that are of dubious quality, but the one most necessary of immediate attention is the haphazard method of handling the AWS and AMS voting procedures.

The position as head of the men's or women's groups is one of the most vital cogs of student government, and yet the inefficient method of selection makes it highly possible for incapable and irresponsible administrators to be elected. Fortunately, thus far there has been no reason to complain of the activities of the officers of either of these organizations, but as the college grows the importance of the office grows with it, and we must make sure that those elected are the choices of the actual student body and not of a group of political opportunists.

The remedy for this unfortunate situation is so amazingly simple that it is a wonder that it was not effected previously. Instead of holding the elections as they are now held, with twenty or thirty "Friends" of the candidates present to vote, it would be an easy matter to include the names of AMS and AWS nominees on the Associated Student election ballot and thereby obtain truly representative elections.

A recent announcement by Student Body President Gene Blumenthal states that the suggested remedy will be attempted in the forthcoming elections on December 1. It will be interesting to note how the change will affect the caliber of officers selected.

KEEP HOPING

It seems unfortunate, but nevertheless true, that the large bulk of junior college students has lost interest in what was once the most alive topic on the campus—the new building. Although this apathy toward the progress of the erection of a new college is regrettable it is at the same time understandable. Too often have we been buoyed by vague promises and uncertain statements to place any hope in the occasional optimistic reports of "progress."

Perhaps our loss of interest in the whole business may be traced to purely selfish motives. Upon entrance to the college as freshmen three semesters ago, we were assured that WE would be the first class graduated from the new campus at Balboa. But to paraphrase an expressive line from a famous novel, "nothing ever happened," and though our hopes were slightly revived at the ground breaking last spring, when more promises were hurled at us, it now becomes evident that our class is fated to spend its undergraduate days in junior college where the chapel bells are replaced by the clattering trolley, and the campus is serene and peaceful Powell Street. So can you blame us too much if we are inclined to say "to hell with the new building and those whose chief forte seems to be in making indefinite statements?"

Such, however, is merely an inclination and not the serious attitude of one who is sincerely interested in the welfare of the college. Although it is impossible to attempt to make any statement as to a definite date for completion of a structure that has not even been started, it can be believed that some day—perhaps in the far removed future —San Francisco Junior College will have its own building.

USE YOUR HEAD

Everyone had a terrific time on the recent excursion to Sacramento despite the football team's defeat. Everyone had such a good time, in fact, that we decided to repeat the process, and hundreds of college students will travel to Modesto next Friday night.

There is no need to urge attendance. Free publicity given by those who took the last trip insures the excursion of at least numerical success.

It may sound a bit prudish, but nevertheless it is timely to issue a warning to the overenthusiastic members of the student body, not to allow their school spirit to run away with their judgment.

SHAME!

When a sincerely planned and organized group plans a meeting to which there is attached no vestige of compulsory attendance, those who seek to thwart the carrying out of that program deserve no respect from any other organization or individual.

That such persons who do actively attempt to thwart such a program are members of a recognized organ which is on a par with the opposite group, is but further pointing of the finger at the disrupting group.

It is and should be the duty of a central college body, in this case the Executive Council of the Associated Students, to manage its affairs in the best interests of the college as

WE WUZ THERE . . .

Oh utter desperation! Oh what to do! Oh shucks! Being of a very forgetful nature, we neglected to remember that because of our Armistice Day holiday, all page two copy would have to be in on Wednesday instead of on Thursday, as is usually the case. After enjoying ourselves at the Los Angeles rally, we came strolling into WJ all happy like and feeling free and airy because we had nothing to do until 3:30. Wondering at the sober expressions on the faces of our fellow collie-em-mists, we settled ourselves to our favorite pastime of reading the jokes in our rival papers, only to be rudely awakened by loud voices demanding to know if we had written our column. Column? We assumed our usual blank expression. What column? Who ever heard of a column on Wednesday! Wednesday was relax-ing day! No, we suddenly decided, we were not being kidded! So, once more, utter desperation, what to do and oh shucks!

. . . BUT YOU WUZN'T

Well, we thought, we can always ramble. Yes, ramble we would, but even rambling can't go on forever and there was "May We Present" to consider. Our next victim was peacefully slumbering in a class which could not be disturbed and there wasn't a soul around that we could interview. Not a soul, that is, except for—oh no—even with a deadline at stake—we simply couldn't—oh me oh my, finally, deciding that anything was better than no column at all (no cracks, slug) we gathered up our courage, gritted our teeth and plunged! So . . . (with heartfelt apologies to anyone we happen to offend) :

May We Present . . . Mervyn (Merv if you know him) Weiner . . . football player, Romeo and man about the campus . . . born in San Francisco and graduated from Poly High School and will go from Junior College to "some college in the South" . . . Will become a surgeon if he passes Physics this semester and otherwise will become a P.E. major and give the coaching profession a break . . . is happiest when building toy airplanes or inventing things and loves to sing for his own amusement (humm-m!)

365 Days Ago Today

The AWS and the HEA (then the HAA) gave a tea and fashion show to entertain representatives from the various high schools about the city. (Local lads are still talking about those luscious professional models.)

A poll conducted by the "We Women" column revealed that the ideal girl of the men of the junior college would be a medium sized brunette who had loads of personality and a perfect figure and who had reached the happy medium between beautiful but dumb and homely but intelligent. (At last report the optimists among the men students were still looking.)

The Rams, according to a Guardsman headline, ran rampant over Sacramento, ending the game with a score of 27-0. Things were a little bit different this year but then fair exchange and all that sort of thing!

The Guardsman carried an interview with Josephine Tumminia, diminutive San Francisco opera prima donna who has since become famous for her "singing" of the Blue Danube on Bing Crosby's program.

Big Doings were being done at the Men's Club Hi-Jinks, held at the Trianon Ballroom. Door prizes, refreshments and a gigantic dance all helped to make a big time and lots of people wonder why the Men's Club ever let the Hi Jinks idea die.

Consideration Week was recommended editorially as a sure way of promoting World Peace. Which brings up the question, why Consideration Week? How about declaring Consideration Year and having it go into effect not only this year but for every year to come?

HOLIDAY JAG

Well, we went to the football game at Kezar last Thursday to watch the Rams trounce Los Angeles very decisively. By dint of some fast traveling via train, boat and street car, we managed to arrive in time to get a seat amid the cheering dozens. The local loyals evidently stayed away in droves, for the Ram rooting section rattled around in the big bowl like the proverbial pea in the pod, while the Los Angeles section resembled "Custer's Last Stand."

Trolleying out Haight Street, we spotted this sign, "Sam's Flower Shoppe"; now there is nothing unusual about this bit of lettering, we know, but look how easily one could slur it into Flamm's sure Stuffe.

CONGRATULATIONS

Lots of credit to Allen Williams for his efforts to make the game a big success from a rooting standpoint; the card stunts looked pretty good, Al.

Nomination for most exuberant Ram Rooter of the season: Dean Edwin C. Browne, we thought the Dean would leap from the press box when our boys made their first score, he was that tickled!

Most surprised guy in the stadium: your columnist. Reason, it didn't rain!

WHAT, AGAIN?

A foo in time saves nine.

Armistice Day reminds us of the story of the guy who was wounded in the face and decorated for valor. In relating the incident, he said he got wounded while running, when he was dumb enough to look back. Well, what if it isn't funny, we got to fill space, don't we?

There's many a foo twists the cup to his lip.

The gang got to novamozkapopping off again at the game, and we remembered that we had promised some of the readers of this colyum, we would translate this gibberish. As near as we can make out, after diligent research, it seems simply, "Hey, feezil, how's for a lift?"

Foo's names like foo's faces always hit the hotspots.

According to sworn statements of spectators near us at the game, the Los Angeles double flanker pea-dinger screwball play, employs a thirteen man offense with the referee and umpire as eligible receivers. We dunno, they sure gave it the old hoppee-diddy, though.

TSK, TSK . . .

Our New York correspondent, N. E. Briated; who is trying to get the title of Cohan's latest play changed to "I'd Rather Be Tight," tells us that it isn't how a man carries his liquor that counts.

There's a divinity that shapes our ends rough, foo them how we will.

Article in a national magazine says Americans gamble ten billion bucks annually. Gosh, where do they get it?

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

WE PAUSE TO PONDER . . .

Sometimes the sun is shining in a dazzlingly brilliant fashion, and perhaps there is a soft cooling breeze rippling across the waters to refresh us; other times, the wind whips briskly across our faces, or else, there is the characteristic fog enshrouding the superstructure that is the magnificent Golden Gate Bridge. But whatever the climatic conditions ordained by nature, the passerby at Galileo High School, whether early or late, will always find conversational groups lining the wall.

Most any afternoon in these ever-shorter days of the waning autumn, we are to be found sitting on the wall that makes for our campus, and which is situated only a short distance from one of the world's most picturesque scenes. The San Francisco Bay, the Golden Gate, with the bridge arched overhead, and the lofty towers of which are immersed in the great white clouds pushing slowly along . . . all this provides a background, a setting, for the tradition and heritage of those who will follow us.

CONTEMPLATION . . .

While relaxing each afternoon, with each succeeding one seeming to bring upon us a sweet nostalgia, of what, we are not sure, we attempt to go behind the scenes and into the lives of those around us.

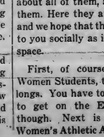
Trying to discover if those who give real existence to the wall, encounter the same mental happiness and feeling of the sheer joy of being alive which sometimes overtakes us, we see a strange sight unfolding before our eyes.

Perhaps at the moment of this writing, we are in a profound mood. Maybe we take cynicism for profundity, temperament for truth, but whatever it is, the mood has dictated what has preceded and what will follow.

We have oft times liked to think that we were the "man by the side of the road, watching the world go by." And yet, with the knowledge that we can watch and not understand everyone nor everything, the desire is ever stronger to find the key to life and the happiness that might go with it.

BAFFLEMENT . . .

When in a completely passive state of mind, we listen and watch, and try to perceive that which will attain us our goal. Even in this state of mental relaxation awaiting the individuals of the group to lead the way for us, we become certain that we are in for a rude awakening.



The daily conversational group, which helps make up our life, we find filled with intrigues, jealousies, and envies combined with a mixture of some true, and some relatively superficial friendships. Always it seems, one person is another man's paramour.

We have heard of the hatreds and jealousies in the greatest courts of the greatest kings, but lack of facility in the use of language prevents us from saying more than to find it disconcerting, when such incidents flow in the group that lines the wall.

And then it dawns on us . . . this is life!

GOURMET

This week's great personality is John J. Julius, the jolly joy of the jawing jaines, and pride of the cooking class. John's chief claim to fame is that he has wormed more food out of the Home Economics Department than anyone else in the college. In fact, the budding housewives vie with one another for the privilege of feeding Johnny, who, since he has come to college, is rapidly attaining a Bing Crosby physique.

But what of the early life of John J. Julius? How long did it take him to climb to the dizzy pinnacle of success on which we now find him? History does not tell us much.

Johnny himself confesses that at the age of fourteen he entered a monastery to get away from it all, but was expelled for eating too much. After joining the Foreign Legion to forget the monastery, Johnny came to Galileo High School to forget the Foreign Legion. While attending the Marina school, our hero became editor of the Galileo Peridulum. He is now continuing his journalistic career as a member of The Guardsman staff, writing such scoops as "Chess Club Makes New Move."

DILEMMA

You don't know how frantic we are at this moment. You see, the deadline for second page columns was on Wednesday this week, instead of on Thursday. It was announced several times, written on the beat sheet in WJ, and then promptly forgotten by almost everyone on the staff. The result is that Wednesday came, and we were informed on arriving in school that columns were due that afternoon. So now what?

We had thought of filling up space by printing the recipe for the sponge cake with chocolate frosting that was so enjoyed at the AWS tea, but something very embarrassing happened to squelch that—the Home Economics Department couldn't find its recipe.

Ah, an inspiration. There are so many women's clubs, especially new organizations that have been formed just this semester, that it is difficult to know about all of them, and how you can join them. Here they are, both new and old, and we hope that this list will be as useful to you socially as it is to us in filling up space.

First, of course, is the Associated Women Students, to which everyone belongs. You have to be elected an officer to get on the Executive Committee, though. Next is our old friend the Women's Athletic Association, which you may join by taking one extra sport or by joining the club to which your gym activity corresponds. The Women's Service Society, a social and service organization, votes in its members, as does the Phi Beta, the college's lone sorority. Coming down to earth, we find the Women's Physical Education Majors Club, which is just what its name implies: a group of women students who are majoring in physical education. Then there is the Associated Business Women, composed of graduate women students who have begun business careers. New members are invited into the last two. Whew!

SKYWAY

Shining road of silver in the sky,
Fair and high;
Monument to man's achievement, may you soar evermore.
Just a year ago, your portals opened wide,
That man might ride
In triumph o'er the bay, which far below,
The ferries slow
Ruled for years before your coming;
they were kings,
Graceful things.
Piled up, steel on stone at great expense;
You give a sense
Of size, far greater than mere length,
Height, or strength;
A sense of something lovely; something grand.
As you stand;
A link in chains of friendship, joining
two cities who,
Marching through the years toward
Progress and the Right
Will unite.

Rams Triumph Over Cubs In Easy Fashion

By BOB MacARTHUR

Smashing its way to an impressive 20-7 victory on the turf at Kezar Stadium, last Thursday, a smooth-running Ram varsity took the measure of the Los Angeles Cubs in a game replete with thrills. Although outplayed for the first ten minutes, the Ram attack began functioning near the end of the first quarter, and from then on the San Francisco lads had control of the situation.

After an exchange of punts, early in the first quarter, in which the Ram kickers lost ground, Los Angeles got together a couple of first downs and ended up on the San Francisco three-yard line with four tries to make a touchdown. D. Ruess was held for no gain, and a shot by Maros lost two, as the Ram line dug in, but on the next play, Currie crashed over for the score, and Daniels made the conversion good. The Los Angeles rooters broke into wild cheering as the scoreboard showed Cubs 7, Rams 0, but their joy was shortlived. Taking the kickoff on his own 35, Olson, Ram halfback, returned it to the midfield stripe. McDonald picked up three yards on a shot at the line, and then dropped back and tossed a pass to Egelhofer on the L.A. 41; Boitano made it a first down on the 38. McDonald then hit tackle for 8 yards, and returned to the same spot for a first down on the Cub 27-yard line. A reverse from McDonald to Olson made one, and Boitano got another over center: third and 8; Olson, again on a reverse, went to the 21, and on the fourth down, Pearce took the ball on and end-around, and behind some beautiful blocking galloped the remaining twenty yards to pay dirt. It was a nicely-executed play. The attempted conversion was blocked by Los Angeles' Toomey. The quarter ended as the Rams kicked off.

Shortly after the start of the second quarter, the Rams partially blocked a Los Angeles punt, and Olson picked up the ball on the Cub 32, returning it to the 23-yard line. Olson hit his own left end for two, and Verducci picked up another at right guard, then on third down, tossed a shovel pass to McDonald who cut inside his own right end and dodged his way twenty yards to the score, dragging an L.A. tackler over the last inches with him. Egelhofer's attempted conversion was again blocked by Toomey, leaving the score, San Francisco 13, Los Angeles 7.

Egelhofer kicked off to the L. A. tenyard line, to D. Reuss, who ran the ball back to his own 30-yard line. A pass over the line failed to gain, and Maros' long pass was broken up by Verducci. Maros then punted to Verducci, who returned the ball six yards to the 36. Plays by Backs by McDonald and Verducci made it a first down on the L. A. 43, and a penalty on the Cubs for too many times out, made it first and five. McDonald connected with a pass to Lee, who was downed on the Los Angeles 29-yard stripe. Olson picked up a yard at tackle, and then took a pass from McDonald that was good for 17 yards and a first down on the Cub 9-yard line. An off-side penalty set the Cubs back to the nine. McDonald got one at center, and then a pass to Olson, into the end zone was knocked down incomplete. Another shovel pass from Verducci to McDonald set the pigskin down on the one-yard line; fourth and goal to go. Olson hit right guard, but the Los Angeles line smothered the play, and the Cubs took possession on the one-foot line. On the next play, Merv Weiner, big Ram tackle, crashed through to block the kick, and the ball bounded off his chest out of the end zone for an automatic safety, and two more points for the Rams. The Los Angeleans got a free kick from their 20-yard line, and the ball was taken by Olson on his own 35 back to the L. A. 47. A pass from Pete to Egelhofer gain seven yards as the hanlf ended.

The third quarter had barely gotten well under way, when Olson grabbed a Los Angeles punt, and the Cub 45-yard stripe, and by dint of some fancy open field stepping, and some fine down-field blocking by the Rams, ran the ball back to a touchdown. After two tries by virtue of an off-side penalty against L. A. on the first one at the conversion, which was blocked both times, the score remained San Francisco 20, Cubs 7, and that ended the scoring for the afternoon.

Play see-sawed back and forth, with the Rams holding the edge, and most of the play going on in Los Angeles territory, until the start of the fourth quarter, when a threat by the Rams ended on the Los Angeles one-foot line. Most of the San Francisco substitutes were in the ball game at the time and seemed to lack the fire and drive which characterized the marches made by the first string men.

Los Angeles, except for the first half of the first quarter, was completely outplayed in every department of the game, and could get nowhere, even though they sprang a new one on the boys. The formation was a variation of the pea-dinger, and had both ends running toward the sidelines as "dead-men". It afforded the spectators a thrill, but failed to make much yardage. Unofficial statistics show that the Rams made 10 first downs to the Cubs' 3, completed 6 out of 14 passes, while the Los Angeles passers only connected for 4-out of 23. The edge in the kicking went to the Rams, and had a very great effect on the score. The Ram line was rushing the Cub punters all afternoon, blocking one kick and partially stopping three others.

BUTTERFLIES AND PEA-DINGERS CLICK AS SWEETMEN ROMP OVER RIVALS

S. F. NETSTERS TIE STANFORD FROSH, 5 TO 5

Staging a spirited rally late in the match to overcome its opponents' lead, the Ram tennis team last Saturday emerged from the contest with the Stanford freshmen with the score deadlocked, five matches to five.

Playing on the Indians' home courts at Palo Alto, the Wilsonmen fell behind early, when their first three men, Harold Wagner, Chandler Ennes and Bob Altfield, lost their singles matches. Wagne, playing first man, was beaten by Bob Low, the big star of the Palo Alto aggregation, who is supposed to be one of the best prospects seen on the coast in a long time. Low lived up to his reputation by defeating Wagner in straight sets, while Roberts of the Indians duplicated his feat by shutting out Lannes Ennes fought his opponent, Joe Lardy, to the full three sets before going down to defeat, 7-5, 4-6, 6-3.

The Rams' outlook became blacker than ever when Ben Mason lost his singles match, but brightened considerably when Alvin Altfield and Harold Mitchell succeeded in downing their respective opponents. Bob Kuhn then brought the Rams to within one match of the Cards by eking out a victory in the last singles match of the day.

Going into the doubles competition one down, the San Francisco capsmen tuned two matches out of three to give them a total of five victories and five defeats, and an even break in the match.

Ennes and Altfield teamed up and romped over their opponents without much difficulty, while Mason and Mitchell managed to defeat the Palo Altans' second doubles squad, but Lazare and Wagner were beaten and the match ended with the score 5 to 5.

Winners of the conference championship last spring, the Rams have played three matches this fall, winning two and tying one. With Ennes, Mitchell, Altfield and Lazare back from the title-winning squad, prospects are regarded as bright for a repetition of last season's triumph, especially as the team has been strengthened by the addition of Wagner, a star all-around player. With the benefit of a number of practice matches in the fall and early spring, Coach Wilson hopes to have the squad in top shape to defend its laurels by the time the conference season opens.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

There comes a lull before every storm and this week marks just such a lull in women's sports before the deluge of Tourney Week activities sweeps across our rental camp. Tourney Week will be from November 29 to December 2 and each sport will produce entertainment of some sort. The dancing classes will hold a recital in which there will be several original dances, solos and group dances. There will be much color, creativity, and tap dancing. Both the singles and doubles tennis finals will be played off during this period. The riding classes will present a horse show in which all riding classes will participate. The golf putting tourney will come to an end in Tourney Week. Following the custom set in other semesters, the swimming classes will perform in a meet. Finals of the badminton tournament will be played, pounding women in all sports will have an opportunity to display their ability. The Tourney chairmen have been busily engaged for several weeks in completing plans for this athletic extravaganza. The WAA banquet at which awards for the semester are presented, will be on the night of December 2 and the theme is to be International Friendship. And on and on go preparations for the big event while there is little news at present.

The quarter finals have been reached in the singles tennis tournament. Matches scheduled this week are: Vera Del Casman-Betty McKenzie, Helen Frisbie-Tillie Huddleson, Jackie Kramer-Lily Phillips. Gerry Orginne defaulted to Alice Cavanaugh. A doubles tournament for women and a mixed doubles tournament are also in progress at present.

In the Freshman versus Freshman volley ball tilt, the WAA Freshmen defeated the Freshmen from Bertha Keller's Activity class. The score was 17 to 6. And then just to put the WAA Freshmen in their place, the WAA Sophomore team beat a combined Freshman team, 19 to 7.

A sport which has not gained the attention it deserved this semester is tumbling. Because of the lack of women enrolled, a WAA tumbling club was not formed, but nevertheless, it is a sport which teaches women a great deal in regard to dexterity.

All those enrolled in the 1:30 Tuesday-Thursday archery class have progressed to at least 20 yards and some of the students are shooting a good deal farther away from the target.

A large group of women from the junior college are planning to attend the sport night at State on November 30. There is a possibility that the WAA will entertain State in the near future also.

Like the famous Indian in the famous portrait we have reached "The End of Our Trail."

RAMblings

By DICK SIMPERS

It looked for a while as though the grid team had finally eluded the jinx of injury, but just when everything was, to employ a colloquialism, "hotsy-totsy" and Russ Sweet was beginning to think that Fate was on his side once more, the old bugaboo struck again, and in several places. Joe Guedet's elbow, hurt in the Sacramento game, became so bad that he was forced to the sidelines. Willie Dolman injured his arm against San Mateo and has been out ever since, and Randy Osborne's ankle is in none too good a state. Fortune has been by no means kind to the Rams this season.

With basketball just around the corner, Dutch Conlan is again on the lookout for likely prospects. One of these likeliest prospects so far is reported to be a Louis Garcia, a newcomer reputed to possess a deadly "eye." With only a few veterans returning from last year's first team, Conlan appears to have a task before him if he is to find material that will hold up its end in conference competition.

Most spectacular play we've seen this season: That fifty-yard pass completed by Los Angeles last week, from one of the most foolish-looking formations on record. With a line deployed from side-line to side-line, the Cubs cut loose with this bit of razzle-dazzle and succeeded in completely befuddling the dazed Sweetmen. It's really a shame that they didn't get something out of it.

The Modesto basketball team, last year's champions, is scheduled to do some real traveling this season. The Pirates have contracted for a series of games throughout the Orient, expenses paid by their hosts, a Japanese athletic body.

Despite the yeoman efforts of Jack Schmale, publicity director, who has been seeking feverishly to secure a Thanksgiving Day game for the Rams, it looks as though the members of the football team will have to enjoy their turkey in the old familiar surroundings this year. Ever since Ricks College canceled the game scheduled in Idaho for November 25, Schmale has been hunting desperately throughout the nation for a suitable opponent, contacting schools in Oregon, Utah, and other states, but without success.

SOCCER TEAM FINALLY GETS ITS PUBLICITY

By ED FREDIANI

We herewith present thumbnail sketches of the latest additions to the Ram's Hall of Fame. The following fellows brought the second soccer championship in as many years to San Francisco Junior College. The forward line and center half are present here, and next edition the backfield and reserves will receive recognition.

LEO JOHNSON—Center Forward—Leo is one of the scholars of the team, and stars as well in the class room as he does on the soccer field. Last last year's league leading Rams to victory by scoring 10 goals for the loaf club. Was also high scoring man for this year's Wilsonites. He's the heaviest man on the squad, tipping the beam at nearly 200 lbs. For two years he has been the steadying influence on the whole squad, and while team work is the important thing in soccer, he is probably the most valuable man on the Red and White squad.

• • • • •

JIMMY FAHN—Inside Left—Also a two-year man on the team. Before coming to school late in the term, Fahn bolstered up a spotty forward line, and helped the Rams materially in copping the crown. Jim plays a hard charging game, and is the fightingest mite on the roster.

• • • • •

• • • • •

MIKE "SHANGHAI" KLEBANOFF—Outside Right—Mike is the smallest man on the squad. He was born in Russia, and was raised in Shanghai, China where he went to an English high school. He held down the same position that he is playing this term on last year's title holding team, and was named unanimously as all-conference, outside-right, and in all probability he will receive the same recognition this season.

• • • • •

• • • • •

ELLARD TAYLOR—Center Half—He's the hardest work player on the Ram's squad. Taylor, playing his second year of varsity competition, holds down the toughest spot on a soccer team. He has to do just about twice as much work as any other man on the team, but he never hollers "quit".

Gridders Get Title Shot At Modesto Next Friday; Neither Squad Is Conceded Advantage

By DICK SIMPERS

Bent on securing a victory that will throw them into a statistical tie for the conference championship, the Ram footballers travel to Modesto next Friday night to engage the powerful Pirates of Modesto J. C., on the latter's home field. The contest appears to be a toss-up, with no appreciable edge to either squad.

If the Rams win, they go into a tie with Sacramento for the title, with the possibility that they will be the sole occupants of the top spot, as Sacramento has still to meet the Bulldogs of San Mateo. A loss or tie in that game will give the Rams a clean title to the crown, provided, of course, that they succeed in beating the Modestans.

Coach Fred Earle of Modesto has built up a team composed almost entirely of veterans, returning from the team which last year won the championship. Relying principally on power for its offensive thrusts, this eleven knocked over all its early season opponents in stride, but was held to a scoreless tie by San Mateo and beaten last Thursday by Sacramento, 7-0.

Outstanding for the Pirates has been Gordon Poole, shifty little halfback, who has accounted for a number of substantial gains. Bill Irvin is the real star of the team, however. A veteran, he has been the bane of the Pirates' opponents in every game, as, although he weighs only 150 pounds, he is one of the best broken-field runners in the conference.

— LAWRENCE ACE

Bob Lawrence, fullback, will do the kicking for the Modestans. His boots in several games this year have averaged more than forty yards.

The line is stronger than the average, Terry, Terrell and Thornton being the outstanding players both on offense and defense.

Conch Russ Sweet will field about the same team that played against Los Angeles last week, although Duke Worsham may be absent from the center spot. Victim of a leg injury in the L. A. game, Worsham may or may not start, depending on the rapidity with which the injury mends. Jerry Flamm and Merv Weiner will be at tackles, Andy Oddstead and Tom Burke at guards, Peterson will step into the center position in the event that Worsham is not sufficiently recovered, Ed Pearce and Bud Weichers will be at ends.

OLSON TO START

The backfield will probably remain intact; Ray Egelhofer, Wes Olson, Al McDonald, and Walt Boitano.

The "butterfly defense," or 6-2-2-1 will be used again, its effectiveness having been proved in the San Mateo and Los Angeles games.

This will be the last game of the season for the Rams, and the last game for many of the first stringers, who will be making their last appearance under the Red and White colors, deprived on by the thought of the championship, the squad will be on edge for the game. With everything to gain and nothing to lose, the Sweetmen will be shooting for the works, and it would not be surprising to see this contest turn out to be one of the classiest of the season.

The starting line-ups:

SAN FRANCISCO		LOS ANGELES
PEARCE	LER	THORNTON
WEINER	LTR	TORNELL
JOHNSTEAD	LGR	TOTTS
WORSHAM	C	BOYER
BURKE	RGL	NORTON
FLAMM	RTL	HONEY

Lack Of Facilities Is Responsible For S. F. Show Collapse

Cancellation of the Block "SF" variety show which was scheduled to be held in the near future was announced by Preston Worsham, president of the organization, Inability to find an adequate time or place for the production was given as the reason for the cancellation of the much-publicized production.

"Despite the failure to stage the show this semester, we have hopes of putting on an improved offering early next semester," Worsham stated. "I want especially to thank Ray Egelhofer for his diligent efforts in the managerial end of the enterprise and all the others, Bud Weichers, Walt Holden, Art Nelson, Tip Hamilton, Tom Burke and Merv Weiner."

It had been originally planned to charge a small admission price for the show in order to raise funds for the Idaho trip, but when that game was called off, Block Society members had hoped to stage "Life Begins At Junior College" free of charge at one of the football rallies. Unfortunately, however, all future rallies had fully planned programs and the administration was unable to allot time for an extra rally especially for the Blockmen.

Al McDonald of the Alameda mud flat McDonalds, has joined Simms Hamilton of the "human eastess" brigade. McDonald now has water on the elbow. Hamilton has had offers from interested parties who want to drill his knees for oil possibilities . . . Oddities in the day's news. Walt Boitano.

RAMS' HORN

Dear Editor:

According to members of the Block "SF" Society the show that they announced with so much fanfare and flourish is to be cancelled. If my memory serves me correctly this is the third time that this has occured in the last three semesters.

Each time that the show failed to materialize, members of the Society were able to give an adequate excuse. Their first failure was attributed to lack of time for rehearsals, the second to an inability to uncover any worthwhile talent, and this last one was caused by what Society members are pleased to title as "failure of certain student leaders to cooperate."

Perhaps it is true that the athletes have been dogged by a constant jinx. Perhaps they have had the misfortune to work under unsympathetic administrators. But it seems that if they were really sincere in their efforts to establish a fine tradition they could have overcome these obstacles and put on the show in spite of them. The student body has a natural and understandable admiration for the college athletes, but constant failure of the organization to accomplish anything constructive, despite the quality of the excuses, will tend to minimize this feeling of respect and cause the Block Society to be branded as completely ineffective.

JOE COLLEGE.

Dear Editor:

The bulletin board space in this college is very scarce, and it is the opinion of not only myself but of many other students to whom I have talked that this deplorable situation should be remedied immediately. I realize that our space is limited, but I think that if a request were made to the authorities of the University of California Extension Division they would give us space for another bulletin board to equal the space of the present one at Powell Street. I think everyone will present one. The situation of Galileo wants to tack up an announcement he has to tack it wherever he can find a place, and then there is always the danger of many students not seeing the notice. There should be a JUNIOR COLLEGE bulletin board at Galileo so that the whole college can post announcements as they do at Powell Street.

I call upon the Administration to set up another board at Powell Street and one at Galileo. I think it is a simple request and an important one and should be easily satisfied.

I WANT SPACE!

J. AMORI PRAISES WHERE PRAISE IS DUE

By JOE AMORI
MEN'S CLUB ADVISER

No program of extra-curricular activities can be successful unless the faculty sponsor or sponsors of these activities receives the united support of the students for whom the activities are originated.

I understand that the Associated Men Students' activities for the past semester have met with the approval of both the student body and outside public. Behind every successful venture, whether extra-curricular activities or otherwise, there is always found a body of individuals upon whom falls the responsibility of working out plans of organization for the activity under consideration for the general welfare of the entire group under their jurisdiction. Even though it is my good fortune to act as faculty advisor or sponsor for the Associated Men Students, the activities of which are judged successful, I wish to take this opportunity of expressing to all the members of the Associated Students as well as to all others interested in our welfare my appreciation of the fine cooperation, loyalty and enthusiasm exhibited by not only the officers of the Associated Men Students—Don Mills, Arthur Nelson, Mervyn Weiner, Irvin Amstrup—but also other student leaders interested in building a fine organization here at the San Francisco Junior College.

Allen Williams, head yell leader, worked night and day on the Associated Men Students' activities, even to the point of accompanying me and the other officers at 4:30 a. m. in search of corn stalks, pumpkins and other decorations for the Hallowe'en Dance, and then report to class at 8:00 a. m. I also wish to thank the other members of the student body who gave of their time and energy to make this past semester the success that it has been for the Associated Men Students.

In addition, I also thank the faculty members, Mr. Allman of the Art Department, for the decorations for the various activities, and Mr. Sullivan of the Hotel and Restaurant Division for his fine work.

Students Reminded Of Doubles Sign-up

All men and women tennis players in the college are urged to sign up for the mixed doubles tournament. Practice is held at the Palace of Fine Arts on Saturday and it is not necessary to be enrolled in any regular tennis class. The winners will have their names engraved on The Guardsman Cup.

a whole, to allow, in line with the United States Constitutional provisions, freedom of speech and opinion, therefore, to encourage development of all manner of varied interests that link themselves into active association.

It is unfortunate indeed that peace, the aim of every sane person, is the cause of so much controversy in its method of achievement. That protest and demonstration against ROTC and other military groups are made by those organized under Peace aims is unfortunate, and casts a slur in the implication that such groups DESIRE war. When, however, those military groups arrogantly attempt to disrupt and cause a scene at a meeting sponsored by another college group, no self-respecting, fair-minded person can other than cry "Shame!"

Petty attempts to attract attention through rude means but turn admiration to the person or persons who meet such rudeness with courtesy.

Initiation Ceases, Econ Wizards Eat!

Plans for the annual Omicron Phi Pi dinner indicate a tentative date Monday evening, November 22, at the Ritz French Restaurant, 65 Post Street. The committee in charge of the dinner has been diligently working in order to make this affair one of the outstanding social gatherings of the season. Elaborate plans have been made, and according to the committee head, this year's dinner will outdo the one held last year which was very successful.

One of the highlights of the evening will occur when members present papers on current economic subjects, and follow up with a general round table discussion. Also of importance will be the election of new officers into Omicron Phi Pi for the following year.

Attempts will be made to have as many past members present at the banquet as possible and invitations have been extended to all those that are living in the bay area. It is planned to have approximately thirty guests at the dinner.

A list of some of the prominent past members of Omicron Phi Pi include John Bonchristiani, past president of Omicron Phi Pi and now attending the University of California; Patricia Matz, who is also now a University of California student; Jack Humbert, a former Omicron Phi Pi president and now employed by a local insurance concern; Malcom Longakre who was quite prominent in college affairs and also past president of the Forum Club and is now traveling in Mexico; Madeline Brodie who had one of the highest scholastic averages ever attained in the college.

Latest members to be initiated in Omicron Phi Pi are Lloyd Luckmann and Franklin Sewell of the faculty and James Hempseed. Officers officiating at the impressive rites conducted at Galileo High School in the afternoon were Dr. Michael Zarchin, Charles H. Vaughn, Ward Nichols, Bill Simonds, William Switzer and Fred Wright. All new members were presented with Omicron Phi Pi gold keys.

Switzer Chosen To Rule Chess Boards

Members of the newly-organized Chess Club will hold their meeting at the residence of Carl Christiansen, 359 Fillmore Street, this evening.

During the last few weeks, the Chess Club has been undergoing organization and officers for the year were elected at the final organization meeting held at John Duemler's residence. Officers elected were Bill Switzer, president, and Duemler, secretary and treasurer. An executive committee was established, creating the offices of president, secretary and treasurer and a faculty adviser. Essential duties of the faculty adviser are to appoint a team manager and formulate the policy of the Chess Club, with the majority consent of the members. A revolving tournament was established in order to determine the rank of individual players and it goes on constantly. Any one may enter the tournament by merely challenging another player of higher standing.

WomenChange To Phi Beta Rho

Members of the Phi Beta, the college's first sorority, are about to become Phi Beta Rho's, according to Fern Muheim, vice-president of the group. A meeting held last Friday evening determined the change, the reason for which is the existence of a Phi Beta musical society, Miss Muheim said.

Plans for the remainder of the semester include an installation dinner for pledges on December 3, to be held at one of the downtown hotels. The pledges are: Janet Falconer, Ruth Leona Hale, Eloyas Cagle, Helen Bendel, Louise Falconer, Nadine Lillis, Barbara Mills, Leona Wilcox, and Muriel Mills. A tea will be held at the end of the semester, the time and place of the affair as yet unknown.

Rifle Coach Wins McQuaide Match

Bringing home new victories, Lieutenant William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college Rifle and Pistol Club, with a score of 274, won the individual match at the McQuaide Trophy Match, sponsored by the 250th Coast Artillery, California National Guard, and held Sunday, November 7, at the Presidio of San Francisco. Captain Wilson, of the 159th Infantry, was second with 273 points. These were very high scores, for the National Individual Match at Camp Perry was won with 277 points.

Organizations competing were the 30th Infantry, 159th Infantry, 11th Cavalry, 143rd Infantry, men from the U. S. S. New Mexico, the Coast Guard, and the 250th. The 250th beat the 11th Cavalry by 70 points, to win the trophy. 2,397 points were totaled by the 250th, which is an excellent score for a ten-man team.

Mack Garr, assistant range officer of the local club, and member of the 30th Infantry team, totaled 252 points.

Last night the college first rifle team was scheduled to meet the Southern Pacific Rod and Gun Club in a match. The second team fires against the Municipal Railway on Saturday morning, November 20, at the Galileo range.

Japanese Dance Attracts Crowd

Backed by more than two hundred students, the dance given by the Japanese Club, Nov. 10, was declared a big success by Bob Uyeda.

The club, which boasts one of the largest memberships of the school, has not only devoted itself to social functions, but also to philanthropic work. They are offering a junior college scholarship to some needy Northern California Japanese boy or girl. This is a splendid opportunity for those who cannot afford to continue their education in college.

PE Majors Make Final Roast Plans

Monday at 5:30 the Physical Education Club held its regular meeting and completed arrangements for the weiner roast to be held November 18 at Sigmund Stern Grove and to which three girls from each of the San Francisco High Schools have been invited.

Following the instruction in badminton which the club gave to Everett Junior High School girls, members of the club were given pointers in how to improve their teaching methods, by the club sponsor, Bertha Keller.

Forum Progresses, Membership Swells

Holding its most successful meeting of the semester, the College Forum met last week to discuss socialized medicine. The meeting was the largest and most interesting this fall, according to members of the club.

"At last we have reached last semester's proportions," said John Healy, Forum chairman. "We had to start from scratch this term because all our members left college last spring. However, like all good things the Forum has again reached the popularity it enjoyed formerly. Our next meeting will be held on December 10, this will be the last conclave of the fall and everyone interested is welcome to attend.

Dorothy Mercer, faculty adviser of the club, expressed the thanks of the Forum to Mr. and Mrs. William Goss who prepared the refreshments. Tom Tilberry and Ray Valdez were appointed to a committee to investigate the feasibility of forming a student government group. Tilberry asked all students interested in attending the Thanksgiving conference of the Student Institute of Pacific Relations to see him or Miss Bolton.

French Students To Attend Drama

French students of the college will attend a French play next Wednesday, at the Andre Ferrier Theatre d'art, entitled, "Marius," by Marcel Pagnel.

The play will be the first that the students, united under the name le Cercle Francais, will have attended as a group. The students will meet tonight at the apartment of Helen Kelly, language instructor, at the Residence Club on Sutter Street, to read and discuss the play.

Army-Navy Will View Launching

At the last meeting of the college Army-Navy Club held Wednesday evening, November 10, plans to attend the launching of a destroyer that will take place this Saturday, were announced. Instructions from Grant F. Marsh, co-adviser of the Club, were read. All who are interested in attending the launching are advised to meet at the entrance of the Bethlehem Steel Company, 20th and Illinois Streets, at 11:30 o'clock, Saturday morning November 20th. The launching will take place at 12:15 o'clock, and the company may be reached by taking either a Number 16 or 29 street car and getting off at 20th Street.

Hotel Society Leader Writes Of Group Trip

By TREVETT A. WILSON, Jr.
President Hotel and Restaurant Management Society.

Four of us from the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, Clark Chittick, Louis Aber, Jr., Collin Oveland and I, arrived in San Diego Sunday afternoon and were met by Mr. George Chittick, vice-president of the San Diego Greeters and president of the San Diego Hotel Association, who took care of our registration at the U. S. Grant Hotel. We spent the rest of the day wandering around San Diego and becoming acquainted with hotel men attending the convention. Sunday evening we attended a dinner dance held at the U. S. Grant Hotel.

The first thing Monday morning we took in a business meeting of the Greeters and the Women's Auxiliary. At this meeting Senator Tickle talked on taxation as related to the hotel men.

Monday afternoon we attended another business meeting of the Greeters, at which time Mr. John P. Gifford, who represented Mr. J. Graham Sullivan, Coordinator of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division of the San Francisco Junior College, gave an illustrated lecture on the work being done here at the college. After this, he called on each of us to say a few words to the Greeters, outlining the work followed by us over a week's time.

The rest of the functions were social ones, but at these we were able to meet many hotel men and invite them to visit us here. Among those extended invitations were Mr. Edward Fettig of Portland, Oregon; Mr. Louis Aber of Los Angeles, Mr. Jack Fletcher of Marysville, who is also secretary-treasurer of the State Greeters, and Frank C. Finch of Long Beach, California. At these functions we were able to notice, from conversations between hotel men and from compliments given us, that we had made a profound impression on those present and for the first time had made them aware of the importance of training themselves for hotel work and of the opportunities for such training as offered at the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division of the college.

Pacific Relations Institute Invites College to Sessions

Urging all students interested in problems of the Pacific area to attend the twelfth annual conference of the Student Institute of Pacific Relations which will be held during the Thanksgiving holidays, Thomas Tilberry, campus chairman of the organization, said that students should either see him or Eastern problems.

"Each year, since 1926," Tilberry declared, "college men and women interested in promoting a better understanding among the peoples of the Pacific area have met over the Thanksgiving holidays. They have had frank discussions regarding the social, racial, cultural, and political problems of the countries bordering on the Pacific Ocean. Each member of the conference has had an opportunity to set forth his viewpoint, partialities, and prejudices to be examined by the group. The aim of the conference," he stressed, "is discussion, of which informality is the keynote.

In addition to discussion, there is time for recreation and social activities such as swimming, hiking, ball playing, and dancing. The round tables this year will deal with: American policy in the Far Eastern conflict; Philippine independence and adjustment; race problems on the Pacific Coast; neutrality in the Pacific, and conference process. The institute claims able discussion leaders in John H. Oakie, Dorothy Field, Hobart Young, Dr. Jean Pajus, and Margaret Armstrong.

The conference and organization is conducted entirely by students, and college students from all over Northern California participate. This year the sessions will be held from November 25 to 28 inclusive at Lokoya Mountain Lodge in Napa, California.

"The fee," Tilberry added, "will be a nominal one, and is charged only to cover expenses. Students interested in attending and desiring more information should see Miss Bolton or me immediately because the time of the conference is drawing near. Several students have already signified their intention of going, anyone else who wants to go is welcome and I am sure they will have an enjoyable time."

DEBATERS TO VIE WITH MODESTO, COALINGA

Modesto and Coalinga will be the destination of six local debaters tomorrow, when they travel to the southern cities for verbal tussles on compulsory arbitration of labor disputes.

Representing San Francisco against Modesto Junior College will be Isabel Sherrat and Elizabeth Rehbock who will uphold the negative side of the question. George Woodland, Morris Rabinowitz, Joe Meeko, and Charles Vaughn, also opposing arbitration, will argue with the Coalinga Junior College debaters. The debate will take place before the local organization of the Parent-Teachers Association. The trip to Coalinga, 300 miles from the Bay Area and near Fresno, will find the men leaving tomorrow and returning Friday.

In the last home forensic tilt, members of the college debating society met San Mateo and San Francisco State yesterday. Catherine Mountanou and Woodland upheld unicameralism, while State opposed it. Speaking for neutrality, Lorraine Johnson and Kenneth Germann argued with the San Mateo team.

"The trip to Modesto and Coalinga will be the last debates of the semester," Lloyd Luckmann, college forensics mentor, said. "These trips are a fitting climax to a successful season. The people going on these trips have been chosen because they are deserving of the honor and are capable of making good debates.

"This semester," Luckmann continued, "has been the most active and thriving in the history of the college as far as forensics are concerned. This shows that the art of argument is gaining more attention and deservingly so, for debate sharpens one's mental faculties and teaches one to think rapidly, and to organize one's thoughts and to present them to others in a convincing manner. The fact that we do not have non-decision contests compels the debaters to work all the more diligently to win over not only a judge to their side, but the whole audience."

He added that in addition to the aforementioned debaters, others that participated in forensic activity deserve special mention. They are: Frank Bosl, James Scott, David Levy, J. C. Armstrong, Robert Holmes, and William Simonds. Luckmann commended the entire society for its good work.

History Class Sees Chinese Stage Play

History 46A classes attended a historical-legendary play last Friday night at Chinatown's mandarin theater as a practical experience in studying Chinese drama.

The play, entitled "Lew Gim Ding," or translated, "Lady Robin Hood," dealt with the state of war which existed in China at the opening of the Sung dynasty. The dialogue was largely impromptu, as the dialogue of many Chinese plays is. Actors were merely told the situations occurring throughout the play, and then left to conjure up lines.

The group dined on Chinese food at the Tao Yuan restaurant, on Clay St., before attending the theater performance.

After Dark

By John Ward

Writers:

The Forum club of the college sponsors the publication, once a term, of a magazine given over to the creative efforts of the students. The purpose of this undertaking is to create a means of publicizing what the students of the college can do in the literary field, a means whereby students may see their efforts printed and circulated among the student body. The first issue of this publication appeared last term, the next will appear some time during the next term.

It is desired and ardently hoped by all interested in the magazine that students who scribble chosen words on paper will submit manuscripts. There will be no limitation of form save to length, no limitation to subject matter save where there is a question as to taste. All works submitted will be read and judged by a staff of ten or more, and by the sponsors, Dorothy Mercer and William Goss, thus a fair appraisal of literary merits is assured.

Essays on current affairs, poetry, short fiction, drama, and all the rest of the infinite variety of literary production are wanted. The quality will be gauged more or less by the quantity of material received. Thus, creative artists, you are invited to submit material for the college magazine and possibly see it printed some time in the spring semester.

All material should be given either to Miss Mercer, Goss, or the editor of this column. A tentative limit has been set at 1,500 words, but this is not final. It will be appreciated if available manuscripts be presented as soon as possible.

Music-Lovers:

A series of weekly phonograph record concerts will be inaugurated next Thursday at the Powell Street Building in Room 303 from 12 to 1 p. m. This will be the first venture of its kind in the college and it is fervently hoped by those interested in it that the interest will be great enough to make these concerts permanent. They will be free to all interested in good (classical) music.

It is planned to give programs of every type—songs, symphonies, opera, choirs, and especially contemporary works. Each week there will be a speaker who will briefly sketch a background for the music to be heard. Programs of the music of J. S. Bach, of Wagner, of Stravinsky, of early church music, of Italian opera will be scheduled as well as many others equally varied and equally interesting. All who come will have some voice in the choosing of programs.

To the seasoned music lover the programs will offer fine recordings and unhackneyed works; to the student interested but uninitiated, the programs will offer a bit of musical education and a great deal of beautiful sound.

The program for tomorrow afternoon, 12 to 1, includes:

The Overture to Die Meistersinger—Wagner.
The Finale to Salome—Strauss.
Concertina for piano and orchestra—Honegger.
Four songs from El Amor Brujo—de Falla.
The Swan of Tuonela—Sibelius.

If you are interested in attending and find the hour bad, please let the writer of this column know and a change may be made if possible.

WAA TOURNEY WEEK TO COMMENCE NOV. 29, AS WOMEN OFFER VARIETY

Festivities Start With Rifle Matches In Galileo Gym; All Athletic Enterprises Will Participate In Five Day Pageant of Exhibitionary Events

Grand finale of this semester's women's sports activities, Tourney Week, November 29 to December 2, will be crammed full of tournaments, swim meets, tennis finals, badminton finals, golf matches, archery matches, rifle matches, volley ball finals, a horse show, a fencing exhibition, a dance recital, and the annual WAA banquet at which awards are presented.

The festivities begin on Monday, November 29, with a women's rifle exhibition match at the Galileo Armory from 4:30 to 5:30 o'clock. Manager of the rifle team is Virginia Kwiatt and its coach is Army-Navy Club Adviser James Hughes. On Tuesday, November 30, the tennis singles finals will be played at the Palace of Fine Arts from 11 to 12 o'clock. The tennis team is managed by Virginia Lum and coached by Bertha Keller. From 1 to 2 o'clock the archery matches will be played at Fort Mason Range. Archery manager is Margaret Parks and archery coach is Verrel Weber. Concluding the day's activities, a Freshman versus Sophomore volleyball match is scheduled from 4 to 4:30 o'clock, according to Manager Ellen Cummings.

SWIM MEET FIRST

First event on the calendar of Wednesday's activities is an elementary swim meet at the YWCA pool from 12:30 to 1:30 o'clock. WAA manager of swimming is Norma Gattavara and the coach is Vera Spencer. From 1 to 2 o'clock the final WAA golf match will be played at Harding golf course. Golf is managed by Claire Mason and coached by Instructor Laurine Bergin. The formal horse show will be held at the St. Francis Riding Club, 744 Eighth Avenue, on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock. Charlotte Zier is riding manager. Trophies will be given to those who win first places at the horse show. There will be jumping, cantering, trotting, and walking of horses.

STREAM OF EVENTS

On the final day, December 2, there will be a steady stream of activities from 11 o'clock in the morning until the final guest leaves the WAA banquet at 10 o'clock in the evening. The women's doubles tennis finals are first, to be played at the Palace of Fine Arts from 11 to 12 o'clock. From 12:30 to 1:30 another swim meet will be held at the YWCA—this time consisting of advanced and intermediate swimmers. There are to be races, dives, and as a new feature, a water polo match between members of the advanced class. Those two battling volleyball teams, the Ramettes and the Toppers, will stage their final combat at the Galileo gym from 3:30 to 4:30. There will be a fencing exhibition in the Galileo gym from 4:30 to 5:30 with Verrel Weber acting as judge, and at the same time the badminton finals will be played in the gym. A dance demonstration, in which all the dancing classes will participate, will be held later in the afternoon. Esther Tan is manager of the fencing classes.

BANQUET CLIMAX

Six o'clock in the evening means food for famished women athletes at the final banquet of the semester. Diligently earned awards will be presented to women excelling in the WAA sports. Virginia Kwiatt will act as toastmistress and there will be guest speakers and entertainment.

Chairmen of the committees in charge of Tourney Week are: general chairman, Virginia Kwiatt; program chairman, Ruthleora Hail; decoration chairman, Janet Falconer; banquet chairman, Jean Lonkey; entertainment chairman, Dorothy Sanderson; arrangement chairman, Sylvia Rogenus, and Betty Varni.

WAA SPONSORS HORSE SHOW ON DEC. 1

One of the most attractive features of Tourney Week, the formal horse show, sponsored by WAA riding classes, will be held at the St. Francis Riding Club, 744 Eighth Avenue, on Wednesday, December 1, at 8 o'clock in the evening. Thirty equestrians from the beginning, intermediate, and advanced riding classes, will participate in the various events. Trophies, donated by Roos Brothers and Spiero's Sporting Goods Store, will be presented to those who win first places. The Men's Service Club will usher.

Each class will demonstrate correct walking, trotting and cantering, both singly and in groups. There will be a trophy game between the beginning and the intermediate class and a trophy game among members of the advanced class. Exhibitions in jumping should provide thrills for spectators as well as participants.

The judges for the evening will be Sally Reed, noted local equestrian, and Charles Tevis, an outstanding polo player. The arrangements were in charge of riding manager, Charlotte Zier, and Laurine Bergin, riding instructor. Stars of each class who will take part in the horse show are: Phyllis Learned, Nick Varquin, and Ruth Pauli in the beginning class, Robert Levin, Clare Mason, and Joan Ackley, in the intermediate class, and Betty McKenzie, Julius Russel, Betty Sanchey, and Gloria Swicegood in the advanced class. Horses will be furnished by the St. Francis Riding Academy and the location selected is also the scene of the annual San Francisco Horse Show.

"The horses expect everyone and his relatives to be there," declared Riding Instructor Laurine Bergin.

College President Presides At Lunch For Chicago Guests

As host to the Chicago Board of Education and the San Francisco Board of Education, Archibald J. Cloud, president of the college, presided at a luncheon on November 18 in the Galileo faculty cafeteria. The Chicago men were visiting San Francisco schools particularly to inspect those which offered unusual courses. Attendance at the luncheon enabled the out-of-town men to watch the work of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division of the college.

Representatives from Chicago included Charles Fry, vice-president of the Board of Education; Judge Frank Reigheimer, special attorney; John C. Christenson, member of the board; Don C. Rogers, Director of Research and Building Survey, and industrialists Thatcher, Stanley, and Moore.

San Francisco men who were present were J. P. Nourse, Superintendent of Schools; C. Harold Caulfield, President of the Board of Education; Philip Lee Bush, Board member; William Benedict, Board member; Robert Gray, Deputy Superintendent; Walter Schmidt, Assistant to the Superintendent of Schools; J. Paul Mohr, college registrar; Edwin C. Browne, dean of men; J. Graham Sulivan, coordinator of the Hotel division; Manfred Mueller, instructor, and President Cloud, who acted as host.

After the luncheon a tour of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division class-rooms was made in order to further acquaint the Chicago visitors of the extensive research carried on by the group.

Milk Plant Visited By Hotel Division

Students of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division visited the Marin-Dell milk plant at 13th and Howard Streets last week to survey the many processes necessary before the milk is actually bottled. The field trip was conducted by Mozelle Millikan, faculty member of the group. This excursion supplements other visits to various houses of food production.

HYMN OF THANKSGIVING

Rejoice, while other nations bleed in strife,
While elsewhere, men pour out sweet life;
Rejoicing, sing that Freedom's flag yet flies
O'er noblest land beneath the skies.

America! Thanksgiving sing!
Give thanks, for peaceful shore,
Unsullied by War's ruthless hand.
Rejoice forevermore!

Give thanks and bless the hallowed, sacred day
That gave a union birth; as they,
Who fighting then, that men need fight no more,
Gave thanks, for peace when war was o'er.

America! Thanksgiving sing!
Give thanks, for Faith and Love!
Oh, glorious land of Fellowship
And blessings from above.

Soph Formal Plans Nearing Completion Under Neal's Lead

Urging that all those who plan to attend the affair secure bids as soon as possible, Bob Neal, High Sophomore president, announced that arrangements for the college's fifth Sophomore Formal were rapidly nearing completion.

"As was announced in last week's Guardsman," Neal said, "the formal will be held on December 3 in the Gold Ballroom of the Palace Hotel. We have a big surprise in the way of an orchestra and, in addition, we have planned some very novel entertainment.

SCENE OF FIRST DANCE

"Our committee is at present working on some clever ideas for dance bids and we hope to have something that will really be unique. We feel that the Sophomore Formal is always looked forward to as one of the most important events on the college social calendar and we are anxious that ours be even more pretentious than any other in the history of the college.

"It is interesting to note that the first dance ever given by the college was held in the Gold Ballroom of the Palace and here we are, after two and a half years, holding our Soph Formal there."

In the past, according to Neal, Soph Formals have been held in the Room of the Dons at the Hotel Mark Hopkins, the Terrace Ballroom of the Fairmont and the St. Francis Yacht Club.

BIDS ON SALE

"Bids for our formal are $1.25," he said, "and may be secured at the college bank, Room 262 at Galileo. There will only be 150 for sale and that is why I urge all those who intend going to secure theirs at once."

A Cappella Singers Give Third Program

Making its third public appearance of the semester, the A Capella Choir will offer a program of song at the West Portal Women's Club on December 7, according to Flossita Badger, director of the group.

Selections from Bach, Grieg, Tchaikowsky, and Foster will be sung in addition to well-known folk songs. The Choir sang at the Alhambra High School in Martinez and at the Congregational Methodist Church earlier in the term.

Banquet Closes Weeks Activity In Competition

Ending WAA activities for the semester, the WAA banquet will be held at the Galileo auditorium on December 2, at 6 o'clock in the evening. International Friendship has been selected as the theme of the dinner. Fifty-five cents will be the price charged for the meal, to be prepared by the Hotel and Restaurant Division.

Virginia Kwiatt, general chairman of Tourney Week, will act as hostess at the dinner. Guest speakers will be Veronica Pataky and Gym Instructor Laurine Bergin. Entertainment will be furnished by Junko Hedani, Mitsue Kono, Margie Wright, and Greta Holliger.

Suspense will run high during the evening for the First Team Awards, and Highest Awards, membership in the Block Society and a white flannel jacket with a circular emblem will be announced following the dinner. The results of the election of WAA officers for next semester will also be divulged at the banquet. First Team Awards will be presented for every WAA sport and the Highest Awards will be given to only three or four women who have proved to be the most outstanding in WAA activities during the semester.

Arrangements were made by Banquet Chairman Jean Lonkey and the entertainment was selected by Entertainment Chairman Dorothy Sanderson. WAA officers urge that any woman who has taken part in WAA activities this semester, be present at the banquet.

Chain Card Party Sponsored By WSS

In an effort to raise money for their annual scholarship, members of the Women's Service Society of the college are sponsoring a chain card party, according to Florence Murphy, president of the organization.

"Each of the twenty members of the society is holding a card party at her home," Miss Murphy said, "and as soon as everyone has had her party she will turn in score sheets for each of her guests and cash prizes will be awarded, one for auction bridge and another for whist."

The Service Society scholarship, which is an annual affair, will be awarded at the college commencement exercises in May. Any student in the college may apply for this scholarship, and after all applications have been carefully checked and compared by a committee of judges, the award is given to the student who seems most worthy from a standpoint of scholarship, character and actual need.

Peace Group, College Send 3 Delegates

To Join Annual Pacific Relations Institute Convention

Two students, one representing the college and the other representing the Peace Society, will journey to Napa tomorrow to participate in the twelfth annual conference of the Student Institute of Pacific Relations.

Walter A. Thompson, Army-Navy Club member, will be the official delegate of the college. Fred Vast, president of the Peace Society, will represent that group. As The Guardsman went to press, Paul Benson, Peace Society vice-president, and George Woodland, varsity debater, did not know definitely whether they would be able to make the trip. Tom Tillberry, campus chairman of the Institute, will not be able to attend.

The Institute is student-controlled and administered and convenes each year during the Thanksgiving holidays, for the purpose of promoting better understanding among the peoples of the Pacific area. Students of different races and nationalities from colleges throughout Northern California attend the sessions. This year, for the first time, San Francisco Junior College, in a letter to Gertrude Bolton, instructor in Far Eastern problems and faculty adviser to the Peace Society, was asked to send delegates.

LETTER PRINTED

The college Peace Society (formerly known as Peace Council) was able to send a delegate, only after some anonymous person contributed ten dollars for the purpose. The letter to the peace group follows:

November 12, 1937.

Miss Gertrude Bolton,
Mr. William Goss,
Mr. John Ross,
Faculty Advisors to the Peace Council, San Francisco Junior College.

To Whom It May Concern:

It is my understanding that the Institute of Pacific Relations is holding its group meetings during the Thanksgiving holidays. In keeping with the development of your young organization, the Peace Council, it would seem a worthwhile thing were that group to be represented at the Institute convention.

May I herewith contribute through you the enclosed amount to help send the chairman of the Peace Council to that convention, or if he is unable to attend, any other member selected by the Peace Council.

Thank you very much for your cooperation in this matter.

Members of the Peace society and Miss Colter expressed their gratitude for the thoughtfulness and generosity of the unknown donor.

On Friday, November 19, Thompson and Donald Smith, Army-Navy Club members, went before a special meeting of the college Executive Council and asked that Thompson be sent as college representatve. The Council okehed Thompson as a delegate and contributed $10.50 to cover his expenses.

The aim of the conference is discussion of individual viewpoints regarding the social, racial, cultural, and political problems of the Pacific. Informality is the keynote of the discussion groups where the partialities and prejudices of each person are brought into the open and examined.

The round tables this year will deal with: American policy in the Far East led by John H. Oakie; Philippine Independence and Economic Adjustment, directed by Dorothy Field; Conference process, led by Hobart Young; Race problems on the Pacific Coast, guided by Dr. Jean Pajus, and Neutrality in the Pacific, under the leadership of Margaret Armstrong.

NYA Dead Line For Slips December 17th

NYA time slips are due on the last day of school, December 17, at Powell Street.

There will be no way of reaching Director Helene Turner after this date, therefore students are advised against failure to turn in time slips at the designated time.

Students are allowed to work 30 hours between November 19 and December 17. These hours must be actually worked, and hours worked during Christmas vacation will not be counted.

NEW CANDIDATES FOR STUDENT OFFICES TO BE PRESENTED MONDAY

Nominees For College Posts To Speak At Rally Slated For Galileo Auditorium Next Monday Afternoon; Election Heads Urge Attendance

Presentation of all candidates for offices in the Associated Students' organization for the spring semester will be made at a special nomination assembly next Monday afternoon at Galileo Auditorium at 2 o'clock, according to Jim Preovolos, chairman of the election committee.

The nominees for the various offices which include president, vice-president, secretary and head yell leader of the Associated Students and president of the AWS and Men's Club will make short speeches that the student body may have an intelligent basis for selection of next semester's leaders, Preovolos said.

"In the interests of the student body it is essential that we have a representative election and not a repetition of former electorates when only two and three hundred students voted," Preovolos stated, "and the only way you can cast a worthwhile ballot is by listening to the many candidates who will outline their program and objectives at this nomination rally."

"There will be a wide range of choice for most of the positions, and the only method of selection that many serious minded students have is by the comparison offered at these rallies," Preovolos continued, "and therefore it becomes practically an obligation to be there."

FINAL DATE

This afternoon at 4:30 o'clock is the final date for candidates to turn in their nominating petitions with the required seventy-five names. It was announced by officials of the AMS and AWS that candidates for executive positions in those organizations are not required to be nominated by petition, but they must present their names to Election Committee Chairman Preovolos. Special meetings of both of these organizations will be held early next semester to elect the minor officials.

At the present writing there is a great dearth of candidates for the presidency of the Associated Students with only one definite nominee, Don Mix, editor, The Guardsman. It is expected, however, that other candidates will appear.

This condition does not exist in the other offices, as each position will be sought by active and well-known students. For the office of vice-president, two definite nominations have been made, and others are expected to appear. Norma Parent, popular AWS leader, will oppose Lorraine Haffmeyer, present secretary of the student body.

Florence Murphy, former editor of The Guardsman and president of the Women's Service Society, and Fern Muheim, officer of the Cap and Meg Society, will appear on the ballot for secretary.

The important post of head yell leader and president of the Cap and Meg, will be contested among Shipley Prugh, Stan Adams, and Jimmie Fahn.

FOUR CANDIDATES

Four names will appear for the position as president of the Men's Club. Art Nelson, Leo Balastracci, Hugh Waite and Allen Williams are the contestants for this post.

Presidency of the AWS will be sought by Marion Yeager and Muriel Mills.

All the persons listed above will appear and give a short talk at the rally, Preovolos said.

NEW SYSTEM OF AWARDS FOR ATHLETES

Sports within the college were definitely divided into two classes last week at a meeting of the Athletic Council. Soccer, crew, tennis, swimming, and golf were designated as "minor sports", a group separate and apart from the major sports, football, baseball, basketball, and track. Hereafter, participants in minor sports will not receive blocks, as they have in the past, but will have to content themselves with circle letters.

NEW SYSTEM

The primary reason for the move was, according to Coach Tom Wilson, to make the acquisition of a block SF more difficult and consequently the award itself more worthwhile. Formerly, it was possible to sit on the bench all season and still receive a block. Under the new system, awards will be made on the basis of actual competition and value to the team.

At the same meeting, the Council made the ruling that no more jackets will be given to two-year letter men. They will be given plain white sweaters, either coat or pull-over, without stripe, but bearing the usual insignia. First year blocks will remain the same, except that there will be no stripe on the sleeve. The Council also ruled that no athlete may receive more than one two-year block, no matter how many sports he may have competed in, and that blankets will no longer be given.

ALL SPORTS CLASSIFIED

The only sports remaining in the "unclassified" category are "goof" football and lightweight basketball, for which no sort of credit is given.

The Athletic Council, which is composed of Mervyn Weiner, from the Circle Society, Ray Egelhofer from the Block SF Society, Russ Sweet and Tom Wilson of the coaching staff, Gene Blumenthal, Student Body President, and Edwin Browne, Dean of Men, proposes to meet again this week, and it is reported as likely that another system for the awarding of letters will be taken under consideration, since the newly-adopted plan has been the target of much criticism. It has been proposed that blocks should still be given for all sports, but that they should bear an insignia showing in which sport they were won, and it is believed likely that this plan will be adopted.

Business Students Aided By Placement Service of College

Students of the college who have satisfactorily completed two years of secretarial work at the school are being given a chance to demonstrate their ability in the actual business world, through the efforts of Margaret Flournoy, instructor supervising placement. Several outstanding students have been sent by Miss Flournoy to prospective employers for interviews, and have been accepted.

Most recent to secure work were Edith Ginsberg, who is working at the current baby-show, and Doris Wunderlich.

Students who apply with Miss Flournoy are given definite and helpful advice as to selection of suitable business clothes, makeup, and hair-style. Desiring to maintain a favorable reputation for the ability of college students, the department takes particular care in choosing the girls given the opportunity to apply with firms wanting additional personnel.

Educators Initiate College Instructors

Phi Delta Kappa, national educational fraternity, with chapters in forty-six leading universities, including the University of California, Stanford, Columbia, Northwestern, University of Southern California and the University of California at Los Angeles, claimed two more of the San Francisco Junior College faculty a few days ago in the initiational ceremonies, held at the University of California.

Lee Eisan of the physical education department and Joseph Amori of the department of hygiene and commerce were initiated and joined with President A. J. Cloud, Dean Edwin C. Browne and Alden Smith of the faculty who are also members of the organization.

FINIS

The Football season of 1937 is over. Although it could never be accused of being a wonder team, the Ram Varsity demonstrated many elements of greatness. The amazing degree of improvement which developed after the Sacramento disaster showed that the team had the finest type of competitive spirit.

Somehow it seems unfair to base your opinion and judgment on an athletic aggregation merely on the cold, unimaginative figures that sum up victories and defeats. Our team was not a combination of capable mechanized units but rather an aggregation of flesh and blood, courage and determination, that was human but yet admirable in its ability to rise from a state of mid-season mediocrity to conclude the schedule in fine fashion.

In regard to its responsibility in representing the college, the football men have acquitted themselves adequately. Students from other institutions and the general public have always seen a well coached squad that never allowed the turn of victory or defeat to interfere with its sportsmanship.

To the members of the team the importance of their record will decline with the years. But the associations that were formed, the spirit of fellowship and cooperation that was developed, the thrill of clean, hard competition will all be bright threads in the life tapestry woven by all who had connections with the 1937 Varsity.

FASCISM AND THE COMMUNIST

Moscow has already informed us that we may be prepared both to have its agents boring within our institutions and to receive an invitation from it to cooperate against war and Fascism. The muddled, though humble, intellectuals who meekly take their orders from the infallible Kremlin are thus involving their minds in this contradiction: War, in the Soviet dialectic, capitalistic and Imperialistic war, is the best friend of Communism; Fascism is its worst enemy. Moscow says to fight both of them, so we have an American League against War and Fascism.

If this League succeeds against war, it will have saved capitalism from downfall. If there is no Fascism, it will mean that there has been no Communism, for Fascism is the middle class bourgeoise answer to a strong Communistic movement. It might be said that in this country the danger from Fascism is in direct proportion to the danger from Communism: no Communism, no Fascism.

The idea that by destroying Fascism in advance, the Communists can prepare the way for themselves is fantastic. By their own immutable dialectical principles they know, or ought to know, the opposite.

But the Russian mind is a fearful thing and not to be investigated. Both Marx and Lenin warned their followers against the intellectuals who could be converted to Communism and make it a fashionable exercise. The illogical tendencies demonstrated by the Reds in their efforts to combat an order breaking war and to fight with the strongly-entrenched Fascists, gives evidence to support the theory that this may be soon coming to pass, and Lenin's worst fears may be realized. It is almost too good to be true but it seems at this point as if somebody is getting ready to give the Communist threat in America the death kiss.

YOUTH TODAY

Each generation of college youth feels that it is the epitome of sophistication. We scorn the ideals and beliefs of older humanity, we laugh at their conception of amusement, and what is more vital, we have a tendency to think their philosophy of life is adolescent.

Generalizations are always difficult but it would seem that we were not being too unreasonable if we classified the attitude of the modern generation, our generation, as being fatalistic.

The youth of today thinks himself eternally mysterious. Every day of life Youth finds itself experiencing new, undefinable sensations. We live, we die. The fatalist says what occurs in the interim is of no great importance. All things seem a mirage in the desert. Once you reach them you realize that they are nothing but illusions that you have built up in your own mind. We have ambitions but what are they? When youth achieves certain stages of accomplishment, he finds that success and victory, when you have them for a few days, become like a glass of beer that has stood too long.

We search for peace, say the more philosophical. Only an optimist could hope to find any peace in the restless, insatiable nature of man. Youth is often its own severest critic. Youth says he is lazy, dishonest, not too intelligent, surly and cowardly. Yet he feels that he is alike to other generations.

REFLECTIONS AT HOLIDAY TIME

Thanksgiving time is close at hand
And Christmas too, I'm thinkin'.
And soon 'twill be the birthday time
Of Washington and Lincoln.
Next comes Decoration Day,
July the Fourth and then
Labor Day, Oh, Labor Day,
And off we go again.
There's Hallowe'en and Armistice,
We only rest awhile 'til
Old Thanksgiving comes again,
It's all a vicious cycle!

CONGRATULATIONS!

As the football season is drawing to a close, it seems a bit pertinent to give a word of congratulation to the Ram gridders for the swell football some of them have played throughout the semester. Maybe they didn't win as many games as they should have, but they did win the important games, at least those that were important in the eyes of the Associated Students as a whole. They licked Marin, which was important because it was the first game of the season and meant a lot toward working up spirit for future games; they beat State, our so-called "big rival," and no explanation is required concerning the importance of that one; they beat San Mateo, another of our "big rivals," in a game that was really a game, and they beat Los Angeles, settling, for awhile at least, the superiority of the North over the South. Not claiming to be a sports writer, we cannot say how good or bad the season was, technically, but, speaking from the standpoint of Mr. and Miss Average Student, we say to Coach Russ and his Russ-lers, "Nice going, fellows, you played some mighty sweet football." (Honestly, we didn't mean that last crack for a pun, it just slipped in!)

PRESENTING

May We Present . . . Gloria Swicegood, President of the Women's Athletic Association and member of the Executive Council and the Cap and Meg Society . . . born in San Francisco, attended Mission High School and will enroll at Cal in August, 1938 . . . her big ambition is to be a doctor and her hobbies all revolve around sports, the main one being riding . . . her pet hate is the task of carrying a slide rule around on street cars because "it keeps poking people and slips out from between my books at the worst times!"

BONERS

Maybe it wasn't nearly so funny as it struck us at the time, but we did get a kick out of President Blumenthal asking Norma Parent, and seriously too, if the last AWS tea was to be "in the afternoon or in the evening?" It was almost as funny as the time that Stan Adams upset a Cap and Meg meeting by asking "Who's she?" when Amstrup's name was called. He you see, thought the name was Ann Strup. And then there was the time that Al Williams thought Mr. Selig was a student and the time that Tip Hamilton thought Gerry Orginos was Caroline's brother and Vera Walsh thought Thanksgiving came on a Wednesday, and, but why go on? You have all probably heard lots of funnier things if you have kept your ears open around the old Campi.

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

ONCE AGAIN . . .

Well, well, here we are in the home stretch once more! Another semester is drawing to a close. It is with a sigh and a sob that we realize it is getting so near to those pesky finals. Visions of turkey and cranberry sauce do not wholly suffice to keep the dread specter from haunting us, as we go about the business of suddenly remembering term papers, outlining our lecture notes for last minute "jam sessions," and striving to enter the good graces of all our dear profs.

Classes around the college seem to grow in size about this time of the year, as all the little kiddies commence attending "that class I haven't been to for weeks." Professors smile with benignity upon those of their charges who have been getting the A's, and are a cinch to crack the final, while they bestow almost pitying gazes on the miserable wretches who have gotten cinches every midterm.

Once again, the local sports writers drag out all the superlatives at their command, and attempt to blow, what in reality to many people is just another football game, the annual encounter between Cal and Stanford into the "super-super-super" class. Well, we probably love it, at that, it all goes to make up Thanksgiving Week.

VOTE . . . VOTE . . .

College elections are coming up again, and even though it seems like a lot of guff to many "stoog-ents," it does and should mean something far from frivolous to a goodly portion of the boys and girls, particularly those who aspire to office. Far be it from us to attempt any editorializing in a column of this caliber, but we feel that it wouldn't do any harm to mention in passing, that we think it the privilege and, yes, duty of every student, who is at all interested in his school, to decide on his choice of the candidates and support them by voting at the polls.

Maybe it's slightly irrelevant, but we thought it was pretty good when we heard it the other night:

Here's to old Omar
Khayyam—
I'm stuck on that beggar—I'am!
His women and wine
are something divine
For his verses I don't care a damn!

In the days before the war, so they tell us, toasts were all the rage, and if one could regale a gathering with a selection of especially witty quips, he was quite the fellow. Some of the things they got a kick out of in Mother and Dad's school days were sure funny, to hear them tell it.

THE PRESS . . .

Reminiscing seems to be a favorite trait of all journalists and near journalists. The other night, Bob Spencer, a compatriot of ours during the Rawson Regime, was over at the house, and we got to discussing the "old days" on Powell Street, when the boys used to gather in Fosters of a cold winter morning, and enjoy a bull-fest over a cup of java. Alas, pickets and onion (pardon) union trouble have apparently closed our rendezvous spot for good.

With apologies to FEM, May We Resent . . . Morence Flurphy's eternal bragging about the Irish. Miss Flurphy is Associate Deadheaditor of The Guardswomen . . . graduated from Miss Twiddle's School for Girl Geniuses, Morence plans to go on to Paducah Agricultural College, after getting out of San Francisco Junior College in 1948 . . . likes to write alleged poetry, cut paper dolls, make up page two of The Guardswoman, and save tinfoil . . . pet hates are mangling editors and managing editors (same thing) . . . Miss Flurphy was born and has been bragging about it ever since.

Shuddering, when we think of the retaliation this bit of satire will inspire, we leave you until next week.

DISSERTATION ON PEACE . . . AND WAR

Oddly at variance with a world that seemingly seeks only of war, we would rather seek of that millennium, which apparently we do well to cherish—peace. To educate a person toward achieving peace, we must somehow necessarily involve and explain war, with its futility of purpose, its subsequent sorrow, tragedy, and destruction.

People must be educated to appreciate the futility, the madness, the insanity that is war, as well as the prosperity, security, and happiness that is peace. Obviously true that in war no one wins and all nations lose, still we persist in destroying all that has been built up, exchanging gladness for sorrow, genius for depravity, security for insecurity, and a happy, fruitful life for one that borders on the unbearable.

From time immemorial, nations have suffered frightful privations, have destroyed their lands, have seen their property ruined, have smeared the pages of history with blood—in wars—that have served but a small purpose. War—that has laid waste every battle ground, that has spilled the tears of women and children, and the blood of men. Why? For Liberty? Peace? Democracy? No, these are not the reasons, as moral and idealistic as they read and sound. Our problem is psychological. Man must be educated from within to the problems without.

WHY PERIODIC?

Analyzing man's instincts in fighting and war, it becomes evident that men could not be made to fight had they not the urge to do so. Bearing in mind man's underlying feeling, we can trace personal conflicts, by simple steps of progression, through, ultimately, to war. And so we come to our panegyrists, our eulogists of war, who say then, that without a periodic conflict or bleeding, a race decays and loses its manhood. Of all wars, the last war was the most direct opposition to, and convincing disproof of this barbarous assertion. It is war that destroys our manhood, wastes our wealth and condemns us to be governed by adventurers.

When nations prosper during a period of peace, they become arrogant and aggressive on the strength they have stored up in their development. Rather than turn their bursting enthusiasms to the arts, to the furtherance of science and the development of literature, some nations exhibit their depraved mental processes, by wasting their newly-found strength on that which satisfies their animal instincts and their lust for glory—war.

"It is the race that is fresh from its struggle with nature, that descends victoriously into the arena of nations, conquers armies at the first blow, becomes the military aristocracy of the next era, and is itself ultimately sapped and decimated by battle."—Santayana. Perhaps then, in a nation untouched by war, we might again find a true, genuine humanity.

THE ANSWER?

The future of peace might lie in the future development of international law, to make it a system, although based upon natural law, somewhat more positive in its application. Through its widely varied interpretations, as each nation sees fit, the militarist is once again given his opportunity to pursue war, and the eulogist of it, his chance to degrade himself before his people.

Finding the stage set for another war, and as a youth speaking to other youths, let us face the problem squarely.

Divide not our sympathies, profit by our experiences of the past, devote ourselves to the problems confronting us at home, and perhaps on all future Thanksgivings, as on this one, we can give thanks for our safe being in a nation dedicated to peace!

This week is certainly wind-up week, and here it is time again to remind you to vote for AWS officers. Details of how, where, and when you may vote appear elsewhere in the paper, but what good are they if you don't take advantage of them? AWS officers should represent the choice of a majority of the AWS members. With that we'll sign off, hoping that the best co-ed wins.

GLOBE-TROTTER

We seem to be running to freshmen in our parade of Great Personalities of San Francisco Junior College, and the newest, shiniest freshmen of all is this week's personality, Ralph Carruthers.

If you were at Miami Military Academy a few years ago, at Roosevelt High School in St. Louis a little later, or at Lowell in our own fair city just last term, you probably knew Ralph. Ralph has been to these places and also to New York, Havana, and a few other towns you may have heard of in Geography. (Lack of space forbids enumeration of more than a few.)

Only sixteen, Ralph sets the pace in most of his classes, and class averages are apt to be fairly high wherever he chooses to study. When asked what he intends to do when he finishes junior college, Ralph answered, as befits the very young, "I don't know."

ATHLETICS

Biggest news in women's activities just now is WAA tourney week, that semi-annual celebration during which all the athletic clubs display their achievements for the semester. A swimming carnival, a horse show, and a dancing recital are planned, and WAA officers urge you to participate in whatever activity your club or sport is giving. Speaking of tourney week, co-eds taking dancing are working up a first-class case of the jitters before their recital, which is to be performed before an audience, no less. And now we have found one advantage to being nearsighted—the audience will be invisible and we will perform with perfect poise—we hope.

Gloria Swicegood, otherwise known as the Women's Block Society, and WAA president, should be congratulated for managing an unusually successful semester. With increased interest in women's sports manifested, and with the WAA membership augmented by including women taking only one sport, Gloria has had more work to do than almost any other WAA president. That she has handled WAA affairs so capably is to her credit.

EXCHANGE NOTES

The 1937 "Derrick," annual yearbook of the high school and junior college of Taft, California, was awarded All-American Honor Rating by the National Scholastic Press Association, for the seventh straight year. Probably one of its interesting points could be its dedication—to the tax payers of the Taft Union High School and Junior College District.

—THE GUSHER.

Earle Blakeslee, Chaffey College A Cappella choir supervisor, has set the famous poem, "In Flanders Fields," to music, in dedication to the high School Girls' Glee Club. Others of Mr. Blakeslee's arrangements are "Drink to Me Only with Thine Eyes," "Old Black Joe," and "Sands of Dee."

—CHAFFEY UNITED PRESS.

Stanford University received Professional Achievement in Journalism, highest honor of Sigma Delta Chi, national journalistic fraternity, according to David Botsford, Stanford's representative, to the annual convention at Topeka, Kansas. Basis of the award was the fact that more alumni of the last 5 years are now employed in successful newspaper work than any of the other 30 chapters in the United States. Chester Rowell, editor of the San Francisco Chronicle, was named honorary member of the fraternity.

—STANFORD DAILY.

Diplomacy in its highest form was displayed by a local (in any town or city in California) store when it advertised the same dress in rival papers, Daily Californian and Stanford Daily, with the same caption, "Dress for Victory."

GRIDDERS TROUNCE MODESTO, TAKE TITLE

Lambs Finish Season With 25-0 Victory

Gaddymen Unleash New Razzle-Dazzling Air Circus

By JERRY FLAMM

In a terrific onslaught of offensive football coupled with an inspired wide-open brand of play, and not a little burlesque, Coach Jack Gaddy's Flying Lamb football team concluded a very successful season with a 25-0 win over the San Francisco State Junior Varsity team in the screwiest football game staged this season.

With Gaddy's instructions to "shoot the works," the Lambs rode roughshod over their opponents in this "Big Little Game" before a screaming, crazed mob of 18 grid addicts who filled the Roberts Field "bowl". Coach Jack Gaddy out "Texaned" the Texans in unorthodox football attacks, as his men ran tackle-around passes, fumble plays, started the second half with twelve men, sent in one man and took out two, and finally sent the water-boy in to punt. State tried to match this new offense by splitting their team in two and sending half of the men to the other side of the field in rugby formation for laterals, and by a new one of calling a quick kick and then throwing the ball aside and booting one of the blocking backs in the ribs, laying him out and confusing the defense. However, the State boys were just up against a daffier team, and never had a chance.

CREGI SCORES

The Rams scored early in the first quarter when Ed Cregi received a 20-yard pass from Joe Alio and ran 20 yards more to a touchdown. Cregi had advanced the ball to State territory on the preceding down on a fifteen yard romp around left end behind beautiful blocking by Meiner, Seely and Cloud. "Fifi" Balastracci failed to convert because of the strong wind. The Lambs soon ploughed down to the State 20-yard line in another advance, but lost the ball when they fumbled on their copyrighted "fumble play." State, not to be outdone, fumbled back to the Lambs. The Lambs got disgusted and Cregi faded back and threw a touchdown pass to "Dib" Allen in the end zone. Allen then converted to make the score 13 to 0.

The Lambs opened the second quarter with their "fumble play," determined that if Gaddy said it was a good play, it must be. This time they were lucky when Speraw recovered the free ball for them. After all, what was a few yards loss! The Lambs were after touchdowns. Late in the quarter Balastracci, with the wind at his back, intercepted a State forward pass and with Smith, Tobiason, Amstrup and Yates clearing the path brought the ball back to the State 10-yard line. Then with the center trio of Pasquallete, Tessier and Speraw opening wide holes in the State line, Alio and Cregi plunged down to the two-yard line from where Jim Mohlick drove over into paydirt. Allen missed the conversion as the wind began to increase again.

The Lambs opened the third quarter auspiciously, lining up with a twelve-man team on the kickoff. The Staters were baffled by the 7-2-2-1 defense, which was something new to them. The officials never found out until Coach Gaddy sent in one guy who was fresh for two guys who were getting tired. Here, State tried a quick kick, but the kicker missed the ball and laid out one of his own men. Late in this quarter, Cregi whipped a southpaw pass to Allen, which was good for a forty-yard gain to the State 25-yard line. Convinced that the third time is a charm, the Lambs next called a "fumble play" and prayed. Guard Paldi scooped up the ball behind the line and ran toward the left flank and lateraled out to Cregi for a gain of six yards. Coach Lee Eisan, father of the fumble play and the only official to recover a fumble at Kezar Stadium this year, beamed while Coach Gaddy thanked him. Two plays later, Alio passed to Tony Manuel in the end zone to conclude the day's scoring. A lineplunge for the point failed.

BERMAN MANGLED

At this juncture a loping figure clad in cords and packing a football helmet romped onto the gridiron. It was Mickey Berman, assistant varsity football manager. Joe Garcia, the varsity manager, sitting in the packed stands, was conducted out of the stadium by some Red Cross attendants in a semi-hysterical condition. It was punt formation and Berman got set to kick. The center sent a wild pass back to Berman, and the rest of the team let all possible tacklers through as instructed. Berman chased the rolling ball. Wham! A bewildered Berman was led off the field after they discovered that no bones had been broken. Berman is still explaining to the coaches how it happened.

RAMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

It hasn't been the policy of this column to blast anything or anybody, and it's too late to start now, but it certainly does seem that members of the crew, soccer, and tennis teams have received rather a raw deal. The three aforementioned activitis were relegated recently to the position of "minor sports," for which blocks are not given, despite the fact that they require as much practice, time, and exertion as any of the so-called "major sports."

* * * *

Coach Jack Gaddy's Flying Lambs, the "cannon fodder" of the football squad, have just concluded a schedule, about which most members of the student body knew nothing. Playing without ballyhoo or build-up, the Lambs met a number of high school and "goof" teams, and managed to round out quite a satisfactory season, despite the fact that the members of the team were about the only ones who knew when the games were played. Some of the fellows from this year's Lambs are sure to be heard from next year on the varsity; among them are Bill Tessier, "Snuffy" Joe Alio, "Jeep" and Lefty Cregi, all of whom have shown considerable promise.

* * * *

With the close of the football season, those tempting offers are again making the rounds among the football players. The old promises of tropical paradises and ivy-covered, tradition-soaked campi (you've probably been saying campuses—we have) are held out alluringly to the more proficient gridders, one institution vying with another for their services.

This is not intended to be a condemnation of the proselyting system, which is probably a good thing, inasmuch as it gives a chance for higher education to a lot of fellows who would probably have had to do without it were it not for their prowess with the pigskin. To be sure, there are still a few idealists who moan annually about the degradation of the game, but they are in the minority. Most people realize by this time that anything they may say won't make any difference, so they keep still, and are shown a much better brand of football when they go to a game than that tendered them a few years ago.

The "Get-a-Date-for-Weichers Club" is still going strong, under the leadership of Merv Weiner, and reports that progress is expected in the near future.

It has been reported that the fencing classes are still fencing.

Some students have been observed to be still looking a bit purplish, and no wonder. Modesto Friday night, the Big Game Saturday, and Lord-knows-what Saturday night was apparently more than some of them could stand. At that, it was quite a siege for one week-end.

* * * *

The "truckin'" mania which struck the football team some time ago seems to have abated. No longer does one come upon gridders performing weird gyrations in out-of-the-way spots, or scuffing the soles off their shoes in desperate attempts to perfect themselves in the art. Instead, most of them are now to be found in the study hall, poring over their books. Ohhhhh, yeah.

TRIO OF SPORTS POPULAR WITH WOMEN

Basketball Junior Varsity To Start Practicing Today

Announcing Wednesday, November 23, as the date for signing up for Junior Varsity Basketball, Coach Tom Wilson said that there will be no weight limit for team members. Last season the Junior Varsity, better known as the 145's, was comprised mainly of light-weight basketball players, but this season anyone may play regardless of weight or size.

Candidates are to report at the Funston Field House where practice will be held for the rest of this semester, at one o'clock sharp. They are to bring their own gym equipment to workout in. Practice will begin Monday and continue every day thereafter from 1 to 2:30 o'clock.

Those who intend to sign up for the Junior Varsity do not have to take their regular gym period, but will have to change the hour at the Physical Education office at Galileo to the new time in order to keep their records straight.

Although it belongs to no conference, the Junior Varsity plays a full season of basketball. Wilson has already scheduled several games to be played during the Christmas vacation. Napa High School is returning for a second encounter at this time. When the spring semester opens again and the basketball season is in full swing the juniors will play the preliminary to the varsity games, playing local high schools and clubs.

More Members of Championship Soccer Squad Are Introduced

Last week we described some of the fellows who played on the soccer team, that brought the second championship in as many years to the college. This week we complete the Thumbnail Sketches of the squad.

Frank "Beevo" O'Conner, Right Halfback—Frank rightly deserves the title of "most improved player on the squad." The first part of the season he was one of the "greenest" men on the team, but he pitched in with a willingness to learn the fundamentals of the game. Just four weeks ago, because of constant improvement, he broke into the starting lineup. O'Conner has the makings of a great soccer player. He is extremely cool on the field, and was a big factor in the Ram's defense.

Bob Campbell, Left Halfback—Bob is strictly a team player. He is the type of fellow that the coach likes to have on a squad. Like O'Conner he is also cool under fire, and together they make up a half-back combination that is the best in the league.

Vince "Kewpie" Zuardo, Right Fullback—A veteran of last year's title-winning team, Zuardo is the outstanding fullback in the league. He is a veritable block of granite on defense, and many fellows found to their chagrin that Vince could rough it up when the occasion demanded.

"Wild" Bill Flynn, Left Fullback—Bill is the type of player who likes the going tough. Besides being the possessor of the best "boot" on the team, he also is possessor of one first rate Irish temperament that never walks around a scrap. No matter how far behind his team may be he plays with the same fiery exuberance that he started the game with.

Bill Fisher, Goalie—There is an old axiom in soccer that says "a good basketball player always makes a good goalie," and in this case the theory is upheld. Coach Wilson was faced at the beginning of the season with the enigma of finding someone to fill the tough goal keeping berth. After some persuasion he induced Fisher, who is quite a casaba tosser, to try out for the position.

Fisher possesses all the natural equipment of a good goalie, that is height, speed, and most of all a good eye. Coach Tom certainly picked the right man for the job, for Fisher allowed only three goals to be scored on him in all the league games combined.

Malcolm Nicco, Outside Left—Nicco was the handy man of the squad, playing both in the forward line and in the backfield. As soccer is a game of specialization, he should be praised for his ability to play two tough positions equally well. Although his work at half-back is probably as good as any one on the starting lineup, he was used in the all-important utility position, because of his versatility.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

Tourney Week, Oh Tourney Week,
You come but once a semester.
Yes, thank God.

Which means that after writing steadily about Tourney Week from 6 o'clock to 11 o'clock and then faced with turning out a column, thoughts revert to (Ah you guessed it) Tourney Week. Already "squirrely" after chasing not butterflies but flitting WAA managers and instructors and taking countless figurative blows on the chin for not arranging sports pictures sooner, the evening's work has had the effect of practically convincing us that we're not Jean Page at all, but Damon Runyon. So in this condition bravely marches the Women's Sports Parade upon the sport page of The Guardsman. Take a deep breath, here goes!

* * * *

All of the women enrolled in rifle participated in a women's match held from Friday until yesterday. The scores reaped helped determine finals grades and which girls were eligible for WAA awards in rifle. This was the last competitive match of the season, as the match during Tourney Week will be an exhibition match according to rifle manager, Virginia Kwiatt.

* * * *

Three rounds of the badminton tournament have been played. Dorothy Canavan defeated Ruth Hacke, Ethel Vizzard defeated Dorothy Rodenback, and Jean Lonkey defeated Helen Nast. Finals of the tournament will be played during Tourney Week.

* * * *

Last Saturday the golf classes played Lincoln Golf course for the first time. Despite this, the scores of the majority were quite favorable.

* * * *

Tops among those enrolled in rifle are Virginia Kwiatt, Sylvia Rogenes, Betty McKenzie, Gail Hanna, Margaret Park, and Helen Elcroft.

* * * *

A photographer should have been present to catch the expression on Photographer Marg's face as he strode through the YWCA lobby, carrying a large suitcase, and followed by the cold stares of indignant dowagers.

* * * *

Norma Gattavara wants it announced that, acting in official capacity, she has named the only water polo ball possessed by the junior college, "Junior." Get it? Imagine a college mermaid bobbing up from the dark recesses of the pool and shouting, "Juuunnniiiooorrr."

* * * *

Congratulations to the chairmen of the several committees for planning what promises to be one of the best Tourney Weeks ever held at the college. Sympathies to women athletes who, with bated breath, must wait until the banquet, December 2, to know which awards they have won.

Hey you! Ssshh, don't tell anyone, but it's Tourney Week next week.

STUFF

By JERRY FLAMM

When the Rams lined up against the Modesto a la U.S.C. offense last Friday night, for a brief moment they thought they were in the wrong place. When the Modesto outfit came out of their huddle, lined up in three parallel lines, and then went through some intricate backsteps, sidesteps, half-gaynors, and whatnot, before coming up to the line of scrimmage, the wide-eyed local boys thought they were facing the front line chorus of "The Golddiggers of 1938." It was more like a riot than a shift. Bud Weichers was heard to yell: "Look out, men, they're going to surround us!" The Ram defenders had to take a little time after the movement to locate the positions of the Modesto ball-carrying threats. It was necessary to locate them because there was a subsequent backfield shift that again shuffled them about. The play got into motion immediately following this second shift and did not permit time to survey the resultant positions before the ball was snapped from center.

The periodicals and newspapers are filled each year with the mental mumblings and vagaries of the active brains of the gentlemen of the press engaged in filling the sport pages with news and reading matter concerning football. When faced with a shortage of material upon which to sprinkle adjectives and superlatives, they will reminisce. One of the favorite customs when in this latter situation is to write of a "dream team." A team, composed in their imagination of what they deem the best players they have seen during their many years of viewing the greensward. We have not the experience of these gentlemen, nor do we profess to have their wisdom. Sight unseen, however, of the greats of gridiron history, we hereby nominate five former campus heroes to our own personal "dream team." We do not claim that they are the greatest to have ever donned cleats. Our viewpoint is probably contaminated by personal contact with the individuals. Nevertheless, they go on our team for better and worse. Here they are:

Russell Sweet, FB, U. of Montana.
Leland Eisan, RH, U. of California.
Thos. Wilson, LH, College of Pacific.
Louis Conlon, Q, St. Mary's College.
Jack Gaddy, E, U. of San Francisco.

Putting sentiment and prejudice aside, we wish to back up these nominations with a few facts. Each one of these men were chosen on All-Coast selection teams and were All-American nominees. Several of them in spite of the fact that they were with teams of little national repute. We can confirm the ability of the few who we witnessed in action many years ago. You would not doubt our selections either if you could come out to Funston Field during practice and watch Russ Sweet root out beautiful, spiraling 60-yard punts consistently. You could watch Lee Eisan scrimmage against the first team with very little blocking help and leave eight or nine eager tacklers prone on the ground feeling very foolish after having had clear shots at him, as happened last fall; or watch Jack Gaddy run rings around a pass defender. All this, despite the fact that these men have not played competitive football for seven, eight, or more years. And Dutch Conlan and Tom Wilson could put on some mighty sweet exhibitions now, too, if called upon by necessity.

* * * *

Coach Russ Sweet tried to introduce soccer to the Ram squad last week for timing purposes. The game was rather new to the boys so he explained it as best he could.

Sides were chosen and play was about to begin when it was discovered that no ball had been provided. There was a brief delay and finally Art Nelson, halfback, exclaimed:

"Hell with the ball, coach, let's start the game!"

Rams Roll Up Early Lead, Repulse Pirates In Second Half to Score 14-0 Victory

By DON MIX

Rising to great heights in a thrill packed ball game that saw two touchdowns being scored in the first five minutes of play, Russ Sweet's rejuvenated Ram footballers swamped a favored Modesto outfit by the score of 14 to 0 last Friday night and thereby shoved themselves into a statistical tie for the conference championship.

It was a fighting Ram team playing a truly great ball game that literally swept the bewildered Buccaneers off the field in the opening minutes of play by punching over two touchdowns and then proceeded to completely outplay last year's conference champs for the remainder of a game which was filled with unorthodox defenses, reckless laterals, and brilliant forward passes.

Soon after the opening kickoff the inspired San Franciscans pulled off a perfectly executed reverse pass that saw Al McDonald, Ram's offensive star, fade far back and toss a 25 yard pass to Elwood Pearce, workhorse end, who went far up into the air to make the catch and then gallop the remaining twenty yards to the goal line. Bud Weichers came through in fine fashion to boot a perfect conversion.

BOITANO RAMBLES

A couple of minutes later Walt Boitano, sleepy eyed speedster fullback, intercepted a Buccaneer forward tossed deep in the Sweetmen's territory and raced for 63 yards on a brilliant run to the Modesto 9 where he was finally trapped but as he went down Boitano tossed a lateral to the omnipresent El Pearce who went six more yards to the 3 yard line. Captain Wes Olson and Boitano each took a crack at the line to produce the tally. Weichers again converted.

The remainder of the game saw the locals shoved the bulky Pirates around the field but they were unable to connect with a touchdown. The vicious Ram line, with every man playing perfect ball, seemed to be the determining factor in the complete rout of the outclassed Modestans, although the wide open unorthodox attack of the Valley lads who were sparked by driving Wild Bill Irvin and Bob Lawrence caused Sweet some anxious moments. The Modesto threat never came closer than the Ram twenty-five where brilliant aerial defense smothered the attack.

The Modesto clash was the final appearance of the 1937 Ram varsity and the phenomenal fashion in which the grim faced San Franciscans acquitted themselves seems to make a mere recital of facts and figures, offensive drives and defensive strategy, all seem unimportant in the light of a victory which had its basis in sheer determination and a "will to win".

Russ Sweet needed no brilliant display of oratory to send a mentally right eleven out on the field. The Rams were set as Captain Wes Olson said, "To shoot their bolt." The manner in which they did their shooting left nothing to be desired.

WEINER STARS

Every man on the team gave a sparkling performance. Merv Weiner, Andy Oddstead and Bud Weichers were magnificent as they ripped the left side of the Pirate forward wall wide open. The same line that was made to look foolish and futile against Sacramento several weeks previous was invincible against the highly touted Bucs.

The Modesto attack which was reported to be fearful combination of powerful thrusts inside the tackles and an unstoppable aerial attack never was able to move against the Ram line. Guards Moon Burke and Andy Oddstead submarined, knifed through, and pulled plays down from behind all night to turn in the best performance of their careers.

If any member of the line was outstanding it was Merv Weiner, the right tackle. The former goof fullback was all over the field on defense, smashing the Pirate wide stuff at the line of scrimmage and ganging up to make impossible tackles in the middle of the line.

Jerry Flamm and Stan Bierwidth alternated at the other tackle post and poured general hell on the Modesto ends and wing backs. The original hard luck boy of the Sweet legions, Duke Worsham, was injured early in the game and replaced by Mel Petersen who handled the pivot post in spectacular fashion.

BLOCKING GOOD

Elwood Pearce and Bud Weichers ganged up to completely handcuff the Pirate flank plays by some crashing end play. It was the crushing offensive blocking by these ends on the Buc tackles that sparked the Ram attack.

Captain Wes Olson, newly elected grid leader, played his usually spectacular defensive game and then demonstrated some hitherto hidden talent in open field running. Al McDonald was the outstanding ground gainer of the locals and played his star's role to perfection.

The grand stand was loud in its cheers for the ball carriers but on every

BASKETBALLERS OPEN CASABA WORKOUTS

Getting off to an early start, the Ram hoopsters are daily running through fundamentals under the able tutelage of Coach "Dutch" Conlan, who is looking forward to a championship team, although he has only three lettermen returning from last year's squad.

With a full schedule and a potential trip to Los Angeles in view, aspirants are fighting hard for the varsity berths, and plan to travel south about January 10, 1938. One of the bright lights in the Conlan machine is Tracy Slattery, a veteran forward, who has shown plenty of class so far and looms as a potential all-conference man.

Bill Phelan and Bob Egan returning lettermen, are both turning in stellar performances, but will have plenty of competition for the starting berths.

The Rams will be greatly bolstered by the aid of many new comers and former all-city players from Oakland and San Francisco. Among the aces is Willie Blackfield from Lowell, who is fast and has a deadly eye, and who should find a place in the starting line-up, when the team takes the floor for its first tilt.

A speedy little chap from Berkeley, Tony Gomez, a former all-county forward, is as elusive as an eel. Another little fellow is Bill Opalanski, who stands 6' 1", and is a three-year letterman from Commerce. Bill is out for the guard spot. He was rated as one of the best guards in the city last fall, and will probably be on the Ram's first quintet.

Paul Le Baron, a forward standing 5' 11" in his stocking feet, is rated the fastest man on the team and hails from Lowell High. Tom Pauli, hailing from Oakland and towering to the height of 6' 8", is out trying to fill the shoes of last year's lanky center, Monty Mordecai, who is lost to the school through graduation.

Another loss greatly felt by the team is that of little "Chubby" Kotta, erstwhile football player and one of the stars on last year's team. Chub will be ineligible this year because he played a couple of games while attending Golden Gate J. C.

Bill Neeko, a brother of Bob Neeko, who made history for the Ram quintet in its first year of competition, will be fighting hard to fill the job so ably held down by his brother. Another promising candidate is Bill Fisher, former Commerce High star.

Tennis Tournament Enters Third Round

Coach Tom Wilson has announced that any player interested in trying out for a place on next spring's tennis team should contact him and make arrangements to be put on the ladder. Players on the ladder will compete against each other to determine their respective standings on the squad, and the first seven men will be used in conference competition.

The singles of the intramural tennis tournament are posted at the Palace of Fine Arts, and the first round has been played off. Anyone who has signed up, cautions Coach Wilson, should remember that one match a week is required of a contestant or he will be dropped. The winner of this tournament will receive a medal, and a number of players have already reached the third round, among them Al Altfield, diminutive veteran, who has been going like a "house afire" in all his matches.

RAMS' HORN

PARKING REMEDY OFFERED

Editor, The Guardsman:

Of interest to both students and faculty members of the San Francisco Junior College is the parking situation of motor vehicles in the vicinity of Galileo High School. For many years students of Galileo High School, and more recently the junior college, were allowed to park their cars along Francisco Street on both sides of the street, with diagonal parking on the school side. This condition existed until only a few months ago, when certain parties took it upon themselves to change it all. Whether it has benefitted them or not, it has caused more inconveniences to the surrounding neighborhood because of the fact that residents are unable to park in front of their own homes while school is in session.

With parking space at a premium, Bay Street is restricted because of the construction of an underpass. As always, Van Ness and Polk streets are filled. Under present conditions a maximum of two dozen cars can be parked on Francisco Street with garage entrances and zones prohibiting more parking space.

With this condition in existence it has been suggested that parking be banned entirely on the far side of the street, and the owners of cars once more be allowed to park diagonally along the Galileo side of the street. This would enable many more to leave their cars nearer the school and at the same time it will not hamper the traffic going up and down Francisco Street.

It has been pointed out that such a plan is entirely feasible because of similar conditions in other parts of the city where diagonal parking is permissible. With the co-operation of the student body of both Galileo and the Junior College, namely the Cap and Meg society of the Junior college, a means of patroling Francisco Street can be arranged, as an aid to the San Francisco Police Department, until car owners become accustomed to any new regulations.

COAST TO COAST MATCH PLANNED

Plans for a correspondence tourney with Cornell University as well as the organization of a Junior College Chess League were chief topics for conversation at the last meeting of the Chess Club, held at the home of Carl Christiansen.

As team coach as well as faculty adviser, Henry Ralston gave a lecture on the proper mental attitude which must be assumed before a match. The tourney with Cornell will take place some time in the near future, according to Bill Switzer, president of the Chess Club. Also, officers of that organization are negotiating for matches with other colleges.

SWIMMING MEET FEATURED IN WAA WEEK

As part of Tourney Week's activities, two swim meets will be held on December 2 and December 3 at the YWCA pool. The meets will both be held from 12:30 to 1:30 o'clock and the first will be composed of beginning swimmers while the second will feature intermediate and advanced classes.

Swimming manager Norma Gattavara has arranged an extensive program which includes a medley relay race, a novelty candle race, backstroke, crawl, sidestroke races, standing, racing front, jackknife, and swan dives. After the races, members of the advanced class will participate in a water polo match.

"We urge all who can to come and watch our meets which will be the final swimming exhibitions of the semester," stated Miss Gattavara.

Colligan Cites Abundance of Library Mags

"Since the current news is to be found in magazines as well as in daily newspapers," Francis Colligan, instructor-in-charge of the library, said, "it is well that students avail themselves of the many magazines circulating from the college library."

H. G. Wells expounds his ideas on the present educational policies in the November issue of the "Survey Graphic." Stuart Chase writes about "The tyranny of words" in Harpers November edition. Many more articles of interest are contained in the library's numerous periodicals, according to Colligan.

All reference books have been moved to the Library room in the Extension Building in order to facilitate usage. These books include political science, economics, history, geography, and atlases.

Henderson's Class Visits Wells Fargo

Six hundred million dollars all around them and not a dime's worth of samples to spend was the experience of Jennet Henderson's Economics class when it made a field trip through the Wells Fargo Bank, Post and Market streets, last Wednesday.

The students were shown through the Historical Room, in which they saw many old coins, gold leaf and coin, gold and silver bullion in the raw, and the famous gold spike donated to the bank by Senator Leland Stanford, which was the last spike to be hammered into the ties connecting the east with the west, when the railroad was finally completed in 1869.

They enjoyed a most unique experience, that of dining in the Bank Restaurant with all the bank's employees.

At last, the pre-fabricated low cost house! A Japanese store is selling a package house, weighing only a ton and a half. This unique house can be assembled in three hours and sells at $170.

Some try to hide the unrest in accomplishment. The only time we are happy in the pursuit of greatness, it seems, is when we don't take time to consider how futile the result will be.

Such a philosophy is very probably due to our immaturity. When the weight of the years has given us polish we will laugh at our old theories about the futility of life.

...CLUBS...

Peace Society To Meet Monday Night

Final meeting of the Peace Society will be held next Monday night, November 29, at eight o'clock, at the home of Gertrude Bolton, 1060 Pine Street.

A discussion of the causes of war will occupy the educational portion of the meeting. The question has been divided into three parts. The economic reasons will be presented by Harry Becker, the social aspects will be dealt with by Doris Speroni, and Ray Valdez will explain how politics enters into the problem.

In addition to the business that will be discussed, Fred Vast is scheduled to report on the twelfth annual conference of the Student Institute of Pacific Relations, which he will attend over the Thanksgiving holidays, on behalf of the Society.

"As this is the last meeting of the semester," Vast, president of the group, said, "it will be the last opportunity for students to join the organization this semester. We invite all students interested in peace to attend the meeting and to become members of the organization. The Peace Society has been under fire this semester and we feel that one is justified in forming an opinion only if he or she comes to our meeting and sees what it is like. We are glad to have been able to present the rally in observance of Armistice Day.

"Although attacked repeatedly when it was in its formative stages, the Society has weathered the storm, it has secured a college charter and is now in a position to continue with its activities.

"At present," he continued, "we are meeting with a committee from the faculty, to work out ways and means of injecting the peace theme into the curriculum."

PE Weiner Roast Attracts Women

Thirty five women attended the PE Club weiner roast held at Sigmund Stern Grove last Thursday. At 5 o'clock after playing a few games, members formed a circle around the campfire and ate dinner, consisting of salad, beans, rolls, hot chocolate and cup cakes.

Following dinner, the girls who attended the roast from the San Francisco High Schools gave their school yells and sang their school songs. The WAA was then explained by WAA Vice-President Margaret Parks, and Bertha Keller, club sponsor, answered questions of the girls regarding the requirements needed in majoring in physical education.

Phillip King, a one-man band, performed, and all joined in on cowboy songs.

High school girls who attended the roast were: Balboa, Jean Scott, Ellen Kiernan, and Claire Knabeuschub; Polytechnic, Eleanor Stanley, Francis Palhemus, and Barbara Curreyer; George Washington, Laverne Minkel, Marilyn Bassett, and Becky Hendy; Commerce, Carol Simmonds, Barbara Berringer, and Kiki Koche; Galileo, Edna Norton, Grace Totti, and Jane Crawford; Lowell, Patsy Arabagboynton and Andrea Anderson; Mission, Lillian Giovanetti, Beula Bell and Evelyn Nelson.

Vaughn Will Speak At Omicron Dinner

Charles H. Vaughn, vice-president of Omicron Phi Pi and a member of the varsity debating squad, has been chosen to be the principal speaker at the semi-annual banquet of Omicron Phi Pi, Economics Honor Society, which will be held at the Ritz French Restaurant, 65 Post Street, December 1.

His topic for the evening will be on neutrality, with a discussion of its economic aspects. Efforts will be made also to have Franklin Sewell and Lloyd Luckmann, the society's two newest faculty members, and Michael Zarchin, faculty adviser, also to elaborate on Vaughn's subject. Vaughn will be chairman as well as principal speaker for the evening and is well qualified to speak on the aspects of neutrality.

At the last meeting of Omicron Phi Pi, Bill Gerard and Mrs. Cecille Elliot were selected to head the committee in charge of decoration and arrangements for the dinner. It is planned to have the tables appropriately decorated, and to carry out the theme of the honor society. A highlight of the evening's festivities will be that all those guests present are required to give an extemporaneous speech at a moment's notice. Cards will be concealed in an inconspicuous spot near each guest's plate, on which will be printed a subject on which he or she must speak. This plan produced an embarrassing dilemma for many at last year's banquet, but it was all meant to be in fun.

In requesting other schools throughout California to form Omicron Phi Pi chapters with San Francisco Junior College as headquarters, many favorable replies have been received. In some cases though, different schools have written in stating that there are not enough advanced Economics courses to warrant the formation of an Economics Honor Society. Two schools, Sacramento Junior College and Modesto Junior College, have stated that more courses in advanced Economics might be added to the curriculum of their schools, at which time they would be desirous of forming an Omicron Phi Pi chapter.

Since the first of the semester, Omicron Phi Pi has increased its memberships to more than a dozen members, and is steadily increasing in size and importance.

Phi Beta Rho Sets Installation Feed

Members of Phi Beta Rho will attend an installation dinner to be held at the Palace Hotel, December 3.

The following pledges will be initiated: Janet Falconer, Ruth Hale, Eloyas Cagle, Helen Bendel, Louise Falconer, Nadine Lilles, Barbara Mills, Leona Wilcox, and Muriel Mills.

Charter members of the sorority initiated at the first installation dinner held at the Western Women's Club on May 28 were: Fern Muhiem, Lorraine Haffmyer, Ruth Graham, Anita Lauerman, Charlene Schock, Betty Nelson, Virginia Hurst, Marian Delano, Marian Andervitch and Alice Thompson. Guest speakers at the dinner were Helen Kelly, French instructor, and Alden Smith, Public Speaking and Student Government instructor.

German Students Gather Tonight

College German Club members will hold their first official business meeting of the semester at the home of Helen Nast, 4112 24th Street, at 7:30 tonight.

The German students had heretofore banded together only occasionally to attend German-spoken motion pictures, and to hold informal discussions. At the meeting tonight, members will formulate plans for the club's activities for the remainder of the present semester. Refreshments will be served, and entertainment will be contributed by several members of the group.

Scanlon Speaks To Newmaneers

A talk by Newman Club Chaplain Father John Scanlon of Saint Mary's Cathedral highlighted the last meeting of that group on Monday evening, November 15.

Preceded by the oration was a discussion of the club's annual Christmas tree party to be held some time this December. "All members of the Newman Club are looking forward to this affair which probably will come shortly after final examinations," said President Bob Fex.

Forum To Ponder Value Of Movies

With the educational value of motion pictures as the subject of discussion, the College Forum will meet Wednesday evening, December 8, at the home of Marjorie Cusic, 2345 Divisadero st.

Ely Chertok will argue that today's Hollywood productions are of an educational nature. Tom Tillberry is slated to oppose Chertok's contentions and to attempt to prove that the movies are not educational.

Students interested in attending the meeting should see John Healy, chairman of the group, or Dorothy Mercer and William Goss, faculty advisers.

Musicians Meet In Little Theater

Meeting in Galileo's little theater, members of the Music Club will gather at 7:30 tonight to be entertained and complete old business. The entertainment will be furnished by a committee under the leadership of Bob Scott. New plans, including the elections for the next semester, will be discussed. Stressing the importance of the meeting, Kay Warner, president of the group, urged all members to be present.

Solari To Lead Italian Group

At the first formal meeting of the Italian Club, held last night at Galileo High School, officers of the club were installed and plans were laid for future activities. Those who took office were: president, Bill Solari; vice president, G. Coma; secretary, Victorio Sconandura, and treasurer, Louis Bertolero. The club under the guidance of faculty members Ubaldo Maggetti and Dora Garibaldi, plans to attend several functions to be given by local Italian federations. Refreshments were served and the next meeting was set for next Tuesday night at the same location. All interested in joining the club are asked to see any of the above-named persons.

Rifle Members Nominate Heads

Planning for next semester, the college Rifle and Pistol Club held nominations for next semester's officers, last Tuesday afternoon, November 18. Those nominated for officers were as follows: president, George Dieser (unopposed), vice-president, Charlene Schoch, Gail Hanna, and Edna Wedam; secretary, Edna Wedam, and Ronald Smith; treasurer, Don Smith (unopposed); members of Board of Control: Virginia Kwiatt, John Benton, Ronald Smith, Charles Schoch, Sylvia Rogenes and Duane Peterson.

James S. Hughes, club sponsor, advised that care be taken in selecting the officers who are to preside over the group next semester. The time and place for the election will be announced soon, according to George Dieser, president of the organization.

Three amendments, regarding alumni members, were passed and added to the club's constitution. They were: first, a membership fee of $1.00 a year for alumni members, payable in January; second, the president of the alumni group becomes a member of the club Board of Control, and third, any former member of the Rifle and Pistol Club may become an alumni member, with no right to vote or hold office, on payment of dues.

Plans were discussed for the final party of the club, which is to be held Friday evening, December 17. The tentative cost is 50c if paid in advance, and 75c at the door. This party will be the highlight of the club's social events and the results of the election will be announced that evening.

French Students To View Comedy

French students of the college will be forced to postpone their attendance at the French Comedy, "Marius," until the opening of the Andre Ferrier Theatre d'art, on the first of December, according to Helen Kelly, language instructor.

The students, who have united under the name "le Cercle Francais," met last Wednesday night at Miss Kelly's home to read and discuss the play.

Corrective Posture Tests For Freshman Women Begin Mon.

Although intended primarily for women enrolled in freshman activities classes, all freshman women are invited to take advantage of corrective posture tests to be held in the Galileo gym for two weeks beginning November 29th. The tests, a combination of both physical education and hygiene work, will be held at 3:30 o'clock on Mondays and Wednesdays, and at 2:30 o'clock on Tuesdays and Thursdays. Those who will supervise the various exercises are: Laurine Bergin, Bertha Keller, Vera Spencer, Verrel Weber, hygiene and physical education instructors, and Dr. Alice Potter, women's physician, being assisted by several women students who are majoring in physical education. Instructors will explain the plan today at 3:30 o'clock in the Galileo gym.

Unique tests and exercises will be offered. Students must demonstrate their ability to walk carrying books on the head, to climb stairs correctly, to sit and stand gracefully, to run an obstacle race, for which they will be timed, and they will be given a plumb-line test to see if the body segments are in alignment, and a stall-bar test. A score card will be provided for each woman to mark down her ratings on the various exercises. A schematograph (silhouette of figure) picture of each student, showing her faults, will then be taken.

At the conclusion of the tests, each student will have a conference with her instructor, who will advise her regarding defects that can be corrected and suitable exercises. Semester grade will not be influenced by the results of the posture tests. It is an instructional activity to help students to know and appreciate their own needs. The exercises will aid women in selecting sports in which they will be proficient.

"These tests will be amusing and interesting, showing the women what creatures of habits, poor ones too, they are," said Bertha Keller, one of the instructors in charge. "They will show abilities to move with poised graceful bodies. A lesson in useful and suitable exercises will be presented to each class."

Nebraska Reports

Dean of Nebraska college reports that study of the students' conversation indicates only seven-tenths of 1 per cent of the men and two-tenths of 1 per cent of the women are interested in economics and social matters. A bunch of politicians wouldn't show up much worse than that!

KUSTER REVEALS BROADCASTING TECHNIQUE

More than a hundred college students, alumni, guests, and faculty members attended a tea given by Ruth Jensen, college dramatics instructor, at her home on Telegraph Hill Sunday afternoon. With the purpose of the tea to make known the activities of present and former college students in radio and theatre work, three guests of honor were entertained: President Archibald Cloud, Edward Kuster, director of the Golden Bough Playhouse, and John B. Hughes, news commentator on radio station KFRC. Kuster spoke of the Golden Bough Theatre's coming production of the Maxwell Anderson play, Winterset, and Hughes discussed opportunities open to college students preparing for radio careers.

In defending Anderson's use of verse instead of standard dialogue in Winterset, Kuster said, "because the characters represent the lowest strata in the social scale, verse is not especially suitable to them individually, but it does convey the meaning and mood of the play to the audience, and gives it a universal aspect impossible to achieve with ordinary prose dialogue."

Kuster then spoke of his acting group, and said that his aim was to present the great New York plays that do not reach the Pacific Coast. Winterset, which many of the college drama students are planning to attend, began a one-week run Monday evening, at the Golden Bough Playhouse.

Later in the afternoon, Hughes discussed radio and the chances students have to enter it. Briefly he told of the various types of dramatic offerings broadcast, such as serials and "strip shows" (complete plays or sketches given in one performance,) and how the family serials drift on as the story evolves in the mind of the author who writes them as the performances go along. These commercial dramatic programs, Hughes said, offer the greatest opportunities for young actors, but also the greatest pitfalls, for characters may be written out of the story easily.

"Radio," Hughes continued, "is increasingly difficult to break into, although all radio stations have regular auditions. The audition is a terrific hazard both to the beginner and the veteran artist, but it should be faced with confidence and determination to succeed." Hughes then went on to advise students appearing for auditions to use their own material instead of the standard dialogue and continuity given by the studios for the purpose, since fresh material will attract far more attention.

"Success of an artist or a program is measured by audience reaction, and for this reason radio is full of 'breaks'. The larger salaries and jobs are few, and on the talent side radio offers little security, but successes are still being made," concluded the commentator, who then pointed out that advertising agencies are taking over radio production, and that television will probably develop rapidly when released for commercial use.

After Dark

By John Ward

It is indeed very unfortunate that when Miss Angna Enters gave an afternoon of her exquisite characterizations two weeks ago the Curran theatre was literally plastered with burlesque advertisements and not a mention of Miss Enters could be found outside. As a result the house was barely filled and a great artist was passed up certainly because of bad publicity by local theatre goers.

The weekends are taken up these days by radio symphony programs. On Saturday night the NBC Symphony under Piere Monteaux (later Arturo Toscanini); on Sunday afternoons the New York Philharmonic under Mr. Barbarolli; Monday evenings with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Stokowski or Ormandy. We wonder what will happen when the Metropolitan Opera begins broadcasting Christmas day, and when the San Francisco Symphony begins its season in December.

It is interesting to note that Shakespeare's "Richard II" is being played in London by John Gielaud. Maurice Evans made quite a success of this play in New York last season and plans to bring it to San Francisco some time next spring. And, as the critics generally agree that Richard is a pretty poor play, it appears increasingly obvious that the world still loves a lover—especially one who is in high office and who can juggle crowns.

The RCA-Victor company has just released a series of magnificent records all made in Europe. This is the first venture of its kind for Victor, thus these records have been next to impossible to obtain. Now there will be little difficulty in buying the Tschaikowsky Trio, for instance, as played by the Menhuin trio, or the Leider Recital of Elizabeth Schuman, or the four piano concerto of Bach, or the Clock Chiming Scene from "Boris Godonof" done by Chaliapin.

Current at the San Francisco Museum of Art is an exhibition of Maurice Sterne's paintings. These are a gift to the museum and are certainly an important addition to the already fine collection in the museum's store-house. Mr. Sterne was in San Francisco last year teaching at one of the art schools. Also at the museum is an exhibit of hobbies that should be extremely interesting and suggestive.

The San Francisco Opera season has closed (in Los Angeles), making up, so the reports say, the deficit of some thousands of dollars that the company suffered in San Francisco last month. This is very pleasant, indeed. Something to thank Los Angeles for. No one ever minds someone else paying the bill. Next year, however, let us have a good season, Mr. Merola. Los Angeles may be willing to pay for Pons and Cigna and Maison, but San Francisco won't for long.

There appears to be underway a wholesale education in the arts in America. And what with radio and the cinema going operatic and symphonic, America could hardly hold out. Now the newspapers, of all institutions, have taken up the torch and are spreading propaganda for the visual arts. A whole series of excellent reproductions are being offered for coupons and for pennies. Now this should make the aestheticians shake for dear life and pull in their great bow ties with disgust. The holy domain is being overrun by the masses! This should make them shake indeed for art is being pulled down from a stupid pedestal and thrust into the eyes and the ears and the mouths of babes and sucklings!

play, according to Sweet, it was the powerhouse block by "Bubbles" Egelhofer that sprung the offense into the clear. The roly poly quarterback called a perfect game and was the mainstay of the secondary defense.

Walt Boitano and little John Verducci alternated at fullback and were the spearhead of the Sweet running attack during the entire game.

The team as a whole was briefly but adequately summed up by the man who knew it best. "Potentially they were just another football team but a super abundance of a fine competitive spirit and a dogged determination not to be beaten put them into the championship class."

SAN FRANCISCO JUNIOR COLLEGE

DON'T FORGET!! VOTE FOR YOUR CHOICE TODAY!!

Vol. V WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1937 No. 14

ELECTION OF STUDENT LEADERS TODAY

EDITORIAL . . . .

ELECTION DAY

Students of the college will today elect their representatives and leaders for the Spring semester of 1938. Strict supervision and cooperation by the administration has assured the college that there will be no "irregularities charged" as has happened in the past. An extremely competent election committee, and the use of regulation voting machines make certain an "unavoidably honest" contest.

Some students will adopt what they consider a super-sophisticated attitude toward the whole matter, and smile with scornful superiority at those who announce an interest in the elections. They cannot see that they mistake their own indolent apathy for cleverness, and accuse others of adolescent exuberance because they cannot recognize healthy interest. A famed editor of The Guardsman of two semesters ago branded those who refuse to cooperate in student government efforts as lazy and contemptible.

Who you vote for will not be very important in the long test of time. But it is the spirit of willingness to shoulder an obligation, the urge to be an active force in things happening around you that gives your vote meaning. You become a vital living part of the student organization.

It would not be far from wrong to state that the proportionate degree that you are now interested in college government will closely correspond to your worth as an American citizen in the future.

WOMEN'S ATHLETIC ASSOCIATION HOLDS BANQUET TOMORROW EVE

With International Friendship chosen as the theme, the Women's Athletic Association will hold its semi-annual banquet at the Galileo cafeteria tomorrow evening at 6 o'clock. The meal is to be prepared by the Hotel and Restaurant Division and the price is fifty-five cents. The banquet will mark the close of WAA activities for this semester.

General chairman of Tourney Week, Virginia Kwiatt, will be hostess. Guest speakers will be Veronica Pataky and college instructor, Laurine Bergin. Miss Pataky is head of the Pataky School of Modern Dancing in the city, and is one of the most noted authorities on modern dancing. Entertainment will be furnished by Junko Hedani and Mitsue Kono, who will play a selection on a native Japanese harp, and Greta Hollinger, vocalist, who will be accompanied by Margie Wright.

FRIENDSHIP STRESSED

Both the decorations and the menu will carry out the theme of International Friendship, appropriately chosen. Dishes will be served from various foreign countries rather than a meal typifying any one country. The hostesses will dress in foreign costumes.

Announcement of the winners of both the awards and the WAA elections will be made during the dinner. The Highest Award, membership in the Block Society and a white flannel jacket with a circular emblem, will be given to only the few women who have proved to be the most outstanding women athletes this semester, and who have taken an active part in managing WAA activities. First Team Awards will be presented to those who excel in each WAA sport.

MARKS CLIMAX

"We have made extensive preparations to make the WAA banquet a fitting climax to Tourney Week," declared General Chairman Virginia Kwiatt. "We have several surprises in store for all who attend and we urge that every woman who is interested in athletics, whether she expects to win an award or not, come to this, our final WAA activity of the semester."

Following the banquet, a dance recital, in which both modern dancing and tap dancing classes will participate, will be held in the Galileo cafeteria, as the gym where the recital is usually held, will not be available. The dancing classes have been working on their selections for several weeks and have concocted some original numbers which are reputed to be very good. The women in the modern dancing numbers will wear costumes which they have made themselves.

OFFICERS TO BE NAMED

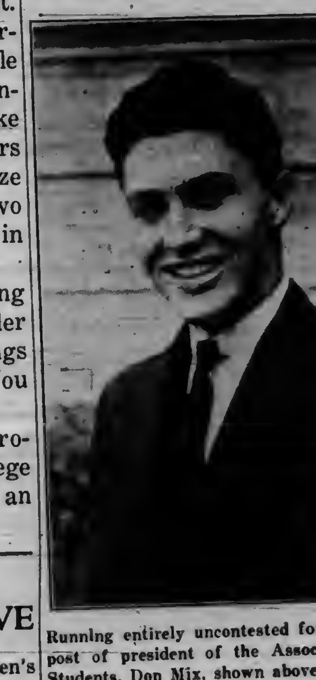
Announcement of the results of WAA officers for the coming semester will climax the evening's entertainment as the competition for offices has been close. Today is the last day to vote in the Galileo gym. Women running for offices for the next semester are: President, Virginia Kwiatt and Dorothy Canavan; vice-president, Margaret Parks and Gail Hanna; secretary, Dorothy Sanderson and Janet Falconer; treasurer, Ellen Cumming and Marie Fraiser. Managers will be elected next semester.

Musicians Will Get U. C. Credit

Two full University of California credit units will be given for each year of junior college orchestra and band work beginning next semester, according to word received yesterday from the registrar's office.

This information coincided with Instructor Tom Kennedy's announcement that he would remain indefinitely at the College as instructor of the three instrumental groups, classical orchestra, dance orchestra, and college military band.

"I can see great musical possibilities at San Francisco Junior College," Kennedy said. "I also expect a large turnout from the student body because of the University credit which will be given. You furnish the players and I will furnish the instruments and the music."



Kennedy also stated that with the proper turnout, he might be able to build this division of the college to a size comparable to that of any like institution in the country. The dance band, already successful in its first few months of existence, he hopes to equip with red and white uniforms. When a larger military band is formed, Kennedy expects to teach them how to "swing it" in the style of the Saint Mary's and Southern Methodist bands. Tailored uniforms will be the mode of dress for this organization.

A veteran in this kind of work, Kennedy first was active in band work in the U. S. Navy where he served for a number of years and during the war. At present he instructs the ROTC bands of most of the local high schools as well as at the college.

Kennedy-instructed bands have long been among the winners in both local and national competitions, winning ribbons and trophies for various events year after year.

Use Of Voting Machines Assures Unavoidably Honest Electorate

PRESIDENT MIX

Running entirely uncontested for the post of president of the Associated Students, Don Mix, shown above, has had much valuable experience which should serve him well during his reign of office. His work as president of the Men's Club and Editor of The Guardsman, has given him the executive experience and sense of responsibility so necessary in the make-up of a capable leader.

FLOSSITA BADGER TO GIVE CONCERT SUNDAY EVENING

Choosing a rounded program which will include selections from Brahms, Handel, Mozart and Strauss, and featuring American folk songs by American composers, Flossita Badger, of the college music department, and director of the college A Capella choir, will give a concert Sunday evening, December 5, at the Century Club Auditorium at Sutter and Franklin. Under the management of Alice Seckels and Elsie Cross, the concert has been opened to students of the college at a reduced rate of forty cents. Regular tickets are $1.10.

"Miss Badger," Miss Seckels says, "is steadily acquiring wide popularity as a concert artist, and possesses an expressive voice of beautiful timbre as well as a charming stage presence which captivates her audience even before she sings. She has been a member of the Royal Opera San Carlos of Naples, the English Ballad Opera, the Chamber Opera Company and was for five seasons with the San Francisco Opera Company."

Accompanied by Gladys Steele at the piano and Mary Acella Chamberlain, violinist, Miss Badger's program will be highlighted by a group of American folk songs by Ernst Bacon and Leo Sowerby. This group includes "Little Mohee," "Colorado Trail," "He's Gone Away," "Sourwood Mountain" and "Erie Canal."

Following Miss Badger's last concert, Marjory Fisher of the San Francisco News, said of her, "Miss Badger is a recitalist who commands respect and admiration. Her voice is a lyric soprano, her temperament intensely dramatic. The combination proved a happy one for the listener because it enabled the artist to make every song interesting and, what is still more infrequent, to retain the beauty of tone through the most brilliant passages."

Miss Badger's complete program for the evening is as follows:

I.

Aria di Polissena—"Radamisto" ..... Handel
Baci Amorosi e Cari ..... Mozart
L'amero Saro Costante
"Il Re Pastore" ..... Mozart
With violin obligato

Don Mix Unopposed For Executive Position; Extensive Ballot

Casting their ballots on the machines set up for that purpose, students will vote in the college elections today. The polls will be open in the morning from 9:00 until 1:30 o'clock in the patio of the Powell Street bookstore.

Persons desiring to vote will be required to show their Associated Student cards before they will be admitted to the polls. There will be two machines in the patio; one for women students and one for men. Balloting will continue this afternoon from 2:00 until 4:00 o'clock in Room 150 at Galileo High School.

HOPE EXPRESSED

The committee in charge of the election, under the leadership of James Preovolos, has taken every precaution to insure an honest election, and have expressed the hope that a representative vote will be cast. In a move to forestall any possible duplication of Student Body card usage, the committee has appointed inspectors who will request everyone voting to sign his or her name in a registration book, which method will enable officials to check any card that may arouse suspicion.

Following is a list of candidates on the ballot, which includes, for the first time, the nominees for AWS and AMS offices:

ASSOCIATED STUDENTS

President: Don Mix.
Vice-president: Norma Parent, Lorraine Haffmeyer
Secretary: Florence Murphy, Fern Muheim
Yell Leader: Stanley Adams, Julius Matula

ASSOCIATED WOMEN STUDENTS

President: Kay Evelitch, Barbara Randall, Murial Mills
Vice-president: Annabelle Benson, Betty Morand, Vivian Macdonald
Secretary: Jane Mitchell, Mildred Farquhar
Treasurer: Miriam Dunne

ASSOCIATED MEN STUDENTS

President: Leo Balastracci, Al Williams, Art Nelson, Hugh Waite
Vice-president: Jack Leavitt, Howard Cloud
Secretary: Russ Turver, Bruce Bolton
Treasurer: Merv Weiner, Louis De Lara

Winning candidates will be presented at an all-college rally scheduled for 2:00 o'clock Friday afternoon in the Galileo Auditorium. Gene Blumenthal, out-going Student Body President, will preside at the assembly.

ATHLETIC AWARDS

Awarding of twenty-two Block SF's to members of the football team, which ended its season as co-champions of the Northern California Junior College Conference, and the presentation of a trophy to the victorious soccer team, which again annexed its conference championship, will also constitute a part of the proceedings.

The newly-elected officers will be called on to give short addresses, and the retiring executives will turn over their posts to their successors.

NYA Dead Line For Slips December 17th

NYA time slips are due on the last day of school, December 17, at Powell Street.

There will be no way of reaching Director Helene Turner after this date, therefore students are advised against failure to turn in time slips at the designated time.

WHOA IS ME!

The perplexed look on the face of our equine friend above is caused, perhaps, by the fact that he arrived at the post too late. Therefore, he doesn't choose to run! Mayhaps he will do his performing at the WAA Horse Show tonight. At any rate, he'll be on hand to cast his vote, you may be sure, in the elections today. No slacker is he, but one who sees his duty and does it.

HORSES TO JUMP AND GALLOP AT WAA EXHIBITION

Sponsored by WAA riding classes and held in conjunction with Tourney Week, the WAA formal horse show will be held at the St. Francis Riding Academy, 7th and Fulton Streets, at 8 o'clock tonight. There will be entries from the beginning, intermediate, and advanced riding classes totaling thirty students.

A surprise trophy will be presented by one of the judges, Charles Tevis, and Sally Reed. Admission is free. The Men's Service Club will usher. Each class will demonstrate correct walking, trotting and cantering, both singly and in groups. There will be a trophy game between the beginning and the intermediate classes and a trophy game among members of the advanced class. There will be thrilling jumps by members of the advanced class. Horses will be furnished by the St. Francis Riding Academy. Features of the show will be the potato race and the playing of musical chairs on horseback.

"Come all," urged Riding Manager Charlotte Zier. "We are staging the best show in the history of the college. Admission is free, so there will be nothing to stop students from coming."

College Students Use U. C. Library

All San Francisco Junior College students residing in the East Bay are eligible to use the University of California Library on the Berkeley campus at any time for study and reference work, Paul Pitman, assistant to the president, has announced.

"Merely by showing registration or student body cards, students will be given use of the library. However, no books can be taken from the building but may be studied only on the premises," Pitman said.

Music Group To Be Feted Friday

Climaxing activities thus far and gathering momentum for future events, the A Capella Choir and the Men's Glee Club of the college will be entertained next Friday evening, December 10, at the home of Dean and Mrs. Edwin C. Browne.

Construction On New Plant Begins Soon

Present Plans of Board Aim At Completion For Fall Term

Construction of the first unit of the junior college plant will definitely begin early next January, according to present indications following the meeting last week of the Board of Education. Announcement was made at this meeting that bids submitted by contractors will be taken under consideration immediately, with a view to speeding up the process of construction as much as possible.

Possibility of receiving government funds for the project has become more remote, it was discovered, but there is still enough money on hand to insure completion of the first building of the group. It had been believed that PWA funds might be allotted by the government to aid in the work, but it is now thought to be improbable that any such grant will be made.

PLANS UNCHANGED

Plans for the building have been completed and the blueprints have been worked out down to every detail. The Board is now ready to consider bids submitted by the various contractors desirous of securing the job, and will make its decision after all bids are in and it has had an opportunity to consider the offers.

The plans themselves have not undergone much change since their inception, only minor details having been altered as circumstances made such changes necessary. Balboa Park will definitely be the site of the buildings, the first unit of which will be on an elevation at Phelan and Ocean Aves.

The first building to be constructed will be the central one of a group of three, which will ultimately form a plant designed to accommodate 2,500 students. This first building will contain all facilities for carrying on classes as it will be provided with laboratories, lecture halls, library, and other essential features of a college. Following its completion, some time next year, work will start on the other buildings, a gymnasium and a Students' Union building.

There will have to be a certain amount of excavation work done before the building can actually be erected, as the site selected is on the top of a hill which will require leveling. A slight change was made recently in the location so as to move the building a few feet to the north onto more level ground and thus dispense with some of the digging.

Nominations Slated For Friday Meet Of Home Econ Group

Nominations for candidates for the Home Economics Association will be held during a short business meeting Friday, December 3, at 2:10 in Room 317. After questioning certain prominent members as to which office they intended to run for, it was learned that nothing will be disclosed until Friday. The elections will take place on the Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of the following week. A ballot box will be in Room 317 during those days and ballots not having the name of the voter on them will not be counted.

Claire Cuneo, adviser, stressed the fact that the Science Department of the Association be present, in order to elect an even number of officers from both departments. "The meeting will be brief if the members are prompt," she added.

Present officers are: Charlotte Originos, president; Cecil Thompson, vice-president; Meadus Rygel, secretary, and Alice Thompson, treasurer.

The Little Christmas Party scheduled for January 6 will be discussed in further detail and necessary committees chosen from members present. New members admitted to the Association will be initiated at the party. A Christmas tree, Santa Claus and presents are a few high points of the party, which will be held at Miss Cuneo's home.

KAYE'S VELVETY MUSIC FOR SOPH FORMAL FRIDAY

Eastern Orchestra Draws Crowds To Final Social Affair of Fall Semester

Promising delightful music by Don Kaye and his "smooth as velvet" orchestra, Bob Neal, High Sophomore president, once more stressed the importance of buying bids for next Friday's Soph Formal as soon as possible.

Scheduled for the Gold Ballroom of the Palace Hotel, next Friday evening, December 3, this, the college's fifth Soph Formal, promises to be one of the most important social affairs in the history of the college, if Neal's advance predictions may be relied upon.

to be one of the most important social affairs in the history of the college, if Neal's advance predictions may be relied upon.

BIDS GOING FAST

"Bids are going like hotcakes," Neal said, "and as there are only 150 for sale, I find that it is very important that those who plan to go, buy theirs immediately. We have secured grand music and a swell setting and there seems to be no reason why the affair should not be a success. Kaye's orchestra has recently arrived from the East where they played at the Book-Cadillac Hotel in Detroit and the Walnut Room of the Hotel Bismark in Chicago. They have been heard over the National Broadcasting System and in 1936 provided the dance music aboard the Queen Mary on her return voyage to Europe. The Gold Ballroom is a lovely place and was the scene of the first dance in the history of the college."

Neal's committee has been working on ideas for novel dance bids, he said, and have finally completed what they believe to be something really unique. Neal refused to divulge the exact nature of these bids because he wants those who attend to be surprised.

PIECE DE RESISTANCE

"Every semester," he continued, "students seem to look forward to the Soph Formal as the piece de resistance of the social calendar. This semester, after our grand football season and equally grand social program, it seems that the formal will have to be even better than ever before in order to follow through. For that reason we are delighted with our excellent orchestra and fine ballroom and hope that we will have a splendid crowd of eager students to put the finishing touches on the whole setup.

ASSISTANTS NAMED

"Bids, while they last, may be secured from the college bank, Room 262 at Galileo for $1.25. Any of the men students who are interested in securing tuxedos for the evening should see me right away."

PEACE SOCIETY IN FINAL MEET

Holding its last meeting of the semester, the college Peace Society met Monday night at the home of Gertrude Bolton, history intructor. The group participated in a discussion of the economic, social, and political causes of war.

A report of the twelfth annual conference of the Student Institute of Pacific Relations held over the Thanksgiving holidays was given. Leaders of the organization declared that they were satisfied that the Society has been established and is rapidly proving its worth. Activities this semester, its first, include bulletin board posters dealing with peace, an Armistice Day rally, and educational meetings of its own.

At present a committee from the society is meeting with a committee from the faculty to work out ways and means of injecting the peace theme in the curriculum.

NEW CONSTITUTION?

One of the main issues in today's Associated Student election should be the pertinent question of the advisability of drafting a new constitution for the college. It is regrettable that the startling dearth of qualified candidates for the presidency makes it impossible to have a solution to this perplexing problem given by the irrefutable evidence of the ballot box. In an ideal arrangement, such would be the case, with one nominee advocating partial revision, and the other demanding complete destruction of the constitution that was passed in such a haphazard method last spring.

However unfortunate it may be, we must resign ourselves to the fact that we are not dealing with an ideal situation, but, on the contrary, one that is most unique. The one unopposed candidate for the position of chief student executive has definitely stated that he will lead a campaign to remove what he has seen fit to term a "spineless constitution," and put in its place a document that will completely clear up all the vague points that now exist in student administration.

The Guardsman must of necessity take an unbiased view in all controversial matters, and despite any personal feelings of The Editor, it must be stated that those who hold for partial revision have an understandable, if somewhat illogical basis for their viewpoint Their main argument has its foundation in the theory that if we establish a precedent for throwing away the constitution every time a flaw is found in it, soon the authority of that document will become farcical.

Those who cry for junking the "present creation" and creating a new and completely adequate constitution feel that once a worthwhile set of laws has been set up there will be no necessity for amending or substitution.

Such is briefly the question of a student constitution. It is impossible to be fair to either side in a question of this kind when there are so many complex, yet vital issues that should be considered. This being the case, however, it is easy to see why it is especially unfortunate to be deprived of a thought-provoking political campaign at this time.

The only feasible method by which the new student body president could devise to obtain college approval of a new constitution would be to follow the example of earlier law drafters and call a special student assembly to pass judgment. The weakness in this procedure was evidenced in the apathetic gathering held to consider the constitution that is now in effect.

The situation has many complexities, and it is hoped that an unopposed leader will follow a course conducive to the development of a sound student administration. But if a capable and effective executive official is found in office next semester it must be remembered that it was merely good fortune and not the omnipotent decision of the electorate that caused him to be there.

NICE GOING

At the conclusion of last semester, practically all the organizations within the college loudly congratulated themselves on the success of the year's activity. Although self praise is reputed by some to have an odor, it was commonly agreed that in a general summation the spring semester was a huge success.

In an effort to "beat them to the punch," as it is expected that self-congratulatory processes are soon to start, The Guardsman would like sincerely to congratulate all who participated in any of the innumerable activities that stamped this semester as outstanding. Records and stated opinions, which are the only basis for judgment, all place accomplishments of this semester in a relatively superlative position.

Our football team gained the top rung in the conference for the first time in the college history, and the much maligned soccer men romped off with their second league trophy in two years. Debaters and Glee Club members report experiencing their most active semester. Thespic activities came to light for the first time. All the various social and educational organizations announce larger membership and brave hopes for the future. The Men's Club completed a semester of loudly-applauded events, and the AWS was equally successful with Norma Parent pouring twice as much tea as ever before.

It is heartening to have seen the college evolving into a sound and healthy institution with a tradition of success and ambitious plans for the future. It is the responsibility of those who lead it through next semester to keep it that way.

Mental Mutterings

LETTER

Dear Santa, we're writing
With tears in our eyes
On behalf of the S. F. J. C.
Girls and guys.

There's only one gift that
Will make our hearts sing,
And that is the gift that
We want you to bring.

We don't want a million.
We don't want a yacht,
We don't want a house and
We don't want a lot.

For jewels and power
We don't give a rap-py,
But bring us a building and
We will be happy!

TEA TIMER

Dear, dear, what these men won't do to stir up good will! We mean the appearance of a certain candidate for Men's Club president at last week's AWS tea. Claiming that he was "Shanghaied by Joe Amori," this young man (Williams is the name, I believe), made himself the life of the party, and consumed several cups of coffee in order to wash down his share of the sandwiches which, take our word for it, was quite a share! The girls got even, however, for before the afternoon was over, Williams could be seen waltzing around with a tray of sandwiches THAT big!

PRESENTING

MAY WE PRESENT . . . Don Mix, Guardsman Editor, and, as we write this, sole candidate for the office of Associated Students president . . . is a member of the Newman Club, the Beta Phi and the Cap and Meg Society and a star player on Jack Gaddy's Flying Lambs . . . was born in San Francisco but managed to make his way to Los Angeles where he attended Loyola High School and got his first taste of Journalism . . . would like to go from Junior College to Yale (no, we haven't an accent) but on account of the strenuous commuting involved will probably settle for USF . . . has hopes of some day writing a book and in the meantime finds solace in dashing off Editorials, playing "Armand" and training for next year's crew . . . has a constant grudge against publicity hounds and headlines, especially when he has to write them himself.

Note to Mister Mac . . . Hum-mm-mm!

VERSE

We know it isn't National Poetry Week and we have already done our little stint for the week but we couldn't resist reprinting this little gem which we found in a local paper:

"My mother thinks I'm very pretty,
She thinks I'm smart, she thinks
I'm witty,
And so I wish that she'd been fated
To be a man and unrelated!"
Aint it da trut!

RETALIATION

Just when we were beginning to enjoy a more or less peaceful existence unmarred by feuds or other such goings on, up pops our chum MacArthur with his "May We Resent". At first we were going to ignore the whole thing but in his closing paragraph Mac said, "Shuddering, when we think of the retaliation this bit of satire will inspire, we leave you until next week". There, now, you couldn't expect us to let Mac go on shuddering for the next twenty years, could you? Why it would be cruel, inhuman and what not to say nothing of stuff. Then too, we had a chat with our friend Bobby Fex and he was quite upset about the cracks about the Irish and with such a force behind us we were ready to sail into Mac and give him a verbal beating that would surpass all former verbal beatings in the history of the world. Then, we sat down at the typewriter and couldn't think of anything to say. You see we couldn't figure out how to spell that noise you make by putting your tongue between your teeth!

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

STORIETTE . . .

Of recent years, there has been a decided trend toward the short short story, as reading matter in some of our better magazines. The latest drift toward tiny tales is the storiette, which is well under 100 words and yet a complete yarn. We like to picture the future of super succinct sagas, as leading to a condition, wherein editors will refuse manuscripts of more than twenty-five words as being lengthy.

Imagine, with us, that it is the year 1950. Super-speed is the key-note of a teeming world; rocket planes zoom through the air; everything comes out of slot machines, and the Earth is well into The Zipper Age. Step by step with progress has been the demand for brevity in literature. Newspapers come out every hour, and are composed mainly of headlines. Magazines are printed every day and can be read from cover to cover in twenty minutes.

PRAISE BE . . .

A person from this age, shocked at perceiving daily magazines, would soon see that actually, the stories are no shorter in content, but still there are less words. Close inspection would probably show a printed page containing words somewhat like these (a street car conductor talking): "Lemawf! Lemawf! M'vpford. Lotsr'mupford." One can readily see that it is merely a condensation of the language that has occurred. The printed word has caught up with the spoken, and the result is a much shorter sentence, which yet carries all the meaning of the old strung out type.

Other typical bits might be these: "Tellyasay?" or "Koutther-wochathinkyadoon?" and "Lojo! Lemeetubits'llya?"

Under the new system of spelling and printing, our written language would change rapidly, as letters no longer used, would be discarded from time to time.

TELL WITH 'NGLISHAY

At the present time, there are many, many useless letters in the English language, and we never could figure out why in heck you didn't spell "Sicology" instead of "Psychology," "Filosofy" instead of "Philosophy," "Numonya" instead of "Pneumonia," "Apelsos" instead of "Appplesauce" and a milyun others. Look at all the letters that would be saved. Using this system of spelling and the runtogethertypeofprinting, think of what could be done! Columns in one paragraph; novels in ten pages; encyclopedias in two volumes! Why there is no limit to the amount of condensation possible!

Suppose we carry this nonsensical affair a step further and picture a distant future, centuries hence, and assume that the written and spoken language has condensed to the vanishing point, decide that maybe that's a good thing, and quietly forget the whole matter.

SEE HERE NOW . . .

They say a word to the wise, to strike a semiserious note, is sufficient. If so, in view of the approaching finals, the word is "STUDY" and the wise is you, gentle reader.

. . . around the town . . . listening to a colored boy swing a hot one-man-band in an alley off California St. near Kearny . . . he sure had the crowd in stitches and he sewed up traffic too.

And so we leave you with the old saying, "He who writes and runs away, knows his stuff's no good."

Presidential Patter

NEWS ON THE EXECUTIVE SIDE . . .

No sooner is one squabble ended in a peaceful manner, than another crops up to claim our attention. This time it was with the brawny fellows who wear the block letters. It seems there is a never-ending struggle going on in the college between the many factions, and obviously, not all these groups can, or ever will be satisfied with our actions or attitude toward them. When the Athletic Council recently held a meeting and decided that too many blocks were being distributed each semester, and that something must be done to correct this abuse in our school system, we figuratively felt the hot breath of indignation being wafted toward us in a rather menacing manner.

CONFUSION

It would appear that whenever a constructive change is to be effected, some one, or some group, is undoubtedly going to be hurt by it. But the issue before us has not yet been made clear. At the afore-mentioned meeting of the Athletic Council, a new classification of major and minor sports and the awards that follow in their wake was tentatively set up. Immediately those groups which previously had been classified as major sports, and which were now to be relegated to minor, descended upon us and demanded to know why.

While our term in office has undoubtedly taught us many things, we have, above all, achieved the peculiar faculty of making enemies at every turn. In our defense, however, let it be pointed out, that we hold only one vote in the Athletic Council, and that all our actions can be justified, if only because we were seeking to defend the integrity, and elevate to its proper status, our Block Letter Society. If we are going to cut down on the number of letters, let's not do it razzle-dazzle with hokus-pokus classifications. Let's put the matter up to the coaching staff, and let them raise the standards and qualifications for earning a letter. The issue has not been settled, but at this writing it is clear in our mind, at least, as to who is going to have the final say.

FINALS . . . AND NOISE

With the excitement over the forthcoming elections, culminating in today's voting, one more complaint is registered with us. Finals are coming up, and those persons who make an effort at perusal of the books in our study hall are on our trail, because, they claim, there is so much noise in the study hall, said "study" is impossible. This is not a new issue, and we have long since given up trying to catch up on our sleep in that room, seemingly intended only for reunions and meetings. However, issue has been taken with us, and to those persons who persist in disrupting the peace and tranquillity of the study hall, we say "Please desist."

Our nomination for All-Conference, Merv Weiner, steady, dependable, hard-charging, offensively and defensively . . . a tower of strength in the line. Add note —Merv made the varsity the hard way. Any complaints?

Interesting to note . . . that no longer on our Blue Books are the words "Dishonesty is not tolerated by the students of this college." Need anything more be said?

MISS POWELL STREET

This week's great personality is the typical co-ed of the college, the girl on the street, the result of hours (well, minutes) of painstaking research on the idiosyncrasies, preferences and hates of the women students who make up the female half of our Alma Mater.

To begin with, Miss Powell Street is eighteen or nineteen years old, a medium brunette, and small in stature (five feet four inches or under). She is majoring in business or English, and is not quite decided whether or not to go on to a university after graduation. While she is making up her mind, she manifests school spirit in a mild way by attending all the social affairs, trips and games she has time for, or can afford. She is, of course, a member of the AWS, and usually of the WAA. In addition, she belongs to at least one other organization, composed partly or entirely of women. She goes in for Robert Taylor movies, the page-boy bob, rust nail polish, pearls with sweaters, and football players. When she graduates she will still be with us, for other typical co-eds, identical to her, are graduated from high school each January and June.

POLITICS

Elections are here again, or haven't you heard? Anyway, may we remind you again to vote for AWS officers today. Barbara Randall, Kay Evulich, and Muriel Mills are running for president, and all three have wound up their campaigns in a blaze of glory. ("My friends . . .") Incidentally, until last Tuesday, the offices were going begging, with almost no one wanting to give her all for the greater good of the college. Then, just before the deadline for petitions, hordes of people decided they'd like to enter politics via the AWS, which is why you see no dearth of candidates on the ballots (pardon, voting machines).

THAT WEEK AGAIN . . .

Tourney Week is here. We know it by the frequent reminders of the coaches, by the strained look on the faces of the participants, and by the bunches of curly hair the women's sports reporter tears from her head and scatters about the classy floor of WJ. Ennyhow . . . why not attend the horse show, which is tonight, and which promises to be quite an affair. Follow this up, please, with attendance at tomorrow evening's dance recital in the faculty cafeteria at Galileo. The dancers are going to wear identical costumes sewn by themselves, with the help of Mrs. Bergin.

And in order to give as much publicity as possible to the WAA, we comply with its requests as follows: Tourney Week, Tourney Week, Tourney Week, Tourney Week, horse show, dance recital, banquet.

TOURNEY WEEK!

365 Days Ago Today

Tickets went on sale for the Soph Formal which was held at the Terrace Ballroom of the Fairmont Hotel. This semester's students are now being urged by a front page story to secure bids for this year's formal. How time flies!

* * * *

A whole page was devoted to the WAA with pictures of their various activities and scads of stories about Tourney Week doings.

* * * *

Students were presented with a special slick-paper edition of The Guardsman, complete with pictures of faculty members, organizations and graduates. This year's budget says, "Nothing doing!"

* * * *

A Guardsman poll gave women students a chance to get even with those men who had torn them apart in a previous poll for men. They said that they preferred tall, intelligent, brunettes with personality, character and a sense of humor. Man's most outstanding faults, according to the survey, were conceit, lack of consideration, and "talking too much." Other more meticulous young ladies said that they disliked "tobacco and stale beer breath," "roving eyes and things," "the big brother act" and "lack of money." One gal said she disliked "the habit of possessing a little black book with the ratings of all the girls they have taken out, which they promptly show to each new victim." My, my!

EXCHANGE NOTES

A novel way to save boarding expense and still go to college was innovated by a University of California freshman who has spent his first semester living in a trailer.

DAILY CALIFORNIAN

Stanford University has added two more credit courses to its curriculum this year. One is a dry skiing class which is co-educational and has 300 students enrolled. The class has entered many competitions and succeeded in placing, if not winning, in each one. The second is The Dance, under the instruction of Margaret Jewell, graduate of the University of Wisconsin, and formerly of the Wigman School of the Dance in New York. This class is also co-educational, and deals with anatomy and physiology throughout one-half of the semester and with the technique of dancing the other half. The men taking the course are from the drama and speech departments, which now include The Dance as part of the preparation for taking speech and drama. The two new classes are the first of the major colleges on the Coast to have such classes with credit rating.

Basketball Team In Initial Game On Friday Night

CASABANS TO MEET PALO ALTO SPORT SHOP SQUAD

Coming into the fourth week of practice, the Ram hoopsters are beginning to look like a real ball club, and by the end of the week will be in good condition to meet the powerful Palo Alto Sport Shop team in the Galileo gym Friday night in the first practice game of the year.

The men from Palo Alto will be represented by last year's stellar quintet from San Mateo J. C. This game will give Tutor Dutch Conlon a chance to see what his boys can do under fire. He has been working the fellows on passing fundamentals. It will be remembered the Ram quintet finished third last year, while the year before in their first year of competition they walked off with top conference honors.

A tentative starting lineup finds the flashy forward, Tracy Slattery, a veteran of last year's team and Tony Manove, a newcomer to the squad and former All-City forward from Berkeley, Ed Cursio, an All-City guard from University High, and Willy Blackfield, a scrappy forward from Lowell High, along with Bill Opalanski, who stands a mere six feet one in his stockings, a three-year letter man from Commerce High, composing the first team which will represent San Francisco Friday night. In reserve, are Bill Fisher at left forward, who should see plenty of action. Another promising candidate is Bob Niceo, who is developing into an accurate sharpshooter, and should cause the "shop" guards plenty of trouble. Bob Fex, erstwhile football and baseball star, is out for a forward spot. Bob is plenty fast and rugged. "Red" Burroughs, a lanky center from Coach Tom Wilson's 145's, is beginning to fill the shoes of last year's star center, Monty Mordecai. Alongside him is Ed Carplein, who will be eligible for conference competition this spring. Carpelin, last spring, was rated as one of the best forwards in the San Francisco A.A.A. league. Others who will see plenty of action are Paul Le Baron, Tom Pauli, "Wooden-arm" Berman of Coach Lee Eisan's baseball team.

The red and white five is greatly weakened by the loss of George Bedrosian, former All-City guard from University High in Oakland, and a veteran of last year's team. George saw plenty of action last year.

One of the outstanding pre-season games of interest to students will be held the latter part of next week. In this contest will be seen former Jaysee stars. The alumni game will include such men as "Chubby" Kotta, who last year was one of the conference's leading scorers, along with the former elusive All-Conference forward Ernie Loustalot, who was one of the outstanding basketeers who ever donned the red and white colors. Another ace casabapusher, Paul Ripon, a two-year veteran and a member of the school's first championship basketball team, will be on hand to display his intricate floorwork.

By DICK SIMPERS

The football season just brought to a close was by far the most successful in the brief history of San Francisco Junior College, and a lot of credit is due the fellows who helped to make it so. Coming out of a mid-season slump, they swept everything before them in their closing games, and by virtue of this "Garrison finish" acquired the first conference championship ever to fall to a San Francisco football squad.

Three cheers, then for McDonald, Olson, Egelhofer, Boitano, Pearce, Weichers, Weiner, Flamm, Worsham, Petersen, Fex, Lennes, Nelson, Guedet, Dolman, Bierwidth, Burke, Oddstead, Osborne, Hamilton, and all the rest who helped make the season of 1937 a memorable one. (And I don't want to hear anything more about putting names in the paper.)

Credit, too, to Coaches Sweet, Eisan, and Gaddy for their yeoman work in building up a squad of such calibre. The task of getting a team in shape and keeping it that way while piloting it to a championship is by no means a light one, and took a great deal of time and patience.

* * * *

It happened during the game between the Lambs and the S. F. State goofs. The game was well into the closing stages and the Lambs had rolled up a substantial lead, so Coach Jack Gaddy began sending in substitutes. Upon the bench sat Irving Amstrup, tense with expectancy, clenching his fists convulsively and gritting his teeth in eagerness. Seeing that "Blub" was rapidly working himself into a state of hysteria, the jocose Gaddy barked, "Amstrup, go in at stationary tackle." In an instant Irving was dashing across the field. "Amstrup reporting at stationary tackle," he gasped to the referee. That official looked at him with a puzzled expression. "And," he queried, "just what the hell is a stationary tackle?"

Irving was dreadfully burnt up about the whole matter, and prefers not to discuss it.

* * * *

Coach Dutch Conlon plans to organize a golf squad next semester if enough capable players can be uncovered in the college to make such a team worthwhile. Conlon believes that in a student body as large as San Francisco's there should be at least a few divot-diggers of some ability, and he's probably right. There has been no definite organization yet, but it's not too early to start practicing.

* * * *

Jack Gaddy must have been in a playful mood during the State game mentioned above, as it was during this encounter at Roberts Field that he sent "Chubby" Mix, a tackle, in to play, of all positions, quarterback. Well, the Lambs had the ball on the first play after Mix's advent. The squads lined up, crouched fiercely and glared at each other—and kept on glaring. After they had been squatted in this manner for some time, it finally occurred to the center that "Chubby" must have forgotten that he was supposed to call signals, so he snapped the ball anyway, much to the surprise of the opposition, and everyone else, for that matter. Thereafter, the suave tones of Mix's clear, enunciating voice could be heard on Powell Street, as the dynamic little chap drove his team mercilessly down the field.

Clubs have been sprouting like mushrooms lately. The latest one to form is the "Flamm-Weichers Mutual Admiration Society."

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

Tourney Week rifle matches, tennis singles finals, archery matches, and volleyball finals have been played off, but there remains the horse show, swim meets, tennis doubles finals, dance recital, badminton finals, golf match, and banquet on the athletic docket. The events which have been completed have shown how very skilful WAA women have become in their various sports. High school girls who plan to attend the junior college have been invited to watch the Tourney Week matches.

* * * *

In the badminton quarter finals Mary Skattebol beat Toyoko Hidekawa and Jean Lonkey beat Ethel Vizzard. Dot Canavan will play in the finals, to be held tomorrow at 4:30 o'clock in the Galileo gym, against the winner of the Jean Lonkey-Mary Skattebol match.

* * * *

Golf and hockey have both been completing the semester with finals. The red and white teams in hockey have been playing their final games, and in golf the finals in putting were played off last week.

* * * *

Twelve State women attended a junior college-State volleyball playday held in the Galileo gym last week. As is the custom at playdays, the two teams did not compete as the junior college against State, because each team contained both junior college and State players.

* * * *

The tennis singles finals were played off yesterday. The final match was between Dot Canavan and Jackie Kramer with Dot Canavan winning the set and the finals. The referee was Registrar J. Paul Mohr.

Two doubles matches remained to be played at last Wednesday's deadline. They were between Evelyn Ballard and Lily Phillips against Betty McKenzie and Sue Muether; Dot Canavan and Jackie Kramer against Tillie Huddleson and Alice Cavanaugh. These matches will be played off tomorrow at the Palace of Fine Arts.

Rains last week caused bitter complaints from women enrolled in swimming classes. During the walk from the Powell Street building to the YWCA they got, to quote them, "soaking wet."

Sacramento Beats San Mateans; Goes Into Tie For Title

San Francisco's chances of being the sole occupants of the top spot in the Northern California Junior College Conference went glimmering last Thursday when Sacramento defeated San Mateo by the score of 13 to 0 at the Capitol City. Had Sacramento lost or tied, the Rams would have become the undisputed champions of the conference, but as it is, they must be contented with a tie with Sacramento.

The Panthers encountered little difficulty in trouncing the Bulldogs, scoring twice on long thrusts and effectively bottling up the San Mateans' offense to secure an easy victory.

Thus, San Francisco and Sacramento are tied for the title with one loss each, the Panthers having lost their first tilt of the season to Marin and the Rams having lost to Sacramento in a subsequent contest.

Both teams came back after poor starts, and more than earned the gold footballs that they will receive by the way in which they overcame numerous handicaps, upsetting favored rivals to eventually emerge with the coveted title.

All-America, All-Coast Teams Picked By Guardsman Judges

Since it seems customary, this time of year, for every sports staff to get together and work out some sort of mythical All-American football eleven, The Guardsman now presents its selections for an All-United States and an All-Coast team.

Selection of players was made on the basis of all-around playing ability and value to their respective teams. Those named below have been consistently outstanding during the past season, and many of them will undoubtedly be chosen on other "ideal" teams of which the air will be full in the next few weeks. Here they are:

'DREAM TEAM' IS SELECTED BY GRIDIRON 'EXPERTS'

After a heated exchange of opinions and harsh words concerning the optical capabilities of individual members of the sport staff, The Guardsman herewith presents its official All-Conference football eleven and secondary selections. We expect criticism and realize that we have probably made mistakes in these selections. However, this All-Conference business was a duty that was thrust upon us. We would have preferred to leave it to other sources. Only because of tradition are we following in the footsteps of past Guardsman sport staffs (Hallelujah!). With the absence of trumpets and fanfare, we now present for your approval or hatred:

STUFF

By JERRY FLAMM

The scores are all in, the cleats are hung up, and the football season is over for the Rams. A season of thrills, of comedy, of disappointments, of intimate team spirit, and climaxing in an unexpected comeback by the team to gain the college's first football championship. A championship that was unexpected by everyone including the coaching staff. As Sweet said up at Modesto, before the final game: "I don't know what we are doing up here playing of the championship. Why WE are playing I don't know, but we are. Last year's team was potentially twice as strong as this club, yet we are playing for the title." Then the club went out and sewed up the championship by making two touchdowns in the first quarter to show Russ just what kind of a team it was.

A team without dissension either on the field or off. A team without any outstanding stars or "prima donnas." That played together and for each other. A gang that played the game for all it was worth and yet were conscious all the time that it was only a game. A bunch with a high percentage of "squirrelly" comedians and dopes that could get serious when the occasion demanded. A compact unit that gave a true modern version of Dumas' "One for all, and all for one" spirit. It was a marvelous squad and cemented bonds of attachment and goodwill that will endure and be remembered by all members of the squad during their span of life, and the memories of which will become sweeter as the mellowing years accumulate. This writer has attempted to keep the personal angle out of this column, but he hereby wishes to abrogate this principle and express his personal satisfaction and pleasure in being a member of this year's Ram squad and in having had the opportunity of knowing and associating with its members and the coaching staff. It really was great. (The orchestra will now render "Hearts and Flowers".)

Tragedy of the season was Duke Worsham. Injury after injury laid the Duke low as the season progressed. His vertebrae cracked during the first week of practice, the happy-go-lucky center waited patiently to get back into action. After months of painful inaction, the time arrived. Whoosh! Torn ligaments in the knee, another painful wait, finally a monstrous boil over his eye. Undoubtedly, the Duke would have been unanimous choice for All-Conference center if old man injury had not dogged his footsteps so consistently. He is a ball player of the first water. Incidentally, speaking of injuries, the unfortunate injuries to Joe Guedet and Will Dolman were also handicaps that had to be overcome by the Rams in their sensational late-season drive to the title. That such apparently irreparable losses were overcome is a further testimonial to the spirit of the club.

* * * *

With this issue, we start a summary of next season's prospects. These candid shots of returning men will, of course, be supplemented next year by new students, who may take over many of the starting berths. Here they are:

Ends: Bob Lee — marvelous pass receiver. Fast. Aggressive. With experience gained this year, should not be fooled next year as he was occasionally during the past season.

Bud Weichers: Great defensive end. Very smart. Fair blocker. Good pass receiver. Cute.

Tony Manuel: Despite lack of stature will be formidable. Loves game. Little package of fire and aggressiveness. Sure death on passes within reach.

Bill Tessier: Lots of fight. Could use more weight. Good tackler. Tackles: Stan Beirwidth—Potentialities unlimited. Strong, aggressive, fast for size, has dynamiting defensive charge. Hard to arouse. If can get fired up will be standout.

Jack Heaslett: Intelligent, hard-hitting man who can use head as well as body. Has lightning-fast charge. If can add weight to angular frame will be All-Conference selection.

Neil Swanson: Roly-poly, good natured, hard-working boy who will be serious contender for starting post. Will improve next year. Is hard man to move if given even start.

Jack Du Fosse: Fast, smart, capable player who should come along fast next year. Is converted center. Has perfect build for tackler. Watch him.

Howard Barker: Strong, willing boy who will get needed polishing next year. Has good basis to make a capable tackle.

Hugh Smith: Needs weight and experience, and if gains former within year will be given opportunity to gain latter. Heady player.

Howard Cloud: Ditto.

Guards: Tom "Moon" Burke: Experienced, sixty-minute, ball player who handles all his duties in very capable fashion. If knees hold up, will be strong contender for All-Conference spot.

Johnny Coon: Aggressive man who plays quiet, capable, game. Likes the going and is quick to learn. Should be strong contender.

Walt Pederson: Hampered by injuries this season, this fine guard should figure in next year's battle for positions.

Bill Poldi: Tough, watch-charm guard who has given the varsity men some bad days on defense this season. Smart.

Charley Yates: Very hard-charging man. Fast. Very good possibilities.

Ken Pasquallette: Spirited, persistent, battler who, if he improves next year and gets a little serious, may be dangerous.

Centers: Mel Peterson: Was invaluable to Rams this year and should be real star next year. Deadly tackler. Speedster. Would rather play than eat.

(Next week—Backfield candidates.)

Moleskin Moe Says: They are now saying that much of Walt Boitano's success comes from his being able to diag-NOSE the plays. . . . Overheard at the St. Mary's-Santa Clara game: "That Doggity is sure good." This from Simms Hamilton. . . . It looks like Merv Wiener, dynamic Ram tackle, is headed for Stockton to assimilate some character from the venerable A. A. Stagg at the College of Pacific.

After Dark

By John Ward

Ever so often some ambitious person resurrects the old theory of state-supported art. This old talking point belongs with all those exotic Utopias that men have dreamed about since the year one. Nothing could be further from true realization than a plan to support deserving artists with a bit of a monthly salary paid by the government or some other such organization. And by artists we do not mean those one finds on the WPA, but rather the choice few who have that inward urge to create.

In the first place, the theory that most geniuses starve is Montmartre or Greenwich Village and are only recognized after they have dropped dead from mal-nutrition is five-tenths hokum and four-tenths sentiment. If an artist has something important to say he is going to say it, bread or no bread, and if that something is really of primary import it is not going to take the world very long to find it out. And proof there is aplenty—Picasso, Wagner, Shakespeare, Cummings, etc.

The fact that artists often suffer extreme poverty and abuse before they are accepted or recognized should not evoke great pity from the more sentimentalists. Nor should the fact that men like Van Gogh die unrecognized be a supreme tragedy for every art lover. It is the artist, perhaps, who should pity us because we may never experience that thrill of creation that comes when a Van Gogh has finished a Bercause or a Cypress Tree. If hunger is all he has to pay for that enviable experience we should say that it was worth it.

And in the second place, if you depend off your artists, who is to say which deserve the pension? Who is to judge between the good and the bad? Who is to say which is too intolerably modern and which is too intolerably conservative? And when you have made your decision, if such a thing is possible, what will the artist do when he has nothing to worry about but his art?

The one contemporary case of state support that involves a man of supreme talents is not at all complimentary to this theory. He has had a pension from the state for the greater part of his more or less active career. But, at the moment, he is unfit for social life and, it would seem, artistic activity because of an affinity for strong drink. This, in his case, has not been too great a detriment. But what happens to the weaker man? Will he lose all initiative, all sense of responsibility when faced with an unluxurious life but a sure one?

The most workable solution to this problem has been given by one critic as allowing the creative artist a very humble shack and a very small pittance of food. Thus, shut away from this disturbing world, he might create and subsist and so ans need fear he would be lazy or worthless unless he was that in the beginning.

If the government should ever be uniquely urged to help art in any way, it might erect the means whereby the artist could see his finished work presented to the public adequately. Such things as art galleries, theatres, concert halls, etc., run, not for profit but for the encouragement of the artist and for his critical appraisal. (How often a composer hears his symphonic ideas in his head alone!)

Spanish Club Will Hold Dinner 20th

Featuring excellent food and a noticeable absence of after dinner speeches, the Spanish Club will hold an end-of-the-term banquet at My Rendezvous, 5th Sansome Street, on December 20th.

The club, which is unofficially organized, has nevertheless enjoyed widespread popularity among Spanish students. The group, to which individual members are hosts, meet every other Tuesday night to exchange ideas, relate experiences and express opinions in Spanish.

RADIO CLASSES SHOW RAPID PROGRESS

Students of Radio 51A, whose classes are held at the Samuel Gompers School, 22nd and Bartlett streets, are rapidly gaining knowledge in the workings of different type radio sets, and as a result of their acquired theoretical background, are able to apply it to the mechanical use of radio building, according to their instructor, Lowell M. Hollingsworth.

Hollingsworth has arranged the work into projects, with mimeographed instruction sheets issued each student for the project to be undertaken. It explains the theory of why a radio should work, and the importance of each individual part with various questions at the end of each project to be answered.

A majority have been working on two-tube receiving set construction, while others are working on advanced projects. Different type test sets are also being built and experimented with and as soon as they are perfected, others in the class will begin similar construction. One type of set notably is a tuned in radio frequency receiving set which has just been completed. This T. R. F. set, as it is commonly known, is a more advanced type receiving set, in that the signals are amplified before reaching the detector, thus making it a more selective set for a wider range of station pick-ups.

Also to merit consideration is a public address system which has been completed. A public address amplifier differs from the receiving set in that it has a built-in power supply unit and is able to bring in volume to a much greater degree.

An instrument that has recently been received is a lightning calculator and is meant to be used as the name suggests. It is a small, circular chart with sets of numerical numberings, and its purpose is to calculate the number of windings of wire around a coil. It is necessary that the number of turns be limited according to the calculator which indicates how many turns should be taken to insure maximum availibility in a receiving set.

The chart is quite a time saver, students say, and eliminates a long series of mathematical calculations. It might be compared to a slide rule which serves as a short cut in advanced mathematical problems.

Army-Navy Club Watch Launching Of Naval Vessel

Members of the college Army-Navy Club who attended the launching of the U. S. S. McCall Saturday, November 20, had the opportunity of seeing West Coast naval and commercial officials join together for the first time since the World War to launch a privately-built Navy vessel.

Eleanor Kempf, daughter of Rear Admiral Clarence S. Kempf, christened the 1500-ton torpedo boat destroyer with the traditional bottle of champagne, at the Bethlehem Shipbuilding Corporation, 20th and Illinois streets.

One of the new "greyhounds of the fleet," the McCall is named in honor of Lieutenant Edward Rutledge McCall, hero of the Boxer-Enterprise sea fight during the War of 1812. The McCall was authorized by Congress in March of 1934 and will be completed by next May.

This evening, December 1, the club will meet at the home of T. Gordon Sollman, 1239 19th Avenue. Next Sunday the members will travel to Moffat Field where they will be escorted around the base. All members interested in visiting Moffat Field, are requested to see Walter Thompson, club secretary.

Business Women In Meet Last Evening

In an effort to continue the contact between students who are now in the active business world and those still attending the college, the Associated Business Women met last night at Veneto Restaurant where a guest of the club, Lola Elliot of the Community Placement Bureau, spoke informally to the group. Business graduates from San Mateo Junior College were also present.

"These dinner gatherings enable the students and young business women to discuss their various problems. It also gives them the opportunity to meet the guest speakers who are usually important members of the business field. The visitors usually have an enlightening message to impart, for some are employers or in direct contact with supervisors of personnel," said Margaret Flournay, faculty sponsor of the organization.

Italian Students' Club Plans Events

Headed by President Bill Solari, the Italian Club has a full schedule of social activities ahead, now that the club is firmly established. A constitution will be submitted to school authorities for approval in the hope of obtaining a charter before the next meeting, December 7. Dramatic and musical sections of the club have been organized for informal entertainment at future meetings. Many members of the club hope to attend an Italian play to be presented on the evening of December 8 at a Van Ness Avenue playhouse. A huge social gathering is planned late in December, after the final examinations, at a local hotel. The club is expected to play a very active part in next semester's club activities.

Catholic Students Plan Xmas Party

Plans for the Newman Club Christmas Tree Party will be under discussion by members of that group at their meeting scheduled next Monday evening at Saint Mary's Cathedral.

Tentative plans call for some outside entertainment, dancing, food and free admission for Newman Club members, who will be allowed to bring one guest each. This evening will be a "fitting finale" for the organization which has been so active this semester.

The party will probably be held at the Cathedral some time soon after final examinations, according to President Bob Fex.

Rifle Club To Elect Officers

The election of Rifle Club officers for next semester will take place December 6, 7, and 9 at the Galileo range, according to James S. Hughes, club sponsor. "Care should be taken in selecting those who are to preside over the group next semester," he advised.

Plans are going ahead for the highlight of the club's social events, the final party to be held Friday evening, December 17. Further details of the party will be announced later.

Firing another close match, the college team lost by seven points to the team representing the Municipal Railway, Saturday morning, November 20. Two matches are scheduled for this Friday evening, December 3. The first team faces the Southern Pacific Rod and Gun Club, while the second team meets Headquarters Company.

Debaters To Join National Society

Next semester the San Francisco Junior College Debating Society will become affiliated with Phi Rho Pi, national debating honor society, according to Lloyd Luckmann, forensics mentor.

"One of the advantages," Luckmann said, "will be that it will offer unity to many student who choose to audit the debate course catalogued as Speech 166. Then of course there are all the advantages that go with being a part of an established national organization.

"Modesto Junior College will sponsor the initiation and inauguration of the San Francisco chapter. We are looking forward to another successful season such as we enjoyed this semester. Many veterans are returning and should assure us of a fine season."

Forum Club To See Movies Next Wed.

Motion pictures and their educational value will be the Forum Club's topic of discussion when the group meets next Wednesday night at eight o'clock, December 8, at the home of Marjorie Cusic, 2345 Divisadero Street.

Making the charge that the movies are, not educational, Tom Tillberry will open the discussion. Ely Chertok is scheduled to oppose Tillberry's contentions. General discussion by the students and instructors assembled will follow. Because of the organization's large membership, students wishing to attend should see Dorothy Mercer, William Goss, faculty advisers, or John Healy, Forum chairman, before attending the meeting.

Library Fines Must Be Paid By Dec. 17

"All library fines must be paid before December 17, so that students may receive either grades or transcripts from the Registrar's Office," declared Francis Colligan, instructor-in-charge of the library. "The library is an indispensable institution, and must conduct its business effectively, hence the necessity of keeping a close check of all books issuing from it."

Books circulating from the library during the next week and a half are to be returned to the library not later than 2:00 o'clock December 17, last day of final examinations.

Hotel Students To Work Over Vacation

As guests of James Muir of Hotel California in Oakland, members of the Hotel and Restaurant, Management Division are invited to spend two weeks of the coming Christmas holiday season studying the problems of hotel management and applying training received at the college.

This opportunity presents a fitting climax to a semester filled with educational excursions by the hotel group, whose activities included trips to San Diego and Del Monte, in addition to industrious local work such as a turkey luncheon served for 170 students and faculty members in the Galileo cafeteria the day preceding Thanksgiving.

The Hotel Division served the Galileo High School Athletic Association at their dinner given Wednesday, December 1, and rendered its culinary aid for the Women's Athletic Association banquet the following evening.

BUSINESS DEPT. HOLDS CLASSES IN EXAM WEEK

As business final examinations are given in the two weeks preceding the scheduled final week, all students who attend morning classes at Girls' High School and Business 50B at Galileo High School must be present every day through December 17, according to F. Grant Marsh, business faculty adviser.

Students who wish to be excused for examinations outside of the department must notify business instructors in advance.

"Skill subjects, such as typing or shorthand, require intensive practice, and as this is a short semester, every day must be utilized in order to equip students to meet the rigid requirements of the modern business world," said Marsh. "When a student graduates from the course, he should be able to feel that his initial training has been satisfactorily completed, with only the element of actual experience needed to broaden his scope."

COMMITTEES DISCUSS PLAN FOR ESTABLISHING COURSE IN PEACE

Groups From Faculty and Peace Society Study Proposed Addition To College Curriculum; To Be Titled "Problems of War and Peace"

Introduction into the college curriculum next semester of a course dealing with the problems of war and peace has been advocated by the Faculty Committee and the Peace Society Committee. The committee feels that such a course might be an interesting experiment from an educational standpoint, and that if it proves successful it might be used to advantage in other fields.

The proposed name for the course is Problems of War and Peace, and it would be a part of the sociology department, and preferably of an academic nature. Students consulted on the subject have expressed the belief that it should be a two-unit course, so it is probable that, in the event of its introduction, it will be taught twice weekly.

LECTURES DIVIDED

It was further by the committee that it was inadvisable to have such a course given by just one instructor, since the course would be the result of only one instructor's point of view. Therefore, it was suggested that it be given by several instructors, with some one instructor attending all the meetings and taking notes for the benefit of the other instructors who will lecture later, thus making it possible for the instructors who follow to tie in their material with what has gone before and avoid repetition. From time to time the instructor in charge of the course will give examinations and hold discussion of the material which has been presented in the various lectures.

Emphasis was laid on the fact that this is not designed to be a propaganda course, but rather a study of all the problems connected with war and peace which will present all points of view from an unbiased standpoint.

WIDE FIELD INDICATED

The proposal was submitted to President Archibald Cloud by the Faculty Committee, composed by Dorothy Mercer, John Ross, and Paul Pitman, and the Peace Society Committee, composed of Paul Benson, Fred Vast, and Elizabeth Reybock.

The suggested fields to be covered and the instructors to lecture are as follows:

Literature: Dorothy Mercer (Effect of the World War on Literature, literature which has been produced in recent times as a result of increased interest in peace, etc.).

Psychology: John Horowitz (psychological aspects of war, propaganda, peace, etc.).

Ethnological and cultural: Joseph Williams.

Biological aspects: Henry Ralston.
Chemical aspects: Milton Polissar.
Economic aspects: William Goss.
Sociological aspects: John Ross.
Causes of the World War: Robert Parker.
The League of Nations: John Gerstung.
The Naval Policy of the United States: Grant Marsh.
Effects of War and Peace on Art: Richard Allman.
The present Sino-Japanese conflict: Gertrude Bolton.
Philosophical aspects of war and peace: David Goldshur.
The military policy of the United States: James Hughes.
The war in Spain: Thomas Gabbert.
International law and neutrality: Franklin Sewell.

The proposed instructor in charge of the course is John Ross, instructor of social sciences in the college.

U C Will Be Visited By Home Econ Group Tomorrow Afternoon

Traveling to the University of California campus at Berkeley tomorrow to view displays of the University Home Economics department, San Francisco Junior College HEA members will leave the Ferry Building at 1:00 o'clock. They intend to eat luncheon in Berkeley, after which the group will finish the journey to the campus.

Displays will include note-books and manuals on costume design, undergarments, arts and crafts, textiles, tie-dyes, stencils, style books, blue prints (from the interior decorating department), and garments designed, planned, and cut by the students themselves. There will also be displays on designs in colors, taken from the fa-fih course which is the only lower division course not given at the college.

The displays will extend over Thursday, Friday, and Saturday from 9:00 to 12:00 o'clock in the morning and from 1:00 to 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon. The displays will be taken away Saturday noon.

After viewing the work of the University students, Claire Cuneo, advisor, will conduct a tour over the campus of her alma mater.

During a short meeting last Friday nominations for candidates for offices were held, they include Barbara Allin and Cecil Thompson for president; Dixie McCormack, Helen Hickey, and Louise Lym for vice-president; Meadus Regal, Alice Thompson, Jeanne Collins, and Phyllis Fullum for secretary, and Hazel Baunton and Eileen Eberhart for treasurer. Today is the last opportunity for members to vote. A ballot box is in Room 317.

Plans for the coming Christmas tree party were completed and the following committee chosen: Meadus Regal, Mary Skattebol, Eileen Eberhart, Jeanne Collins, Dixie McCormick, Phyllis Fullam, Lillian Auyong, and Barbara Allin. The party will be held at Miss Cuneo's home and will include Santa Claus, a Christmas tree, and a present for each co-ed present.

TALKS FEATURE OMICRON PHI'S TERM BANQUET

"It is very doubtful that neutrality will keep us out of war and the present situation accounts for this statement." These were the words by which Charles H. Vaughn, vice-president of Omicron Phi Pi and varsity debater, as principal speaker at the semi-annual Omicron Phi Pi dinner, held November 1, at the Ritz French Restaurant, 5 Post Street, summarized the aspects of neutrality.

"Treaties do not mean a thing today, and the manner in which they are ignored leads us to believe the statement that neutrality is useless to remedy world problems today," Vaughn backed these statements by summarizing the present state of conditions in Germany, Italy, Russia and Spain, and finally declared that Hitler and Mussolini simply ignored all obligations to other nations in pursuing their own ends.

Dr. Michael Zerchin, Omicron Phi Pi faculty adviser, followed up Vaughn's statements by relating the economic aspect of neutrality, and stated that actually if neutrality were to be enforced, it would be a great blow to the weaker nations of the world, because they would be refused raw materials necessary in their struggle to fight the more aggressive and stronger nations.

Dr. Franklin Sewell gave the political side of the neutrality problem, and pointed out that the present question is one of a political nature rather than economic. "People themselves have changed," stated Dr. Sewell, "and at the present time they are greedy and jealous of their neighbors. This view must be changed and the same feeling must be felt for their neighbors that they feel for themselves. This idea of lack of raw materials is merely an excuse and not the real reason for neutrality violations."

Carl Stough spoke on conditions in Germany and explained economic conditions that existed in 1901 when he was there. Also, he compared those with conditions found in 1908 when his brother was visiting Germany. Stough summed up his speech by stating that by felt neutrality enforcement was not the answer to the present world problem.

Evening's festivities were concluded with impromptu talks, given at a moment's notice with topics printed on cards and concealed near each guest's plate.

Guests present at the affair were, Dr. and Mrs. Michael Zerchin, I. Zanger, Franklin Sewell, Carl Stough, Mrs. Cecille Elliot, Anabelle Benson, Hedani Junko, Bill Switzer, Edna Weedum, Bill Simonds, Fred Wright, and Charles H. Vaughn.

Spending Deadline Is Set By Nichols

That a report of all receipts and expenditures of student funds may be submitted to the Board of Education at the end of the present semester, NO BILLS RECEIVED AFTER DECEMBER 17 WILL BE PAID FROM THE FALL SEMESTER BUDGET and will have to be included in the budget requirements for the spring semester, according to a notice submitted to all faculty advisers by Ward Nicols, Comptroller.

The report further stated that NO CHECKS WILL BE WRITTEN BETWEEN DECEMBER 17 AND JANUARY 4 of the following year, so if checks are required during that time they should be anticipated and requests for them made before that date.

El Cortez Scene Of Dinner For College Faculty

In a prevailing Spanish atmosphere, members of the faculty association will attend the last faculty gathering of the year. Guests will gather at the El Cortez Hotel, 550 Geary Street, this evening for dinner in the El Cortez dining room. Dinner is scheduled to start at six o'clock, ending at eight o'clock. A price of eighty-five cents will be charged for dinner. Immediately after dinner, members will assemble in the El Cortez penthouse, on the top floor for the "Tertulia." Local talent will provide the entertainment for the evening. Miss Musante, instructor in Spanish, will entertain with Spanish dances and Miss Badger will offer some Spanish songs. "Don" Sewell will also take part in the stage show production.

Dr. Williams has charge of all reservations for the affair and all instructors are asked to make reservations with him for the dinner, the "Tertulia," or both, the latter being free of charge. Dancing will be featured all evening.

Berkeley Transfers Asked For Credits

Word has been received from the Administration Office that all students who are contemplating transferring to the University of California in January, are urged to have a record of their junior college transcript forwarded to Berkeley without delay. This means even though the student had his record forwarded to Berkeley last semester or not, it is necessary for the University to have a record of this semester's transcript.

Application for admission to the University must be filed as early as possible, and there are blanks in the college office for such purposes. Final grades of the semester will not be distributed before December 27, and students are required to secure their grades at the office, Galileo High School. Students may also leave self-addressed stamped envelopes at the office and grades will be mailed to them if they desire.

School Musicians Will Be Furnished Own Instruments

That the San Francisco school board would furnish instruments for San Francisco Junior College was announced yesterday by Tom Kennedy, instructor of instrumental music here.

Instruments will be provided for the three instrumental groups, military band, dance orchestra, and classical orchestra, according to the announcement.

"In this way the college will not have to depend upon Galileo High School for their instruments as they have done in the past. The instruments which I am expecting next semester will all be new and also of the best make," said Kennedy.

It was also stated by Kennedy that he is expecting a large turnout and that most of the instruments will be in use.

Word from the office said that it is now definite that full university credit will be given for these instrumental subjects. Dance band will be given at 3:30 on Tuesdays and Thursdays; military band at 3:30 on Mondays, and classical orchestra at 3:30 on Fridays.

COLUMNIST TO GUIDE PAPER WITH SIMPERS, VAST IN KEY PLACES

Elected at a meeting of the editorial staff held late last week, Bob MacArthur, present Managing Editor of The Guardsman, was chosen to serve as Editor for the Spring semester.

MacArthur, who is one of the few remaining veterans on The Guardsman staff, has proved his capabilities this semester and with his experience, ability and unbounded energy, is expected to do great things.

SIMPERS PROMOTED

Florence Murphy will refain her position of Associate Editor and Dick Simpers, present Sports Editor, has been promoted to the post of Assistant Editor which will give him a chance to try his hand at feature writing and delve into the intricacies of novel make-up.

Don Mix, present Editor, will take over the position of Sports Editor left vacant by Simpers, and, as he has had a great deal of experience in this field, will act in an advisory capacity to subordinate members of his department, the most important of whom is John Julius, who has been named Assistant Sports Editor.

Julius has been active on the staff in a minor capacity, but this will be the first time that he has really been given a chance to work on the mechanical end of the paper with which he is familiar.

VAST MANAGING EDITOR

Fred Vast, this semester's Club Editor, and one of the most important people on the staff, will follow MacArthur as Managing Editor and in view of the splendid work he has done with his part of the paper this semester he is excepted to carry on in the same efficient manner.

Jean Page, who has written women's sports for the past two semesters, will assume the position of Women's Editor left vacant by the graduation of Ardell White. Miss Page, who has written one of the most outstanding WAA columns in the history of the college, will be able to branch out and, together with her women's staff, cover all women's activities.

NEW COURSES OFFERED BY HOTEL GROUP

Actual experience in meat cutting, the work to be done in the plant of one of the leading wholesale meat companies of San Francisco, will be offered as a course in the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, next semester, according to announcement made by J. Graham Sullivan, co-ordinator of the vocational division.

Chris Sarantis of the Schweitzer Meat Co., will be in charge of the course, which he indicates will provide unique and important technical training.

Other recently engaged instructors for the division include Frank Parry, well known auditor of the Hotel Whitcomb, who will devote three hours a week to a course in hotel auditing. Mr. Parry is considered one of the brilliant hotel auditors of the state. He replaces Frank Turner, resigned.

Lectures in advanced food preparation will be given by Ernst Hjorth, instructor in chef training. Chef Hjorth who joined the staff of the college in October was formerly associated with the California School for the Deaf in Berkeley.

FINALE

Through the long weary weeks of the past semester this last editorial has been contemplated with [illegible] delight. It seems symbolic of freedom [illegible] responsibility and the grind [illegible] ing ahead to "next week." Now that the [illegible] moment has arrived it is a feeling [illegible] relief that seizes us. Instead of [illegible] new found freedom it becomes difficult [illegible] ish wish that it were again August and [illegible] entire semester before us. All of which [illegible] is very sad but hardly in accord with the [illegible] editorial writing.

Our defense for this [illegible] reluctance to quit our post is caused [illegible] the cooperation and help of all those who have [illegible] Guardsman for the fall semester made [illegible] pleasure instead of drudgery.

To merely say thanks seems rather [illegible] thanks for a stick of gum or a toothpick. But our mood at the moment is one of simplicity rather than [illegible]. To all those who aided us in upholding the traditions that The Guardsman has developed in the [illegible] of its existence, we offer a very sincere and [illegible] "THANK YOU."

OUR LAST SHOT

One more editorial duty lies before us. It is a [illegible] tradition of college papers to issue [illegible] destroying advice to the students [illegible] of final examinations approaches. In [illegible] however, it seems the counsel has [illegible] it is practically useless to our purpose [illegible] but five days remaining before the dreaded [illegible] at least) period of final examinations [illegible] are one of that rara avis group [illegible] cannot hope to instill four months' work [illegible] less than a week.

Those who have spent the semester [illegible] reward in a feeling of confidence and self assurance [illegible] prepare to do battle with the [illegible] would be pointless to heap further [illegible] heads of the thoughtless throng [illegible] a nerve racking and very likely [illegible] ming. Whether they fail or make [illegible] little real consequence. What [illegible] ceived no real value from the [illegible] precious months of their college [illegible]

But in adherence to the old adage that tells us that there is good in everything perhaps the mistakes of the fall [illegible] serve to prod the lazy ones on to more productive [illegible] in the spring.

GOODBYE NOW

Before relinquishing the position [illegible] there is a bit of unfinished business [illegible] This semester has seen many [illegible] of which will be of permanent [illegible] of a sound college.

Of prime consideration is the announcement by the Board of Education that actual construction of a junior college building will start next month. After many months of seemingly hopeless effort, the [illegible] of the students and friends of the college have [illegible]

In the sphere of student government [illegible] is soon to be concluded has [illegible] of many invaluable precedents [illegible] thal and his administrative officers [illegible] on the splendid manner in which [illegible] able trying situations. Their [illegible] should serve as a worthwhile example [illegible] ers of the future.

It is impossible to list the many [illegible] vances that have been evolved in the [illegible] university preparatory depart[illegible] but the constant growth gives pr[illegible]

Many things must be left unsaid, many tributes must be left unpaid, but all may be certain that the fall term of 1937 is a strong link in the chain of development of the finest junior college in the country.

GOOD LUCK

We turn over the editorial duties [illegible] confident that his outstanding ability [illegible] newspaper next semester. It is said [illegible] ent on intelligent, well directed effort [illegible] we are certain that Bob will be [illegible]

COMMITTEES DISCUSS PLAN FOR ESTABLISHING COURSE IN PEACE

Groups From Faculty and Peace Society Study Proposed Addition To College Curriculum; To Be Titled "Problems of War and Peace"

Introduction into the college curriculum next semester of a course dealing with the problems of war and peace has been advocated by the Faculty Committee and the Peace Society Committee. The committee feels that such a course might be an interesting experiment from an educational standpoint, and that if it proves successful it might be used to advantage in other fields.

The proposed name for the course is Problems of War and Peace, and it would be a part of the sociology department, and preferably of an academic nature. Students consulted on the subject have expressed the belief that it should be a two-unit course, so it is probable that, in the event of its introduction, it will be taught twice weekly.

LECTURES DIVIDED

It was felt by the committee that it was inadvisable to have such a course given by just one instructor, since the course would be the reflection of only that one instructor's point of view. Therefore, it was suggested that it be given by several instructors, with some one instructor attending all the meetings and taking notes for the benefit of the other instructors who will lecture later, thus making it possible for the instructors who follow to tie in their material with what has gone before and avoid repetition. From time to time the instructor in charge of the course will give examinations and hold discussion of the material which has been presented in the various lectures.

Emphasis was laid on the fact that this is not designed to be a propaganda course, but rather a study of all the problems connected with war and peace which will present all points of view from an unbiased standpoint.

WIDE FIELD INDICATED

The proposal was submitted to President Archibald Cloud by the Faculty Committee, composed by Dorothy Mercer, John Ross, and Paul Pitman, and the Peace Society Committee, composed of Paul Benson, Fred Vast, and Elizabeth Reybock.

The suggested fields to be covered and the instructors to lecture are as follows:

Literature: Dorothy Mercer (Effect of the World War on Literature, literature which has been produced in recent times as a result of increased interest in peace, etc.).

Psychology: John Horowitz (psychological aspects of war, propaganda, peace, etc.)

Ethnological and cultural: Joseph Williams.

Biological aspects: Henry Ralston.

Chemical aspects: Milton Polissar.

Economic aspects: William Goss.

Sociological aspects: John Ross.

Causes of the World War: Robert Parker.

The League of Nations: John Gerstung.

The Naval Policy of the United States: Grant Marsh.

Effects of War and Peace on Art: Richard Allman.

The present Sino-Japanese conflict: Gertrude Bolton.

Philosophical aspects of war and peace: David Goldshur.

The military policy of the United States: James Hughes.

The war in Spain: Thomas Gabbert.

International law and neutrality: Franklin Sewell.

The proposed instructor in charge of the course is John Ross, instructor of social sciences in the college.

BUSINESS DEPT. HOLDS CLASSES IN EXAM WEEK

As business final examinations are given in the two weeks preceding the scheduled final week, all students who attend morning classes at Girls' High School and Business 55B at Galileo High School must be present every day through December 17, according to F. Grant Marsh, business faculty adviser.

Students who wish to be excused for examinations outside of the department must notify business instructors in advance.

"Skill subjects, such as typing or shorthand, require intensive practice, and as this is a short semester, every day must be utilized in order to equip students to meet the rigid requirements of the modern business world," said Marsh. "When a student graduates from the course, he should be able to feel that his initial training has been satisfactorily completed, with only the element of actual experience needed to broaden his scope."

U C Will Be Visited By Home Econ Group Tomorrow Afternoon

Traveling to the University of California campus at Berkeley tomorrow to view displays of the University Home Economics department, San Francisco Junior College HEA members will leave the Ferry Building at 1:00 o'clock. They intend to eat luncheon in Berkeley, after which the group will finish the journey to the campus.

Displays will include note-books and manuals on costume design, undergarments, arts and crafts, textiles, tie-dyes, stencils, style books, blue prints (from the interior decorating department), and garments designed, planned, and cut by the students themselves. There will also be displays on designs in colors, taken from the 6a-6b course which is the only lower division course not given at the college.

The displays will extend over Thursday, Friday, and Saturday from 9:00 to 12:00 o'clock in the morning and from 1:00 to 4:00 o'clock in the afternoon. The displays will be taken away Saturday noon.

After viewing the work of the University students, Claire Cuneo, advisor, will conduct a tour over the campus of her alma mater.

During a short meeting last Friday nominations for candidates for offices were held, they include Barbara Allin and Cecil Thompson for president; Dixie McCormack, Helen Hickey, and Louise Lym for vice-president; Meadus Regal, Alice Thompson, Jeanne Collins, and Phyllis Fullam for secretary, and Hazel Baunton and Eileen Eberhurt for treasurer. Today is the last opportunity for members to vote. A ballot box is in Room 317.

Plans for the coming Christmas tree party were completed and the following committee chosen: Meadus Regal, Mary Skattebol, Eileen Eberhurt, Jeanne Collins, Dixie McCormick, Phyllis Fullam, Lillian Auyong, and Barbara Allin. The party will be held at Miss Cuneo's home and will include Santa Claus, a Christmas tree, and a present for each co-ed present.

Hotel Students To Work Over Vacation

As guests of James Muir of Hotel California in Oakland, members of the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division are invited to spend two weeks of the coming Christmas holiday season studying the problems of hotel management and appplying training received at the college.

This opportunity presents a fitting climax to a semester filled with educational excursions by the hotel group, whose activities included trips to San Diego and Del Monte, in addition to industrious local work such as a turkey luncheon served for 170 students and faculty members in the Galileo cafeteria the day preceding Thanksgiving.

The Hotel Division served the Galileo High School Athletic Association at their dinner given Wednesday, December 1, and rendered its culinary aid for the Women's Athletic Association banquet the following evening.

Library Fines Must Be Paid By Dec. 17

"All library fines must be paid before December 17, so that students may receive either grades or transcripts from the Registrar's Office," declared Francis Colligan, instructor-in-charge of the library. "The library is an indispensable institution, and must conduct its business effectively, hence the necessity of keeping a close check of all books issuing from it."

Books circulating from the library during the next week and a half are to be returned to the library not later than 2:00 o'clock December 17, last day of final examinations.

TALKS FEATURE OMICRON PHI'S TERM BANQUET

"It is very doubtful that neutrality will keep us out of war and the present situation accounts for this statement." These were the words by which Charles H. Vaughn, vice-president of Omicron Phi Pi and varsity debater, as principal speaker at the semi-annual Omicron Phi Pi dinner, held November 1, at the Ritz French Restaurant, 5 Post Street, summarized the aspects of neutrality.

"Treaties do not mean a thing today, and the manner in which they are ignored leads us to believe the statement that neutrality is useless to remedy world problems today." Vaughn backed these statements by summarizing the existing state of conditions in Germany, Italy, Russia and Spain, and flatly declared that Hitler and Mussolini simply ignored all obligations to other nations in pursuing their own ends.

Dr. Michael Zerchin, Omicron Phi Pi faculty adviser, followed up Vaughn's statements by relating the economic aspect of neutrality, and stated that actually if neutrality were to be enforced, it would be a great blow to the weaker nations of the world, because they would be refused raw materials necessary in their struggle to fight the more aggressive and stronger nations.

Dr. Franklin Sewell gave the political side of the neutrality problem and pointed out that the present question is one of a political nature rather than economic. "People themselves have changed," stated Dr. Sewell, "and at the present time they are greedy and jealous of their neighbors. This view must be changed and the same feeling must be felt for their neighbors that they feel for themselves. This idea of lack of raw materials is purely an excuse and not the real reason for neutrality violations."

Carl Stough spoke on conditions in Germany and explained economic conditions that existed in 1901 when he was there. Also, he compared those with conditions found in 1908 when his brother was visiting Germany. Stough summed up his speech by stating that he felt neutrality enforcement was not the answer to the present world problem.

Evening's festivities were concluded with impromptu talks, given at a moment's notice with topics printed on cards and concealed near each guest's plate.

Guests present at the affair were, Dr. and Mrs. Michael Zarchin, I. Zangor, Franklin Sewell, Carl Stough, Mrs. Cecille Elliot, Anabelle Benson, Hedani Junko, Bill Switzer, Edna Woodum, Bill Simonds, Fred Wright, and Charles H. Vaughn.

Spending Deadline Is Set By Nichols

That a report of all receipts and expenditures of student funds may be submitted to the Board of Education at the end of the present semester, NO BILLS RECEIVED AFTER DECEMBER 17 WILL BE PAID FROM THE FALL SEMESTER BUDGET and will have to be included in the budget requirements for the spring semester, according to a notice submitted to all faculty advisers by Ward Nicols, Comptroller.

The report further stated that NO CHECKS WILL BE WRITTEN BETWEEN DECEMBER 17 AND JANUARY 4 of the following year, so if checks are required during that time they should be anticipated and requests for them made before that date.

El Cortez Scene Of Dinner For College Faculty

In a prevailing Spanish atmosphere, members of the faculty association will attend the last faculty gathering of the year. Guests will gather at the El Cortez Hotel, 550 Geary Street, this evening for dinner in the El Cortez dining room. Dinner is scheduled to start at six o'clock, ending at eight o'clock. A price of eighty-five cents will be charged for dinner. Immediately after dinner, members will assemble in the El Cortez penthouse, on the top floor for the "Tertulia." Local talent will provide the entertainment for the evening. Miss Musante, instructor in Spanish, will entertain with Spanish dances and Miss Badger will offer some Spanish songs. "Don" Sewell will also take part in the stage show production.

Dr. Williams has charge of all reservations for the affair and all instructors are asked to make reservations with him for the dinner, the "Tertulia," or both, the latter being free of charge. Dancing will be featured all evening.

Berkeley Transfers Asked For Credits

Word has been received from the Administration Office that all students who are contemplating transferring to the University of California in January, are urged to have a record of their junior college transcript forwarded to Berkeley without delay. This means even though the student had his record forwarded to Berkeley last semester or not, it is necessary for the University to have a record of this semester's transcript.

Application for admission to the University must be filed as early as possible, and there are blanks in the college office for such purposes. Final grades of the semester will not be distributed before December 27, and students are required to secure their grades at the office, Galileo High School. Students may also leave self-addressed stamped envelopes at the office and grades will be mailed to them if they desire.

School Musicians Will Be Furnished Own Instruments

That the San Francisco school board would furnish instruments for San Francisco Junior College was announced yesterday by Tom Kennedy, instructor of instrumental music here.

Instruments will be provided for the three instrumental groups, military band, dance orchestra, and classical orchestra, according to the announcement.

"In this way the college will not have to depend upon Galileo High School for their instruments as they have done in the past. The instruments which I am expecting next semester will all be new and also of the best make," said Kennedy.

It was also stated by Kennedy that he is expecting a large turnout and that most of the instruments will be in use.

Word from the office said that it is now definite that full university credit will be given for these instrumental subjects. Dance band will be given at 3:30 on Tuesdays and Thursdays; military band at 3:30 on Mondays, and classical orchestra at 3:30 on Fridays.

335 Conscientious Voters Voice People's Choice of College Leaders

Although the total vote cast in the recent college elections, held last Wednesday, did not fulfill the expectations of the election committee with few exceptions, the officers were heatedly contested. The total number of persons voting was 335.

The vice-president's position went to Jack Leavitt who won from Howard Cloud in another of the hotly contested posts.

Mervyn Weiner, incumbent treasurer of the Men's Club, retained his position by winning from Lou De Lara.

College women elected Barbara Randall, treasurer of the WSS and secretary of the AWS, to the presidency of the AWS. Muriel Mills and Kay Evelitch followed in that order.

Annabelle Benson won the position of AWS Vice-President from Betty Morand and Vivian MacDonald.

The AWS secretary post was taken by Jane Mitchell who defeated Mildred Farquhar, and Miriam Dunne won the treasurer office in the only other uncontested race on the ballot.

The complete list of candidates follows, with the total vote cast for each office:

COLUMNIST TO GUIDE PAPER WITH SIMPERS, VAST IN KEY PLACES

Elected at a meeting of the editorial staff held late last week, Bob MacArthur, present Managing Editor of The Guardsman, was chosen to serve as Editor for the Spring semester.

MacArthur, who is one of the few remaining veterans on The Guardsman staff, has proved his capabilities this semester and with his experience, ability and unbounded energy, is expected to do great things.

SIMPERS PROMOTED

Florence Murphy will retain her position of Associate Editor and Dick Simpers, present Sports Editor, has been promoted to the post of Assistant Editor which will give him a chance to try his hand at feature writing and delve into the intricacies of novel make-up.

Don Mix, present Editor, will take over the position of Sports Editor left vacant by Simpers, and, as he has had a great deal of experience in this field, will act in an advisory capacity to submembers of his department, the most important of whom is John Julius, who has been named Assistant Sports Editor.

Julius has been active on the staff in a minor capacity, but this will be the first time that he has really been given a chance to work on the mechanical end of the paper with which he is familiar.

VAST MANAGING EDITOR

Fred Vast, this semester's Club Editor, and one of the most important people on the staff, will follow MacArthur as Managing Editor and in view of the splendid work he has done with his part of the paper this semester he is excepted to carry on in the same efficient manner.

Jean Page, who has written women's sports for the past two semesters, will assume the position of Women's Editor left vacant by the graduation of Ardell White. Miss Page, who has written one of the most outstanding WAA columns in the history of the college, will be able to branch out and, together with her women's staff, cover all women's activities.

NEW COURSES OFFERED BY HOTEL GROUP

Actual experience in meat cutting, the work to be done in the plant of one of the leading wholesale meat companies of San Francisco, will be offered as a course in the Hotel and Restaurant Management Division, next semester, according to announcement made by J. Graham Sullivan, co-ordinator of the vocational division.

Chris Sarantis of the Schweitzer Meat Co., will be in charge of the course, which he indicates will provide unique and important technical training.

Next semester, for the first time, the hotel division will include in the curriculum a complete course in Food Cost Accounting, directed by Milton Bell. Bell is assistant manager, in charge of catering, at the Sir Francis Drake Hotel He will give special attention to a study of the practical application of accounting principles to food control, preparation of cost and sales analysis and daily food cost figures.

Both Sarantis and Bell are now new comers to the vocational division. Other recently engaged instructors for the division include Frank Parry, well known auditor of the Hotel Whitcomb, who will devote three hours a week to a course in hotel auditing. Mr. Parry is considered one of the brilliant hotel auditors of the state. He replaces Frank Turner, resigned.

Lectures in advanced food preparation will be given by Ernst Hjorth, instructor in chef training. Chef Hjorth who joined the staff of the college in October was formerly associated with the California School for the Deaf in Berkeley.

FINALE

Through the long weary weeks of the past semester this last editorial has been contemplated with unbounded delight. It seems symbolic of freedom, a release from constant responsibility and the grinding necessity of always looking ahead to "next week." Now that the long awaited moment has arrived it is a feeling more akin to regret than relief that seizes us. Instead of wanting to revel in our new found freedom it becomes difficult to suppress a childish wish that it were again August, and we still had the entire semester before us. All of which you probably say is very sad but hardly in accord with the technique of good editorial writing.

Our defense for this dribble lies in the belief that our reluctance to quit our post is caused by the knowledge that the cooperation and help of all those who had a part in The Guardsman for the fall semester made our task a genuine pleasure instead of drudgery.

To merely say thanks seems rather inadequate. One says thanks for a stick of gum or a toothpick. But our mood at the moment is one of simplicity rather than eloquence, to all those who aided us in upholding the traditions that The Guardsman has developed in the five semesters of its existence, we offer a very sincere and meaningful, "THANK YOU."

OUR LAST SHOT

One more editorial duty lies before us. It is a sacred tradition of college papers to issue a pedantic bit of lethargy-destroying advice to the student body at large as the period of final examinations approaches. In this particular case, however, it seems the counsel has been withheld too long; it is practically useless to stir persons from indolence with but five days remaining before the dreaded (in some cases, at least) period of final examinations arrives. Unless you are one of that rara avis group classified as genius you cannot hope to instill four months' work into your head in less than a week.

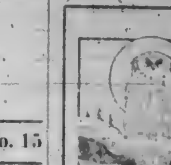
Those who have spent the semester sensibly have their reward in a feeling of confidence and self assurance as they prepare to do battle with the obnoxious Blue Books. It would be pointless to heap further misery on the hapless heads of the thoughtless throng who are making ready for a nerve racking, and very likely futile, session of cramming. Whether they fail or manage just to "get by" is of little real consequence. What does matter is that they received no real value from the course, that they wasted four precious months of their college life.

But in adherence to the old adage that tells us that there is good in everything perhaps the mistakes of the fall may serve to prod the lazy ones on to more productive activity in the spring.

GOODBYE NOW

Before relinquishing the position of an edioral writer there is a bit of unfinished business that claims attention. This semester has seen many things accomplished, some of which will be of permanent importance in the growth of a sound college.

Of prime consideration is the announcement by the Board of Education that actual construction of a junior college building will start next month. After many months of seemingly hopeless effort, the urgent appeals of the students and friends of the college have finally been heard.



In the sphere of student government, the semester which is soon to be concluded has witnessed the establishment of many invaluable precedents. President Gene Blumenthal and his administrative officers are to be congratulated on the splendid manner in which they handled innumerable trying situations. Their methods of management should serve as a worthwhile example to the campus leaders of the future.

It is impossible to list the many improvements and advances that have been evolved in the various terminal and university preparatory departments of our institution, but the constant growth gives promise of future greatness.

Many things must be left unsaid, many tributes must be left unpaid, but all may be certain that the Fall term of 1937 is a strong link in the chain of development of the finest junior college in the country.

GOOD LUCK

We turn over the editorial duties to Bob MacArthur, confident that his outstanding ability will produce a fine newspaper next semester. It is said that success is dependent on intelligent, well directed effort. Such being the case we are certain that Bob will be successful.

Mental Mutterings

By FEM

Quicker than you can say "thirty days hath September, April, June and so forth," it's time for finals, and with time for finals comes time for the last issue of The Guardsman for this semester, and our last chance to "mental mutter" for awhile. Yes, Gwenny, we said "awhile," because as soon as we live through the Christmas holidays we'll be back again, and if nobody catches up with us, maybe we'll be able to continue writing our weekly wail. In the meantime, the end of the semester is here and as always at ends of semesters, it is time to review the activities of the past, and take a peek or two into the future. Well, as we always say, the past is the past, so there's no use dwelling upon it, and as we cannot claim to be a fortune teller or stuff like that, we don't know much about what's coming. However, if next term is half as much fun as this one has been—Woo Woo!

May We Present . . . Robert MacArthur (Bob to the initiated), Guardsman Editor for next semester, and author of the now famous "Out of the Fog" . . . born in Kentucky but finally (don't ask us why) decided to make his home "across the bay in Oakland way" where he got his first taste of the fog that he is always trying to come out of . . . greatest ambition is to go to Cal, which is something he will probably accomplish next fall and his favorite pastime is dashing off odes, sonnets and stuff . . . complains that he is "more punned against than punning" but it's a lie . . . has no particular dislikes aside from the author of this column whom he regards as "an idiot among morons" and is very fond of himself, for which we don't blame him . . . much!

Heading for a local toy department with the idea in mind of expressing our desire for a bean bag and a stuffed rattlesnake, we found Toyland surrounded by Junior College students and Santa Claus out to lunch! Honestly, it's so trying at times! We managed to hide our disappointment by watching all the littlest kids go up and get a present from Snow White, but, not having twenty-six cents for to get ourselves one, we waltzed over to the electric trains and squeezed in between two State block men (in dark glasses, the sissies) and watched the trains go 'round and 'round until, overtaken by dizziness, we decided to go to class!

All of which is 30 for this year and to those of you that we won't see until 1938 . . . Happy Holidays!

EXCHANGE NOTES

The "Occident" is to be reborn, or in other words, Cal's off-campus publication ended one career last week but starts another next semester, as approved by the Executive Committee. The new publication will feature general articles aimed to have more popular appeal, and will probably sell at a lower price. The "Occident" has survived years of struggle to gain a foothold among campus publications, but because of its articles, comes under the caption of "You can't print that."

DAILY CALIFORNIAN

Digression . . . You know, we'd "be happy about the whole thing" as far as writing this column goes, but this isn't to be a column, it's to be "fillers," and so we can't ramble on and tell you-all that San Jose State, and Cal, and Stanford, and all the rest of the "high-stepping" colleges had some simply "ducky" formals, and hayrides, and such social gatherings; that Mary Jane Blang is going to marry or already is married to John Picklepuss; that Patty just adores a certain right end (of the football squad, stoops); that there doesn't seem to be a superfluity of originality around these parts when many of the same papers have the same column heads (Lighthouse of the Foghorn and Daily Cal and Out of the Fog in The Guardsman and S. F. State); that—well, we could go on telling you-all about the interesting lectures different colleges have, and of the new styles of the schools "across the way" —but we can't because we're "fillers" and rather than have the wrath of the Irish and Scotch come down on us, we'd best remain "very happy about the whole thing."

If this goes in, "MERRY CHRISTMAS AND HAPPY NEW YEAR."

Vale! Now is the time to make the customary farewells, write all the obituaries, compliment all the people you've been cussin' all semester, pay all your debts by borrowing from Peter (that is if you are like this columnist) and in general conform to all the customary twaddle, so necessary to the last week of any semester.

Figuring that we're not the ones to shatter any time-hallowed traditions, we plunge into the business without further ado.

First of all, there's the delightful and space-filling pastime of picking All-this-or-that teams. In keeping with this column's habit, and in response to requests, we give you our All-team to end all all-teams:

Left End: Norma Parent: It's ap-Parent that she deserves something, even if it's only what's Left. Is that Right?

Left Tackle: Dean Browne: Three reasons, he likes publicity, we picked him last year, and he's a good guy anyway (that's four-bits' worth, Dean).

Left Guard: Jimmie Preovolos: Picked for the stellar work he did guarding the voting machines in the recent elections, and besides, he can "truck"

Catcher: R. Waste-basket: catch on?

Pitcher: Ewer "right, this is supposed to be a football team.

Center: Joan Nourse: Bawls us all out (excuse us, we mean) passes the ball back. Is used to "driving blocks" (without finding a parking space).

Right Guard: "The Guardsman": It must guard something!

Right Tackle: Merv Weiner: This is a legitimate pick. He takes them out.

Right End: Don Mills: Can't explain this pick, Mills couldn't "take out" for home.

Quarterback: "Flim" Flamm: Loses every bet on the football games, and then hollers, "I want my quarterback." Fine pick!

Right Halfback: Tom O'Neill, assistant to the assistant, chosen because he thought "Hold that Line!" was a telephone company slogan.

Wrong Halfback: The mythical "prof" who chewed the paper and threw the gum away.

Fullback: Rheumatic of Zigzaga.

Substitute End: That guy MacArthur, for isn't it true that all good things come to an End?

So much for that, and if you didn't like it, don't read it again.

Now for the people we would like to thank publicly:

James Hughes for making us read those lousy books in his poli sci class.

Leo Cain for some of the most entertaining lectures we had all semester. Some of them were gems, no less.

Alice Cooper for stimulating us to what we thought was some of our best writing.

Dorothy Mercer for some more decidedly entertaining lecture hours.

Paul Pittman for refusing to give us much news to write from his office.

We could go on, at the risk of being called a shiner of the "forbidden fruit," and name many more people who contributed much to our enjoyment of this semester, but we won't.

Suffice to say:

The end is here, there is no more,
Come back again sometime.
We'll still be here, same as before;
We'll never "leave the dime."

OUT OF THE FOG

By BOB MacARTHUR

365 Days Ago Today

A four-page roto insert to the regular Guardsman gave Junior College students an eight-page paper for the week. This last issue, printed on glossy paper, had pictures of faculty members, graduates, athletics, various action shots as well as pictures taken at random throughout the school. All eight pages held the amazing total of 104 pictures.

Comprising twelve players, the varsity basketball team started south on a barnstorming tour. Although the main objective of the tour was to defeat the powerful Los Angeles Junior College team, Coach Louis "Dutch" Conlan was to send his men into four contests with various other junior colleges of the southland.

In a meeting held at the Whitcomb Hotel, the Northern California Junior College Conference made several drastic provisions for enlargement and reorganization. New schools admitted to the conference were Placer, Stockton, Armstrong and Salinas.

George Pedrin, brawny Ram guard, was the only S. F. J. C. gridder to make the Northern California conference mythical all-star eleven. Placing four men apiece on the first all-star team, the champion Modestans shared honors with the San Mateo Bulldogs, runners-up for the conference title. Marin had two men to complete the eleven.

In a column called "Live Right" Joseph A. Amori warned the entire school on colds and also gave their causes and remedies.

Only 100 bids were left for the Soph Hop to be held at the Terrace Ballroom of the Fairmont Hotel, said Ed Schwartz.

The second team of the Rifle and Pistol Club won a match with the Pacific Rod and Gun Club to the score of 768 to 743.

Amateur derby night was to be the theme of the combined AWS and social committee dance to be held at the Western Women's Club on Friday evening. It was to be patterned after the derby night often held at the Palace Hotel, the betting being done by colors and the racing consisting of hurdles and other races by men and women. All members of the Associated Students were invited.

To gain practical experience in the field, several members of the hotel and restaurant division have been given jobs for the Christmas vacation. They were all placed in San Francisco.

As their first appearance, the new Junior College string quartet gave a concert by candlelight in the Galileo auditorium.

Presidential Patter

By Gene Blumenthal

"Alma Mater of our heart, blessings be thine ever . . ." Two years have slipped away, almost in the twinkling of an eye. Two years—devoted to study, play, and accomplishment. Time must inevitably pass, it is said, and our stay at the college has indeed been memorable, and happy. As the close of the semester draws nearer, and our stay at the college becomes limited, we look back over what has proved to be the most important and eventful years of our young life, and we are submerged in a feeling of conflicting emotions.

To Don Mix, our successor, we sincerely tender our whole hearted wishes for a very prosperous and successful semester in office. It is quite apparent that a person of such outstanding ability and character, capable of inspired leadership and service to his college, will undoubtedly lend strength and accomplishment to his office. It was for these reasons that Don attained his place unopposed, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

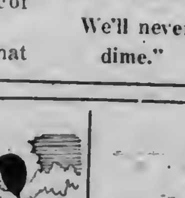
To all those persons, who by their service and cooperation, have contributed to the success of the present semester, we lend our deep and heartfelt thanks.

To those persons who have questioned the quality of our actions, we say that everything done, was done in the interests of the college and the young men and women composing it.

To those persons who have felt that far too much dispute has characterized our every act, we say, and honestly too, that all arguments were over questions of principle and methods of achievement. Personality at no time entered the picture.

To those persons who have felt that the semester has been a successful one we bow down as an humble token of our gratitude.

If, by trying to lead the way and set a pace of accomplishment, we have in any manner satisfied the students, the we feel we have quaffed a little from the cup of success. If in any way we have profited by our varied experiences as student leader, then we have quaffed a little from the cup of life.



Somehow it seems strange that one cannot say goodbye to something he has lived for, to something that has become a part of him. And as we turn our back on the college and everything which in our eyes it symbolizes, our feelings are expressed in the words of the college hymn, which is ringing in our ears. Truly the epitome of our thoughts, we cannot help but jot down the words.

Alma Mater of our heart,
Lose thee we will never . . .
For on memory's sea of years,
We will never fail,
Here's a toast through shining tears,
To thee, Hail, Hail!

Spartan Daily, San Jose State College's paper, is sponsoring a campaign in which everyone takes part in playing Santa Claus. In its publications' office, the staff has completely decorated a 10-foot Christmas tree. All they want now is to have some toys tucked under "the leafy boughs," and each student is asked to "Bring A Toy" (slogan for the month which is placed at the bottom of each story, so you can't miss it).

SPARTAN DAILY.

If you don't want to have friction in your married life, just marry a man, or woman, who doesn't speak the same language you do. According to Ramola Nijinsky, wife of the dancer, this is an asset, in that it prevents your knowing what your husband, or wife, is calling you in his native tongue, thus preventing friction. SWAN SONG

This is the last issue of this semester's volume of The Guardsman. The paper will, of course, be out again in a few weeks, as soon as the holidays are over and you are back at college, but without Girl-i-gigs. Yes, ma'am, we are finally taking our leave of the dear old alma mater to go out into the cold, cruel world. Not that this is significant or even important in itself, but we have observed a few things during our two-year stay here that concern every woman student in the college.

First of all, we entered in the spring of '36, when the college was drawing a deep breath and diffidently starting out on the second semester of its existence. Those trail-blazers who laid the foundations of San Francisco Junior College had provided for an Association of Women Students, a Women's Athletic Association, and a few clubs that were made up of women, or that admitted women students. It's a wonder to us, as we look back on those days, that the AWS and WAA officers did so well. Shunted around from one building to another, provided with painfully inadequate facilities, and hampered by the newness of the organizations and their own inexperience, they nevertheless established a splendid tradition for the later officers to follow.

Remember the second term's AWS tea honoring the high school graduates? A schoolroom at Galileo was the only place available in which to give it, but it proved to be so successful that the guests had as good a time as if they had sipped their tea in a super-special setting. (This term's tea was a sumptuous affair in the Alexander Hamilton Hotel.)

The WAA officers were just as enthusiastic. They inaugurated the now famous Tourney Week, integrated the various sports into clubs, and perfected their highly efficient constitution. That's a large order, but the present excellent organization of the WAA testifies to the helpfulness of their administration.

As women's affairs went along and difficulties were overcome, definite improvements began to be shown. The AWS branched out and gave more social affairs, improved its organization, and established a closer relationship with the rank and file of women students. Finally it abandoned its old method of election of officers for election by ballot, and then this term placed the names of its candidates on the voting machines.

Each semester's AWS administration was more successful than the last, until now, the women students of the college look back on Fall '37 as the best of the lot. For example, the organization sponsored a dance, a tea for all the co-eds, and a tea for high school graduates that was the most elaborate of any yet given.

So, sorry as we are to leave, we are glad that we're leaving after so enjoyable a semester. It's nice to have such pleasant memories to look back upon when we are wrestling with the wolf at the door, and it's nicer to know that other women students will have such a superior AWS to work with next semester.

To Norma Parent, who has been so kind in helping us cover the AWS, thanks, and to Jean Page, our successor, good luck.

Athletes Get Block Awards At Final Rally

Members of Championship Squads Rewarded With Letters

Ending a highly successful athletic season, in the customary manner, the members of the football and soccer squads received their block letter awards at the semi-annual award rally, held last Friday afternoon in the Galileo auditorium. Both teams annexed titles during the past term. The gridders by means of a fast finish, ended in a tie for first place with the powerful Sacramento eleven, while Tom Wilson's soccer team won undisputed possession of their league crown, for the second consecutive year.

Among those who received blocks, the following fellows have earned their second award in the same sport, and, therefore, receive the white sweater with red block SF, instead of the customary red sweater and white block.

FOOTBALL — Elwood Pearce, Joe Geudet, Will Dolman, Randy Osborne, Preston Worsham, Ray Egelhofer, and Wes Olson.

SOCCER — Leo Johnson, Jimmy Fahn, Mike Klebanoff, Ellard Taylor and Vince Zuardo.

There is no award provided for Jimmy Fahn, although this is second block earned in soccer. Fahn has proven himself as one of the outstanding athletes in the short history of the college, having already earned two blocks in track and two in soccer, not to mention the fact that he holds medals for winning the 118-lb. boxing title, and for wrestling an exhibition bout in the semi-annual boxing and wrestling show.

The following fellows received their first block awards in football and soccer:

FOOTBALL — Bud Weichers, Bob Lee, Merv Weiner, Jerry Flamm, Andy Oddstead, Tom Burke, Mel Petterson, Woody Lennes, Al MacDonald, Bob Fex, John Verducchi, Walt Boitano, Milt Berman (mgr.).

SOCCER — Cion Lim, James Mull, Frand O'Conner, Bob Campbell, Bill Flynn, Bill Fisher, Jack Paises, George Icco, Milt Stokes.

Riflemen Organize, Hold First Meeting

With their club organized and ready to begin its first activities, seventeen members of the Ex-Rifleers held a meeting Friday evening, November 26, at the home of John Stewart, 2320 California Street.

Plans to join the National Rifle Association were discussed, as well as a party to be held in January. A campaign for new members is under way, according to John Stewart, club president. "They will be taken from present members of the college Rifle and Pistol Club who are leaving in December," he said.

"We plan to start shooting at the Galileo range the first of the year, and will arrange a match between the alumni members and one of the college teams," he continued.

At the meeting, William A. Hancock, coach and range officer of the college teams, was elected an honorary member.

The next meeting will be held at 7:30 o'clock Wednesday evening, December 22, at the home of Betty Hyde, club vice-president, 1934 Ninth Avenue.

Officers of the club are Stewart, president; Miss Hyde, vice-president, and Marygail Konkey, secretary-treasurer. Honorary members include Hancock, James S. Hughes, Rifle Club sponsor, and Mack Garr, assistant coach and range officer of the college teams.

P.E. Club Will Hold Pre-Registration Tea

To discuss the problems, needs, and interests of women majoring in physical education, or recreation, the physical education club will hold a pre-registration tea December 29, at the home of the club sponsor, Bertha Keller. The club plans to have faculty representatives from the University of California, San Francisco State College, and San Jose State College attend the tea and explain to physical education majors the subject requirements, professional objectives and standards expected of transfer students.

Although formed only recently this semester, the physical education club has grown rapidly in membership and is open to all women who are interested in the professions of physical education and recreation. It has as its aim the desire to help students maintain an interest in their chosen professions and also to stimulate an interest in qualified students who are undecided as to what profession they will choose, for these students can obtain a good background in varied activities as well as professional advice and guidance while at the junior college.

STUFF

By JERRY FLAMM

This being the last issue of The Guardsman in which our creative ability receives an outlet, we should conclude with a heart-throbbing masterpiece of literary prose. Well, we ain't gonna do it. All we have to say is that we thank all those who have been considerate and patient enough to scan this section of the "Monarch of the College Press." We have made many mistakes, but after all we are only human, although there are those who will dispute this. We wish to thank outgoing editor Don Mix for his generous aid and giving us an opportunity of annoying the readers. We also wish to express our appreciation of being able to work under such a "Jefe" as Dick Simpers. Our appreciation too, to Flo Murphy, Ardell White and the rest of the staff for their kindness and friendship. To Bob McArthur of the Berkeley McArthurs, we express our sincere hope that every issue of the paper next term will be as fine as he is capable of making it.

With this issue, we conclude our survey of next season's football prospects with a look at the backfield:

Walt Boitano: Gave mervelous performance this year in first season of competitive football. Very fast. Does century in 10 flat. Hits line very hard and fast due to speed. Usually good for yardage. Must learn to keep head up when past line of scrimmage and cut for sidelines. Fair punter. College potentialities.

Johnny Verducci: Little package of dynamite. Small but mighty. Speedy and very clever ball carrier. Liable to go distance at any time. Always dangerous. Good tackler and safety man. Loves game.

Al McDonald: Most finished player on squad. Belongs in university. Brilliant and steady at same time. Wonderful kicker and runner. Unlike Boitano, Mac tends to cut to sidelines too much. If the former could take a little of Mac's habit and give the latter a portion of his straight ahead drive, the Rams would have the most powerful offensive backfield in the conference next year.

Woody Lennes: Good man, who showed steady improvement during season. Aggressive all-around player. Fast, lots of drive, good passer, and a ball hawk. Should blossom into real star next year.

Bob Fex: The widely-heralded "Sammy Baugh" of the conference. A powerful and sharp-shooting passer. Showed some great flashes of running capabilities this year. With his passing threat would make a great running back. Distinct asset to team.

Gus Kotta: Another boy who showed up excellently in his first year of football. Natural athlete. Is tough, dynamiting blocker, fast, tricky, and a real hustler. Perfect football temperament. Liable to make starting lineup.

Jack O'Neil: This boy, also a first year football man, is liable to stay at his end spot of this season or be shifted back to a halfback position. If can add some beef in intervening time, may stay at a back spot. Good pass receiver, fast, and capable.

Art Nelson: A money player. Looks mediocre in practice sessions but will play great ball under fire. Good tackler, hard line hitter, and very aggressive in actual play.

Ed Canepa: Unfortunately, was cut down by Ol' Man Injury early in the season. Showed first-string potentialities. Very good man. Perhaps next year will be his.

Ed Cregi: Best looking of the Lamb backs. Very good southpaw passer. Lots of speed on flank runs. Good defensive man.

Joe Alio: Looked very good in Lamb's final game with State Jayvees. Good punter. Booming blocker. Smart. Handles safety spot in fine fashion.

Jim Mohlick: Has marvelous possibilities, if will capitalize on them. Smooth player. Needs to be fired up. Good punter. Hits hard. Sure tackler. Watch him.

Moleskin Moe gasps: Lee Eisan and Jack Gaddy, assistant Ram grid coaches, are heading for Mexico City with their spouses via auto as soon as finals are over. They will spend 8 days in the southern capital and then drive like mad back to Pasadena for the Rose bowl game.

Ram Boxers In Fights At State

Saving the night for San Francisco Junior College, Lionel Cade and Frank and Bob Holmes, the only Ram boxers to put in an appearance at San Francisco State's boxing show last Wednesday night, showed up on schedule and broke even in two matches with Staters. Bob Holmes did not fight, although he was ready.

Fighting at 135 pounds, Cade scored a technical k.o. over Jim Martin in a fast slugging match. Martin had none the worst of the going in the first round but in the second canto Cade's punches began to tell on the State scrapper. The bout ended when Martin's second threw in the towel.

Frank Holmes found himself pitted against a heavier and more experienced man. He was knocked out in the second round.

VETERAN CAGE ACE RETURNS

Warren Egan, a star on Coach Dutch Conlan's basketball team a year ago, is returning to the squad, and is expected to be one of the Rams' mainstays during the coming season.

WOMEN'S SPORTS PARADE

By JEAN PAGE

IN RETROSPECT

Women's sports have finished their parade for this semester. Tourney Week and the final banquet are over and all the awards have been presented. It is early, perhaps, to reminisce but the activities that have made women's sports become increasingly popular and important this semester, deserve a final pat on the back.

For the first time, the WAA published a handbook which gave all the information about the WAA that an incoming freshman would want to know and cleared up some points that were still hazy in sophomore minds about the system of awards. In it, President Gloria Swicegood outlined the purposes and functions of the WAA. A standard gym suit was adopted: a white regulation middy, white twill shorts with a red stripe on the side and white shoes and socks.

Sign-ups for WAA sports were held from September 6 to 10 at Powell Street and the gymnasium at Galileo. On September 15 and 16, managers for WAA sports were elected. Those chosen for the semester were: Archery, Margaret Parks; tennis, Virginia Lum; dancing, Esther Tani; golf, Claire Mason; riding, Charlotte Zier; swimming, Norma Gattavara; badminton, Ethel Vizzard, and volleyball, Ellen Cumming.

Council officers for the semester were: Gloria Swicegood, president; Margaret Wormell, vice-president; Dorothy Canavan, secretary, and Gail Hanna, treasurer.

The first WAA social event of the semester was the WAA initiation, orientations luncheon, held at Galileo, October 7. New members were given the WAA pledge and signed the membership book. Team managers were introduced. And Virginia Kwiatt's knees began to shake when Margaret Wormell told her that Gloria Swicegood might not be able to be at the luncheon, and she would then have to give the introductory speech.

Sponsored by the WAA, the first women's football rally in the history of the college was held on October 20. Gloria Swicegood and Tennis Manager Virginia Lum arranged the rally and persuaded Football Coach Dutch Conlan to be a speaker at the rally and answer feminine questions about football. The women had so many questions to ask him that he stole the show and the rest of the program couldn't be completed. And they learned about football from him.

A volleyball battle between the men's and women's volleyball teams proved to be one of the most amusing events of the semester. We regret to say that the men won, 24 to 17, due, so he would say, to the splendid playing of Dean Browne.

November saw Swimming Manager Norma Gattavara besieging fortress WJ in an attempt to secure headlines to publicize the women's water carnival on November 10. Both men and women participated in this WAA event. There were races, dives, and swimming and diving exhibitions by famous coast stars. The carnival was worth a headline as it was one of the best events of the semester.

And then Tourney Week came rolling around the corner and caught an unsuspecting sports reporter unawares. There were finals in all WAA sports. There isn't space to repeat the number of events held during Tourney Week nor the winners in these events, but it was the best of Tourney Weeks, and all who had a part in it deserve to be congratulated. Last Thursday evening at the final banquet of the semester, awards were presented to those excelling in WAA sports.

A women's sports reporter can't pick an All-American or All-Coast team composed of women, but she can pick the most outstanding college women athlete of this semester and, as everyone will agree, the honor goes to slender, friendly, Dot Canavan. Last Thursday's banquet proves that. When the list of those on the first tennis team was read, Dot Canavan's name was called. Dot Canavan was on the first team in volleyball. She made the first team in badminton. And then when Vera Spencer, WAA sponsor, gave the names of the two girls out of the whole college who had won the coveted honor of becoming a member of the women's block society . . . yes, one of them was Dot Canavan. And if this hasn't been enough to convince anyone, when the election results were announced for the coming semester by Gloria Swicegood she said: "President of the WAA for the coming semester: Dot Canavan." No one could expect more than that in one evening and it was well deserved too. Hear those trumpets? It's the band in the Women's Sports Parade playing a salute to DOT CANAVAN.

Before making our final bow, credit for the success of this semester should be given to the council officers, the council and the gym instructors. The frequency with which President Gloria Swicegood's name appears in this column testifies to the vital part she has played in this semester's activities. A good president, was Gloria. The WAA council is the executive organ of the WAA and is responsible for the success of all the functions. Laurine Bergin, Bertha Keller, Vera Spencer, and Verrel Weber, gym instructors, were responsible for the skill of the women in sports and were completely unselfish in devoting so much of their time to the WAA. Many deserving managers and committee chairmen have not been mentioned in the column but as there isn't space to mention all, we will just include everyone by saying "Congratulations, WAA."

RAMBLINGS

By DICK SIMPERS

It's the end of another semester and two more titles have been added to the steadily increasing list of those held by San Francisco. In fact, it might be said that the Rams made a clean sweep of the fall sports, as they bagged championships in the only two sports in which conference competition existed, namely, soccer and football.

The acquisition of the football crown lengthened the list, as this is the first time a Ram squad has managed to annex the gridiron title. The triumph of the soccer team marked the second consecutive time that Tom Wilson's boys have emerged on top in the conference. Other championships taken by San Francisco in the two and a half years of its existence have been in crew, tennis and basketball. The baseballers have yet to finish on top, but their prospects for the coming season are bright enough to warrant the taking of an optimistic viewpoint at this time.

Joe Garcia, varsity football manager and erstwhile sprinter on the track team, has announced his intention of seeing some of the world before continuing any further with his education. Joe plans to ship out early next year for a trip through the Pacific area. His loss will be keenly felt by the track team, of which he was one of the aces before injury laid him low last season. He will be back in spring, 1939.

Messrs. Eisan and Sweet are reported contemplating a trip to Mexico during the holidays. They might do well to consult Jerry Flamm, former resident of what he affectionately refers to as "Mayheeko," for a few bits of advice. By his own admission, Jerry knows how to handle the temperamental Latins . . . especially the senoritas.

Of course, we don't want to cast any reflections, but the day after The Guardsman came out last week with its All-American selections, two of the big national news syndicates presented theirs, and each of them contained nine of the names previously published on this page. Looks pretty suspicious, doesn't it?

And who was that member of the first string football team who was observed hanging around the arena after the WAA horse show the other night and gathering up all the potatoes left over from the potato race?

Intermission of one hour and a half here; half an hour trying to fix the old typewriter ribbon so that it'll work, fifteen minutes going to the store to buy another one, and three-quarters of an hour putting the thing back together again, plus five minutes for washing signs of struggle off hands and face. We will now continue.

The football season just past was a fortunate one for the Rams in more ways than one. The squad managed to get through its entire schedule without a single really serious injury to any one of its members, although there was, of course, the usual number of minor injuries. Duke Worsham's neck injury was probably the worst suffered by any player, and he is now fully recovered even from this. Joe Guedet, Randy Osborne, Willie Dolman and a few others were laid up at various times, but in none of these cases was the hurt anything that did not mend with time.

MERRY CHRISTMAS TO ALL

Although it may not be strictly in line with perfect editorial policy, we would like now to dish out a little of the proverbial "credit where credit is due." It's no picnic filling this page and putting it together every week, and it would have been a hell of a job without the assistance of a staff that did its best in every way to help out. Special credit and real appreciation to Jerry Flamm, who has been literally invaluable, to Don Mix, Bob MacArthur, Ed Frediani and the rest of the staff who did so much to make the job a pleasure rather than a task.

Gratitude, also, to Flo Murphy, that unsung heroine of the sports page, who came through more than once when things were looking black to save the day with some super-idea, and to Jean Page, capability personified.

Pardon me if I gush, but it really has been swell. Honor and a privilege, and all that sort of thing.

Conlan to Ump Sugar Bowl Classic

Coach "Dutch" Conlan, Ram varsity basketball coach and assistant grid mentor, is again scheduled to follow the birds south to New Orleans, Louisiana, to officiate in the "Sugar Bowl" football pageant on New Year's Day. Following the selection of the undefeated University of Santa Clara eleven to oppose Louisiana State University in an encore to last year's game in the southern capital, Conlan was notified that he could pack his bags for a return engagement. He earned wide acclaim last year for his fine work as umpire in the classic. Conlan will probably leave the west coast soon after Christmas for the journey.

Ram Quintet In Double Win Over Squads of Palo Alto and Church; Curcio Stars

Conlanmen Score Victories In Close Games; Fex, Slattery, Blackfield, and Egan Also Show To Advantage

Dutch Conlan's 1938 basketball model made its debut last Friday night in the Galileo gymnasium, winning both ends of a double-header from the Palo Alto Sport Shop and Westside Christian Church. The Sport Shop fell 51 to 32, while Westside was turned back 29 to 23.

Naturally ragged in spots in their initial performance of the season, the Rams nevertheless displayed promising potentialities, with speedy forwards, rugged guards, and a promising center in Harold Fischer. The tilt with San Jose was the main event of the evening's festivities, and Coach Conlan indicated what will most likely comprise the starting lineup this season by using only eight men in the battle. The starting men were Tracy Slattery and Bill Blackfield at forwards; Harold Fisher, center, and Bill Phelan and Ed Curcio, guards. The three others who saw action were Joe Opalinski, Warren Egan and "Red" Burroughs.

The shining light in this tussle was Curcio, the rugged guard. Curcio secured innumerable rebounds, led the scorers with fifteen digits, and turned in a generally efficient game. Slattery and Opalinski performed well at the forward posts, the former tossing ten points through the net. Opalinski, former Commerce High star, displayed the classiest floor game of all the Rams. He was below form in ringing the hoop, but his dribbling and pass-work set up many scores. For the Palo Alto hoopsters, Johnson was the most troublesome to the Red and White. He kept the visitors in the game during the first half when he tanked three in succession from dead center. The Rams led 30 to 24 at half-time.

In the opener with Westside, Coach Conlan used the entire squad with the exception of the five who started the second tilt. Of this crew, Bob "Bullet" Fex was the class. He dropped five field goals through the hoop, all of them one-handers. This contest was a case of five men being too much for one man, Westside being clearly outclassed with the exception of Barney DeBisschop, former Lowell and State luminary. De Bisschop was all over the court—passing, faking, dribbling, and intercepting passes. Nearly every basket scored by Westside was due to a direct piece of finesse by DeBischop.

An unusual situation took place during the first half of the battle. Neither team could coax the casaba through the hoop until twelve minutes of playing time had elapsed. Kalfain finally broke the ice by tanking a foul shot to give the Rams a 1 to 0 lead. Another feature of the Westside tussle was the drive displayed by the erstwhile pigskin toter, Walt "the Moose" Boitano. Walt did not break into the scoring column, but he cleared the way with several well-timed and devastating blocks.
